William Hazlitt, whose essays I see the present Prime Minister of Great Britain takes with him, says, "One of the pleasantest things in the world is going on a journey." Hazlitt, you know, is a wise man, and his statement has truth in it. Some years ago, when I had a number of small parishes in Virginia, and consequently a small salary, the Rev. W. W. Way, of Charleston, asked me to take his church for August. What moved him to do it, I do not know, but it was a most gracious act and gave me a vacation, which I would otherwise not have had. The bishop of this diocese came to me recently, and requested that, if I were going off this summer, I let one of the men with a small salary have my church. This struck me as right, and I agreed. Some summers ago I was away, and I met two ministers with their families vacationing in tents in the mountains. It was all they could afford. Now, I shall not say, "If I were a bishop," I would do this or that. Such talk is easy, and perhaps the talker would not do so well as he thinks he would. But, I have this in mind, which if it commends itself to you, let pass on to your paper.

A great number of our men on small salaries need a change. A change would be a God-send to them and their families. When ministers with larger churches go off; when there are comfortable watering places and mountain churches which operate only for the summer, why not ask the men on small salaries to take the work? The struggles made by some men whose income is meagre, and often their families are large, to get a bit of change is tragic. I do not agree either, that if a better known man were given this chance he would attract more people. There are many, many fine men in our smaller places, who would give excellent service and be most anxious to please, because the vacation, with its rectory and allowance, would mean so much to them. If I may be allowed the presumption, wouldn't it be a good idea for our bishops to say that they will have certain openings this summer, and they want to let the men on small salaries enjoy them? I know that this is pushing on to an already rather over-worked lot of men—the bishops—something else, but they could delegate it to a vacation committee, and would keep such openings where they would do the most good. I think it rather pathetic all around, to read that Dr. or Bishop Big Bug will be at some fine summer place for one month and then will sail for Europe, or go to a restful spot for a couple of months, and then meet a minister, who is tussling with the wolf twelve months in the year, and find he has very little notion indeed that he and his family will get off for any change at all.

Now, I am not criticising either Dr. or Bishop Big Bug. I have never been convinced that all of the hard work of the Church is done by the men on small salaries, and because one happens to be in a small work he is ipso factor a hero. Bishop Cheshire said keeping busy depended on the man, rather than on the size of the work. This is true. You can work all of the time in a small place. You can work all of the time in a large one. But I do say with emphasis, that more attention should be given, in my opinion, to seeing that summer places go to men who otherwise would have no vacation or one worked out at too much sacrifice, than is now done. To return to Hazlitt, "One of the pleasantest things in the world is going on a journey."

C. A. Ashby.

Jacksonville, Fla.

Church Intelligence

60,000 Churches "Dead"; League States Causes.

Sixty thousand of the 200,000 Protestant Churches are "dead". Within a year they gained no new membership. Perhaps 40,000 more gained one or two new members, while between 7,000 and 8,000 churches stand vacant and deserted, according to Frederick L. Collins, writing in Woman's Home Companion.

"Shall we bury these dead churches?" he asks, quoting figures furnished by the Men's Church League to show the sterility of so many institutions. His answer is that they should be buried; that Christianity owes them a debt for past services and that the debt could be discharged by giving them a Christian burial, not only for their own benefit, but for the benefit of the remaining churches.

Declaring that rehabilitation of the churches should not have failed in past years because of the lack of finances, Collins points out that the Church has more money than Henry Ford or John D. Rockefeller, United States Steel or General Motors. Last year, he says, it collected and spent in America alone, $600,000,000, most of which was wasted on the dead church.

Failure of the churches to show gains in membership are laid to the development of other forms of public gatherings, which do away in a measure with the necessity of gathering at a community church for neighborly activities. The motion picture, the automobile, the radio, increased school activities, new subjects taught, all put a great strain upon the church. Owen D. Young, Churchman as well as financier, points out that "it does no good for the church to wish that the radio and the automobile were not here. They are here. They will stay here and new and other things will come. Every new advance disintegrates the old order and only those institutions survive which can adapt themselves to new conditions. Facts are facts and we must take account of them."

The existence of the tired business man, the article adds, with his passion for golf, is another accepted factor in church diminution. But almost as important is the tired business woman. There are nearly ten million of her now; nearly a million and a half between forty-five and sixty-five; more than two hundred thousand over sixty-five. These women come from what was once the bulwark of the Sunday congregation. Now they have little time for church going on their one day off.

The Men's Christian Church League declared that it had been misled for some time by the glowing reports of growth in all churches. This discovered, however, that instead of the 1,115,000 gains for 1928, the figures heretofore have represented births into families inactively connected with the Church and of persons who moved from one community to another, being enrolled again and again without being stricken from the rolls of the original church. In short, the poll proved to be entirely inaccurate and the League continuing its work, found thirty-two per cent of the churches actually sterile.

Setting about to remedy the situation, the League proposes to put its members, as individuals and as Sunday-school classes, to work building up genuine, fresh membership. The plan, says Collins, has been shown practical if it can be financed, and there is no excuse for lack of money, in view of what the churches collect and spend, if dead churches are weeded out and the wasted funds concentrated upon those which are alive and thriving. "Parishes which have within them the possibilities of resurrection will live again. There will be no loss of power or momentum, no diminution of opportunity for religious work," he concludes.—Advance Material, September Woman's Home Companion.

Sewanee Summer Training School.

The twentieth annual session of the Sewanee Summer Training School, opened August 1, with a registration of two hundred and twenty-eight. The Adult Division of the conference continued through August 15, followed by the Young People's Division, which will run from the fifteenth to twenty-ninth.

The Conference, as always, is housed at the University of the South, with office, dormitories, and classrooms on the campus. The curriculum included courses in Advanced Leadership, the Rt. Rev. William G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop of Alabama, Dean of the Division; Christian Social Service, with the Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., Dean; Missions, in charge of the Rev. W. J. Loaring-Clark, D. D., and Religious Education, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., Dean, with numerous special courses for good measure.

Bishop McDowell, President of the Board of Managers, is busy in all the conference activities, with Bishop Penick, Coadjutor of North Carolina, as Director of the Adult Division, and Bishop Gailor aiding as a Forum speaker. Vice-Chancellor B. F. Finney, of the University, is engaged in making every one feel the interest and hospitality of the University, while the mass of detail work entailed is most efficiently handled by the Executive Secretary, Mrs. William P. Cornell, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Florida.

With a list of officers and teachers numbering forty-three, and a schedule of no less than forty separate courses, the Sewanee Conference is affording an exceptional opportunity for workers in all branches of the Church's work, as well as for N. A. T. A. Credits, in which the Province of Sewanee leads the whole Church.

The National Council of the Church is represented by John W. Wood, D. C. L., teaching two courses, The Church and World Problems, and The Mission of the Church; Miss Grace Lindley, with courses on Woman's Work in the Church, and the Woman's Auxiliary; Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, teaching courses on Training for Leadership in Church Work, and A Study of the Pupil; Dr. Loaring-Clark, the Program of the National Church, and the Rev. John W. Irwin, presenting the new course on Church Publicity, as introduced this year by the National Department of Publicity.

There are daily forums and conferences, in addition to scheduled classes, and evening sessions on a wide variety of subjects, somehow, added to all this serious study, energetic students find time to engage in tennis and golf tournaments and the many social activities peculiar to Sewanee.

The conference was preceded by a provincial conference on Religious Education, in charge of Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, and concurrent with it will be held meetings of the Provincial Field Department and Department of Publicity.

Mrs. W. P. C.

Distinguished Servant of the Lord—Dr. Logan.

The Sewanee Conference, now meeting at the University of the South, at its opening session, August 2, was reminded of its loss in the death of the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., last December. This is the first Sewanee Conference without Dr. Logan, and his interest in and service on behalf of the Conference were memorialized by Bishop Penick, after which the members stood in silent prayer.

Resolutions offered by the Department of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee were read, and ordered conveyed by the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., to Mrs. Logan. The resolutions, with a preamble recounting Dr. Logan's distinguished service as a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Religious Education of the Province, as the founder of the Summer Training School, and as Warden and Dean of the DuBose Training School, offer this testimony to the distinguished servant of the Church, whose loss continues to be mourned, not only by the Province of Sewanee, but by the whole Church:

Resolved: That those who have been associated with Dr. Logan in the educational activities of the Province of Sewanee do hereby record their appreciation of the splendid service rendered by Dr. Logan, both as a leader in this special field and as faithful in many tasks as a servant of the Lord, and that they testify to their own personal bereavement in his death. By his gentleness, kindliness, good judgment and faithfulness he endeared himself to all whose privilege it was to serve with him. His associates and friends give thanks for good example of Christian character and service set by him and pray for his perfect consummation and bliss in God's everlasting glory."

GROWTH IS BROTHERHOOD CONVENTION TOPIC.

Young Men to Consider Vital Questions at Geneva, N. Y.

Well-known Church leaders from throughout the country are listed on the program of the National Junior Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, to be held September 5 to 8, at Hobart College, Geneva, New York. Spiritual Growth will be the keynote of the gathering, which is a new venture of the Brotherhood, planned for the benefit of all boys and young men of the Church.

The Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, Bishop of Western New York; the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, Bishop of Northern Indiana; the Hon. Charles H. Tuttle, U. S. District Attorney at Albany, N. Y.; the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, Vicksburg, Tenn.; the Rev. G. Leslie Glenn, Secretray of College Work of the National Council; the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, Secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council; the Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., Student Chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania; Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, Washington, President of the Brotherhood; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood; and Dr. William J. Cooper, U. S. Commissioner of Education; are among those listed on the program.

The Convention will open Thursday, September 5, with registration. Mr. Irwin C. Johnson, of Detroit, Diocesan Director of Boys' Work, will lead an informal discussion on vocational guidance in the afternoon, followed by a recreational period. The opening banquet will be held Thursday evening. "Youth's Leadership Today" will be the subject of an address at this meeting, by Mr. Tuttle, of Albany. Bishop Ferris will speak on the subject, "Personal Growth for Leadership." Mr. Reese will act as Chaplain of the Convention, and will conduct the concluding devotions on the day's program.

Friday, September 6, there will be Holy Communion, followed by breakfast and the Chaplain's half hour talk. The value of prayer, vitalizing our devotional life, and charting oneself for growth, will be the subjects discussed at the morning sessions, with Mr. Douglas C. Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, and Mr. Johnson, of Detroit, as leaders. There will also be a discussion on what groups of boys are doing and can do in schools and parishes to assist in the growth of the Church. A conference for adult leaders will feature the afternoon program.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, better known as "Daddy" Hall, will conduct a twilight service out of doors, followed by a discussion on "The Athlete's Need of Christ," by the Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., of Pennsylvania. The place of Christ in Education will be another subject discussed during the evening.

Growth through individual work will be the central theme of the session Saturday morning, September 7. It will center around the work in the parish and in school life. Spiritual stimulus as a means of growth—through the Holy Communion, through Bible study and through church attendance, will be another consideration. Saturday afternoon the boys will go on a pilgrimage around Geneva, to invite neighbors to Sunday services.

Saturday night Dean Lathrop will speak on "Social Service and the Holy Communion," and the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn on "The College Christian of Today."

Following Holy Communion at Trinity Church, Geneva, Sunday morning, the Conference will discuss Brotherhood Chapter organization and membership. Special services will be held at St. Peter's Church, Geneva, at eleven o'clock, with Bishop Gray, of Northern Indiana delivering the sermon.

General conferences with discussions of methods of Chapter work, Chapter relationships (between older and younger men and boys, and between the Brotherhood and other organizations), and a farewell service, with the Rev. Ernest V. R. Stires, of Bellerose, Long Island, speaking on "From the Mount of Vision to the Valley of Service", will conclude the conference Sunday afternoon.

The Convention is intended for limited groups of Junior boys active in parish life, older boys and young men, boys attending boarding schools, men in college and adult leaders. "The entire convention," says Mr. Leon C. Palmer, writing of the plans, "will be a Junior gathering; and Brotherhood opportunities, needs, problems, methods, will be presented and studied from the standpoint of the Juniors."

Only a limited number can be accommodated at Hobart College, for the Convention. and for this reason early reservations are urged upon Brotherhood leaders and young men who desire to take advantage of the opportunities offered through such a gathering. The registration fee is $12, of which two dollars is payable in advance, and the remainder upon arrival at Geneva. This fee covers lodging and meals throughout the Convention, from Thursday noon to Sunday evening. Registrations and inquiries should be sent to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

G. H. Randall, Secretary.

Missionary Nurse Sails.

Miss Jean Jones, a Registered Nurse, lately of the Samaritan Hospital, Fourth Avenue and Seventeenth Streets, Brooklyn, sails for Alaska, Saturday, August 17, from Seattle, Wash. Miss Jones is a member of the Church of the Atonement, Episcopal, Seventeenth Street near Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, the Rev. Jeffrey Jennings, D. D., rector. Since she was a little girl she has always had a desire to be a missionary following in the footsteps of her mother's sister who gave her life in the mission fields of the Baptist Church in India. She has just received a call to work in Alaska from the Rev. John Wilson Wood, D. C. L., Secretary for Foreign Work of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. She left last Sunday for the West. Her journey will take her over 4,000 miles of land and sea. She will be stationed at Anvik, Alaska.

Bishop Rowe Finds a Way.

Bishop Rowe, having voluntarily cut his salary in order to meet the deficit in the appropriation for the Missionary Diocese of Alaska, as a matter of further economy, is evidently taking advantage of the special rates offered at the Sour Dough Hotel, Dawson, in a communication just received from him, he says:

Dawson, Y. T.,
August 2, 1929.

My Dear "Southern Churchman":

Please find enclosed my subscription with my very best wishes for the growth and prosperity of the "Southern Churchman".

Leaving in March I have visited all missions along the coast and in the interior of Alaska, though to reach one I had to do it by airplane. On the average I gave a week to each. Our mission and hospital at Fort Yukon give an objective missionary illustration that compels wonder and admiration.

P. T. Rowe.

P. S.—I thought you might be amused at this "Sourdough" stationery.

The following is a reproduction of the letterhead of the stationery on which the Bishop's letter was written:

SOUR DOUGH HOTEL
1333 Icicle Avenue
Best House North of Mexico. First-class in Every Particular.
Rates: One Ounce per Day.

Crap, Chuck Luck, Stud Poker and Black Jack Games Run by the Management.

Private Entrance for Ladies by Ladder in the Rear. Special Rates for Ministers and the Gambling "Perfesh". Every Known Fluid—Water Excepted—For Sale at the Bar.

Dogs Bought and Sold. Insect Powder for sale at the Bar. Indians and Niggers Charged Double.

Not responsible for diamonds, bicycles or other valuables kept under the pillows; they should be deposited in the safe.

If you are fond of athletics and like good jumping, lift the mattress and see the bed spring.

House Rules

Towels changed weekly.

Dogs not allowed in the bunks.

Candles and Hot Water charged extra.

Board $2.00 per square foot. Meals extra.

Spiked boots must be removed at night.

Guests are requested not to speak to the Dumb Waiter.

Anyone troubled with nightmare will find a halter on the bed-post.

If the room gets too warm, open the window and see the fire escape.

Base-ballists desiring a little practice will find a pitcher on the stand.

Don't worry about paying your bill; the house is supported by its foundations.

The hotel is convenient to all cemeteries. Hearses for hire at 25 cents a second.

Guests wishing to get up without bewill find hammer and nails in the closet.

Guests wishing to get up yithout being called can have self-rising flour for supper.

If the lamp goes out, take a feather out of the pillow; that's light enough for any room.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbotts, D. D., Bishop.

News Items.

The Rev. Edward W. Baxter, of Wilson, North Carolina, has accepted a call to the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, and will take up his residence there the last week in August. Mr. Baxter is an Englishman. He was educated both secularly and ecclesiastically in Canada. His new charge will be his third in the States. He comes to the Diocese of Lexington most highly recommended from a number of sources.

The Rev. Charles Stuart Hale, who was appointed as an assistant to the former Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, during the latter's illness before his resignation, has resigned his position effective January 1, 1930.

The Rev. Julius A. Velasco, Deacon, formerly of Ellicott City, Maryland, is officiating at Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, during July and August. Mr. Velasco is also doing nearby missionary work. He has been formally transferred to the Diocese of Lexington and is preparing for ordination to the preisthood early in September.

Bishop H. P. Almon Abbott will ordain two candidates for Holy Orders, namely, Mr. Gerald H. Catlin and Mr. William Langley, both of DuBosse Training School, to the diaconate on September 8, in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington.

Bishop H. P. Almon Abbott is making appointments towards the creating of a Field Department in the Diocese. Three clergymen, three laymen and three laywomen will compose the personnel which will be announced later.

Building operations have been started upon. the new parish house for St

John's, Versailles, the gift of Senator and Miss Tevis Camden. The building will be completed by early fall. It will contain thoroughly modern equipment, including a small theatre. Both the rector and his wife, the Rev. Robert J. Murphy and Mrs. Murphy, are gifted in dramatics and religious drama and pageants will form an important part of the parish activities in the future.

The Rev. Theodore S. Will, of Ashland, officiated at the Episcopal Church in Ellicott City during July. In June, Mr. Will presented a confirmation class of thirty-eight to Bishop Abbott, by far the largest class the parish has ever had.

Bishop H. P. Almon Abbott has appointed nearly two dozen lay readers since his consecration, May 15. In the two months, May 15 to July 15, inclusive, the Bishop and Mrs. Abbott covered practically the entire Diocese, the Bishop preaching twenty-eight times. On July 23, he and Mrs. Abbott left for Cape Cod and Baltimore to spend a month visiting old friends.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

On Saturday, July 20, there was held in St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta, Georgia, a memorial service to the Very Rev. Thomas H. Johnston, who died on July 20, 1928, while Dean of the Cathedral. The Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, celebrated the Holy Communion, and the memorial address was delivered by the Rev. Raimundo de Ovies, successor to Dean Johnston, and the present Dean. The service was simple and dignified, and was attended by a large number of the former Dean's friends, not only of the Cathedral, but from the other parishes of the city; also Dean de Ovies paid a glowing tribute to the work which Dean Johnston had accomplished during his twelve years of service, and spoke of his wide influence as a scholar and friend. Many beautiful tributes were sent by friends as part of the memorial.

The Rev. W. W. Memminger, D. D., rector of All Saints in Atlanta, expects left the city July 29, going to Flat Rock, North Carolina, where he will take services for a month during his vacation. The Rev. Wm. P. Moses will conduct services in his absence from All Saints.

The Rev. E. J. Saywell is holding services during July and August in the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, during the absence from the city of the rector, the Rev. G. W. Gasque.

R. S.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

Clerical Change.

The Rev. A. E. Koeh, missionary of St. Paul's Church, Minersville and St. Stephen's Church, Forestville, was elected as the rector of Trinity Church, West Pittston. He resigned his charges on July 1, and will take up his new work after a month's vacation.

Vacationists.

Bishop Sterrett and his family have for the second year taken a cottage at Dennis, Cape Cod, Massachusetts. He will be there until the middle of September.

Dean E. G. N. Holmes, of Leonard Hall, Bethlehem, has a cottage also at Dennis and will be there until September 1.

The Rev. Frederick A. MacMillan and his wife of Christ Church, Reading, left for England. They will spend practically two months, all in England and Scotland, visiting Cathedrals and places of historical interest to Churchmen.

The Rev. R. N. Merriman, of the Church of the Mediator, Allentown, was sent by his Church people to England and France for a two months' vacation in recognition of the many years of faithful service he has given to the congregation.

The Rev. Robert P. Kreitler, of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, is again spending the summer at his cottage at Saybrook, Conn. The Rev. Dudley S. Stark, of New York City, a former member of Mr. Kreitler's Parish, will have charge of the services in St. Luke's, Scranton, until September 1.

Dean D. Wilmot Gateson, of the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, is spending several weeks at Lake George, attending the theological conference.

H. P. W.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Summer School for Church Workers.

The annual Summer School for Church Workers of the Missionary District of Spokane, held at McDonald's Point, Lake Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, from July 2 to 12, was a decided success. About one hundred and twenty-five were present, the majority being young people.

Miss Mildred James, of the National Council, and the Rev. H. P. Koulfuss of the Social Service Department, were from outside the District and very stimulating to all present. Dr. G. W. Gasque, of the National Commission on Evangelism, was present for two days.

Dr. F. F. Potter, of the State College of Washington, gave an excellent survey course on Modern Philosophy. Two local workers, the Rev. C. A. Kopp, of Ellensburg, and Miss Metcalf of Sunnyside, conducted courses for the young people.

The death of the Rev. G. O. Ware, of Hoquiam, Wash., made it necessary for Bishop Cross to leave the camp two days before its close. Under the capable leadership of Dean E. W. Pigion, of Yadkin, everything was carried through as planned, and the District is now preparing for next summer.

T. E. J.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

It was announced recently that the Rev. Charles C. Jatho, formerly rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Cleveland, Ohio, is to become rector of St. John's Church, Royal Oak, on August 1. By that time the new rectory now being built will be practically completed.

Mr. Jatho was born in Albany, New York, and received his education in Trinity School and Hobart College. He was granted a B. D. degree from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1919 by Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, and to the Priesthood in 1920 by the Rt. Rev. Charles D. Williams, D. D., fourth bishop of the Diocese of Michigan.

During the war, Mr. Jatho volunteered with the French Army in 1917, as an ambulance driver, and later served two years with the American Army as a private. He was captured by the enemy and appointed chaplain by his fellow prisoners in camp. From 1919 to 1921 he acted as assistant in Christ Church, Fitchburg, Mass., and from 1921 to 1924 as assistant in All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass. In 1924, he was elected to the Church of the Incarnation, his last cure before coming to Royal Oak.

Mr. Jatho has served in the Diocese of Ohio as a member of the Executive Council, the Diocesan Appropriation Committee, as Chairman of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese, and as a member of the Diocesan Social Service Committee. He is the author of a book entitled "Handwork in the Church School", now in its second edition, and has contributed articles to a magazine of health and healing, entitled "Applied Religion".

McE.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell Bishop

Seamen's Chaplain Ordained.

Seven congregations of Mobile united at Trinity Church for the ordination to the Priesthood of the Rev. Rupert G. Witt, Chaplain of the Seamen's Church Institute of Mobile, Alabama. Taking part with Bishop McDowell were the Rev. H. F. Schroeter, the Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, and the Rev. A. B. Hanson.

Mr. Witt, who is a graduate of DuBose School, has ably made good as the successor to the beloved Chaplain Pearce, known to sailors everywhere.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Resignations.

The Rev. Rockland Tyng Homans, for the past nineteen years rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, has resigned, and will undertake certain special work in the diocese under the direction of Bishop Stires and of Bishop Larned. The resignation is effective October 1. Mr. Homans is a native of this diocese, born in the rectory of Christ Church, Manhasset, when his father was rector there. In his earlier ministry he was rector of Grace Church, Whitestone. During his incumbency at Jamaica, the fine Memorial Parish House was built, and the organized work of the parish, especially among the young people, greatly developed. His many friends in the diocese will be glad to know that he is not leaving the diocese, though resigning his rectorship.

The Rev. Richard S. Martin, who as seminarian, deacon and priest, has been in charge of Trinity Mission, Astoria, has resigned that cure and accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Blacksburg, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. He will move about August 15. The Virginia Polytechnic Institute is in Blacksburg, and a large part of Mr. Martin's work will be with the students of the college. He will also be in

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

AUGUST.

1. Thursday
4. Tenth Sunday after Trinity.
6. Tuesday, Transfiguration.
11. Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.
18. Twelfth Sunday after Trinity.
24. Saturday, S. Bartholomew.
25. Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.
31. Saturday.

COLLECT FOR THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may also faithfully serve Thee in this life that we fail not finally to attain Thy Heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For The Southern Churchman.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE.

William Olney.

And can I know and not suppose;
Is there a rock beneath our feet?
Or is Faith's strength only surmise:
And may we wake with sad surprise
To find the dream of Heaven close,
Suffering Faith's defeat.

Thank God! the vision is not dim;
A boon is ours beyond: "we guess."
Reason bears record to her God:
Creation's marvels spread abroad—
Earth, sea, air, witness unto Him;
And His great Power confess.

But Reasoning must step aside
And to a nobler Proof give place.
As humble Faith looks in the Word;
The Spirit of the Risen Lord
Doth Blessed Certainty provide—
Experience of Grace.

For The Southern Churchman.

Defense of Principles.

Louis Deschamps.

There is danger in the modern habit of extremely liberal views. It may become fatal to personal convictions. Vital emotional forces that constitute springs of action are often paralyzed into passive idealism by wavering opinions readily adaptable to every one's views. Prejudice and fanaticism are no more harmful extremes than are the extremes of indifference and doubt. To see some good in every man's argument is not the same as to agree with every different opinion.

What is not worth defending is not a real conviction. It may be aglow with sentiment or solemn as a creed, but it is of no lasting value without the vital spark of emotion, the fire of loyalty. Views indifferently held are often merely ornaments to be displayed on occasion, mere gestures to fashion or custom. When the treasure is in the heart, it is defended involuntarily. Defense of principles under criticism and even scorn (such may be the intolerance of the tolerant) makes them more sacred and more real in the character-making process. Continued habits of easy tolerance may leave one's own convictions lifeless and useless. Respect for another's views does not involve a surrender nor a compromise.

In an age of cynicism it is easy to call doubt tolerance. The living, dynamic, miraculous power of spiritual conviction can not survive too careless a tolerance, too easy a compromise with every conflicting theory. There is no greatness without zeal, nor real happiness without the self-forgetfulness of some profound and sacred devotion to a Cause. Loyalty is a form of love that demands quick defense in self-protection. Uncertain of themselves, modern cynics and intellectuals learn to depend upon the virtue of tolerance to remove opposition to their attacks upon spiritual things. Too great a willingness to sacrifice principle for popularity by agreeing with every one is a besetting sin of many modern Christians.

Without the strength of one's own convictions there is no answer to the psychological problems of melancholy and boredom. It is indeed a weary life that has no treasure worthy of quick defense, no conviction too sacred to deny conveniently. Passive indifference under the guise of intellectual tolerance in matters of idealism robs life of its greatest experience—the passion of a spiritual inspiration, a sacred sense of the sublime. It may be the inspiration of a profession that requires devotion to its ideals, or the lure of constructive work in any field, loyalty to any good and noble work.

If it is a real power in one's life so that the presence of God is discovered in its sacred and sublime influence, it makes crusaders and defenders rather listless philosophers and melancholy theorists. The faith easily surrendered never justifies itself.

The Reality of Prayer.

We sometimes wonder whether prayer is something that we can be taught or whether prayer is not something that is so spiritual that it cannot be taught. The disciples asked Jesus, "Lord, teach us to pray," "Teach us the prayer of spiritual communion and the language of God's Kingdom which at present we understand so imperfectly, but which we know is quite familiar to you." Yes, to understand the prayer communion of Jesus we must know something about the Kingdom. It is as though I might meet with a friend who had returned from some distant land and say, "Tell me all about where you have been. I understand very little; I have only a smattering of knowledge regarding that country. Tell me about its customs, its people, and its language." Prayer also is a language; it is the language of the heavenly country, or Kingdom of God. By studying the language of a country we can, more or less exactly, write its history. The ideals of a nation, the habits, the customs, the social laws and even the vices of a nation can be known by its language.

"Lord, teach us to pray," that we may know the language of the Kingdom of Heaven. Then shall we know the power of the Kingdom, for the Kingdom of Heaven is just as much a kingdom as any nation in any part of this world. It is governed by laws; it has its social life; it has its language.

Its social life is very wonderful, and men and women have received a vision of that social life and they are working untiringly, unremittingly, to make the kingdoms of this world the Kingdom of Our God and of His Christ. They know that the social life of the Kingdom of God is the only possible life in this world if we are to enjoy peace and righteousness. Also, there are those who are learning the language of the Kingdom.

The language of this world is of two kinds. Some of it is quite good, because many of the words that we use stand for what is praiseworthy, noble, emancipating, joyous, beautiful, inspiring: but in the language of this world there are words whose meaning expresses things that are unlovely, things that are degrading, things that bind and limit the children of God. And sometimes, if we pray to God untaught by Christ, those words of human frailty slip in and we come away from our prayers feeling cold, unblessed, hopeless, depressed. We are puzzled; we say we have prayed to God and there was no answer—just a blank.

We need to know more of the language of the Kingdom of God in our prayer life and to make use of that language and to seek more and more to overcome those thoughts and experiences in ourselves which are unlike the Kingdom of God's perfect Love.

Fellowship in the Kingdom! What a wonderful blessing that is. When our minds and our hearts are really under the influence of the fellowship of the Kingdom of Christ we can no more speak disparagingly of any one else than we should dream of doing about ourselves. One of the laws of the Kingdom is that we shall "love our neighbors as ourselves", or, as I once heard it expressed, which conveys a very beautiful meaning, "thou shalt love thy neighbour instead of thyself."

When Jesus commanded the disciples and sent them forth to heal the sick, these were His Words, "Heal the sick, and say to them, the Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." The blessing that brought them relief and healing was the power of the Kingdom. Some who were opposing Jesus accused Him of casting out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. The power of Christ to heal the sick was the power of a certain Kingdom.

We know of countries amongst the nations of this world which stand high in the estimate of men as exhibiting truth and justice and righteousness. There is a country, even that of the Kingdom of God, which stands even higher in our faith as the Kingdom of righteousness, the Kingdom of light and peace and healing. If only we can become citizens of that Kingdom we shall enjoy its privileges, we shall use its language, we shall lose ourselves in its fellowship, for that is the highest salvation; we shall become its disciples and its ministers and we shall lead others that they may enter into the same citizenship.

How wonderful when we know the language of the Spiritual Kingdom. Every time we are on our knees in prayer, our tongues are loosened that we may pour out our very souls in the language of divine power and love as taught by Jesus. There can only be one kind of true prayer and Jesus can teach us that prayer. Then our minds will be confident whenever we engage in prayer and there will be power in the prayer. We do not utter prayers we have contrived to make up out of our own imaginations. Prayer is not our invention. We have been taught to pray by the Spirit. We belong to a spirit world and we have been taught the words and the language of prayer which belongs to that Kingdom. We are citizens, disciples, and children of the Kingdom. It is all around us and one day, when we are grown sufficiently we shall be able to bear the revelation of the Master, Who said, "The Kingdom of God is within you."

The power is within you, the language is within you, the love, the peace, the joy, the courage, the music, the beauty, the wisdom, the healing; it is all within you. So high is that revelation and ideal, that it sounds too good to be true, yet were it not for the fact that it is true we should be utterly unable to pray or to give thanks to God. Our ability to praise, to worship, to adore, to love God, depends upon the truth and reality of those words of the Saviour, "The Kingdom of God is within you."

We cannot look into one another's minds to see what burden is weighing us down, but we know that we all have some special need, some trouble, some sorrow, some weakness, some infirmity, from which Our Father would set us free. May we not look to him now, for He would give us a larger measure of His Love than we have ever known before, that there may be more music, more joy, more courage, more loving-kindness in our lives; that as citizens of the Kingdom of Light the light may be shining upon us and in us and through us to others to God's glory.—John Maillard, In Healing Church.

For The Southern Churchman.

THE CLOUD.

David W. Cade.

We had followed the dripping stars' dim path,
While reeking seas drove high.
And parried the blows of the Typhoon's wrath
Under a toppling midday sky.

We had elbowed Death around the Cape,
In the teeth of a crying gale.
When the Spectral Dutchman's ghostly shape
Presaged that we must fail.

Then slowly we wore down Falkerland,
Into blistering doldroms distressed.
Each day the sun rose a flaming brand
Over a watery world unblessed.

But at night the mercy of Christ shone down,
From a wondrous violet sky.
Where glorious stars like flowers were blown
In a miracle garden on high.

No wind swept ever our dragging sails,
Above, beneath no living thing.
Gave cry to joy or to sorrow wails;
Scarce moved the deep with listless swing.

Full forty days we lay so grieved,
Such peace as never mortal craved.
The fashioned dust; ere God had breathed
His Spirit to be doomed or saved.

When Olaf spoke from mizzen peak,
The horror bare, that drove his soul.
"I see from here the ruddy streak
Of fiery waters flood and roll."

Out broke the babble of men lost,
For every man was clean distraught.
And saw the thing his soul feared most;
The travail of long years was naught.

Across the sun a small cloud drew,
And made for us a grateful shade.
Then hope and life began anew
Thus was the nagging horror laid.

We heard the music of old days,
Across the clatter of the years.
The straying bloom of vanished Mays
Swept like an Angel through our fears.
So small a thing in mercy given,
When need is great, and despair reigns.
Calls courage from the distant Heaven
And clears the score of craven stains.

Jesus as a Teacher.

Did you ever stop to think of Jesus' remarkably individual method of instruction? Through eleven individuals He reorganized the world and established a religion which withstands all shocks, all attacks, now as in twenty centuries past. Nor did He teach even that small number wholly or even mainly as a group.

He called them to His service by ones and twos. "As Jesus passed by, He called Matthew." "He saw two brethren, Simon called Peter and Andrew his brother, casting nets into the sea, and He saith unto them, 'Follow me and I will make you fishers of men'." And although He often called the twelve for group instruction, the story of His dealings with Peter prove His mastery of teaching through the individual attempting to walk on the water and his faith deserting him part way over; His rebuke to Peter's presumption and misunderstanding when he argued with his Master against the prophecy of His death, the warning that before the cock could crow thrice Peter would deny Him, a warning-teaching which brought Peter back in remorse and greater love and loyalty.

Nor were His disciples the only ones whom He taught by individual instruction—remember the woman of Samaria, the rich young ruler, Nicodemus, Mary and Martha, Mary Magdalene.

But not the greater truth of Jesus' method of individual instruction as compared with some of our later propounders of educational principles—He taught and trained the individual, but not at the cost of the group, as they would often have us do. The multitude pressed Him, the story says, great crowds followed Him, and He taught them, giving us as one such instance alone that marvelous collection of parables in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew.

It would behoove us teachers in our secular instruction to study the method of the Great Teacher, learn the relationship of the individual to the group or multitude. His teaching of the individual did not produce self-centered egotists, neither sympathizing nor cooperative in spirit with the group, with whom after all we must live, but leaders able to use their individual instruction to guide great multitudes into the way of life.

To measure Him by another of the shibboleths of modern instruction, self-expression. Have we modern educators discovered something new in this thought? Did not Jesus give us the principle in His own teaching? Can our recent emphasis on self-expression stand comparison as to its truth with what Christ taught? Let us see.

Do you remember His sending James and John ahead of Him to make ready, and their angry speech when refused admission to the village? There was plenty of self-expression among the disciples then, nor did He check it. But note: "They went to another village." Consider the story of the two disciples who contended for the high places in His kingdom, even letting their mother ask it of the Lord. There was no hindrance to their expression of their desires, but rather their request led to His exposition of the word "minister", and of the test of the cup and of the baptism of fire—thus using self-expression as a means to the end of teaching that which should be expressed. Not the error we have so pitifully and tragically fallen into, of self-expression without discipline, without learning of something real and vital and beautiful to express, misconstruing selfishness and absorption to be self-expression.

Two beautiful stories of the way Jesus permitted self-expression are given us in the very story which gave us the verse, "Suffer little children to come unto me", and in the story of Peter's enthusiasm to build three tabernacles at the scene of the Transfiguration. Can you not picture the loving wisdom with which Jesus accepted the crowding of the children and Peter's expression of a desire to make permanent a vision of such great glory?

Just one more illustration of a modern educational principle and of how Jesus anticipated it. We talk a lot today about stimulating creative energy, and we warn against checking creative enthusiasm. Our schools of education create whole departments and employ lecturers to guide us teachers right in this great principle. Let us see whether Jesus knew and used the creative energy of His pupils.

Read again the story of the woman of Samaria. She listened to His words. His disciples wondered that He talked to her and they would not have stimulated her to action. But Jesus understood and wanted for her creative enthusiasm to bring Him the first converts in Samaria. He did not tell her to go for her neighbors. His teaching stimulated her enthusiasm and creative action.

Matthew 10 tells us about His sending the disciples out. He taught them what dangers and temptations they would meet, but He laid no commands on them as to how they should work. No greater story has ever been told than Peter's confession of faith in Jesus as the Christ, yet it was a pure expression of creative enthusiasm stimulated by Jesus' discussion with His disciples of who men said He was.—From an address in Calvary Church, New York, by Olive M. Jones.

Called By His Name.

A man who lived in Portland, Maine, has left by his will a trust fund of $100,000 to be used to pay for the education of Portland residents of his own family names, which are Rackleff, Miller and Nelson. They must show signs of genius and must be recommended by a teacher or distinguished attorney. That bequest will constitute a splendid monument to the testator, a monument of life, which will outlast all memorials of marble, granite or bronze.

Quite similarly does Christ honor and bless all those who are called by His name. They have been adopted into His family, they are proud to take His name upon them, and seek above all things to do honor to it. They feel the responsibility of carrying the name that is above every name, and would rather die than bring disgrace upon it in any way.

All such persons Christ endows with blessed and magnificent potentialities. He provides for them the best of teachers and puts them under the most fruitful discipline. Nothing that boundless resources can do to develop them is left undone. They are the favored of all men.—Selected.

"It has been well said that there is only one question more important than 'What do I think of Christ'? and that is, 'What does Christ think of me'? Perhaps some of us, if we knew the answer, would, like Peter, go out and weep bitterly."

For the Young Folks

FORGET IT.

If you see a tall fellow ahead of a crowd,
A leader of men, marching fearless and proud,
And you know of a tale whose mere telling aloud
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to forget.

If you know of a thing that will darken the joy
In a closet, and guarded, and kept from the day,
In the dark; and whose showing, whose sudden display,
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a thing that will darken the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy,
That will wipe out a smile or leastway annoy
A fellow, or cause any gladness to cloy,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

—Selected.

The Books That Ran Home.

Missionaries have to learn to do all sorts of things. There are no stores around the corner in the African jungle.

Many years ago a missionary was trying to teach some of the African boys and girls to read. She had no blackboard, no tablets, no pencils. With a sharp stick she made letters and figures in the red earth. School books written on the ground do not last long. Sometimes the rain came and washed the lesson away. Sometimes people walked over it. The missionary was dreadfully discouraged. Then, too, there were only a few children who could see her book on the ground. She wanted books that could be sent to other villages.

"What are we to do about it?" she said to the other missionary.

Now the other missionary was a man, and he was very strong. "If I knew where a printing press could be found, I'd go right out and get it for you," he said.

But both of them knew there was no printing press in that part of Africa. He took from his pocket his sharp knife and looked at it.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, I'll make a printing press."

The teacher laughed. "Make a printing press with a pocket knife! Who ever heard of such a thing?"

But the man missionary already had a good smooth board in his hand and he began to whittle away with all his might. He tried one way to whittle a letter and when that wouldn't work, he tried another way, and then a half dozen other ways, until at last he had a wooden type that would print the letter A. After that it was easy to make all the other letters.

But his troubles weren't over. Now that he had a printing press where was he to find the ink?

When the next boat came in there was some printer's ink in it, but there were no pads, and printer's ink is so thick it has to have pads and rolls. He found two empty tin cans and stuffed them full and running over with cotton.

"Now, if you'll give me one of your old shoes," he announced, "I'll show you how to make the latest thing to be had in printing pads."

The soft leather was ripped from the top of the shoe and tied over the cotton which stuck out from the ends of the two cans. The inventor rubbed the soft pads together in great glee. Then he dabbed some of the ink on them and kept on rubbing them together until the ink was thin enough for printing. He pressed the wooden type on the pads and then he pressed the wooden type on a piece of praper. There the letter A was on the paper! What should he print for the first words of his printing press?

One by one he made the letters, "Babe watu wa najjini", which means "Our Father which art in heaven."

One day a mission school boy was watching the wonderful printing press make the letters on white cloth. He pressed one of them on his body and the letter was printed on his smooth, brown skin. Then he added another until there it was, "Babe watu wa nijjini". When the other children saw it they wanted the printing press to give them some printing they could carry around with them, too, so the letters of the alphabet, or some words from a Bible verse were printed on their bodies. The boys and girls themselves were the first school books in that part of Africa, and they ran home to show the wonderful printing. Fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters began to learn to read from these living books. It wasn't very long before there were real books, with pages of alphabets, and stories to read, but many people remembered the days when the first printing press was whittled out of wood and when the boys and girls were the books that ran home.—Everyland.

Adcenturing in Goodness.

Five boys stood on the corner plotting deviltry. They had nothing to do, and it was Saturday and springtime, and the call of adventure was in the blood.

"Let's sneak down to the corner and ring the doorbell of Widow Jones. She hates that worse than poison," said one of the gang. "Oh, that's too easy," said another. Let's bum transfers and ride all day in the elevated trains." "Nothing doing," said a third. "I'd rather raid the fruit stand of old John. He's too lame to catch us, and his apples are all polished up.". The fifth boy now turned to the rest: "Listen, fellows!" he said, "I ain't any better than the rest, but I got an idea. Miss Jackson said yesterday that there is more fun in an adventure in goodness than in anything else. She knows an awful lot, I tell you, and beside, she's pretty. I'd like to try it just once." "Oh, go on!" said the first boy. "We ain't got time for that sort of stuff."

"Gee, I don't know," said the second. "I'd like to try it. If there's fun in it we should worry." What'll we do?" said the fourth boy. The fifth boy was equal to the demand. "I got it thought out," he said. "You know old Mrs. Sampson. She's so old her hands are all wrinkly. Well, I saw her trying to cut up a load of kindling. What do you say we go get axes and cut that kindling and pile it in her cellar, too, and when she offers to pay us we'll all say: 'No, Mrs. Sampson, we don't take nothin'. We were just loafin' around, so we thought you might like a lift'." "It's a go!" yelled the boys, and each ran off in a different direction for an axe. They were back in a moment, and a little later Mrs. Sampson straightened up her tired old back to look at five boys armed with axes standing all around her. "Bless!" cried Mrs. Sampson, "What do you want?" "Nothing," said the first boy. "Just thought you might want some help." "I can't hire you," said the old lady. "Nobody can," said the second boy. "We're doing this for you just because we want to."

A half hour later five boys stood at Mrs. Sampson's front door. The wood was all chopped and carted in. "I can't believe it," said the old lady, with tears in her eyes. "I never see the beat of it." "It ain't nothin'," said the fifth boy. "We was just adventuring in goodness. Good-bye, Mrs. Sampson."

"God bless you," said Mrs. Sampson, as she watched them walk away.

"Here comes a policeman," yelled the first boy.

"Who cares?" said the second boy.

"He ain't looking for us," said the third boy.

"It's great to how he's a friend of ours," said the fourth boy.

"Adventuring in goodness is the real stuff," said the fifth boy.—Journal of Education.

A Knight's Quest.

Jack wanted a book, Sir Thomas Mallory's tales of the days of chivalry and knighthood. Uncle Roswell promised to give it to him on condition that he would do a deed of chivalry every day for a week.

Jack objected, that it was impossible. "There aren't any dragons to slay nor princesses in distress to rescue now-a-days."

"There are plenty of people in distress, and some of them are princesses in distress, and some of them are princesses in disguise," replied Uncle Roswell. "You will have to discover your princesses before you rescue them."

The end of the week came and Uncle Roswell was wondering if Jack had failed, when he heard voices in the hall—

"Lean on me, grandpa," Jack was saying. "Lean hard when you step on your bad foot."

"You're a sight better than a cane, youngster. How did you come to think of it?"

"Oh! I'm discovering princesses, and you're my seventh," said Jack with a laugh, and grandfather went into his room wondering what nonsense the boy was up to now.

A little later Uncle Roswell said, "I overheard one grateful princess' thanks."

"Well," said Jack eagerly, "grandpa doesn't look like a princess, but you noticed he had the right manners."

"It is much to a knight's credit," answered his uncle, "to recognize a princess in the disguise of an old man. How about the other six quests?"

"There was Miss Bell the first day," began Jack: "I knew at once she was a princess, for she has golden hair and white hands and is fair and stately. And she was in distress, for crossing the field, a cow followed her, expecting to get something to eat. Then Miss Bell ran—and the cow ran, too!"

"And what did you do?" asked Uncle Roswell.

"Oh! I ran towards them and hollored and the cow stopped to look at me, and

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR,

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

SELL
CHRISTMAS CARDS

at forty to fifty per cent, commission. The best line of Box Assortment and Personal Christmas Cards on the market.

Write for Details.
ARTISTIC CARD COMPANY
Dept. 15. Elmira, N. Y.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

Miss Bell got out into the road. She thanked me in words just like real princesses used.

"The next day there was the fruit woman. She had just piled a lot of fruit on her stand when down came the awning, and all you could see was kicking feet and rolling oranges," and Jack laughed as he recalled the scene.

"Then you pranced up on your cream-white steed," suggested Uncle Roswell.

"I pranced up," said Jack, "frowning at some jeering knaves, and pulled off the awning and helped the princess to get up and to gather the scattered fruit. Then she said, 'You be a gentleman! May God bless you.' So I knew that she was a princess herself.

"I am not so sure about some of the rest, but they all had the right manners."

"Were they in distress, and did they give you hearty thanks?"

"One was a yellow cat with a tin can tied to her tail," answered Jack.

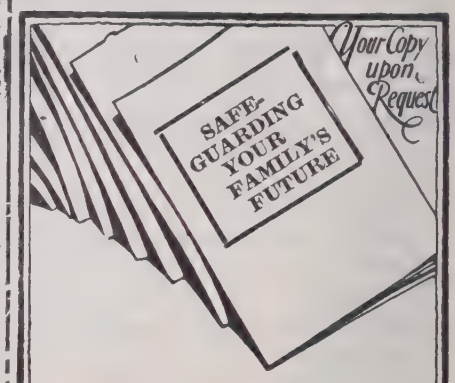
"Golden hair again," said Uncle Roswell under his breath.

"She purred her thanks for my unfastening the tin," Jack went on. "There was a clerk in the store who wanted a drink of water, but couldn't leave her counter, so I brought her one. Blind Tom was feeling for the penny he had dropped, so I found it and, to make it a real deed, gave him another. Then the Miller baby was crying for a dropped ball, and I picked it up for him and he smiled his thanks. Do they all count?"

"Of course they count," said Uncle Roswell; "I dub thee knight, Sir Jack, and here is the book. Continue your quests. In whatever disguise they may be, you will know they are real princess-if they return you hearty thanks by look or word or act."—Expositor.

The followers of Christ are to be one society because all are to be united to Him as their Leader and Life-Giver. The bond of union between them is loyalty to Himself, bearing fruit in love and service of the brethren. What Christ created was a Fellowship. Of that Fellowship the Churches are imperfect expressions. It is for us to try to form such an outward expression of the Fellowship as shall be in accord with the spiritual principles which Christ laid down.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES



An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

The American has just printed a booklet which gives authoritative information on the important subject of wills and modern methods of "Safeguarding Your Family's Future" (this is its title).

It will gladly mail you a copy, with no obligation on your part, upon request, as long as the supply lasts.

Kindly mention this paper.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

AUGUST

By Mary Carolyn Davies.

August is a gypsy month,
Husky, dusky, brown!
August is a gypsy month
Who doesnt' like the town

She prefers a lake or wood;
There she dwells content
As a proper gypsy should Sleeping in a tent

Cooking o'er a camp fire
I'm a gypsy too!
Where fir trees break the blue.
August, let us camp together,

Peter's Strange Potato.

Peter and his brothers John and Jack were on their way home from school when Peter stopped and picked something up.

"Look at that funny potato!" he cried, and showed them something that resembled an elongated potato. He examined it with renewed interest.

"Aw, throw that thing away and come on," said John, "we have all the potatoes we need."

But Peter looked upon his find and refused to throw it away. When he came home he went out into the garden, dug carefully a hole in a corner of it, and put his potato in it, while John and Jack stood near by and laughed.

"Be sure to grow potatoes for the whole family, Pete," said John teasingly.

The potato thrived, however, in spite of all mockery, and one day his mother came back from the garden with a smile and told Peter to go and take a look at his potato. Peter did so, and soon came back with his face beaming with joy.

"It has started to flower," said he, "and do you know, Mother, it does not 1160 Britt Wm R (c) barber at all resemble Daddy's potatoes."

A week later Peter came running to his mother, asking her to come and see the potato-flower. Together they went out into the garden, and Peter pointed silently to the plant.

"Really, Peter, this is the most beautiful dahlia I have ever seen," she said, almost in a whisper. And she bent herself toward the big plant and caressed the big flower with her fingers.

"And then think that I found it on the road," said Peter solemnly.

"But how did you happen to pick it up?" asked his mother, while she counted the beautiful buds on the big plant.

Peter bowed his head in embarrassment, and answered timidly, "I couldn't let it lie so that people would tramp upon it, because it had a little green leaf."—Selected.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

PHILADELPHIA SCHOOL OF THE BIBLE

DIRECTORS

FRANK M. GILLINGHAM	The Gillingham Co., Wholesale Lumber, Philadelphia.
J. DAVIS ADAMS	Printer and Publisher, Philadelphia.
JOHN SCOTT	John Scott Co., Wholesale Grocers, Philadelphia.
HORACE F. DEAN	Auditor, Philadelphia.
ALFRED SCHMITTHENNER	R. R. E. Co., Philadelphia.
CAREY S. THOMAS	Pastor, Altoona, Pa.
HARRY D. PHILLIPS	Phillips Bros. & Co., Wholesale Dry Goods, Baltimore, Md.
WILLIAM H. SNOWDEN	Thomas W. Price Co., Wholesale Paper, Philadelphia.

DOCTRINAL BASIS

I. We believe in the Old and New Testaments as verbally inspired of God, and inerrant in the original writings, and that they are of supreme and final authority in faith and life.

II. We believe in one God, eternally existing in three persons, Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

III. We believe that Jesus Christ was begotten of the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary, and is true God and true man.

IV. We believe that man was created in the image of God, that he sinned and thereby incurred not only physical death but also that spiritual death which is separation from God; and that all human beings are born with a sinful nature, and in the case of those who reach moral responsibility, become sinners in thought, word and deed.

V. We believe that the Lord Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures as a representative and substitutionary sacrifice; and that all who believe in Him are justified on the ground of His shed blood.

VI. We believe in the resurrection of the crucified body of our Lord, in His ascension into heaven, and in His present life there for us, as High Priest and Advocate.

VII. We believe that at any moment the rapture of the saved may occur, when "the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven" to catch up His people to meet Him "in the air."

VIII. We believe in the personal, bodily and premillennial return of our Lord Jesus Christ to set up His kingdom upon the earth.

IX. We believe that salvation is by grace through faith, and that all who receive by faith the Lord Jesus Christ are born again of the Holy Spirit and thereby become children of God.

X. We believe in the bodily resurrection of the just and the unjust, the everlasting blessedness of the saved, and the everlasting conscious punishment of the lost.

I find real enjoyment in signing the Doctrinal Basis without any mental reservation whatsoever.

W. A. DEAN	WM. CULBERSON, III.	ALFRED SCHMITTHENNER
HENRIETTA M. SMEDLEY	L. S. BROWN	HORACE F. DEAN
ROBERT M. WEBSTER	A. F. BALLBACH	CAREY S. THOMAS
R. PAUL MILLER	CLARENCE MASON, JR.	HARRY D. PHILLIPS
W. M. YEOMANS	HAROLD C. ABBOT	WILLIAM SOWDEN
WALTER F. McMILLIN	JOHN SCOTT	FRANK M. GILLINGHAM
	J. DAVIS ADAMS

The above signatures represent the entire Faculty and Board of Directors of the Philadelphia School of the Bible, January, 1929.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 309 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

FOR RENT—VIRGINIA BEACH, VA.

TWO LOVELY ROOMS WITH PRIVATE BATH in attractive bungalow; best location Virginia Beach. Address "Box 5", Virginia Beach, Va.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold Thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and Veil from $15. Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church Vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE.
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

FROM A SHUT-IN.

I HAVE FIFTEEN FOUNTAIN PENS, and I want to sell them at once, for I need the money, and I am forced to give up my mail order business, since I have not got a home to stay at regular. Twelve of these fancy pens are my $1.25 pens, and the others I have been selling for $1.00. But in order to sell them at once, I am asking $1.00 each. Buy one at once. Edward P. Broxton, Keysville, Ga.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED, POSITION AS TEACHER, Academical or Industrial department in home, or institution. Experienced. Address Miss Leislie L. Rucker, Pedlar Mills, Va.

WANTED, POSITION AS SUPERINTENdent of small institution, assistant to large, or case-worker for same, by lady trained and experienced in each. Address "X-X", care of Southern Churchman.

YOUNG LADY DESIRES POSITION AS Companion to an old lady; or semi-invalid, by October 1, if possible. Can give good reference. Address "A. G. C.", care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED: MATURE WOMAN OF VAried experience, student of Lewis Hotel Training Course, efficient in secretarial work, desires position as matron, or supervisor in school; manager of apartment house, or assisant manager of tea-room. Excellent references. Address Mrs. Ada B. Lloyd, P. O. Box 115, Moorefield, West Virginia.

WANTED: BY REFINED, CHRISTIAN woman, with highest reference, a comfortable and quiet home for the winter, and very small salary in exchange for light household duties; or perhaps the tutoring of a child. Would consider looking after home in absence of family, etc. Address, Mrs. H. L. Browne, Weedonville P. O., Virginia.

Marriages

HUMPHRIES-PURNELL.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Carstaphen Purnell, Charlotte, North Carolina, August 14, 1929, by the Rev. John Moore Walker, Mr. Clarence Eli Humphries, of Gastonia, North Carolina, and Almeyda Tredway Purnell, of Charlotte, North Carolina, and Winona, Mississippi.

Deaths

REV. BENJAMIN E. REED.

REV. BENJAMIN E. REED entered into the life beyond Sunday, June 23, 1929, in his eighty-sixth year. He was the son of Rev. Enoch Reed and Anne Teackle Parramore. His childhood home was in Accomac County, the Eastern Shore of Virginia. After serving in the Confederate Army, he entered the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Virginia, and was ordained on June 25, 1869. While living on Seminary Hill he met Mary Funsten, whom he later married.

His first parish was historic Brandon on the James River. In 1872, Rev. Mr. Reed accepted a call to Mt. Calvary Church in St. Louis, Missouri, and was pastor there for twenty-two years. For a few years he was rector of Grace Church, Paducah, Kentucky; after which time he returned to St. Louis. Forty-six years of his ministry were spent in devoted service in the Diocese of Missouri.

The Rev. Mr. Reed took a prominent part in the civic as well as the religious life of St. Louis. He was a brilliant preacher and a leader in every Christian movement.

His religious faith was a living, ever-present force. His belief in Jesus was the dominant note of his life. His was a sympathetic, bouyant nature. He had a gift for friendship, and attracted to himself the love of young and old. His way of living will forever be an inspiration to all who knew him. He lived to reap the harvest of things accomplished, and leaves a long record of service to mankind.

I thank God upon every remembrance of you.—Phil. 1:3.

MINUTE

Of the Annual Meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Church Home Orphanage With Regard to the Death of the Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina and President of the Board.

IN MEMORIAM.

The Board of Trustees of the Church Home Orphanage desires to place on record its tribute to the memory of the Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina and President of this Board.

In the passing of this distinguished Christian statesman the Nation and the Church have suffered grievous loss. Nowhere is this loss more keenly felt than at the Church Home Orphanage. This institution has known Bishop Guerry as a wise counsellor and a capable administrator, whose direction of its affairs has covered practically the whole period of its large development. Attention to every duty imposed upon him by his high office, Bishop Guerry served the Orphanage with deep and personal devotion because of his love for Christ's helpless little ones and his faith in the training and nurture afforded in this Home under the direction of the Church to whose service he had consecrated his life. With untiring zeal and energy he devoted himself to the conduct of its affairs and steadily advanced its interests throughout the whole of his Episcopate. The little children of the Home have lost a loving and sympathetic friend; the institution an able and constructive leader, whose place in the Church Home Orphanage, as in the ranks of Christian leaders and in the hearts of a multitude of friends, never shall be filled.

Bishop Guerry had achieved a position of leadership in the National Church. He was heard with interest and respect in the General Convention and in the pulpits of great churches and cathedrals throughout the land. His eloquent appeals for the sanctity of marriage and for Christian Unity constituted a worthy contribution to the literature of American Christianity. When he rose to address great public assemblies, members of this diocese felt a thrill of anticipatory pride in the assurance that he would make valuable contribution to the discussion and would ably represent his beloved State and Diocese of South Carolina.

Consecrated through his high office to the Cause of Christ and dedicated to the highest interests of the people of his beloved South Carolina, he lived among them as prophet and statesman preaching the Gospel of Salvation through Christ with inspired eloquence and presenting through his own life and character the highest ideals of Christian manhood and patriotic citizenship.

In the annals of South Carolina, among the names of a long line of distinguished leaders, William Alexander Guerry, Prophet, Bishop, Christian Statesman, is inscribed for time and for eternity.

The story of his tragic death sheds additional lustre upon a character so pure, so strong and Christlike. Breathing the very spirit of the Christ Himself, praying, "Father, forgive him, for he knew not what he did", he passed to meet his Master face to face; to receive a higher commission in a nobler service; and in the nearer presence of the Great Captain to wield the stainless sword of celestial warfare till the wrongs of earth are righted and the eternal victory is won.

W. K. PENDLETON,
RICHARD I. MANNING
A. M. RICH,
Committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

Judge J. K. M. Norton.

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, Virginia, held in the church on the morning of March 31, the following resolutions were adopted:

"By the sudden passing into eternal life of Judge James Keith Marshall Norton, on the morning of March 27, 1929, in his sixty-ninth year, St. Paul's Church and vestry suffer a severe loss. The son of a former deeply beloved rector, the Rev. George Hatley Norton, D. D., Judge Norton was a life-long and devoted and general member of the congregation. Since 1901 he served faithfully in the Vestry, and for three years was senior warden. He frequently represented us, also, in the diocesan councils. The esteem in which he was held by the members of his profession is shown in their written tribute to his memory; and the regard felt for him by the community in which his long life has been spent, was evidenced by the great outpouring of people of every class who attended his funeral. Jurist like Judge Norton recall the words of the good King of Judah to the judges of his appointment: "Consider what we do, for ye judge not for man, but for Jehovah, and He is with you in the judgment" (2 Chron. 19:6).

His unostentatious liberality to the poor is proverbial; and he supported the Salvation Army and Young Men's Christian Association, as well as many other good causes. He was a fine example of the chivalrous Virginia gentleman. We cannot fail to recall with gratitude that almost the last act of his life was devout attendance at a Lenten service in the church he loved so well. We laid him to rest with the service of his Church and with Masonic honors, in St. Paul's Cemetery, which had been for so long an object of his constant care, on Good Friday afternoon. The day and hour are reckoned by scholars and astronomers to be almost exactly the nineteen hundredth anniversary of the burial of his Saviour and ours, in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea. As that Saviour rose we, too, shall rise victorious by His grace and power.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

charge of the mission at High Top.

The Conference of Laymen.

Bishop Stires' call for a conference of laymen, to follow the clergy conference to be held at Easthampton in September, is meeting with a fine response. One hears of parishes that have already appointed and secured the acceptance of representatives. The clergy conference has been a notable success, and has served a useful purpose; and the call of a conference of laymen signifies fine leadership, and will doubtless meet with excellent results.

And speaking of laymen, how refreshing to read in the parish paper of the Church of the Ascension, Rockville Center, that the wardens and vestrymen of that parish, during an interim between rectorships, feeling themselves responsible for the conduct of parish affairs, appointed a monthly corporate communion for themselves, and a weekly vestry meeting. "The first Sunday in July, a hot day, by the way, saw them still going strong, and each Monday night sees every man in his place in the guild hall." These are the sort of men who will be eager to respond to the Bishop's call for a conference.

C. H. W.

Double Farewell Held Sunday at Episcopal Church of Atonement.

Dr. Jeffrey Jennings, pastor of the P. E. Church of the Atonement, Seventeenth Street, near Fifth Avenue, had the unusual experience of holding a double farewell service last Sunday, at a Missionary Service. William J. Smith, a member of the church, who has been connected with athletics in the Y. M. C. A. for fourteen years, will leave the city tomorrow for Tennessee to study for the ministry. He was presented with a purse of gold from friends in the congregation.

Miss Jean Jones, another member of the church, will leave on Saturday for Alaska. Miss Jones is a registered nurse, and has been connected with the Samaritan Hospital. Having volunteered for the Episcopal Mission field, Miss Jones was assigned to duty in Alaska.

J. J.

Sister Brigit and Sister Felicitas.

Sagada was inexpressibly saddened on the Sunday on which we commemorate Our Lord's Passion by the tragic loss of two of the most loved members of its Mission staff, Sisters Brigit and Felicitas of the Community of St. Mary. On the eve of that Sunday the Sisters had eaten a pudding prepared for them by a cook who had resumed her duties only that day after an absence of several months, in which sodium flouride had been used instead of flour. In spite of all that could be done for them they passed to their rest within a few hours.

They had come to the Islands together in May, 1921, and since that time had served God and the Mission well. They had been devoted to their work and to the people. The love which was felt for them could be seen in the crowds of grief stricken people who attended the Requiem Mass and Burial Service on Passion Sunday. The church was filled with the mountain people among whom they had worked for eight years. The faces of these people showed that they could not understand why the "Apo-Madis" had been taken away from them —nor can we—but they were all present to pray that they might be happy and at rest in that new part of God's Kingdom to which they had been been called. No one who was present in the chapel of the new convent in which the bodies of the Sisters awaited removal to the Church will ever forget that night—the crowds of boys and girls kneeling there, sobbing and praying and joining in the prayers which were read from time to time, the flickering candles, the boys in vestments, kneeling in turn beside the bodies of those whom they had loved and reverenced, the red light burning before the Altar which gave assurance, in spite of the grief, that they were still with Him whom they had adored and worshipped while still in their reathly tabernacle; all these things are a memory which will remain as long as life endures.

We all know that many of the blessings which have come to the work in Sagada are directly attributable to the prayers of the Sisters of St. Mary. Those who have spent much time here know that it was almost impossible to go into the Church, except at their Office time and not find one or more of them kneeling there. We know that their prayers were constantly for one or another of the needs that had been felt, either for individuals on the staff or for the Mission work. Whenever any one felt the need of some blessing, the first thing that entered one's mind was to ask the Sisters to pray that it might be granted. Somewhere those prayers are still rising to God, but we who are left here miss the direct contact with those yho offer them and the inspiration to devotion that they always incited in those about them.

"Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth." Sister Patricia often said that the reason that Sagada had many things to suffer was because God loved Sagada so much. We can not really hope to understand, any more than the mountain people can, why, within three years, four people who were greatly loved and who were so valuable to God's work in the mission, have been removed by death. We can not really regret, for their sakes, their removal from our midst. The Sisters are where they always so greatly longed to be, with the Bride-Groom whom they espoused here on earth. They are in "joy and felicity" and they rest from their labors. But we do suffer greatly. And we miss them pray and as kothers to pray, that God beyond words. The work suffers. We will quickly raise up volunteers to come quickly and carry on the work that these had so nobly and tirelessly carried on for years:

"In God's hands we leave them: faith and prayer
Shall link our hearts in love to them alway.
O true, brave hearts! God bless them, wheresoe'er
In God's great universe they are today."

—L. L. R., in The Diocesan Chronicle.

Personal Notes

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., is now at Chester, Nova Scotia, taking his vacation.

The Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C., returned from Scotland, August 10, and is now spending some time at Chester, Nova Scotia.

The Rev. Moulton Thomas has accepted the appointment by the Bishop of Maryland as minister in charge of Hancock Parish, Maryland.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Battle McLester was advanced to the Priesthood on the Ninth Sunday after Trinity, 1929, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, S. T. D., D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Tennessee, in St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. Paul's, who also read the Epistle. The Bishop preached the sermon and read the Gospel. The Rev. James R. Helms, vicar of Thankful Memorial Church, St. Elmo, read the Litany. The Rev. Mr. McLester, who was formerly a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is priest in charge of Grace Memorial Church, Chattanooga, which he has served as lay reader and deacon ever since his admission as candidate for Holy Orders in this Church.

PEABODY
BALTIMORE, MD.
The Leading Endowed Musical Conservatory in the Country.
Scholarships, Diplomas, Tuition in all grades and branches. Circulars mailed

ATTENTION
GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES
Increase your funds for Church work. Send us
25 new subscriptions
and receive
A CHECK FOR $25.00
SOUTHER NCHURCHMAN,
628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICES
One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

100 YEARS FROM NOW.

Wouldn't it be a comforting thought to know that a century from now, or two centuries from now, the final resting place of those who are near and dear to you will be marked by the unmarred token of your thoughtfulness and loving care? The selection of a monument is the last service which you are privileged to perform for those loved ones who have been taken away. At such times, when life seems empty and dreary, and it is hard to bear your burden of grief, there is a measure of solace in knowing that all has been done that could be done. There is consolation in feeling that the visible expression of your everlasting devotion and respect is worthy of the sentiment which it represents. The monument which you erect is no mere lifeless thing of stone and mortar. It is a living symbol, bearing witness to the beauty of the life that has departed, and to memories that are undying. Carved into imperishable Winnsboro Granite, your message will stand for all the world to see throughout ages to come.

Winnsboro Granite is made up of tiny crystals of precious stones such as amethyst, ruby, emerald, sapphire, and others. These precious stone crystals were fused together by Nature hundreds of thousands of years ago under terrific heat and pressure. They are harder than tool steel, and give to polished Winnsboro Granite the splendent beauty of a profusion of sparkling gems.

A beautiful booklet has been prepared which gives a full description of this superb monumental granite. It also contains photographs of a number of artistic monuments which will serve for suggestions as to designs Ask your monument dealer for this booklet, or if it is more convenient, write Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

THE PROBLEM OF ROMANIZING

Mr. Editor:—In the issue of "The Living Church" of June 15th appears a very remarkable article under the title, "The Problem of Romanizing," by Rev. Kenneth R. Forbes, Rector of St. James Church, Roxbury, Mass., which the author says is "from the viewpoint of a Catholic."

It is well worth while to quote a few of his statements, which I commend to the serious reflection of every loyal Protestant Episcopal Bishop, clergyman and layman in the Church:

"What is popularly called the process of 'Romanizing' in the Episcopal Church has become an acute problem. * * * Our Modernist—and to a less extent—our Evanbelical brethren seem to be in a panic lest the Episcopal Church shall find itself delivered bound to the Roman hierarchy if the steady growth of the Catholic party in the Church is not drastically checked or destroyed. The absurdity of some of these fears and the superficial knowledge of history which much of the propaganda shows has perhaps led many men and women of the Church whose sympathies are entirely with the Catholic movement to deny that there is any real 'problem of Romanizing' in the Episcopal Church, save in the overheated imagination of Protestant propagandists. If this be the case, it behooves such Catholic-minded folk to take to themselves a serious second thought."

The quotation is here interrupted to direct attention to the fact that this last sentence contains a tacit admission that there is a very real problem of Romanizing in the Church. But we proceed:

"The genuine 'problem of Romanizing' is not at all what our Protestant Modernists depict in their heated denunciations. There is no danger that any considerable or influential number of churchmen will ever wish to lead us bound into the Roman communion. The leaders and the rank and file of the Catholic movement have no desires—secret or otherwise—of that sort.

The real 'problem of Romanizing' in the Episcopal Church is a problem of strategy and concerns chiefly the avowed adherents of the Catholic movement in the American Church.

* * * * * *

In short, the Catholic movement in the American Church to-day is actually embarrassed by the very magnitude of its success.

* * * * * *

The primary and distinctive mission of the Episcopal Church is to teach the Catholic faith and life to American Protestants."

By "the Catholic faith" in the last sentence is meant essentially all of the doctrines of Rome.

The writer of the article in question is certainly correct in saying that the process of "Romanizing in the Episcopal Church has become an acute problem."

When laymen read the statement of Dr. Forbes that "there is no danger that any considerable or influential number of churchmen will ever wish to lead us bound into the Roman communion," and that the leaders of the Catholic movement have no desires of that sort; when they read his encomiums upon the "embarrassing" success of the Anglo-Catholic, or "Back to Rome" party; and then, when they look the actual facts squarely in the face, they wonder how a clergyman ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church can face its people with any such declarations.

Let us look at some of the cold and indisputable evidence.

Headed by a clergyman in the Diocese of Maryland (the very Diocese of the Presiding Bishop of the Church), there exists in the Protestant Episcopal Church a society known as the "Confraternity of Unity." I quote a few expressions from the "Credenda" appearing in its constitution:

"The purpose of this Confraternity shall be to promote that movement within the Anglican communion which looks toward corporate reunion with the Holy See.

I believe in the true, real and substantial presence of the Body and Blood, together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in the most holy Sacrament of the Eucharist.

I believe in Purgatory.

I believe in the Primacy, not only of honor but of jurisdiction of the Roman Pontiff, successor of St. Peter, Prince of the Apostles, Vicar of Jesus Christ.

I believe in the veneration of the Saints and of their images.

I believe in everything else that has been defined and declared by the sacred Canons and by the General Council, and particularly by the Holy Council of Trent, and delivered, defined and declared by the General Council of the Vatican, especially concerning the Primacy of the Roman Pontiff and his infallible teaching authority."

The Order of the Holy Cross, a society of monks, is distributing in the Church thousands of tracts teaching Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament; teaching what amounts to worship of the Virgin Mary; Purgatory; Holy Water; Penance and about everything else the Roman Church teaches.

Another society, known as "The Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic," is broadcasting a leaflet advertising rosaries said to have been "enriched and blessed" with papal indulgences.

With headquarters at Stamford, Conn., exists the "Order of the Nail," an avowedly secret society.

In addition to the above, there are nearly sixty other societies, all working to the same end—the "strategy" by which the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church are being undermined.

How long will the loyal Bishops, clergy and laity of the Church stand idly by while these things go on?

Aroused to the seriousness of the situation confronting the Church, one of America's foremost lawyers writes, in a letter received to-day:

"I am most tolerant in all matters of opinion, and will contend as earnestly for the other man's right to differ from me as for my own right to differ from him. But I have no tolerance for treason in respect of the fundamental principles on which our Church was founded."

The bald question confronting the loyal Bishops, clergy and laity right now is: Is the Protestant Episcopal Church worth preserving? If it is, there is but one way to preserve it, and that is to get together and act in no uncertain manner.

C. L. MARSILLIOT.

Memphis, Tenn.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., AUGUST 31, 1929. No. 35.

BISHOPS AND PREACHERS

Give us the Word of our God, not literary essays or "poetic expressions of gymnastic emotions"
as substitutes for our great creeds.

The Modernist says:
"O yes, the Bible is inspired, but not as much as I am—because I am so inspired as to be able to pick out all the 'UNINSPIRED' texts in the Bible and give you only the 'INSPIRED' ones."

—Langbourne M. Williams.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall not pass away."

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

OUR SAVIOUR

It is the Incarnation that gives organic character to Scripture. It is human guilt that constitutes the great pre-supposition of Revelation. IT IS THE DOCTRINE OF FAITH as man's response to the overtures of love that meets the exigencies of man's moral nature and MAKES THE BIBLE THE BEST AND GREATEST MESSAGE THAT MAN HAS EVER HAD. Why, then, do men tell me that they wish the Bible taught religiously, but not doctrinally? Why do educated men who have been taught to distinguish between the letter and the spirit show such proneness to mistake when they touch religious themes. Yet the world is full of men who speak in this way. These are men who stand in our pulpits and preach on the patience of Job and the moral courage of Daniel; who find material for sentimental sermons on the seasons, and practical sermons on the importance of sleep, or the need of restricting emigration, but who are silent respecting the tremendous fact of sin, and the dogmatic significance of atoning blood. I do not say that such men are handling the Word of God deceitfully, for I am willing to have them plead guilty, if they prefer, to an unscholarly stupidity THAT PREVENTS THEM FROM SEEING THAT THE BLEEDING CHRIST IS THE CENTRAL FACT OF SCRIPTURE."

—Francis L. Patton, D. D. of Princeton University

"Fight the good fight with all thy might; Christ is thy life, and Christ thy Light."

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

Episcopal school for girls, maintaining best Virginia traditions of refinement and culture.

Thorough College Preparation. Varied General Course. Outdoor Life.

EIGHTY-SIXTH YEAR BEGINS SEPTEMBER 18, 1929

For catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, Principal

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address The Dean.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, 628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS, President

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor

THE REV. FRANK COX, Associate Editor

THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D., Associate Editor

MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor

MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor

JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorials	5
The Inspiration of a Trip to the Holy Land—Rev. Alan Pressly Wilson	6
The Heavenly Vision in the Psalms—G. Osborne Troop	7
We Believe That Thou Shalt Come—Kenneth Mackenzie	8
Inspiring Service for Our Boy Scouts	9
Honor Memory of Virginia Dead	10
Religious Liberty in Italy	11
The Bible's Power of Attraction	12
Literary Pastimes of Authors	12
Yam Money	12
Immigration	12
Favorite Scripture Verse	13
Letters to the Editor	13
Book Reviews	13
Church Intelligence	15
Family Department	17
Childrens Department	19

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited. Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Anne's,

Charlottesville, Va.
Box G.

Beautiful location in far famed Blue Ridge Mountains College preparatory and elective courses. Fully accredited. Open gymnasium allows sports in the fresh air in all weather. Sleeping porches. Riding taught by expert. Music. Art. Bishop of Virginia President of Trustees. Margaret L. Porter, M. A., Principal.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.
Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE

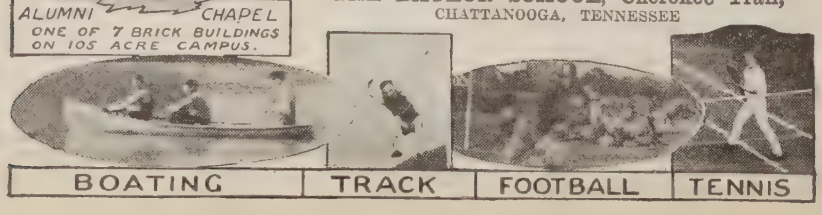
Invites your careful consideration of its Faculty, Courses of Study, Wholesome Christian Atmosphere, and Physical Equipment.

For catalogue write,

REGISTRAR
Hampden-Sydney, Virginia

The Baylor School

A BOY'S OPPORTUNITY



Sound Scholarship and a Happy School Life

on the most beautiful campus in the South.

An accredited preparatory school for manly boys. Christian Influence. High Scholastic Standards. Unusual Equipment. Golf, Tennis, Swimming, Boating, Gymnasium, three Athletic Fields, etc. For Catalogue, Address

ALEXANDER GUERRY, Headmaster

THE BAYLOR SCHOOL, Cherokee Trail,
CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

ATTENTION
GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES

Increase your funds for Church work. Send us

25 new subscriptions

and receive

A CHECK FOR $25.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,

628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

God has His best things for the few
Who dare to stand the test;
He has His second best for those
Who will not have His best.
—Lewis Morris.

The Carver of Nazareth is divinely skillful and most wonderfully patient. The material may be very unpromising; but you can never judge by appearances. It's the gnarled log, my friend assured me, that provides the loveliest grain.

PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1020 Lytton Bldg., Chicago.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

LINEN for the CHURCH

PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture

THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.

T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

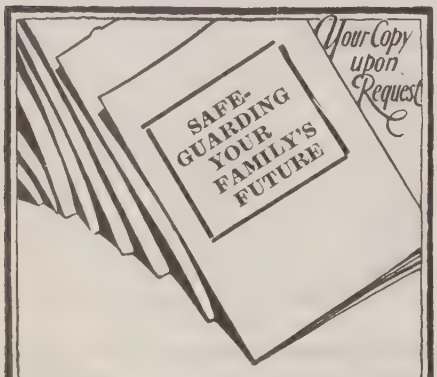
and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.



The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The American has just printed a booklet which gives authoritative information on the important subject of wills and modern methods of "Safeguarding Your Family's Future" (this is its title).

It will gladly mail you a copy, with no obligation on your part, upon request, as long as the supply lasts.

Kindly mention this paper.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Better to work and fail than to sleep one's life away.—Jerome K. Jerome.

Campbell White affirms that "Prayer is the first and chief method of helping to solve the missionary problem."

I pray, O Master, let me lie,
As on Thy bench the favored wood;
Thy saw, Thy plane, Thy chisel ply,
And work me into something good!

"Keen and intense life's race,
Sharp and severe its strife:
Lest I grow faint and slack my pace,
O Christ, be Thou my life."
—C. S. Hoyt.

There are bruised and broken folk all about us! Oh, that it may be said of us that we never passed a wounded man by, but that like Jesus we lived not to be ministered unto, but to minister.—J. D. Jones.

"A Christian should keep in mind that he is not an orphan, and that it is his duty and privilege to ask much from his bountiful Giver."

"There is nothing possible to man which is more ennobling to his spirit, to his whole being, than the endeavour worthily to worship God."

We are not asked to give as much as Jesus did; we haven't so much to give; but most of us could follow His example more than we do.

"Make channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run,
And love has over-flowing streams
To fill them every one.
Ceasing to give, we cease to have,
Such is the law of love."

The speechless cry of an over-burdened spirit, wearied with the trials of life, or borne down with the struggle against sin, has still the Friend of all friends to plead with the Almighty Father, in the gracious Saviour's Name, and ask help for which we can cry, but which we cannot describe. "The Spirit Himself maketh intercession for us."—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

A committee of five usually consists of the man who does the work, three others to pat him on the back, and one to bring in a minority report.—Fort Worth Record-Telegram.

Would to God we might all live in such close union with our risen and exalted Lord that the out-breathing of His Spirit could be felt by all who come in contact with us to the breaking of the power of sin and the turning of many to righteousness. It is a ministry to which all are called and from which no sincere and humble servant of God is excluded.

"God's purpose for unity holds. We go our various ways, we pursue sometimes one policy, sometimes another, we fail, we procrastinate, we succeed, we only make partial unions, we see but a few steps ahead but all the time we know that we are working towards God's purpose and that will not fail. The unity movement is assured of success, because God's purpose holds."

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., AUGUST 31, 1929. No. 35.

USUALS

Surely blest are we usual, ordinary, commonplace people. We are and we make the country. We do the work. We are the earthly ultimate power, court of last resort. We can know and enjoy peace and happiness most of the time and security from hostile criticism and do so vastly and so much good, if we will.

A few days ago, Mary MacLane died in Chicago. To the younger people her name is strange. To elders who recall it at all it brings vague, straggling, unsavory, random recollection. Twenty-eight years ago she was one of the most conspicuous persons in the United States, talked of everywhere. Twenty years old then, she wrote and published an infamous book, audaciously indecent, defiling herself and womanhood, scoffing at religion and purity and decency, filled with mocking prayer to "dear Devil". Dirty newspapers, of which there were too many and too widely circulated in 1901, as in 1929, with small and dirty editors intent on showers of unclean pennies, filled columns with the young woman, her doings and sayings and her book. She rose to prominence swiftly, doubtless gathered much money. Showmen of the baser kind, catering to coarse and obscene appetite, offered her stage engagements, some of which probably she accepted. Then she went the pace, riotously. She died alone, forgotten, poor, miserable, desolate, in a shabby room of a second or third class hotel. The day she died some thousands of women who twenty-eight years ago sighed with momentary envy of her quick success and wealth and to see her flaunting insolently like a green bay tree were happy and contented mothers of families, queens of hopeful households, with troops of friends, useful, busy, respected and beloved—just usual, decent, clean living and clean thinking women.

Craving to be somewhat above other people and in the eyes and mouths of the crowd is one of the several inborn tendencies of humanity, which become blighting vices or blooming virtues, curses or blessings, as used. Most of us have occasional or chronic fits of it. In any group of children will be some intensely eager for special notice, thrusting themselves forward, unpleasantly and offensively or more discreetly and decorously, according to breeding and disposition. Ripening youth has its dreams of grandeur, builds its secret air castles. Parents, teachers, pastors, are responsible, in great measure, for the direction of the childish ambitions and the youthful dreams, but the responsibility very, very often is forgotten. As years go by and the realities and struggles of life are met, the ambitions of childhood vanish or are transformed, the dreams of youth dim, the air castles shrink and their glorious colors fade to the drabness of the daily cares and labor. It is so with the great majority of us. Those who by circumstance or natural impulse retain eagerness to be seen and known above the general multitude take many differing paths to varying objectives, from clowning for local fame as humorist, posturing for social leadership or "daring" sociological, theological or scientific enunciation, on to seeking the bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth or aspiring to the presidency. Mary MacLane used a short, easy, way. She might have applied her brilliant talents to production of books, stories, poems, articles, to brighten tedious hours, rest tired minds, carry comforting or elevating or helpful thought. Had she done so she would have been mentioned casually now and then in newspapers and magazines, admired and thanked by thousands of the usual people—really but little more than just one of us usuals. But she would have made a trail of pleasure given, good done, gratitude and respect fairly won. She preferred to make herself widely known and now remembered with dim disgust by a startling, shocking, challenge to the public sense of decency and serving a dish of salaciousness for the delight of depravity.

It has been said sometimes that in the hereafter there can be no punishment for evil doers more dreadful and terrible than full knowledge of all the harm from their sins; no reward for the doers of good than sight of the happiness they have caused, the sorrow and misery they have prevented—evil and good extending, perhaps, through long successions of generations, among people unknown and in far scattered places. If that could be true, we may imagine Mary MacLane required to review forlorn processions of poor, painted, bedraggled, lost creatures parading streets of cities at night, cringing abjectly before policemen, inviting and accepting brutal insult, bound for potters' fields and morgues, with degraded life to end in shameful death—her work—followers of her suggestion, poisoned by her. By a coincidence, some of the newspapers that recorded the woman's end told of a pamphlet published by Geo. B. Cortelyou, president of the Consolidated Gas Companies, New York City, in honor of John O'Connell, foreman of the companys Twenty-first Street plant—one of us usuals. He served his employers seventy-two years and died at the age of eighty-nine. Nobody knew or heard of him beyond his own neighborhood of the big city. In seventy years he never missed attending mass before going to work. All his evenings and holidays were used in visiting, comforting, relieving, the sick and destitute and distressed and doing what he could to reclaim and save those going to bad ways. Most of his earnings went to charities or church. Vivid contrast there is between the two lives and what the two souls might see as resulting from their sojourn here.

Many of the splendid achievements, the noble deliverances, wonderful betterments and advancements, have been done by men and women of unusual qualities. To all these we owe hearty acclaim. Probably all of them have suffered more than any of us may know in mortifications, apparent defeats and cruel rebuffs and stings and perils proverbially attending all eminence. Those of us who do small and lowly work with large and high motives may feel assured that in the sight of the God to whom all hearts are open we rank with the greatest and most famous of the benefactors, infinitely above those who may have done big things with little purposes. In final analysis we usuals give the results. We make success or faiure, overthrow the tyrannies, apportion reward according to merit, right the wrongs, establish the reformations, do the buying and using and spending and giving, without which the efforts of the unusual and the mighty would be vain. We are slow and blundering in it sometimes; but the usuals usually decide and do justly in the end.

Let us be content and strive. It is the lowest and most absurd folly to be envious of the evil doer, however triumphant apparently, of the frivolous, the vain, the self exalting, publicity hungry, those who, like the ill bred children, try always to be thrusting themselves forward at any cost. All these pass in a moment. Any of us impatient of obscurity tempted to seek prominence, publicity, distinction—whatever it may be—by unworthy ways and for gratification of greed or vanity, should remember Mary MacLane, soaring high in public notice, passing like a noisome vapor, leaving seeds of moral disease and death; and the obscure Irishman, leaving wholesome breath of fine example and living results of small benefactions, ministrations, services, to his kind. For all of us usuals the true philosophy of our lives and the purpose of them is summed in the Church Catechism—"To learn and labor truly to get mine own living and to do my duty in that state of life unto which it shall please God to call me."

The humblest, plainest, poorest, feeblest, most absolutely usual, of us can do that; and there is nothing higher nor better to be done in this world; before the Supreme Power and Judge nothing more beautiful or appealing more strongly to His Mercy and Love.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE INSPIRATION OF A TRIP TO THE HOLY LAND

By the Reverend Alan Pressley Wilson

SHORTLY before the Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem certain Greeks called upon Philip of Bethsaida and said to him, "Sir, we would see Jesus" (St. John 12:21). This request was taken to Jesus in a roundabout way, as mentioned in a succeeding verse; although nothing is told us as to the outcome.

Doubtless the Greeks had heard of the miracles and teachings of Jesus and knew His doctrine. Yet they wanted to confirm this knowledge but, more especially, to add to their knowledge the inspiration that comes from contact with virile, devout Personality. Knowledge without the zeal that inspiration brings us is but part way on the road to useful activity and accomplishment.

We are not at a loss to realize that Jesus, the perfect Gentleman, granted the interview desired and that this interview must have satisfied the Greeks and filled them with the inspiration His very presence always provided.

There was an exclusiveness shown by the actions of the disciples with regard to those whom they decided should not come into contact with Jesus and this undesirable trait was evidenced on more than one occasion. Some time before this, devout, believing mothers sought to reach Jesus, that they might gain His blessing upon their children. They realized what this would mean to them and to the children God had given them and so they braved the embarrassment incident to making the request of the disciples, such was their desire for the inspiration of contact with Jesus.

Like the gauntlet one sometimes must run through and past the numerous self-important clerks that surround some prominent personage was the cordon of exclusiveness the disciples would have thrown around Jesus. The record says that "the disciples rebuked those that brought them" (St. Mark 10:13). "But, when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God'."

In like manner it may be that the disciples treated the Greeks when they sought to see Jesus. However, it is evident that they persisted in their request and we feel within ourselves that Jesus, whom the "common people heard gladly", must have satisfied the innermost longings of the Greeks for the inspiration that contact must have added to their knowledge and belief.

So, a tour to and through the Holy Land provides an inspiration to and for our knowledge of the Scriptures. We may know ever so much about the Bible, the Word of God; we may have intimate knowledge and be able to give many and accurate quotations therefrom, even to the location of "chapter and verse" to substantiate our assertion; yet, without the actual knowledge that comes from a tour of the Holy Land, any lesser knowledge is most unsatisfactory.

Imagine with what greater authority a speaker can address us and the greater insight he can give of the River Jordan, to take an example at random, if that speaker has been to Palestine and has followed the winding course of that same river. With what greater facility he can paint a vivid picture of the baptism of Jesus, if he has seen the river; can tell of the contour of the course, can speak of the rainy seasons when it spreads the rich soil it has brought from other sections over the land on either side; or, can speak of the prolonged dry season when the river hardly is more than a stagnant creek!

Or, speaking of baptism, with what vividness can a speaker who has traveled the road down from "Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert" (Acts 8:26ff) tell of the conversion and subsequent baptism of the Eunuch of Ethiopia!

Let us go to Jerusalem at Easter; let us visit the chapel said to be erected over the tomb of Jesus; let us read in the Harmonized Sequence of the Gospels the account of His trial, crucifixion, burial and resurrection: as we witness (and, it may be, participate in) the worship of the Copts, there must come to us the inspiration that lifts us far above the level of the Bible reader who has not been blessed with the inspiration of a trip that means so much to us.

Let us visit the plains of Judea during the Christmas season, let us see the shepherds and their sheep, let us realize the real fellowship—if one may use the term in that connection—of the man and the animals, let us learn that a shepherd knows and calls his sheep by name and that they know him and refuse to answer to the call of a stranger (St. John 10:3-5). Can we ever again read about the shepherd and the sheep without an inspiration born of actual experience? Then, as we walk out over the plains and see the brightness of the stars, we almost can see the heavens open and see and hear the angels as they sing their happy song of "Peace on earth, good will to men".

Think not that, on coming back to our homes, we ever read the account of the birth of Jesus without a new and more lasting impression being made on us; with the strengthening of our faith such as can come in no other way.

Let us follow the steps of the Master as we go from Judea to Galilee. It was customary for the Jews to make a long journey out of such a trip, crossing the Jordan into and up through Perea, recrossing the river and thence into Galilee, just to avoid going through Samaria; such was their hatred of the Samaritans. Born a Jew, Jesus evidently had inherited the same tendency to hate the Samaritans but, being "born of God", He loved the Samaritans as He did His own people, and wanted to provide them with the same knowledge of their Heavenly Father—however they and the Jews may have disagreed over their descent from Abraham.

So, let us realize that "He must needs go through Samaria" (St. John 4:4). As we follow our guide we come, as did Jesus, to the city of Sychar, "near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son, Joseph". We stop at the well of Jacob and drink therefrom. As we take the physical draught there comes to us spiritual refreshment that, to the longest day of our lives, will remain with us. In after years we read and explain the journey that Jesus took and our hearers live again the incident and get a new vision of the love for mankind that Jesus possessed and a new knowledge, an inspired knowledge comes to us as we remember our travel experience.

There is much in the fellowship with other Christians along the way. Meeting in New York City, a wonderful experience to many of us from small, inland towns, at last there comes the exciting moment for our departure. From that time on we become members of one big family and live together in a wonderful relationship throughout the entire tour. Thrown together and drawn together by reason of a common purpose and common objective, we get a new inspiration for and a more intimate study of the Book.

Then begins our period of receptivity through study and lectures and readings conducted on shipboard by the leader of the party. As we go from place to place in Palestine; as we view the (even reputed) sites of various Scriptural incidents and see the hills around Jerusalem we realize more fully what the Psalmist meant, when he said (125:2), "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever".

As we drink from this spring or that brook—even though it cannot be asserted authoritatively that it really is the source from which David, in his thirst as he lay in the cave of Adullam, in a sort of delirium, craved water from the brook which is at Bethlehem, near to the gate (2 Samuel 23:16 and 1 Chronicles 11:18): we gain spiritual refreshment with the slaking of physical thirst.

Throughout the whole tour we renew our study of the Scriptures and visit the various places named therein The Word takes on new meaning and we have our faith strengthened as our knowledge grows apace. We return to the homeland and separate to go to our individual homes. We regret the severance of friendship (although many lifelong friendships are created and sustained in this way); yet there lingers in our memory the joy of an intimate glance into the life of many a child of God treading, it may be for the first time, the land the Saviour trod.

We return to our homes and our several tasks, but things are irrevocably different. We take our places in the home, the store, the shop, the church and the Sunday-school class and, to all outward appearances, it is the same one who left not so long ago. But we are never again the same; there has come a vision.

It has cost us something to place ourselves in position to receive this vision and many of us have reached it through severe and telling sacrifice. Yet never will we think of what we denied ourselves in order that we might make of ourselves fit vessels for the water of life to be carried and given to dying souls, thirsting for that water: that we may be instruments in God's hands for conveying the bread of life to hungry souls in their starved condition.

Over and over again will we join with the Psalmist in his song: "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will show forth all thy marvelous works. I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou Most High" (Psalm 9:1 and 2).

THE HEAVENLY VISION IN THE PSALMS

By G. Osborne Troop

THE Fiftieth Psalm is suggestively entitled by Dr. Moulton "A Vision of Judgment", and I am sure that with that title in mind it will richly repay careful study. I am quoting as usual from the Revised Version:

"God, even God the Lord, hath spoken,
And called the earth from the rising of the sun
Unto the going down thereof.
Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty,
God hath shined forth.
Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence:
A Fire shall devour before Him,
And it shall be very tempestuous round about Him.
He shall call to the heavens above,
And to the earth that He may judge His people:
Gather My saints together unto Me;
Those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice
And the Heavens shall declare His righteousness
For God is Judge Himself."

We have in the above quotation a sublime description of the coming forth of the Heavenly Judge, and the gathering together of the saints as His assessors in the Judgment. But as we read on in the Psalm, the Judgment itself is not described, but rather the principles on which it will one day be conducted. It is an anticipatory Vision of the Judgment to come. The Judge is pictured first of all as addressing His people Israel:

"Hear, O My people, and I will speak;
O Israel, and I will testify unto thee:
I am God, even thy God."

The next words of the Divine speaker shed remarkable light on the insufficiency of the Levitical sacrifices:

"I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices
Nor for thy burnt offerings which are continually before Me.
I will take no bullock out of thine house
Nor he-goats out of thy folds:
For every beast of the forest is mine
And the cattle upon a thousand hills.
I know all the fowls upon the mountains,
And the wild beasts of the field are Mine.
If I were hungry I would not tell thee;
For the world is Mine, and the fulness thereof.
Will I eat the flesh of bulls
Or drink the blood of goats?
Offer unto God the sacrifice of thanksgiving;
And pay thy vows unto the Most High:
And call upon He in the day of trouble:
I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."

Note carefully that this is an old Testament passage, written long before the time of Christ. Well did these ancient believers understand that the blood of bulls and of goats could never take away sin. We remember the noble words of Samuel to Saul, the disobedient King:

"Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

Just as broken-hearted David cried:

"Thou delightest not in sacrifice; else would I give it;
Thou hast no pleasure in burnt offering.
The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit
A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise."

The great purpose of these animal sacrifices was to bring home to Israel their need of an Atonement that should really take away sin. What right had any man to take an innocent animal, and offer its life to God for his own sin? Obviously, he had no such right. The key to the Levitical Sacrifices is found in Leviticus 17, verse 11: "The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life." The sacrifice was of God's appointment, not of man's invention. The Epistle to the Hebrews is as clear as daylight in teaching us that these ancient sacrifices served only as a temporary "covering" for sin, prefiguring the sacrifice of the spotless "Lamb of God" Whose death upon the Cross "put away sin" forever. In St. Paul's great words—"The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the Law; but thanks be to God, Who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Psalm of Judgment closes with a solemn warning to the wicked, which may well be laid to heart in these lawless days:

"Unto the wicked God saith—
'What hast thou to do to declare My statutes
And that thou hast taken My covenant in thy mouth?
Seeing thou hatest instruction,
And castest My words behind thee.
When thou sawest a thief, thou consentedst with him
And hast been partaker with adulterers.
Thou givest thy mouth to evil,
And thy tongue frameth deceit.
Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother
Thou slanderest thine own mother's son.
These things hast thou done, and I kept silence:
Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself:
But I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

Now consider this, ye that forget God,
Lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.' "

There is no need to add to these words of warning. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Happily, the Psalm closes with words of sure and certain hope for every penitent sinner:

"Whoso offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving glorifieth Me;
And prepareth a way that I may show him the salvation of God."

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

XVI.

AN important study in relation to the assumption of His majesty over the world by the King of Kings and Lord of Lords lies in the contemplation of the "times of the Gentiles" mentioned by our Lord in Luke 21:24.

To the time of Nebuchadnezzar, all history in the Word of God centers about the nation of Israel. We have no record of other races chronologically. But at this juncture, a new calendar is inaugurated. What seems to the scholars as a mere figment, a post-eventum prophecy, becomes to the spiritual believer a treasure house of thought and expectation. There never was a ruler such as Nebuchadnezzar. All his predecessors were admittedly environed by restrictions. Evan Pharoah was willing to tell the dreams to Joseph; but Nebuchadnezzar refused to even try to recall his; and based his challenge to his astrologers, soothsayers and magicians upon their being able not only to interpret his dream, but to tell what the dream itself was. See Dan. 2:7-12. His autocracy was defined by Daniel in the words, declared to Belshazzar, "the most high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honor; and for the majesty that he gave him, all peoples, nations and languages, trembled and feared before him; whom he would he slew and whom he would he kept alive; whom he set up and whom he would he put down" (Dan. 5:18, 19). This record is not known of any potentate on the pages of history. Therefore, in his dream, Nebuchadnezzar is

That Head of Gold.

Daniel explains the entire image in a gradual deterioration from gold to silver, brass and iron and finally to that incomprehensible condition of the feet and toes mingling clay with the iron. See Dan. 2:37-43. So we note that history takes shape with Nebuchadnezzar and all through the kingdoms of Media and Persia, Greece and Rome, it develops. In each successive stage, we behold a lessening of the autocratic rule. Under the Medes and Persians the king's authority was modified by the counsel of his court advisers. The Story of Esther illustrates this, as we may plainly see. So that in that regard the inferiority of silver to gold is indicated. The hips of brass conveying the promising autocracy of Alexander, did not, however, prove any but the rule, that Daniel set forth. For while we may speculate as to what Alexander would have been had he lived, his cutting off in early glory left his domains to be divided into four parts; and Greece was destined to be but a mediocre government so far as autocracy goes. The Romans who succeeded the Greeks as a world power did fling down the challenge to the rest of the human race and by over-powering might and merciless administration, held the world in its fists. Human power, however, ends always in Disintegration of Governmental Prerogative.

While the two legs of the iron part of the image indicate the eastern and western branches of the empire, there was constant friction in a so vast territory and as well the rapid integration of alien races. Even when Rome was a republic, the inability of the parts to fuse in one, supplemented by the fact that the military elements were in the ascendency, resulted in an imperialism which existed in the days of our Lord's earth-life. But the emperor was far from being what Nebuchadnezzar was. The ages had changed the minds of men. Freedom was in the air and conspiracy rife. The whole trend from Julius to Romulus Augustulus was a steady decline. So far as the eastern section of the empire was involved, it had no effect whatever upon the world at large. The separation of the western Roman Church from the eastern Orthodox, shut the east away from cosmopolitan life. It was not until 1453, that the sack of Constantinople liberated the literary and art treasures of a comparatively somnolent empire.

The Feet of Iron and Clay

most interest us, for they illustrate the very problems with which we are dealing in our day of governmental complexity. The symbolism can hardly be credited to any human devising. Far from so conjecturing at the time in which Daniel lived, men would be likely to consider autocracy as persistently cumulative. No statesman, crediting Daniel with that art, could have thought out such a scheme of this governmental future. By all that is rational, we must concede the record to be a revelation from God, who alone could foresee what history has justified in the retrospect. The very thing that Daniel saw has come to pass. Iron the symbol of rule, hard and cold, strict and just, will not mix with human elements. Clay can never unite with iron; for it cannot thereby strengthen itself, but rather weakens the iron by the infusion. This was all clear to Daniel, not as a student of government, such as he was, but by the illumination of God's Spirit.

A Government by the People and For the People is a beautiful ideal; and since we have it, it were well to exalt it. But it has brought to our doors a mass of problems, a mess of maladjustments confessedly nauseating and humiliating. Let us be frank and truthful as to this. We are not proud of our oil scandals, our legislative lobbies, our interlocking directorates and increasing capitalisms which determine the estate of myriads of innocent people, of our industrialism which makes money for us and gives us luxuries, but degrades humanity by its heartless demands, of our inability to control the lawless flagrantly flouting their insubordination, of our increasing divorce problems which the laws cannot regulate, of the decay of home religious training, and the clamoring insistence by our educators that the parents are not capable of doing it, anyway. All this in free America. And much more. What is to be done? No one has a remedy that will work. Syndicalism in business is leading us to think of that process in government. We face the fact that "mob rule" is always unintelligent, impulsive and cruelly unjust. What do the people know about government? That is the question put to us by social economists. We have no answer. We can give the people the vote, and now that the women have it, what is the possibility? They cannot vote without instruction; for few have the training. Wives, in the main follow their husbands or other advisers. Men themselves, do not weigh things by merits; they follow the lead of some demagogue, who knows how to coil them to suit his own purposes; and they shout the "battle cry of freedom" with lusty patriotism. None of us can point the finger of scorn at another. We are all in the same category. The intricacies of government are too involved to lend themselves to our plastic touch. We have to submit to leadership. Happily, it is oftentimes, true and wholesome; again we find ourselves ashamed of our guilelessness; and we reap a sorry harvest therefrom.

Now in all solemnity, we may ask,

What Will God Do to Correct the Situation?

He gives us the answer to our appeal. When in the final issue as men have tried democracy, limited monarchy (which is confessedly a good form as we see it now) and finally dictatorship, He will set up a kingdom. Observe that it is in the days of the governmental perplexities of the period of the intermingling of the iron and clay that this will occur. That kingdom will be the sovereign rule of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who came to be a King (Matt. 2:2), admits that He is King (John 18:37), bears over His head a Kingly title as He dies on the Cross (John 19:19), holds in His heart the secret of administration which shall bring to the world universal peace and prosperity of which our studies will deal in minuteness duly.

We may discredit all this. Our predilections may be too strong to halt and turn about; we may heroically claim that humanity can yet solve the riddle; but those of us who hold the heavenly chart of the ages, seem to know instinctively that what Daniel beheld is the true perspective for the golden age that is to come, when our Lord returns.

And we observe that the issue is met not by a persuasive influence working silently in the public consciousness, as we should like to believe, but by a shock likened to the fling of a missile. For the strict words of Daniel are, "Thou sawest, till that a stone was cut, and without hands (showing its supernatural character) smote the image upon its feet (the feet of iron and clay) and brake them to pieces" (Dan. 2:34); again, "In the days of those kings (probably the ten confederated states which formerly comprised the Roman empire) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall not be left to other peoples; but it shall break in pieces and consume all those kingdoms and it shall stand unto the end of the age" (Dan. 2:44). Shall we witness with Daniel as this disclosure comes to us, "the dream is certain and the interpretation sure?"

Thus do we see that the "times of the Gentiles" is a distinct age in the world's history and destined to be concluded. Originating with Nebuchadnezzar and ending with the resumption of the monarchy of David, when King David's greater Son shall sit on His throne. Thus the history of Israel interrupted by the fall of Zedekiah (since then there has been no king on the throne of David) will be re established by the coming of the once repected King" whose right it is (Ezek. 21:26, 27).

INSPIRING SERVICES FOR OUR BOY SCOUTS

JAMBOREE news in the English papers give accounts of two wonderful services for the Scouts, attending the World Jamboree in England. The service, held in Westminster Abbey, could be attended by only a small percentage of the fifty thousand lads assembled at Arrowe Park; and was followed by a great open-air service at the Camp, when the address was given by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Both services must have been so thrilling that they will never be forgotten by those so fortunate as to have been able to attend.

SCOUTS AT THE ABBEY.

Standing in the pulpit of Westminster Abbey, at a festival service for Boy Scouts on Wednesday, July 24, the Dean of Westminster looked down on the flags of thirty-four foreign nations, seven British Dominions and twenty-one Colonies. They were borne by representatives from every part of the world, who had gone to England to attend the World Jamboree, held at Arrowe Park, Birkenhead, to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the beginning of the Movement.

The procession wound round the ambulatory, headed by the Thirtieth Westminster Troop B. P. Scouts, which is another name for the Westminster Abbey choristers, was a moving and impressive spectacle. The flag-bearers walked in pairs, arranged in alphabetical order. The United States of America, ranked under the letter A, walked, by representation, side by side with Albania, France and Germany were also close together. China was paired with Chile, Egypt with Esthonia and Iceland with Japan. The Chief Scout, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, came near the end of the procession, and just ahead of him was the venerable, bearded figure of the Earl of Meath, taking his place as a member of the Headquarters Staff. Last of all came the Minor-Canons, the Canons, and the Dean, in their copes of crimson and gold.

The Lesson had been read by the Chief Scout, and there had followed "Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven"; and the Apostles' Creed. Next, the Precentor, in a gold cope, and attended by acolytes, in alb and amice with blue apparels, began the prayers with the Dominus vobiscum.

The Dean's part was to welcome the company, which must have numbered some two thousand boys and youths. It was not so much an occasion for eloquence as for extreme simplicity, which would enable those with a small acquaintance with our tongue to follow what was said. The address was exactly right. In simple words, simple sentences, slow delivery and adequate pauses, the Dean began by saying that the occasion marked a great day in the history of Westminster Abbey. Then he told his hearers how, nine hundred years ago, William the Conqueror had been crowned there, as had every King and Queen of England since. He pointed behind him to the shrine of Edward the Confessor, and before, down the nave, to the tomb of Livingstone, whose body had been borne by loving hands from Central Africa, and a little beyond it that of the Unknown Warrior.

Then he asked: What did they mean by that service? They meant the consecration of the World Jamboree to the service of Almighty God. Nothing less. Coming from all over the world, they were bound together by the strong bond of brotherhood and common service. Was it an exaggeration to say that the future of the world lay in their hands? They represented by common consent the most praiseworthy movement towards world peace that the world had ever seen. They stood shoulder to shoulder in fellowship and friendship. They came from many lands, they spoke different languages, but they stood together as brothers. Might God prosper the sacred brotherhood to which they belonged.

Few ceremonies in the Abbey have been simpler than this gathering, but few can have stirred imagination more. —The Canadian Churchman.

PRIMATE AT THE JAMBOREE.

An Address to Scouts.

A great open-air service for Scouts was held on Sunday at the Jamboree camp in Arrowe Park, at which an address was given by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Intercessions and thanksgivings were led by the Rev. Pat Leonard, Scout Chaplain, Church of England. The lesson from the twelfth chapter of St. Mark's Gospel was read by the Rev. J. H. Bateson, and there followed the recital of the Scout Law by Mr. Hubert Martin, International Commissioner. Prayer was offered by the Rev. George F. McLeod and the Lord's Prayer was recited by the congregation. There followed the hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name", and then the Archbishop of Canterbury, whose voice was carried to the far corners of the arena by loud speakers, addressed the Scouts from the First Epistle of Timothy, chapter six, verse 20. His Grace said:

Twenty-one years ago a soldier dreamed a dream. From his boyhood he had rejoiced in the life of a Scout. In many adventures he had found that it quickened the mind and braced the will and made men good comrades. His dream was that the spirit of the good Scout might make the boys of his own nation healthy, happy and helpful, and fit them for loyal service to their country and their God. Today, "Behold this dreamer cometh", and he comes not alone but with a comradeship of nearly 2,000,000 boys belonging to forty-one countries. His dream has become one of the great realities of the world. How deeply must his heart be moved as he remembers the little camp of a score of boys at Brownsea Island, where he first tried to make his dream come true, and contrasts it with this vast camp of 50,000 and thinks of his 2,000,000 Scouts in every quarter of the globe. May I not dare to say to him before you all, "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour?" I pray that God's blessing in fullest measure may be upon him and upon the worldwide company wherein his dream has been fulfilled.

In this truly wonderful movement each one of you has his own place. That place means a great trust. It is that just there you will be true to the ideals for which the movement stands. For remember it is not mere numbers that give it worth. The counting of heads may be a danger and a snare. It is the spirit that matters. So I have a word for each of you this morning. It is one given long ago by St. Paul to a young comrade, 'You will find it in our English Bible in his first Letter to Timothy, chapter 6, verse 20. It is this: "Keep that which is committed to thy trust." What is the spirit you are on trust to keep?

The Fourth of August.

This is the fourth of August. It is impossible to forget that on this very day fifteen years ago this realm was drawn into the Great War, which for four years darkened the earth. God forbid that I should recall the bitter memories of that awful time. I only speak of it because today we see coming forth from its shadow this great army of the youth of all nations pledged to the spirit of peace and good will among men. Here is a power without which treaties and leagues are of little avail. It is a power of the spirit. It passes into you and lays hold of you through the instinct of comradeship one with another. You are learning it when you see boys of many nations and many languages wearing the same Scout's uniform and obeying the same Scout law and when around the camp fire you meet together. In future days, when you have become citizens of your various countries, you will remember and know that, in spite of any differences which may arise, you are all brothers.

Adventure and Self-Sacrifice.

Yet if war is to be banished is there anything that can take the place of the appeal it has made for centuries, not least in the heart of you, to the spirit of adventure and the splendour of self-sacrifice? Can these great qualities be found along the ways of peace? Your movement is giving the answer. Quite apart from military ways and memories you find scope for adventure in games, in camps, in rambles through wood and field. You learn to play and work together as good comrades, thinking less of yourself than of your side. You are bound in honour to be alert in finding chances of doing useful service and acts of helpfulness and kindness. Thus day by day, by an instinct you are scarcely aware of, you are discovering that happiness does not go with selfishness and that what makes life worth living is not success for self but the service of others.

The Spirit of the Scout.

All this means that the true spirit of the Scout comes from another world than that in which men push and strive for themselves. It comes from a world where honour and truth and unselfishness and brotherhood rule: the world whose name is the Kingdom of God. Let me repeat to you some words written by a brilliant servant of the British Empire in the stress of the War. They were sung in Westminster Abbey at the Service of Thanksgiving for the recovery of our King. The writer is full of fervent love for his own country as you will always be for yours:

"I vow to thee my country—all earthly things above—Entire and whole and perfect the service of my love."
Then he remembers—
"And there's another country I've heard of long ago—
Most dear to them that love her, most great to them that know—
We may not count her armies: we may not see her king—
Her fortress is a faithful heart, her pride is suffering—
And soul by soul and silently her shining bounds increase,
And her ways are ways of gentleness and all her paths are peace."

This other country is the true home of the spirit committed to your trust. Just in so far as you are mindful of her, loyal to her, will you be good citizens of your own country and a friend to all the world. Yes, "we may not see her King", but He is among us. Some of you have already met Him earlier today. He has said that where two or three are gathered together in His Name He is in the midst of them. I would that all of you could believe that there is no leader, no comrade, more worth following than this perfect Knight who went out alone on the most splendid adventure in human history to win by the mere might of His self-sacrifice a place for God's Kingdom in the hearts of men. I know that by following Him each true-hearted Scout would keep the spirit committed to his trust.

You are rejoicing in the stir, the fun and frolic of this huge camp. You must be filled with pride as you see the greatness of your company. Yet remember each of you carries his own share of responsibility for maintaining its honour and securing its future. Many years we hope may still be given to the Chief Scout, but when he lays down his noble work it is for you—Scouts, Rovers, Scoutmasters—to carry it on. This you will do if everywhere you keep its spirit high and true. Of that great spirit you are trustees. It is a great thing which is committed to your trust. Keep it."

The Jamboree has done much to quicken hope at a time when there is much pessimism abroad in regard to the rising generation. It has shewn that the youth of the world is glad to overcome racial boundaries and national inhibitions. British, French, German, Belgian, Hungarian, Bulgarian, and American, to say nothing of visitors from Oriental lands, have lived as one happy and friendly community at the time of year that must, for the older generations, be forever charged with terrible memories of conflict and loss. The Archbishop of Canterbury voiced the earnest aspiration of those older generations when he greeted the Scouts of the world as the great army of the youth of all nations who would turn the spirit of adventure towards the vast enterprise of peace. But it is not only in that direction that the success of the Scout and Guide movements is full of promise. Their laws are an embodiment of practical Christianity that makes for the formation of character strong in every relation of life. It was right that the archbishop should give the Chief Scout his blessing, and through him bless all who were gathered into the Movement. Though the Roman Catholic service had to be a separate function, the picture we publish today shews that the Chief Scout has created an idealistic movement that can draw the separated Churches into some unity. Few elevations to the peerage have been better deserved or more widely appreciated than the act that brings Sir Robert Baden-Powell into the House of Lords.

The Challenge to the Church.

The Jamboree will have brought the whole problem of youth before the minds of many. It is especially a call to the Church to consider whether it is cooperating with the Scout Movement as much as it might, still more whether the methods employed in Church work display the sympathy and understanding which has made that movement the great force that it is. The young today, doubtless, present special problems and difficulties. But the question that has to be answered is, Can they be effectively dealt with except by those who are prepared to make great sacrifices to enter into their lives and appreciate their aspirations? How many parishes are there where the main effort is directed towards those who are growing up into manhood and womanhood? Are there not still too many churches where the views and prejudices of the older people reign supreme? Experience shews that where the life of a church is planned in such a way that the young feel that they can breathe freely in it, the old are glad to be there too, but when only the elders are considered stagnation and slow death are inevitable consequences.—The Guardian.

Boys—Pilots of the Future.

Earth's future glory and its hopes and joys,
Lie in the hearts and hands of growing boys,
The world is theirs, to do with as they will;
The world is theirs for good results or ill.

We soon must give into their outstretched hands,
The mighty issues of our changing lands,
In Earth's large house they soon must take their place.
A menace or a glory to the race.

Tremendous issues on Time's threshold wait.
We need strong men to guide the Ship and State
Into the harbor of the next Decade.
Look to the Boys from whom strong men are made.
—Clipped.

HONOR MEMORY OF VIRGINIA DARE.

By Victor Meekins.

Manteo, August 19.—Beneath the trees of old Fort Raleigh today where England's empire-building adventurers first planted a colony in the new world nearly three centuries and a half ago, a thousand Dare County people and their friends gathered to pay homage to the memory of America's first-born white child, Virginia Dare.

Native sons and daughters of a county that has advanced so much of late under the spur of modern progress, who have wandered far afield, gathered again today in accordance with an annual custom long established to meet friends, to renew the ties of childhood and childhood scenes, and recognize again the debt all America owes to these early English attempts to colonize America.

Hear Joyful News.

And these folks found joy in the news they heard, that an attempt would soon be under way to make this spot the sacred history shrine it should be, bringing it to the attention of all America. Here will be established a park, and markers to more effectively set off the events that transpired nearly three hundred and fifty years ago, and which demand the homage of the English-speaking world.

With funds secured at Washington by Congressman Lindsay Warren, a memorial gateway is to be built, plans for which have been approved, markers will be provided around the enclosure, and other improvements that will only be a beginning of this work will be made. In 1926 more than 5,000 were present when the British Ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, was the principal speaker, and a general week of festivity and homecoming was sponsored.

In accordance with long established custom, the ceremonies were held under the auspices of the Roanoke Colony Memorial Association, which has long since marked the spot with an imposing granite marker. The principal address was delivered by President Alexander B. Andrews of Raleigh; Dr. Robert Brent Drane, of Edenton, presided. The invocation was by the Rev. H. B. Hines, of Manteo, and the music was led by Miss Effie Reid Westcott, noted musician and daughter of Roanoke Island.—Raleigh News and Observer.

We quote from Mr. Andrews' address:

Sunday, August 18, 1929, is the three hundred and forty-second anniversary of the birth here on this spot of Virginia Dare, the daughter of Annanias Dare and Eleanor White, his wife, who was the daughter of John White, Governor of the Colony. Two days later—August 20, 1587—she was baptized "according to the rites of the Church of England". This is the first celebration of the rite of Christian baptism of a North American born white child, and ought to be a mile post in the history of our nation. On Sunday, August 11, 1587, Manteo, the friendly chief of the Hatteras Indians, had been baptized here. All students of history will recall that Sir Walter Raleigh sent out three separate expeditions to Roanoke Island, the first of which landed in 1584.

The second was in 1585, and upon the colonists returning to England they carried with them Manteo, the friendly chief of the Hatteras Indians, who remained in England ten months, and then returned with the members of the third colony, headed by Governor John White, who sailed April 26 from Portsmouth, and on May 8 from Plymouth, which colony reached the shores of Roanoke Island July 22, old style (August 5, new style). They numbered one hundred and seventeen souls, consisting of ninety-one men, seventeen women (twelve of them apparently being wives accompanying their husbands), and nine children.

The question naturally arises, if Manteo was baptized here on Roanoke Island six days after the colonists landed, why had he not been baptized aboard ship, if there was a clergyman in the party, or why had he not been baptized during his ten months' stay in England, during the greater part of which time he was more or less in intimate touch with Sir Walter Raleigh. That far seeing man, the knight in waiting to Queen Elizabeth, was not a person who did things by haphazard.

Of Sir Walter Raleigh it could well be said, as has been oftentimes said of Cecil Rhodes, who laid foundation stones on which was builded the Union of South Africa, that "he was a Britisher of the Empire type".

Undoubtedly Sir Walter Raleigh, with his vision, looked forward to the third colony on Roanoke Island in 1587, being a permanent colony, just like the Jamestown Colony twenty years later in 1607 was planted. It was natural that he wanted the way of the colonists in the new found colony of Virginia in North America to be as easy, as his foresight could possibly make it, and the most natural deduction is that, from his intimate association with the chief, Manteo, during the ten months of his stay in England, seeing the chieftan's conversion to Christianity, saw the vision of a great Indian Chieftain's publicly embracing Christianity, the gathering of the colony of English people at Fort Raleigh in the new colony of Virginia, at which would be present numerous members of the friendly tribe of Hatteras Indians. Could anything augur more hopefully for a colony 4,000 miles from Old England, whose journey across the seas from Plymouth to Roanoke Island, had occupied seventy-five days, whose settlement was on an island where two previous attempts had been unsuccessful, and whose ultimate failure meant the failure and loss of prestige of Sir Walter Raleigh. Undoubtedly, the baptism of Manteo was not an accident, but it was in accordance with a plan previously determined upon in England. Doubtless his baptism was made an occasion of the colonists giving rejoicing for having safely passed through "the perils and dangers of the sea" many days aboard the sailing ship of less than two hundred and fifty tons burden, beset by tempests and storms, fearful of being overhauled by some Spanish or Portuguese pirate. They were undaunted band of English people, the same stock as you and I.

Eleven days after the colonists landed at Roanoke Island an infant daughter was born to Eleanor White Dare, the daughter of the Governor, and the wife of Annanias Dare, one of the colonists.

At that time there were no permanent white settlements in America. It is true that John and Sebastian Cabot had discovered Newfoundland and sailed along the Northern coast of the United States. De Soto had landed in Florida and had crossed to the Mississippi River. Ponce de Leon had also landed in Florida. The Kingdom of Spain had sent several expeditions to the West Indies. Cortez had landed in Mexico and, after making prisoner of Montezuma, the Chief of the Aztecs, put him to death, and confiscated, in the name of the King of Spain, his store of silver and valuables.

When we look at the records of the numerous expeditions that were sent out to America by Spain, all of which seem to be dedicated to the God of Mammon in acquisition of the riches either by persuasion or force, it is a challenge to us people of English blood, English speaking language and English descent, to here pause and make due acknowledgment of an act typical of the English people of the sixteenth century, which is typically alike today of the British Nation as well as the English speaking world of the twentieth century.

Was this third colony of Sir Walter Raleigh's made up in a haphazard way of volunteers who had enlisted for a hazardous undertaking, which was the exploring of an undiscovered country, just as is the expedition of Commander Richard E. Byrd, which is now in the Antarctic region making scientific investigation and geographical exploration in a region not heretofore visited by man?

The fact that the colony of one hundred and seventeen souls contained twelve families, and numbered ninety-one men, twelve women and nine children, and the further fact that in the party one of the married couples was the daughter and son-in-law of John White, the Governor of the Colony, shows it was intended to be a permanent settlement, and one in which in future English people could originally emigrate, and this was to be "a northeast corner" on which an English speaking colony of English people with English ideas of government and religion could be erected.

Again, we must remember that at this time the great naval power of the world was the Kingdom of Spain, and that one of the so-called lesser naval powers was the Kingdom of England. With the Home Government facing the problem of trying to wrest the naval power from Spain, and establishing what is so dear to the English "Brittania Rules the Waves", one realizes what it meant for the establishment of a permanent settlement in the colony of Virginia.

With this perspective and vision, one can visualize Sir Walter Raleigh, planning for everything possible to make smooth the way of the colonists, that the baptism of Manteo nine days after the colonists landed was not an accident, for undoubtedly he could have been baptized in England, but it was a rite or ceremony of the Church of England which was to be performed in the new established City of Raleigh on Roanoke Island.

What became of the colonists? Each reader of history is familiar with the story of the expedition returning to Roanoke Island in 1591 and finding carved upon a tree the word "Croatan".

There is a legend that the colonists inter-married with the Indians and are the ancestors of the present band of Croatan Indians now living in the southern part of our State, which number about three hundred persons.

Twenty years after the third colony was established on this island, which had disappeared four years later in 1591, there was landed at Jamestown the settlement of the Virginia Company, which was permanent and has endured three hundred and thirty-two years. Undoubtedly had the Roanoke Island colonists been alive, their whereabouts would have been reported through the Indians to the colonists at Jamestown. Picture to yourself the colonists at Jamestown who had occupied eighty-seven days crossing the sea, who launched out small bands to explore the wilderness and ascertain the nature of the country around them, daily coming in contact with the friendly Indians, it would have been most welcome news for them to have learned anything of the survivors of the settlement on Roanoke Island which, as the crow flies, was less than one hundred and fifty miles distant, and less than three hundred miles distant on the sea. Again it is difficult to believe that an entire colony of Englishmen, and these colonists were the associates and fellow Englishmen of your ancestors and my ancestors, would go native, although the vast expanse of the Atlantic Ocean separated them from their homeland, and they neglected that which must have been unavoidable, when the fight against the Spanish Armada prevented any other expedition to be sent to their aid. Undoubtedly this colony perished and disappeared from the face of the earth.

William Strachey, writing in 1613, states "the men, women and children of the first plantation at Roanoke were murdered by practice and commandment of Powhatan."

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN ITALY.

"They of Italy salute you" (Heb. 13:24). And they have reason for sending their greetings with great joy to fellow-Christians throughout the world. For Premier Mussolini has presented to Parliament in a three-hour speech a new law which was adopted almost unanimously, and which gives complete religious liberty to Protestants in Italy. Stefano L. Testa, the Italian Secretary in New York of the American-European Fellowship, calls upon the Lord's people to rejoice that a new day has arisen for the spreading of evangelical religion in the very center of Roman Catholicism. It had been feared, when the Italo-Vatican Concordat was signed by Mussolini and Cardinal Gasparri last February, that Protestant Churches would be suppressed and the Roman Catholic would be the only Church in the kingdom. The new law gives both Protestants and Jews legal standing and complete religious liberty, their churches being admitted and protected by the State, which is much more than they had dared to hope for. Mr. Testa believes that this is God's own work, and that He has intervened to save the "little flock" from being scattered. Among the thirteen articles of the new law are provisions guaranteeing to all citizens religious liberty and the right of religious discussions; State protection of non-Catholic cults; the legality of marriages performed by Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis; and no religion to be forced on children in the public schools. There will be courses of religious instruction in the public schools, but parents can select the religion in which their children are to be instructed, or ask to be released from any religious instruction. The Catholic papers in Italy are said to be in consternation, but Fascisti and government papers have all risen in defense of Protestants and the new law. The American-European Fellowship is partly responsible for the missionaries of the Evangelical Church in Italy, and hopes for a large extension of evangelistic work there, since this door has, under God's providence, been thrown wide open. Gifts to the work may be sent to the American-European Fellowship, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, marked "For the work in Italy".—The Sunday School Times.

THE BIBLE'S POWER OF ATTRACTION.

The current issue of The Bible in the World has an interesting article by the famous Indian Christian, Sadhu Sundar Singh, entitled: "What the Bible Is to Me," from which we quote as follows:

People can see the Book and its readers, but its wonderful unseen power and force of attraction are known only by those who read it sincerely and prayerfully. Just as the magnet and needle can be seen, but the magnetic force which draws the needle to itself is hidden and unseen and is not visible by telescope or microscope, so the unseen power of this Word of God draws sinners like me to the Saviour. Further, just as the power of attraction in the magnet does not depend on its acceptance or denial by people, so this hidden drawing power of the Bible exists and is always present whether people believe it or not. It makes no difference whatever, so much so, that even many non-Christians have somehow or other felt its power; for instance, Hindus and Mohammedans in India often forbid their people to read the Bible, lest they be drawn away by its power and become Christians.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY ANNOUNCES PLAN TO COUNTERACT ATHEISTIC LITERATURE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

The American Business Review is pleased to learn, that officers of the American Tract Society have planned to combat the rising tide of atheistic literature that is continually flooding this country and Europe. This welcome announcement has come from Dr. William H. Matthews, General Secretary of the Society.

At a recent executive meeting this Society announced they would distribute nearly 5,000,000 books and tracts in 1929 to reach a year's total greater than that printed by the society in any of the past fifty years.

The American Tract Society, of which William Phillips Hall is President and President Herbert Hoover and Bishop James E. Freeman of Washington Cathedral, are honorary vice-presidents, asks for public cooperation to publish Pilgrim's Progress and similar books in foreign languages.

We feel that this is a noble and worthy work that should warrant the assistance of all America and for that matter, of the entire civilized world.

Dr. Matthews, in rendering the annual report of the Society, states that atheistic associations are working hand in hand with those who handle the vast amount of Russian propaganda, which is sent to our shores, in which God and Christ are ridiculed and cartooned in blasphemous fashion.

It is against this dangerous class of unscrupulous and irreverent associations who operate under a hideous cloak of seeming sincerity, that the American Tract Society is working. In this highly admirable movement, Dr. Matthews and his prominent associates should receive the cooperation of all religious elements throughout the world.

The American Business Review can do no better than urge the highest cooperation for this significant movement, and in congratulating Dr. Matthews and his associates, is merely tion, The Block, The Stake, The Rack, Dirt, Disease; world.

LITERARY PASTIMES OF AUTHORS.

A correspondent sends us, apropos of the very interesting article on "extra illustrating of books" in the last number, the following facts which might be called "the book-case deceits and amusements of great men": During his lifetime at Gadshill, there was in Charles Dickens' library a panel door. When this was closed, it appeared to form part of the library, for it was molded and painted so as to represent books, and on the backs were conspicuous titles. Some of these were of a startling, all of an amusing character. They had resulted from the great humorist's own ingenuity, and his friends often made merry over the quaint conceits. Here are a few of them: Cat's Lives (9); Captain Cook's Life of Savage; History of the Middling Ages; Hansard's Guide to Refreshing Sleep; The Wisdom of our Ancestors: Ignorance, Superstition, The Block, The Stafle, The Rack, Dirt, Disease; Waterworks, by Father Matthew; History of a Short Chancery Suit, twenty volumes and Index; Cockatoo on Perch; Jonah's Anecdotes of the Whale; Richardson's Show of Dramatic Literature; Cribb's Edition of Miller; Kant's Eminent Humbugs; The Gunpowder Magazine; King Henry VIII.'s Evidences of Christianity; Socrates on Wedlock; Swallows on Emigration; Groundsell, by the author of Chickweed; Drowsey's Recollections of Nothing; Lady Godiva on the Horse. Some of these titles, it will be admitted, are exceedingly ingenious. As a whole, however, they fell short of a similar kind of thing undertaken by Thomas Hood, and carried out with triumphant results. The Duke of Devonshire wrote to Hood: "It is necessary to construct a door of sham books for the entrance of a library staircase at Chatsworth; your assistance in giving me inscriptions for these unreal folios, quartos, and 12mos, is what I now ask." In the Memorials by Tom Hood and his Sister the list compiled for the Duke of Devonshire is given, and from it the following selections are made: Ye Devill on Two Styx (Black letter) two volumes; On Cutting off Heirs with a Shilling, by Barber Beaumont; On the Affinity of the Death Watch and Sheep Tick; Lamb on the Death of Wolfe; Tadpoles: or Tales out of my own Head; Pluralty of Livings, with regard to the Common Cat; On Trial by Jury, with Remarkable Packing Cases; Boyle on Steam; Annual Parliaments: A Plea for Short Commons; On Sore Throat and the Migration of the Swallow, by T. Abernethy; Debrett on Chain Piers; Johnson's Contradictionary; Life of Jack Ketch, with Cuts of his own Execution; Cursory Remarks on Swearing; Recollections of Bannister, by Lord Nair, The Scottish Bocaccio by Cameron; Cook's Specimens of the Sandwich Tongue; Hoyle on the Game Laws. There were many made; but some were naturally a little strained as to effect, while others had a temporary and fleeting interest, and depended for their full effect on names already unfamiliar, or incidents which have passed from the public memory. The selections are interesting as giving the resources of two such humorists as Dickens and Hood.—Selected.

YOUR MONEY.

You sent the money across the sea
That bought a Bible for young Sing Lee,
And young Sing Lee, when he'd read therein,
Proceeded to turn his back on sin.
Then he rested neither night nor day
'Til his brother walked in the narrow way,
And his brother worked 'til he had won
Away from their gods his wife and son.
The woman told of her new-found joy,
And Christ was preached by the happy boy.
Some of the folks who heard them speak
Decided the one true God to seek.
It wasn't long until half the town
Had left its idols of wood and stone,
And the work's not ended yet, my friend,
You started something that ne'er shall end,
When you sent the money across the sea
That bought a Bible for young Sing Lee.

—Amelia Price Ayers,
in the Sunday School Times.

Another View.

The Bible you bought for young Sing Lee
With the money you sent across the sea
Was the Word of God that saves from sin;
But, alas, we confess with great chagrin,
Some men you sent to teach the Way
Are spreading the gospel of doubt today;
And young Sing Lee is staggering back
And getting his feet clear off the track.
Arise, ye saints, in armor clad,
And grasp the Sword and save the lad
Whose name you know as young Sing Lee
From demons and men across the sea
Who would steal away the Book you send,
And stop the work that should have no end.

—Walter Scott Elliott.
The Christian Fundamentalist.

IMMIGRATION.

The new immigration law, based upon the principle of "national origins", has aroused world-wide interest. Among the practical changes which will result from this law is the large reduction of the quotas of Germany, the Irish Free State, and the Scandinavian countries, and a marked increase in the quota of Great Britain. Selected and restricted immigration will continue to be the policy of the United States. The working out of the new law presents many obstacles and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has declared its opposition to the National Origins Act.

The House of Representatives decided in favor of postponing the operation of the new immigration law for one year. However the Senate failed to concur and it therefore became the duty of the President to proclaim the new law which went into effect on July 1.

It is a known fact that President Hoover is opposed to the provision of the Act of 1924 as amended in 1927 and postponed to take effect July 1. However, Attorney General Mitchell has advised the President that he could not lawfully avoid the duty of proclaiming the law before April 1.

Congress may, if it desires, repeal the law or vote for its further postponement.—American Business Review.

HAPPY OLD AGE.

We who have passed our three score years and ten,
Have found what courage, human hearts must hold,
And now for life's last gift we pray
For courage to be old.

We do not heed the flight of passing years,
We watch the sweep of time and feel its thrill;
Admire its progress, its achievements praise,
And share its service still.

Until some day, the task once lightly met,
Grows strangely irksome, to our weakened hold,
Our steps are slow, we helplessly forget,
And know that we are old.

And yet of Life's good gifts, old age is not the least,
Serene is twilight sky, the danger past,
Like that rare draught at Cana's marriage feast,
Life's best wine is its last.

—Author Unknown.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. William E. Wyatt, Walnut Hill Farm, Owings Mills, Maryland:

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."
—From Twenty-third Psalm.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

Book Reviews

THE CREDENTIALS OF THE CHURCH: By Ozora S. Davis. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price, $1.25. To be published September 25.

This is a splendid presentation of the mission of the Church in the world. He is rightly severe on those who avail themselves of its blessings and privileges, and yet make no effort to fulfil duties and obligations.

The tenth chapter which develops the idea of the Church as the Body of Christ is especially fine.

R. R. C.

THE COVENANT PROMISE OF THE FATHER: By Dr. Thomas Payne. Published by Marshall Brothers, Ltd., London and Edinburgh.

The book seems to have been written with the idea of making a distinction between the Holy Ghost and the Divine Spirit, between the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of God. It seems to me that he succeeds in doing so only in words.

He makes a right distinction between the Spirit as a sanctifying power, a redeeming force, and a guiding influence, and the Spirit as the Gift of Power for bearing living witness to Christ, for preaching the Gospel, and for persuading men to surrender themselves to God.

He is certainly teaching the plain truth when he says that the weakness of Christians and the weakness of the preaching of the Gospel is due to the fact that the power of the Holy Spirit has not been received.

The warning of Jesus is emphasized, "wait till ye be endued with Power from on high". The inefficiency of so much preaching is because men are trusting to their own power, or brilliance, or wit, instead of surrendering themselves to God to be used by Him.

R. R. C.

THE BIBLE TRUE: By An Unknown Christian. Published by Marshall Brothers, Ltd., London-Edinburgh. Price, 2-6.

A conventional proof of the truth of the Bible from evidence within its pages. He deals with charges of contradiction, and with the problems caused by the errors of copyists. He finds that any discrepancies are due to that cause and in addition to the fact that translations had to be made from languages unfamiliar to the man who reads. And the changes in the meanings of words also have caused confusion. He leaves one under the impression that he accepts the idea of verbal inspiration, and he gives his own understanding of just what that means.

R. R. C.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcom communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

Mr. Editor:

May I call attention to a slight inaccuracy in the sketch of Aquia Church in the Churchman of August 17. It is stated there that the Reverend John Moncure, an early rector of the parish, was "descendant of a Huguenot refugee who fled from France at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes". It is well known that the Moncure family is of Scotch extraction, and that the name in Scotland, where it is common and was found long before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, is spelled 'Moncur', the e having been added by John Moncure the immigrant. The name is commonly reputed to be derived from the French 'Mon Coeur", but if it is French at all it is Norman and not Huguenot French.

John Moncure,
President, Maryland College for Woman.

Mr. Editor:

Thank you for publishing Canon Tristram's letter. What is the matter with our Church? I receive regularly The Bible Society's Quarterly, and in it I read how the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and others are helping in the distribution of the Bible here in this country and elsewhere, but not once have I seen where an Episcopalian, whether bishop, priest, deacon or layman, has done anything. Have we reached the Laodicean stage where "we need nothing"? Are we too bigotted, too self-satisfied to look to The Word for "instruction in righteousness"? Do we consider the Bible too out of date, too archaic for our modernistic souls? Scorning the Pilot, throwing overboard the chart, and leaning to our fool wisdom and false science we are fast going to the devil. I was told of a minister in our Church who, when he visited a sick person, told him that there was no hereafter!

"Oh, my people, they who lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths" (Isa. 3:12; 9:16). "And if the blind lead the blind shall they not both fall into the ditch?" Then what curses will the lead heap upon the heads of those that lead them! Contrast this with Paul's words in 1 Thess. 2:19, 20, "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."

Lancaster, Va. L. R. Combs.

Mr. Editor:

I have recently read with joy a splendid article in The Southern Churchman, June 29, on the Second Coming of Christ. It is a most able writing on the subject, and so short, one can inform himself on the subject in a few moments. It is on nearly every page of our Prayer Book, but never alluded to from our pulpits today, so the Church in general is most ignorant on the subject. Therefore, it is most timely, to have such articles placed before us often. In these days of great apostary in the churches, the believing Christian delights in such help.

Your paper is now a most glorious testimony for Christ and His Church. May God bless you abundantly in all your noble efforts and achievements.

Mrs. J. B. Houston.

Charleston, W. Va.

IS EPISCOPAL GOVERNMENT A FAILURE?

Mr. Editor:

Do our Bishops realize that the episcopal office is falling into disrepute, if not contempt, in the minds of many thoughtful and earnest laymen? Perhaps some do, but we fear that large numbers of them have no conception of this fact. But not only is this true with respect to our American Bishops, but with greater reason the statement can be made as to the English Bishops. It is simply amazing to read what Lord Brentford is telling us in your columns as to the utter lawlessness of certain English ecclesiastics in presuming to adopt a Prayer Book of their own, not sanctioned by any law. When reading of their proceedings, the layman is tempted to ask himself, "Are these men crazy, or have they parted from every vestige of honor and loyalty to their Church?"

But, while the conduct of many of our own Bishops is not pitched on so great a scale of lawlessness as their brethren across the Atlantic, yet in principle they are guilty as lawbreakers in the same manner. Why do American Bishops take no steps to compel obedience to the plain law of the Protestant Episcopal Church, whose doctrine, discipline and worship they have solemnly bound themselves to obey and observe? Why do they coolly permit reservation of the Sacrament of the Holy Communion, when the rubric distinctly forbids it? Why do they assume to authorize the use of so-called "intinction" when the General Convention has flatly refused to permit it? Why do they apparently take no steps to remind many of the priests in their dioceses that, although the office of Holy Communion is surpassingly fine and spiritual and helpful, it is not the only thing of value in the Prayer Book, and that the office of Morning Prayer should not be shuffled off into a corner or neglected altogether? Why do the Bishops seem to be doing so little to awaken the whole Church out of the depths of unspirituality and worldliness into which it has sunk up here at the North, and perhaps elsewhere?

When we were little children, our parents and Sunday-school teachers and rectors used to instruct us in some of the underlying principles of our Church. We used to be told that the office of Bishop was designed to act as a check upon the clergy of the lower orders, and that no priest or deacon could long set at defiance the law of the Church without being reproved and admonished by his Bishop. It was pointed out to us that this feature of our Church government gave us a great advantage over communions organized on either the congregational or Presbyterian model. We are now wondering whether Episcopacy is, after all, a failure. Do our Bishops intend to do their duty or not? Do they imagine that their office is so exalted that they may do as they please? Oftentimes it looks as if this were true, unpleasant as it is to have to make such an admission.

We realize that we still have many fine and faithful Bishops, but the number of unfaithful ones is disagreeably large.

William Allmand Robertson.

East Orange, N. J., August 24, 1929.

COMMONLY CALLED THE CREED OF ST. ATHANASIUS.

The following is the Creed published by request, with a short history of the same:

Whosoever will be saved: before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith.

Which Faith except every one do keep whole and undefiled: without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.

And the Catholic Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity;

Neither confounding the Persons: nor dividing the Substance.

For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son: and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one: the Glory equal, the Majesty coeternal.

Such as the Father is, such is the Son: and such is the Holy Ghost.

The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate: and the Holy Ghost uncreate.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible: and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

The Father eternal, the Son eternal: and the Holy Ghost eternal.

And yet they are not three eternals: but one eternal.

As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated: but one uncreated, and one incomprehensible.

So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty: and the Holy Ghost Almighty.

And yet they are not three Almighties: but one Almighty.

So the Father is God, the Son is God: and the Holy Ghost is God.

And yet they are not three Gods: but one God.

So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son Lord: and the Holy Ghost Lord.

And yet not three Lords: but one Lord.

For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity: to acknowledge every Person by himself to be God and Lord;

So are we forbidden by the Catholic Religion: to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

The Father is made of none: neither created, nor begotten.

The Son is of the Father alone: not made, nor created, but begotten.

The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son: neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

So there is one Father, not three Fathers: one Son; not three Sons: one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other: none is greater, or less than another;

But the whole three Persons are co-eternal together: and co-equal.

So that in all things, as is aforesaid: the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped.

He therefore that will be saved: must thus think of the Trinity.

Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation: that he also believe rightly the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For the right Faith is, that we believe and confess: that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man;

God, of the Substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds: and Man, of the Substance of his Mother, born in the world;

Perfect God, and perfect Man: of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting;

Equal to the Father, as touching his Godhead: and inferior to the Father, as touching his Manhood.

Who although he be God and Man: yet he is not two, but one Christ:

One; not by conversion of the Godhead into flesh: but by taking of the Manhood into God;

One; altogether: not by confusion of Substance: but by unity of Person.

For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man: so God and Man is one Christ:

Who suffered for our salvation: descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

Hhe ascended into heaven, he sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty: from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

At whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies: and shall give account for their own works.

And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting: and they that have done evil into everlasting fire.

This is the Catholic Faith: which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

Authorship and History of the Athanasian Creed.

The authorship of this Confession, and some points of its history, are still uncertain. But the main points of practical importance are, on the whole sufficiently ascertained.

1. It is not in any proper sense "Athanasian"; for it is certainly of Western origin, and traceable to the influence of St. Augustine (de Trinitate) more than of any other Father. It was probably called the Fides Athanasii, in opposition to the Fides Arii, against which it was especially directed.

2. It is not strictly a Creed (Symbolum), as is clear by its expository form, its fulness of theological explanation, and its admonitory clauses: but rather a "Rule of Faith"—an Exposition and Defence of the Catholic Creed of Christendom.

3. It probably originated in Spain or Gaul, towards the close of the long conflict against the deep-rooted Arianism of the Gothic races. In the Canons of three Councils of Toledo (A. D. 589, 633 and 638) its substance (with variations) is found; and in a Council at Autun (670), it is directed that all Clerics "shall learn the Apostles' Creed (Symbolum) and the Fides sancti Episcopi Athanasii". It was presented to the Pope by Charlemagne in 722, but not adopted in the Roman Service till 930. It was never formally authorized by any General Council, or received by the Eastern Church; but from the year 800 onwards, it won its way into regular and general use in the Western Church.—Taken from Barry's Teachers' Prayer Book.

Mr. Editor:

Since you are interested in the article I sent you, I am forwarding a few additional items under separate cover. Many of the clergy in the kindness of their hearts, have not the faintest idea of what they are endorsing, but they should use their heads as well as their hearts, and understand the dangerous subvertive movement which, under the smoke screen of the Church, is being foisted upon this nation.

You are doing a wonderful work. I wish some one would preach on Labor Day from the text, "Be content with your wages" (Luke 3:14).

Thank you for sending the extra copies of The Southern Churchman.

Helen Norris Cummings.

Alexandria, Va.

Mr. Editor:

If the friends mentioned would read The Southern Churchman for a short time, they would not like to give it up, for I feel that I do not like to miss a single copy. I regard it as the best religious paper I have ever read.

With many good wishes, I am,

Constant Reader.

Mr. Editor:

I thank you for the extra copy. Praying you may be ever gifted from on high to continue the Apostolic and able management of The Southern Churchman.

Believe me, to you, in Christ,

"Bible Believer."

Mr. Editor:

Please find enclosed five dollars for the work of that man of God—Bishop Rowe—and oblige,

Giles B. Cooke.

(Only surviving staff officer of General R. E. Lee; aged ninety-one years.)

Church Intelligence

York Prelate Asks Church Freedom.

London.—The fight over the new Prayer Book, which Parliament rejected, reopened in earnest at the convocations of York and Canterbury today.

In both convocations the Bishops are anxious to test the opinions of the lower houses on the resolution being moved by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang. Briefly, it seeks to place in the hands of the Bishops and clergy in the parishes power to do what Parliament has refused to sanction—use the Revised Prayer Book of 1928 with the safeguard that departures from the 1662 book must be approved by parochial church councils. No decision had been reached by either of the houses tonight.

In the convocation at Canterbury, Dr. Lang only briefly moved his resolution, embodying the corporate views of the Bishops, reserving until later a full statement of his position. But in the convocation at York, where the same resolution was discussed, the Most Rev. Dr. William Temple, Archbishop of York, raised the important question of the disestablishment of the Church from the State.

"It is most necessary," he said, "that we should recover the reign of law in the Church, whether or not it be State law as well as ecclesiastical law. No society can be wholesome and content to continue in such a position as that wherein we are now placed."

Dr. Temple then suggested an early inquiry by the Church Assembly into the situation caused by Parliament's rejection of the Prayer Book measures.

"The situation is one in which we cannot and ought not acquiesce," he added. "If we do not immediately demand disestablishment, we are bound to set afoot a most serious inquiry. The worship of the Church at present is attended by great disorder. All of us are more or less law-breakers and we hold the law ought to be so altered as to bring within it certain practices now outside it."

The first note of discord was raised in the convocation at Canterbury by the Bishop of Birmingham, Dr. William Barnes, who said that the right solution would be to go to Parliament with an agreed book. He moved an amendment affirming that nothing in the Archbishop of Canterbury's resolution purported to change the law and doctrines of the Church of England as contained in the old Prayer Book or imply censure of those bishops who felt themselves bound to refuse to permit the practice of reservation of the consecrated elements and an alternative holy communion service.

"I hold the Archbishop of Canterbury's resolution difficult to justify, for Parliament is the court of final appeal," he declared.

Russian Flocks Without Pastors.

Dr. Adolf Keller, Director of the Central European Bureau for Inter-Church Aid, which is now closely associated with the Life and Work Committee created at the Stockholm Conference, writing to Mr. Harry Jeffs, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society, gives an account of the condition of the Evangelical Churches in Russia. "Whilst the Lutheran parishes in Russia, scattered all over the whole country as far as Siberia, succeeded in building up a new Church with about eighty pastors, the Reformed parishes have been nearly all destroyed. Most of them have lost their pastors. Some of them have still got their building, but always in the fear lest the enemies of all religion shall take them away. The congregations assemble in these churches praying and singing their hymns and looking out for a pastor. Dr. Keller received this month a letter from such a congregation in Southern Russia.

"We are so thankful for the help of our friends abroad. We hear again that the Government intends to take our Church for worldly purposes. Our prospects are very sad and depressing. The members of our congregation have become so poor that, with the actual famine, they could not pay a pastor, not even the modest expenses for the maintenance can be made without the greatest effort. If you could find us a pastor, he could perhaps dwell in one of the villages outside, only they took away recently also the manses in the country, and we are in great trouble about it. The situation becomes more difficult every day, but we do not despair, God has always protected us so long and has helped us through our friends."

This letter is signed by seven members of the parish and is only one of many examples showing that the relief work for the suffering Churches in Europe is very necessary. The Committee of the Central Bureau, of which Mr. Jeffs and Sir Murray Hyslop are the English members, meets at Bale on August 22. Sir Murray Hyslop would be pleased to receive contributions to be sent to Dr. Keller at Geneva to assist the little Russian flock in getting the pastor they need. Contributions should be sent for this specific object to the Treasurer, Evangelical Continental Society, 20, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.4.—The Record.

St. John's, Shanghai.

Fifty students of St. John's University, Shanghai, were graduated on June 29. The commencement exercises were attended by leading Chinese educators, merchants, bankers, physicians and alumni. The delightful weather made it possible to hold the exercises outdoors.

Rev. F. L. Hawks Pott, D. D., President of the University, after welcoming the guests, briefly reviewed what he described as a memorable academic year:

"After a period of suspension of a large part of our work, for more than a year, owing to disturbed conditions, all departments were re-opened in September, 1928, and we have been able to carry on through the year without interruption in the usual normal way.

"During the period of suspension, steps were taken for adapting our organization to modern conditions, and a board of directors in China was formed, representing the Mission, the Chinese Church, the alumni, the university council, and the general public. By this step, a share of the responsibility for the development of the university was transferred from the trustees in the United States to the board of directors in China.

"At the beginning of this year an acting Chinese vice-president was appointed, who now cooperates with the president in the work of administration. In the changes that have been made and in the changes that may take place in the future, it will be our earnest endeavor to preserve the ideals and aims of the institution."

The academic year just closed completes fifty years since St. John's was established as a small grammar school. A committee is arranging for a suitable celebration—a semi-centennial to be held December 12, 13 and 14.

In accordance with the custom that has become well-nigh universal at commencement of American institutions, Dr. Pott was able to announce certain gifts to the university.

Among them is a social hall costing approximately $45,000, given by the students, alumni and Chinese friends. This building will commemorate the life and work of Mrs. Soo Ngôo Pott. A stone arch was presented by the gentry and merchants of the village just outside the University gates.

The academic address was made by Dr. Hu Shih, the famous Chinese philosopher. An address was also made by Mr. O. K. Yui, legal adviser to the Mayor of Shanghai and an honor graduate of St. John's.

Twenty-five graduates received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, four the degree of Bachelor of Science, one the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, one the degree of Master of Arts. In addition, five students were graduated from the Theological Department and fourteen from the Medical School.

During the afternoon the band of the Kiangwan Anti-Kidnapping Society rendered appropriate selections.

Hospital Work, Holy Cross Mission, Liberia.

Dr. Maass has sent a report of the work of the Bolahun Hospital for the first five months of this year. During that period there has been a total attendance at the hospital of 11,115, of which just about half were for yaws. In this half of the year there is always a falling off in the number of patients owing to the farm work.

Speaking of the terrible scourge of yaws, Dr. Maass says, "The effect of the past two years' intensive treatment of yaws is very marked and encouraging. The number of cases of fresh yaws coming from Liberia is very low, compared with what it was at the beginning of the anti-yaws campaign. It may be reasonably said that yaws is now under control in this part of the country (Liberia), and the effect of this will be felt especially by the adolescent generation. This is remarkable as the result was achieved by a stationary polyclinic."

What the above really means is that in our immediate neighborhood, this dread complaint is under good control, with a fair chance of being stamped out completely. It will be remembered that our station is in a lobe of land that runs up in between Sierra Leone on one side and French Guinea on the other, and that very large numbers of patients come from those sections, and most of the yaws cases are coming from across the border. There is no hospital of any kind in those parts of Sierra Leone or Guinea, and the people look to us alone for help. In time, it is believed, that the disease will be cleared up, through the whole of the hinterland contiguous to us.

The doctor reports that the health of the white staff has been almost one hundred per cent good. Father Allen's death occurred in this period, and the doctor says it was caused by the exhaustion of the heart muscle rather than by any disease, and this exhaustion was simply the result of age.

He gives a most satisfactory account of the native staff at the hospital. One of the best pieces of work that has been done is the training of young native men and women as assistants in the hospital. It need hardly be said that they are not given the knowledge that corresponds with what is procured in a medical school in America or England, but it does mean that they acquire a really skilled and scientific knowledge of all sorts of first-aid work, of the dressing of wounds, how to make the injections in yaws and other cases, and of general nursing. These young people will after a time return to their own villages, and one can hardly estimate the value this knowledge will be to their own people.

The doctor also writes: "An investigation into the infant mortality which promises very interesting results, has not yet been concluded." The value of such an investigation can be imagined when you are reminded that nowhere in native Africa is the infant mortality less than 400, that is, four hundred out of every thousand of all babies born die before they are twelve months old—and in some sections it is as high as 700.

Kindergarten for Japanese Children.

About a year ago, Japanese Christians connected with our newest parish in the city of Kyoto, known as the Shimogamo Church, came to the conclusion that a kindergarten ought to be opened.

Bishop Nichols assured them that while he would be glad to see the kindergarten opened, he could not give any financial assistance. So the congregation turned to and employed a teacher. They had no satisfactory building, but in good weather it was possible to hold the kindergarten out of doors. The number of children increased. They employed a second teacher. After a few months, their experiment was so successful they felt justified in trying to secure money for a building and once again they secured the whole amount, $600, themselves. The building is ample for their needs and suitable for special church meetings.

There are now forty-two children enrolled and everybody is proud and happy over what has been accomplished through their own efforts. Shimogamo Church has only twenty communicants and none of them wealthy people. But Mr. Ajima, the deacon, has done a very good work and is a man of faith and zeal. The credit is all his.

Pennsylvania Gives a New Church to a Tokyo Congregation.

When the Diocese of Pennsylvania undertook its famous and successful effort on behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund in 1924, it selected as one of the objects for which it desired to give $35,000 (of the $250,000 total it aimed to secure) to the rebuilding of Christ Church, Kanda, Tokyo.

This is one of the older Tokyo congregations. It has been self-supporting for nearly twenty years. Every year it makes an offering for the work of the Church in the United States on the Sunday nearest to the date upon which it declared its independence of aid from abroad. In the earthquake and fire of September, 1923, many of the members of the congregation lost their homes and almost everything they had—though none of them lost their lives. They were unable to build a suitable church, and welcomed the generous gift of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

The new church has now been completed and consecrated. The Rev. Teruo Minagawa, its rector, writes:

"Christ Church was originally built by the Rev. Mr. Cooper in 1877. It was a wooden building, thirty-eight feet long and eighteen feet wide, and stood on a rented ground.

"In 1896, the Rt. Rev. C. M. Williams and the Rt. Rev. John McKim bought a wider area of land, and built a brick church on it. It was forty-eight feet in length and twenty-four feet in width. But it was completely destroyed in one night by the great earthquake of 1923.

"God, however, gave us a far bigger, and stronger, and more beautiful church, through the most generous sympathy and sacrifice of the Mother Church in America. It is a reinforced cement building of ninety-three feet by twenty-three feet. It was 'sown in dishonour'; it was 'raised in glory'; it was 'sown in weakness'; it was 'raised in power'. It was consecrated on Easter Day, March 31, 1929, Bishops McKim, Reifsnider and Matsui being present.

"We are most happy to have this church built in loving memory of the Rt. Rev. John McKim, who has given his life of sacrifice since March, 1880, for the salvation of our nation. It is our most sincere hope to show our deepest gratitude toward God and the Mother Church by our true faith in the Lord, and by our service for men."

A Family That Has Made Good.

The death of Mary Eliza Perry, of Tarboro, N. C., on August 8, at the age of seventy-five, draws attention to a long life of service to the Church. Mrs. Perry's husband was the late John William Perry, for more than thirty years missionary and rector at St. Luke's Church (colored), Tarboro. They were students together at St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, where Mrs. Perry's mother was matron, and since their marriage in 1882 until Mr. Perry's death in 1918, they worked together for the Church and for the good of their race.

Mrs. Perry was confirmed in 1873, by Bishop Atkinson. Except for seven years when she was matron of St. Athanasius' School, Brunswick, Georgia, her life was given to the work at Tarboro, where she and her husband built the church and the parish school, and were a power for good in the community, testified to with pride and affection by white and colored people alike.

A son, William A. Perry, is known to many Church people as the former head of St. Athanasius' School. He is a Yale graduate (Sinclair Lewis was in his class) and has since studied at Columbia and Harvard. He is now principal of a public school in Columbia, South Carolina. The son-in-law, Rev. M. M. Weston, succeeded the Rev. Mr. Perry as rector of St. Luke's. His wife teaches in high school, and her sister teaches in the parish school. A grandson is a senior at Columbia.

This brief summary of part of one family's record shows something of results obtained among our Negro people at such schools as St. Augustine's when the Church provides the best it can offer in training for those whose ability and serious purpose can build it into enduring character.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Canon Edward S. Dunlap, who has been in charge of Washington Cathedral services during the summer, began his vacation on August 18, and Canons G. Freeland Peter and Arthur B. Rudd took charge and began the periods in residence the same day. The Rev. John W. Gunmere, who recently became a member of the Cathedral staff and was formerly rector of St. Andrew's

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

SEPTEMBER.

1. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
8. Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
15. Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18, 20, 21. Ember Days.
21. S. Matthew.
22 Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
29. S. Michael and All Angels. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
30. Monday.

COLLECT FOR THE FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Almighty and everlasting God, give unto us the increase of faith, hope and charity; and, that we may obtain that which Thou dost promise, make us to love that which Thou dost command through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A PRAYER FOR MISSIONARIES.

Speed Thy servants, Saviour, speed them;
Thou art Lord of wind and waves:
They were bound, but Thou hast freed them;
Now they go to free the slaves.
Be Thou with them;
'Tis Thine arm alone that saves.

Friends, and home, and all forsaking,
Lord, they go at Thy command,
As their stay Thy promise taking,
While they traverse sea and land.
Oh, be with them all,
Lead them safely by Thy hand.

When no fruit appears to cheer them
And they seem to toil in vain,
Then in mercy, Lord, draw near them,
Then their sinking hopes sustain;
Thus supported all:
Let their zeal revive again.

In the midst of opposition
Let them trust, O Lord, in Thee:
When success attends their mission
Let Thy servants humble be.
Never leave them:
Till Thy face in heaven they see.
Amen.

—Presbyterian of the South.

Studdert-Kennedy's Last Message.

On Sunday evening, in the presence of a crowded congregation in Worcester Cathedral, England, the Dean of Worcester read a posthumous sermon by the late Rev. G. A. Studdert-Kennedy, which the latter had intended to preach in the Cathedral that he lived. It was the last sermon this great man prepared.

The Dean read:

"If Christ be not risen your faith is vain. Ye are yet in your sins." That is a tremendous assertion. What does it mean? Is it true? It is the utterance of a Christian who finds himself standing defiant in the last ditch face to face with final doubt. In that last ditch every man, be he Christian or not, must sooner or later stand unless he is content to drift on the surface of life and evade the challenge to heart and mind which the mystery of men and things shouts out aloud to all who are really alive.

I know that last ditch well. I have stood in it many times, and I know that before I die I shall stand there again and again. Supposing Christ did not rise; suppose He is not dead, then of course all His dreams die with Him. He was only a dreamer; another poor, deluded, human fool tricked into believing splendid lies. The light of His life, the light that shone from another and better world, was only a mirage that lured Him to His death. He was like a traveler in the desert who is certain he sees water ahead and staggers on until he falls, still believing that had his strength held out he might have quenched his blistering thirst, whereas in truth he would never have come to anything but the cruel sun, the silent sand, and the desert's heartless mockery of man. If Christ be not risen then He was deceived, deluded, and fooled.

His last cry, "Father into Thy hands I commend My Spirit," went shivering on and on until it died away into the silence of the dead and loveless stars. There was no voice that answered, and if it was so with Him then it must be so with every man and woman that has or ever will look upon the sun. If death got Him, then assuredly death gets us all.

If the enormous vital forces that made up that unique personality were disintegrated by death and drifted back into the meaningless flux and flow of things, then there is nothing permanent about personality at all. If that great burning light was put out by a flick of the finger of Death then what can become of the little candle that splutters to spasmodic life in souls like you and me?

It may be that life itself is eternal, but the forms of life purely temporary. We know nothing is really destroyed but only changed in form. There is a perpetual cyclic flux of forms in the material world. Does that apply to living things beloved? I put before you life or death. That is the choice with which the Christian is faced when he takes his stand in the last ditch and faces the final doubt, and in the ultimate issue it seems to me that it is a choice. There is not, and there can never be, any immediate certainty about it."—Church of England Newspaper.

The Prodigal Housekeeper Returns.

I am so happy to be home—Oh, I am gloriously, grandly, glowingly glad to be home.

When I left it three weeks ago, the relics of our June peas were just yellowing in their pods, and tomatoes were blossoming, the last rose of summer had lately gone its withered and forsaken way.

Now dahlias and gladioli are spreading beauty and color all along the walks sweet peas are covering the high wire fence with a gorgeous rainbow display. Poppies and lady-slippers scream scarlet and purple across the garden. A lone sunflower is bobbing his head at me against all alows of propriety and fitness, for the sun is shining full upon my face. (Turn around, silly plant—do you think I am the sun? I would shine if I could.)

I am so glad to be just here, among my growing things, that I have not even ventured into the house. I know the terrible desolation that reigns within. I know, for I have been away before.

"The front porch," reflected the man of the house as we neared home, "will have to be dusted with a scoop shovel."

"Very well." I acquiesced, "and we will clean the open stairway with the hose. The stale air will, of course, be of sufficient age to walk out unassisted!" We all feel that it will be a very fine thing to have a state road going by our door—when the job is done.

Here I sit, on the grass under my own grapevine and plum tree, which tree, to digress from the subject of flowers and vegetables, never before known to bear a solitary fruit, has just dropped a wormy, misshapen, ill-begotten plum into my lap. The peaches on the tree by the hedge seem to bear the slightest tinge of color on their fast-rounding cheeks, the first cool breeze of today brings a sifting of pollen from the tasseled sweet corn, with cloying, musky odor. Silver-green globes of tomatoes promise luscious salads, but a short time hence.

The hedge has protested sharply against our desertion by raising a wilderness of spikes. Tomorrow the head of the family will regret having gone away!

Why do we not take vacation at home, anyway? I hate to go inside. The door-yard is so inviting that I would be glad to sit here until dark, to let the insects bite me and the bugs crawl over me—I might even try to be amused at their persistent efforts to swallow me in toto or to carry me off bodily to their preserves, because they are home bugs.

Our garden looks like a forest, compared with the mere line of shrubbery and crawling things it was when we went away. Yes, it is a forest—of weeds—why did I ever go away? I don't want to go in. How can I face the kitchen? It must be 110 degrees in the afternoon heat.

Through the neighborly gap in the hedge, with a shriek to split the ear drums, come the youngsters of next door. "C'mon, Helen, tell us about your vacation." (I believe I have been homesick for some rolicking noise.)

"Will I? If it takes me from now until midnight, I'll tell you every bit. Come in, Sis. Come, Junior and Winnie—we'll make lemonade. Aunt Martha sent a box of doughnuts."

Off again—on again. Vacations are fine, but isn't it great to be home?—Helen S. Newman in Epworth Herald.

Seers Needed.

When Sir James Bryce was leaving America, after a term of service as Ambassador of the Court of St. James at Washington, he was pressed by newspaper reporters for his opinions of America and the American people. One asked the direct question: "What is America's greatest need?" The reply was one word, and perhaps a word little expected and hardly understood by the questioner—"poets".

What did he mean? Whatever else may have been in his mind, certainly he meant that America's greatest need today lies not in the realm of material things, but in the higher realm of the soul. She does not need lands, for she boasts that her dominions lie in the perpetual shining of the sun in his course. She does not need railroads, for she claims more mileage than all other continents. She does not need motor cars, for now every man, woman and child of her citizenship can ride at the same time. She does not need money, for her national wealth exceeds that of any two of the other nations. She does not need leisure nor luxuries, for her people spend more time in pleasure seeking, and more money for luxuries, than any other peoples.

What she does need is a deeper appreciation and a higher appraisement of soul values. She needs poets, prophets—seers with visions of the unseen and power to interpret the spiritual and eternal values, for, truly, "man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth."

America's greatest danger today lies in her power of wealth, and its almost resistless tendency to interpret life in terms of the material and the sensuous. With increasing riches the standards of living soar and luxury is stimulated, and with the means of gratification, abundant for fast multiplying wants, it is not strange that our social order moves toward the materialistic.

We recall that Josiah Strong, writing of the tendencies of America more than a score of years ago, said: "Without adequate moral development to control the physical and utilize it for ends above itself, the material becomes sensuous, then sensual, and sensuality means decay and death." A man or a nation may grow rich over night, but the treasures of mind and morals never come that way. In the twenty years since Strong wrote those words, America's riches have increased beyond all her dreams. Has the faith in God and the lofty idealism of the pioneers kept pace with the prosperity?

"Where there is no vision the people perish."—Rev. A. J. Moncrief, in Christian Index.

For The Southern Churchman.

STOP WORRYING.

F. B. Stone.

Oh, worrying's a dreadful sin,
Of unbelief the fruit,
And soon it grows to such a size
It kills faith's very root.

God does not send us tests to kill
The little faith we own,
But strives to lead to greater trust,
Each test a stepping stone.

To greater faith in Him we love,
A faith that will believe,
And trust in spite of everything,
He will our needs relieve.

And may we seek His Kingdom first,
And seek His righteousness,
He knows our every daily need,
And knowing He will bless.

Oh! may we learn to trust in Him,
On Him for all depend,
And He in very faithfulness
The needed things will send.

The Bible.

We are constantly writing about the Bible and the importance of reading the Bible, because it is apparent that so many people are allowing themselves to be cheated out of the priceless privilege of daily, constantly, regularly reading God's word. The other day, riding on the train, we had occasion to talk for several hours with a good friend who was in the South for a brief vacation. He was discussing the stress of life as found in his home city in the middle west. He deplored this and that tendency, praised other tendencies.

"But you know," he continued, "the thing that bothers me most is the lack of Bible reading today. I was reared in a home where there were nine children. My mother was a very busy mother. My father worked hard to make a living. We got up early in the morning. Usually, we ate breakfast by lamp light. But we had time to read the Bible before we started the day's work. Father and mother had time, and we soon learned that we had time whether we thought we did or not. And I wouldn't take a million dollars for that habit which my father and mother taught.

"But I can't get my family to pause long enough to have a word of prayer and a passage of Scripture. We have all the conveniences in the home. It doesn't require anybody to get up early. But we don't have time to read the Bible, and I am frankly worried about it."

Have you ever heard anything like that? Ever said anything like that? Ever felt like that? Surely, there is some way by which we may check this foolishness of thinking we can not find time to read the Bible. We are growing weak spiritually and we are going to get weaker unless we feed upon the word of God.—Christian Index.

OUR TIMES ARE IN HIS HAND.

Tired?—then close your eyes in slumber sweet and deep,
Trust Him who cares for all the tired sheep.
Dismayed —go seek the True and Living Bread,
The hungry multitudes tenfold by Him are fed.
Hopeless?—look up, He guides thro' starless way,
That leads at last unto the "perfect day."
Athirst?—there is a refuge in the strife,
Seek then the waters of eternal life.
Afraid?—in tempest hear His "Peace be still",
Through faith you'll find His peace your life will fill.
Lonely —close by abides your truest Friend,
"Lo, I am with you alway,"—till the end!

—Kathleen Hay.

Prayer as a Force.

I think we have the warrant in our possession, that prayer is introduced as one of the forces in God's government. Yea, more than that, God has set the power of prayer before the force of gravitation. He has put it as chief among the forces by which He governs the world, so that there is great significance in that requirement, "Pray always with all manner of prayer and supplication." When He wishes to do a great thing in the world in any one direction, He wants an increase of faith. When Christ was in the world, He said He could do no mighty works in various places because there was no faith. Then, if we remember that faith and prayer are among the forces by which He proposes to work in the world, we are responsible that we put those forces in operation in the place when we are appointed; let us remember this as one of the greatest of privileges given to the Christian. There is nothing like the privilege of prayer.—Henry Foster.

How to Kill Your Church.

Stay home when it's hot.
Stay home when it's cold.
Stay home when it rains.
Stay home when you feel bad.
Criticize your pastor.

Tell people you didn't like the sermon.

Sit on the back seat.
Go in late.

Don't give much. Charity begins at home, and you've got your own family to support.

Don't sing. What's the choir for?
Don't speak to anybody.

Don't shake hands with the visitor; he might come back.

Never invite anybody to attend your church. Mind your own business, and let him mind his. If he wants to go, that's up to him.

That's the way to kill your church. If you want to see it die, just do nothing, or get busy and raise a rough house. —Exchange.

A Trustworthy Book.

Sir William Ramsay, at twenty-five, was financially poor and physically bankrupt. He had no religious faith. Whilst a student at Oxford his physicians ordered him to travel for the sake of his health. After traveling through England and Switzerland and Germany he entered Phrygia with the purpose of making a map of that province. He was under the impression that the Acts of the Apostles was untrustworthy. Because of Luke's geographical references he began to read the Acts carefully. His reading led him to say that Luke knew more about ancient history than any of the modern critics. He furthermore averred that "Luke's history is unsurpassed in trustworthiness". The Church needs to cease theorizing concerning inspiration and scatter the Book. If only given a fair chance it will commend itself to men.—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

THREE POEMS.

By William Allen Ward.

I.

Whimpers.

At night
The wind is
A whimpering hound
That whines on the Door-steps.

II.

Whetstone.

Rumor is a whetstone,
Damp with the tears of life,
Where the vandal scandal
Sharpens his cutting knife.

III.

Torch.

Sunset
Is a torch
That sets the thunder-clouds
On the western horizon
On fire.

For The Southern Churchman.

PESSIMIST.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

We're groping in the darkness,
As we go down the years;
We're sailing under cover,
Of lurking doubts and fears:
We're traveling with the myriads,
That every day pass by;
We're living in the shadows,
That underneath us lie.

Optimist.

We're walking in the sunlight,
As we go down the years,
We're sailing on the river,
That knows no doubts or fears;
We're trav'ling with the faithful,
Whose hopes lie up above;
We're living in the highlands,
Of God's unchanging love.

For the Young Folks

THE LITTLE ONES HE BLESSED.

I wonder if ever the children
  Who were blessed by the Master of old
Forgot He had made them His treasures,
  The dear little lambs of His fold.
I wonder if, angry and wilful,
  They wandered afar and astray,
The children whose feet had been guided
  So safe and so soon in the way.

One would think that the mother at evening,
  Soft smoothing the silk-tangled hair,
And low leaning down to the murmur
  Of sweet, childish voices in prayer,
Oft bade the small pleaders to listen,
  If haply again they might hear
The words of the gentle Redeemer
  Borne swift to the reverent ear.

And my heart cannot cherish the fancy
  That ever those children went wrong,
And were lost from the peace and the shelter,
  Shut out from feast and the song.
To the day of gray hairs they remembered,
  I think, how the hands that were riven
Were laid on their heads when Christ uttered,
  "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

He has said it to you, little darling,
  Who spell it in God's Word today;
You, too, may be sorry for sinning;
  You, also, believe and obey;
And 'twill grieve the dear Saviour in heaven
  If one little child shall go wrong—
Be lost from the fold and the shelter,
  Shut out from the feast and the song.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

Barnabas.

Long ago there lived a man named Barnabas who knew about Jesus and loved Him. After the Master went back to His Heavenly Home Barnabas joined the little group of friends who loved Jesus and were trying to live in the way He had taught them.

"You know, Barnabas," Peter said to him kindly, "that in our little group none of us calls anything we have his own. We share everything, and what belongs to one belongs to all. Some of us have plenty, and some of us have almost nothing. But since we put it all together, there is enough for everybody."

"I have no money," said Barnabas sadly. "I have only a little piece of land on the island of Cyrus. That is all I own in the world."

And he went away, thinking very hard. He did not think: "Why should I try to share my land with others? It is all I have, and some day I may want to live on it. What if the others don't have anything? It isn't my fault that they are poor. That's no reason for me to give up what I have." He might have thought that; some men would have, perhaps. But what he thought was: "Oh, how I hope I can turn my land into money! How I hope some one will be willing to buy it from me! Then I will have something to give to my friends."

Some days passed by; and then one day, when the friends of Jesus were together, they saw a man hurrying toward them with a very happy face and with a heavy bag in his hand. He threw it at Peter's feet and then knelt, saying, "I have sold it. I found some one to buy my land, and here is all my money."

Barnabas was very happy, for, like the others, he was helping and was sharing all he had.

It Takes Two to Make a Quarrel.

Once upon a time there were two boys in the school, named Peter Ender and Smith Bent. They spent their time in singing and telling stories to the little boys before they went to bed. They were the best of friends, and shared with each other their fruit and candy, and so they were very happy.

One day Peter grew tired of being good to Smith. "Smith," said he to his companion, "life is very dull with every day the same. I am tired of seeing you so cheerful, so let us have a quarrel."

"Very well, Peter," said Smith, looking rather grave, for he did not like the idea. "But what can we quarrel about?" he asked.

"Well," said Peter, dolefully, "I can't tell you not to use my bike because you never use it, anyway. And I can't steal your fruit or candy, for you always want me to share yours. I have it," he cried, after a moment's thought: "Smith, do you see that sack of good, red apples over there, you say its yours, and I'll say it's mine, so we'll have a squabble."

"All right," said Smith, "only you must begin." He clenched his hands and tried to look ugly and Peter did the same.

They were quite changed from the kindly, smiling boys they had been a moment before. Peter pointed to the sack of apples and said, gruffly, "I want you to understand that those apples are mine, and if I catch you trying to steal some I'll knock every hair off your head until you are bald."

Such fierceness made Smith jump. "I beg your pardon, pardner Peter," he said in amazement.

"Don't call me 'pardner'," was the rough reply. "Behave respectfully to your betters. Understand that that sack of apples is mine, do you deny it?"

Smith could hardly get his breath, but he managed to stammer out, "Your apples, are they?"

"Yes, my apples and mind, they belong to me, and I am going to have them."

"Why, of course they're yours, Peter, and if you'll wait a minute, I'll get you some more."

"I suppose you must give up trying to squabble, for it takes two to make a quarrel," said Peter.

So they burst out laughing and went in to the basement to share their apples.

From that day on they have never quarreled. Instead, they have told stories to the little boys and then sent them to bed.—Selected.

A Boy Who Proved His Worth as a Fire Fighter.

Not all heroic fire fighters wear blue coats with warm red linings, says a writer in the St. Nicholas. There is a boy out in Colorado who has distinguished himself in fighting forest fires and has twice been commended by the government.

The official report issued by the United States Department of Agriculture says: "Charles H. Williams, a twelve-year-old lad of Salida, Colo., has again distinguished himself in fighting forest fires. In the summer of 1923 Charles discovered a fire caused by a passing train in the Cochetopa National Forest. His prompt work in notifying the forest service officers and his personal aid on the fire line brought forth strong commendation from the late Secretary Henry C. Wallace. Recently Charles was instrumental in checking another fire that had started in a dense stand of pine trees. His work was again commended by department officials."

On reading this the editor of St. Nicholas asked Charles to write for us his own account of the matter. Here is his letter:

"The first forest fire I helped to fight was in the summer of 1923. I saw it while upon a mountain. I came down and told my father, and he attended to it at once, taking his men with him. With a great deal of fighting they put it out. The next morning Mr. A. G. Agee, our supervisor, came, and I showed him the place where the fire was. He said I was a great fire fighter.

"My second fire was in the autumn of 1924. A train crew told me about the fire. My father was absent at the time; so I called his section crew, and we took the motor car and attended to it right away. After a great deal of fighting we put it out.

"We have in the forest boxes furnished by the United States government containing shovels, axes, saws, and everything that is needed to fight fire. To obtain these tools you have to break the seal. Then you make a report and leave it in the box, telling how long the fire lasted and how many men were helping.

"I had several letters from the late Secretary Wallace. He sent me some fine books. I hope some day to be of greater service to my country."—Methodist Protestant.

Emmy.

Emmy Hewitt was busy at the spinning wheel when her Brother Mark came running suddenly into the house.

"Emmy, Sophronia has broke her rope and run away again. Faith and I couldn't find her anywhere."

Emmy frowned and arose from her work. "That ungrateful calf!" she exclaimed.

Faith came in, half crying. "Sophronia's run away and got lost."

Baby Prudence, seeing her sister in tears, sympathetically joined her. "'Phronia lost!" she sobbed.

Emmy quickly quieted them. "There, there! Sophronia can't have gone far away. We'll soon find her."

She gathered Prudence into her arms and went out to the barn where Davy, who was next to her in years, was husking corn, the rest of the children following.

Davy was quite unaware of Sophronia's disappearance, but was immediately as much concerned as the others. The wilderness surrounding the Hewitt farm was infested with wild animals who might easily prey upon the helpless calf.

Emmy Hewitt, although only fourteen, had the courage and wisdom of a girl much older. Knowing this, her father and mother, when suddenly called away by the serious illness of an uncle, had confidently left her in complete charge of the farm and the children.

The Hewitts were pioneers. Peter Hewitt had hewed and cleared his farm out of an unbroken wilderness. The dangers and hardships of that period of history were accepted as a matter of course. Indians still roamed the surrounding countryside, but for the most part they had been friendly. And while there was peace, the hardy white settlers wasted no time worrying about the possibility of war.

But they were ready for any emergency.

So was Emmy Hewitt.

"Davy and I will see if we can find Sophronia," she said after a brief deliberation over the situation now confronting her. "Mark, you stay here and take care of the children. Keep them in the house while we're gone. And I wouldn't be surprised if you'd see us coming back with Sophronia."

But Emmy's hopes were doomed to disappointment. For three hours Davy and she searched for the runaway calf without success. And then deepening shadows warned them of the approach of the early November twilight, and they knew that they must give up the search and go home. It was with sober faces and heavy hearts that they bent their steps homeward. For neither had much hopes of Sophronia's surviving a night alone in the forest. The calf was a pet and would some day have grown into a fine cow. Peter Hewitt, whose little herd of cattle numbered only four, had set much store by the promise of her.

Dusk had fallen when they reached the farm. There were the chores to be done. The oxen and White Face, the Hewitt's one horse, to feed and bed down, the cows to be milked and the hogs and chickens to be taken care of. Davy went to the barn immediately and Emmy to the house after the milk pails.

Mark had lighted the candles. Their mellow glow streamed out into the dusk as the children opened the door and greeted their elder sister eagerly. But Emmy had no good news to tell them.

When she had finished her share of the milking, Emmy went to the bin where the cornmeal was kept and found it empty. She could scarcely believe her eyes at first. Then it dawned upon her. She remembered hearing her father say that he must take a bag of corn to the grist mill and have it ground into meal. In the excitement of receiving the news of the serious illness of his relative, it had slipped his mind. It had slipped all their minds.

And there would be no mush and milk for the children until some one took a bag of corn to the grist mill.

Emmy settled the matter that evening. In the morning she would take White Face and go to the grist mill with a bag of corn. If she started early she could be back before dark. Davy and Faith could take care of the children while she was gone. So it was finally agreed upon, and they went to bed early, a sober and somewhat saddened little family.

Emmy lay awake for awhile, listening hopefully for sounds which might tell her that Sophronia had found her way back to the farm. But she heard none and presently fell fast asleep.

The next morning bright and early, Emmy Hewitt, mounted on White Face, with the bag of corn fastened securely just in front of her, set out for the grist mill. The children waved and shouted to her until she was out of sight, and she rather felt as though she were embarking upon a tremendous adventure. Which was true. For never in her life had she traveled all the distance to the grist mill alone. There were dangers of which she was not unmindful. The road, at times, was little more than a trail through the forest which crowded close on both sides. Wild beasts and even Indians might dispute her right of way, though she feared the wild beasts more than she did the Indians. There had been peace between them and the white people so long.

However, Emmy, true to her pioneer stock, was a courageous little soul, and even thoughts of possible danger could not quell the happiness which surged through her as White Face loped along at an easy gait. It was pleasant to see the smoke from the scattered log farmhouses curling upward into the clear, crisp air.

It was noon when Emmy reached the grist mill. She felt a little tired by then.

"Well, what have we here?" greeted Henry Cooper, owner of the grist mill.

"I've brought a bag of corn to be ground," said Emmy.

Henry Cooper helped her down from White Face's back. She could hardly stand up at first. Both her feet had gone to sleep, and every muscle in her body ached. Never had she felt so tired.

"You came all the way alone?" asked the mill owner as he unfastened the bag of corn from White Face's back. "Where's your pa?"

Emmy explained the circumstances of her coming.

"Well, now, I call you a mighty gritty little girl, Emmy!" exclaimed Cooper, slapping his thigh. "And you weren't afraid of all the Indians?"

"The Indians are our friends," declared Emmy.

"Well, they claim to be," said Cooper skeptically, at the same time winking covertly at another settler who was present. He was a man who loved to joke. But sometimes he wasn't very tactful in doing so.

An hour later Emmy sarted for home with the bag of cornmeal. The return journey was not so exciting. She found herself, as the hours of the afternoon passed and the sun moved farther into the west, growing more and more anxious to reach home.

And then when she was within a mile of the farm it happened.

Through the deepening shadows of the woods which lined either side of the road, came a sudden hissing sound and a dull plup which brought White Face to a quivering stop. And Emmy found herself staring fascinatedly at an arrow, decorated with a bright feather, protruding from the bag of cornmeal.

At that instant she heard a shout. It sounded to her like a war whoop and she was galvanized into action. She recalled Henry Cooper's skepticism regarding the friendliness of the Indians. She pulled the arrow from the bag and flung it away. The next instant White Face was flying like the wind toward home. A thin trickle of meal was running from the hole the arrow had made in the bag. But Emmy was too frightened and excited to notice.

As Emmy on White Face pounded into the yard of the Hewitt farm, she shouted to her brothers and sisters, who came running to meet her.

"Indians! They're right behind me! Hide quick!"

The children turned and scuttled back into the house. Emmy guided White Face straight to the barn, where she lingered just long enough to unfasten and slide the bag of cornmeal, now considerably lighter, from the horse's back. Then, closing and barring the barn door, she made for the house as fast as she could go.

Davy, musket in hand, unbarred the door and let her in. Mark and Faith, each clinging to a cumbersome musket, were stationed at either window. Prudence and Nan were hidden in the loft overhead and whimpering softly.

Emmy said: "Faith, let me have your gun, and you go up and quiet the children.

"Did the Indians attack you, Emmy?" Davy asked presently.

Emmy's eyes were round with excitement.

"They shot an arrow at me. It struck in the bag of corn-meal. I pulled the arrow out, and then I heard them give a war whoop and made White Face go as fast as he could.

They waited tensely. The minutes dragged slowly. But finally an hour had passed. Darkness fell. Another hour passed and still there were no evidences of an Indian attack. The children's fears subsided and they began calling for their supper.

Finally Emmy said: "Davy, I guess they aren't going to attack us after all. We've got to do the chores. The cows can't go all night without being milked. And the cornmeal for supper is out in the barn."

"Yes, I suppose the chores have got to be done," Davy agreed bravely. "We'll take our muskets along so we'll have them if we need them."

But it took courage—all the courage they could muster to travel the distance from the house to the barn and then to enter the engulfing darkness of the barn itself.

But at last the chores were done. By the time they had sat down to a supper of cornmeal mush and milk, conditions were nearly normal again. And then Faith, happening to glance out of the window, whispered tensely.

"There's an Indian standing in the yard!"

Emmy felt her heart leap into her throat. She peered out of the window. "Indian!" she giggled nervously. "It's—it's some kind of an animal!"

At that moment the animal in question raised its head and emitted a pathetic bleat.

"Why, it's Sophronia! Sophronia's back!"

Emmy jumped up from the table and ran to the door. The others followed her pell mell. Indians were complet ely forgotten.

They gathered joyfully around the runaway calf, who apparently was unharmed and in as quite sound health as ever.

"Look! Do you see what Sophronia's doing!" exclaimed Emmy suddenly. "She's eating the cornmeal that spilled from the bag after the arrow pierced it. It left a trail and she found it and followed it until it led her home."

Early the next morning an Indian, Swift Arrow, by name, who had long been a friend of the Hewitt family, called at the farm.

"Heap sorry arrow which Swift Arrow was shooting at patridge, slipped and struck bag of grain you were carrying on horse yesterday," he said to Emmy. "I called, but you were heap scared and didn't stop. You ride very fast."—Junior World.

A Problem.

Charley met his friend James upon the street and told him that he had been fishing. "How many fish did you catch?" asked James.

Charley replied: "If to the number of the books of the Old Testament you add the number of the books of the New Testament; multiply that by the number of Apostles that were present at the Transfiguration; divide by the number of the books written by Luke; subtract the number of times the Israelites marched around Jericho; multiply by the number of pieces of silver Judas received for betraying Christ; divide by the number of spies Moses sent into Canaan; add the number of letters in the name of the city in which a man climbed up a tree to see Christ; divide by the number of Apostles that were called the 'sons of thunder,' the answer will be the number of fish I caught."

The answer to this problem is the number of Apostles that were present at the Ascension, multiplied by the number of the Egyptian plagues, plus one. —Selected.

THE LAD I LIKE

He has a mind and knows it;
Has a will and shows it;
He draws a line and toes it;
He sees his way and goes it.

He meets a chance and takes it;
A friendly hand and shakes it;
A rule and never breaks it;
If theres "no time" he makes it.

He loves truth and stands by it;
And never tries to shy it;
Whoever may deny it,
Or openly defy it

He hears a lie and slays it;
He owes a debt and pays it;
And as I've heard him phrase it,
He knows the game and plays it.
—Church News Tasmania.

Turning Sorrow Into Joy.

If any one would tell you the shortest, surest way to all happiness and all perfection, he must tell you to make it a rule to yourself to thank and praise God for everything that happens to you. For it is certain that whatever seeming calamity happens to you, if you thank and praise God for it, you turn it into a blessing. Could you, therefore, work miracles, you could not do more for yourself than by this thankful spirit; for it heals with a word speaking, and turns all that it touches into happiness.—Wm. Law.

The Church today is not without its safe men who warn us to go slowly, but the situation demands more than a policy of "safety first". It calls for a prophet who will fearlessly lead us out in spit of dangers to a new discovery of God's purpose for His Church. It may be dangerous to go forward but it is infinitely more so to sit still and do nothing.

Flies die faster

—when you spray clean-smelling Flit with the handy Flit sprayer! Mosquitoes drop just as fast. More people use Flit because it contains a greater amount of insect-killing ingredients. Harmless to humans, and its vapor does not stain.

"The yellow can with the black band"

FLIT

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

© 1929 Standard Oil Co. Inc.

THE NEW PRAYER BOOK

"CHANCEL EDITION"

5 Inches by 7 Inches

FIFTY CENTS A COPY

Beautifully printed larger prayer book, on rather thin paper, bound like the Pew Editions.

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION
(The Church Pension Fund, Owner)
14 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

Churches are again reminded that orders for Prayer Books will be filled according to their receipt, and that, if not previously made, they are advisable now.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 10 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.
Bishop of Rome Fund.

Rev. Giles B. Cooke.....$5.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.
WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 309 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.
GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.
TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

FROM A SHUT-IN.
I HAVE FIFTEEN FOUNTAIN PENS, and I want to sell them at once, for I need the money, and I am forced to give up my mail order business, since I have not got a home to stay at regular. Twelve of these fancy pens are my $1.25 pens, and the others I have been selling for $1.00. But in order to sell them at once, I am asking $1.00 each. Buy one at once. Edward P. Broxton, Keysville, Ga.

OLD STAMPS.
WANTED,—OLD ENVELOPES FROM letters written before 1875. Highest prices paid for envelopes with patriotic designs used during Civil War. Old stamps purchased—George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED: MATURE WOMAN OF VARied experience, student of Lewis Hotel Training Course, efficient in secretarial work, desires position as matron, or supervisor in school; manager of apartment house, or assisant manager of tea-room. Excellent references. Address Mrs. Ada B. Lloyd, P. O. Box 115, Moorefield, West Virginia.

WANTED: BY REFINED, CHRISTIAN woman, with highest reference, a comfortable and quiet home for the winter, and very small salary in exchange for light household duties; or perhaps the tutoring of a child. Would consider looking after home in absence of family, etc. Address, Mrs. H. L. Browne, Weedonville P. O., Virginia.

WANTED, BY REFINED CHRISTIAN woman, with excellent references, a comfortable and quiet home, one in the country preferred. Willing to come as one of the family Address "A. B.", care of Southern Churchman

A MIDDLE-AGED WOMAN, OF EXPERIence, wishes position as companion to semi-invalid woman, or child, or as teacher in private home. References exchanged. Address "B", Box 37, Ronda, N. C.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED, ENERGETIC WOMAN TO take care of six boys on farm in Eastern Virginia. Small salary, but good, permanent home. Address "L. P.", care of Southern Churchman.

A REAL HOME IN OUR DELIGHTFUL country place in exchange for capable tutoring of our children by man of fine character. Unexcelled climate for health and comfort. Fine medicinal springs. Splendid opoprtunity to study, write or rest. Address "Tutor", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

HENDERSON: Died, at the family home, "Blythewood", Salisbury, N. C., August 12, 1929, MRS. ELIZABETH B. HENDERSON, widow of the late John Steele Henderson. Funeral from St. Luke's Church.

"May she rest in peace, and may light perpetual shine upon her."

WILLIAM EDWARDS WALL.

Entered into eternal rest, at his country home, "Waldene", Montgomery County, Maryland, on Friday, July 26, 1929, WILLIAM EDWARDS WALL, in the eighty-third year of his age.

Mr. Wall was a native of Baltimore and lived there until 1880, when he moved his family to "Walldene", Montgomery County, the ancestral home of his wife's people, the Dades.

Mr. Wall, before his retirement from active business, was closely identified with the wholesale dry goods business in New York, as well as Baltimore.

He was a life long member, and generous supporter of the Church.

He is survived by his widow, who before marriage was Miss Mary Catherine Dade, three sons, William Guy Wall, of Indianapolis, Ind., Stanley Wall, of Enfield, N. C., Robert Earle Wall, of Warsaw, N. C., two daughters, Mrs. Jacquelin P. Taylor, of Richmond, Va., Mrs. Stanley Dunbar Embick, of Washington, D. C., and numerous grandchildren.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.
(Continued from page 16.)

Church, Mount Holly, N. Y., has been the preacher at the Cathedral several times during the summer.

A number of boys from the Diocese of Washington are planning to attend the National Convention of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, to be held at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., from September 5-8.

Fellowship among the boys by athletics and recreation as well as services and lectures, will be included on the program.

Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, National President of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and a member of the Diocese of Washington, will attend the convention.

M. M. W.

The Rev. Charles Raymond Barner, D. D., who has accepted the call to become rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Brookland, D. C., will assume his new duties there September 1. He will succeed in this position, the Rev. Edwin H. Stevens.

Dr. Barnes was born in Camden, N. J., of Scotch-Irish and English ancestry. His early youth was spent partly in Camden, partly in New York City, but mostly in Mechanicsburg, Pa., from which high school he graduated in 1912. In 1913, Mr. Barnes received the certificate of graduation from the Harrisburg, Pa., School of Commerce, and shortly after this attended college at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., from which institution he received the degree of A. B. in 1917 and was the caledictorian of his class. Attending as a regular student the General Theological Seminary, New York City, he graduated from this institution in 1920, receiving the degree of B. D. in 1922. Mr. Barnes also received his M. A. in history from Columbia University in 1920.

Soon after his ordination to the diaconate in 1920 by Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, Mr. Barnes was assigned as deacon-in-charge of St. John's Church, South Williamsport, Pa., and upon his ordination as priest, November 10, 1920, he became the rector of the parish. In 1923, the work at Muncy, Pa., St. James' Church, was placed under his charge, and in 1926, Mr. Barnes was made archdeacon of Williamsport. Late in the same year Mr. Barnes accepted a call to St. Mark's Church, Newark, N. J.

Following the eleven o'clock and four o'clock services at Washington Cathedral on Sundays during the summer, visitors are being conducted on a pilgrimage through the chapels and grounds by the Rev. John W. Gummere, a member of the Cathedral staff. Hundreds of people are availing themselves of this opportunity every Sunday to gain a clearer understanding of the many places of this great Cathedral project.

Mr. Edgar Priest, Washington Cathedral organist, has returned to the city after a three months' vacation spent abroad. He will resume his duties at the Cathedral September 1.

M. M. W.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Wytheville Students Report on Summer School.

At St. John's Church, Wytheville, of which the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey is rector, a practice is followed that is doubtless in vogue in many other parishes and yet is worthy of special attention. Each year definite reports are made by members of the parish who attended the Summer School of Religious Education at Sweet Briar. Two students at the recent session of the school were Misses Jean W. Pendleton and Betsy Johnson, of Wytheville. After returning home, Miss Pendleton gave interesting talks to the Woman's Auxiliary and the Church School faculty on her impressions and experiences at Sweet Briar, and at a special meeting of the Young People's Service League, Miss Johnson described most interestingly the young people's conferences held during the Summer School.

Wytheville is a most pleasant summer resort in Southwestern Virginia, and has recently had a number of clerical visitors. Among these were the Rev. J. Lindsay Patton, Jr., of Mesa, Arizona, with Mrs. Patton; the Rev. Arthur LeBaron Ribble, of Greensboro, Alabama; the Rev. G. Wallace Ribble, of Bessemer, Alabama; the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. Arthur C. Thomson, of Portsmouth, Virginia, and Mrs. Leigh Ribble, of the Missionary District of Southern Brazil.

Wytheville has the distinction of being the home of two families each of which has given a number of ministers to the Episcopal Church. The Goodwins and the Ribbles, both of past and present generations, have contributed largely to the life of the Church in Virginia and elsewhere in the United States and in the foreign mission fields. Many members of both families are now serving the Church, either as clergymen or missionaries at home and abroad.

City Rectors Take Country Churches.

The clergy and their vestries in the Lynchburg Churches are exhibiting a fine generosity and cooperative spirit in their willingness to assist in caring for a number of vacant churches near the city.

When, some twenty-odd years ago, the Rev. T. H. Lacy, D. D., resigned his parish in Campbell County and transferred to the Diocese of Virginia, he retained a special interest in one of the little Campbell County Churches—Grace ("Mt. Athos") at Six Mile Bridge, just east of Lynchburg—and he continued to hold service there once a month until his death in Richmond on May 2, 1928. The care of this church has since been taken over by the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, and he now conducts services at Six Mile Bridge at regular intervals.

The resignation of the Rev. George V. Bell on May 31 of this year, left vacant several scattered churches, which he had been serving, with his residence at Lynchburg. For a time at least, and until developments make some other arrangement advisable, most of these churches will be served by Lynchburg rectors.

The Rev. Thomas M. Browne, of St. John's, will take Trinity Church at Boonesboro, about six miles west of Lynchburg, in Bedford County. Once before, when Trinity was without a rector, Mr. Browne conducted services there for a considerable period and he is especially popular with the Trinity congregation.

The Rev. W. G. Pendleton, D. D., of Grace Memorial Church, is taking the work at Emmanuel Church, Madison Heights, just across the river from Lynchburg in Amherst County. Dr. Pendleton will also take under his care St. Stephen's Church near Forest, Bedford County, about twelve miles west of Lynchburg. St. Stephen's was for many years one of the most active and widely known country churches in this section of Virginia. The advent of good roads and the automobiles and other modern conditions have had their usual effect in changing the character of country communities. Nearly all of the Episcopalians that made up the congregation have either died or moved away from the neighborhood and St. Stephen's has been practically dormant for a long period. Dr. Pendleton plans to hold occasional services there and at least to revive sufficient interest to keep the building and grounds in proper condition.

The Rev. Oscar deWolf Randolph, D. D., rector of Virginia Episcopal School, will take the services at Ivy Chapel. This is a little church in Bedford County about midway between Boonesboro and Forest and the building is used by two or three denominations on different Sundays. The Episcopalians nearby are few in number, but wonderfully interested and loyal.

Arrangements have not been made for the care of St. Luke's Church at Pedlar Mills in Amherst County and Christ Church at Schuyler in Nelson County.

From the point of view of both the local congregations and the diocese, the assumption of these extra charges by the Lynchburg clergy is a most helpful thing in very many ways; the chief being, of course, the conservation of the life and spirit of the Episcopal Church in communities where, without such attention, the interest of the people would naturally, though gradually, be lost.

T. A. S.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving, Diocese of New York, who supplied services during the summer at Croton on the Hudson and Montrose, N. Y., completes these engagements on Sunday, and returns to New York City, 925 West End Ave.

Fort Screven, Ga., August 22.—Chaplain Randolph F. Blackford, of the 325th Infantry, who is attending the annual encampment of the Reserve Officers of the 325th Infantry here, is one of the most active officers at this year's reserve encampment. He is rector of Saint James' Episcopal Church at Leesburg, Florida, and holds a commission as First Lieutenant in the Chaplain's Reserve Corps, being assigned to the 325th Infantry, having been commissioned several years ago. Chaplain Blackford served overseas during the World War at a base hospital in France.

Soon after arriving at camp this year he was asked to also serve as Chaplain for the 163d Infantry Brigade and the 304th Military Police Battalion, in addition to his duties with the 325th Infantry, and he has been active in the affairs of all three units. He arranged regimental dinners for the 325th and 326th Infantry Regiments and acted as song leader at the 325th regimental dinner. He has arranged several entertainment affairs and promoted various camp activities.

Chaplain Blackford is active in American Legion circles: Department Chaplain for the Department of Florida this year and adjutant of the local American Legion Post at Leesburg.

Colonel William M. Wilder, commanding the 325th Infantry, is very pleased with the work of Chaplain Blackford at this year's encampment. The 325th Infantry is one of the outstanding reserve regiments of the Infantry, and this year's training encampment has been the most successful encampment held since the war. Chaplain Blackford has made an interesting survey during the present annual encampment of reserve officers here, which discloses that eighty-eight per cent of the reserve officers here are church members. Thirty-five per cent are Methodists, twenty-five Baptists, thirteen Presbyterians, eleven Episcopalians, five Catholics and the others miscellaneous denominations.

Chaplain Blackford is an Episcopal rector of Leesburg, Florida, and, in addition to him, three Methodist ministers are attending the reserve encampment here, all holding commissions in line companies. They are: the Rev. B. M. Montgomery, Waldo, Florida; the Rev. Alfred E. Barton, The Rock, Ga., and the Rev. George R. C. Stone, Athens, Ga. All hold commissions as infantry lieutenants.

ORDINATIONS.

Manila, Philippine Islands.—The Rev. Robert F. Wilner, Deacon, was advanced to the Priesthood on St. James' Day, in the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John, Manila, by the Rt. Rev. Gouverneur Frank Mosher, D. D., Bishop of the Philippine Islands. Mr. Wilner was presented by the Rev. F. C. Benson Belliss, rector of the Cathedral Parish; the Bishop preached the sermon, and the Litany was read by the Rev. Crispino Salustiano. The Rev. William L. Ziadie, of St. Luke's Church, assisted the Bishop in the celebration of the Holy Communion. During his diaconate, Mr. Wilner has been assisting in St. Stephen's Mission to Chinese, Manila, but on September 1, he will move to Baguio, Mountain Province, where he will be in charge of Easter School for Igorot boys and girls, assisted by Mrs. Wilner, a trained and experienced teacher. He will also act as Chaplain of Brent School for American boys and girls, and assist the Rev. George C. Bartter in the out-station work of the Baguio Mission. New address: Easter School, Baguio, Mountain Province, P. I.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Strangers Welcome.

You are in a good town; twenty years ago we had a population of only a few thousand. Look at us now—all fine, useful folks, too. Our climate is wonderful. (Don't you notice how much cooler it is here than where you came from? Well, it is just as much warmer in the winter time.)

You can grow more here on a thousand dollars worth of land than anywhere else in the United States.

You can have fresh vegetables almost the year round.

The James River will give you more free food than any other stream i nthe world. Just go help yourself any month in the year, it's never frozen over.

This is the oldest English Settlement in America, yet there is no record of ever having a flood, earthquake, cyclone or disaster of any kind.

This is the healthiest City and most neighborly City. We have no beggars nor criminals. Everybody works.

The great romance of America began here. This is the land of Capt. John Smith, Pocahontas and Patrick Henry, and the training grounds of our early statesmen.

This is where the final blow was struck which brought American independence.

From these shores our early citizens saw the turning point of the Civil War.

From this Port during the World War, poured the food, equipments and men that made the world safe for democracy.

There are more points of historical interest within a short drive from this City over good roads than any other city in America.

Of course you know about our Shipyard (finest in the world) and our Harbor of a Thousand Ships.

Remember what we did to the "Leviathan"?

And now the new Bridge which will provide easy access from other and larger cities onto our peninsula and into its delights.

Stay around awhile, you'll be glad you did, and if you ever change your place of residence, come here—By all means come here—and live.

If there is any information that you want, please don't hesitate to ask US for it.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

7 West 45th Street, New York, N. Y.

"And ye are witnesses of these things." Luke 24:48.

Dear Christian:

Four million pieces of Christian literature were distributed by us during the past year; two million were tracts in over twenty languages, to meet urgent needs in this country.

Christian literature was also sent to thirty-four foreign countries, and cash for printing literature was sent to Siam, India, Persia and Japan; yet we were unable, because of lack of funds, to answer other imperative calls.

We are therefore anxiously awaiting a reply to our annual letter, and hope you will send in your donation with the enclosed card.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM H. MATTHEWS, General Secretary.

PROFESSOR L. S. KEYSER, D. D.
HAMMA DIVINITY SCHOOL
1126 N. FOUNTAIN AVENUE
SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

August 23, 1929.

Editor "Southern Churchman,"
Richmond, Va.

My Dear Doctor:

Permit me to thank you for printing Dr. James W. Morris' excellent article on my book, "Man's First Disobedience," in the issue of "Southern Churchman" for August 17th. He has given a very fair and forceful presentation of the main contention of the book, namely, that Genesis III is not mythical or legendary, but is veritable history and that it is reasonable to accept it as history, and unreasonable to regard it otherwise.

While The Macmillan Company, New York, are the original publishers of the book, The Lutheran Literary Board, Eighth and Elm Streets, Burlington, Iowa, have bought out the entire lot from that firm and are now handling the work and are selling it at a somewhat reduced price.

I am grateful to God that you are standing so firmly on the historic faith and are ready to uphold it against all gainsayers. God pour His favor on you in richest measure and on the great Church which you are serving so well.

Sincerely yours,

LEANDER S. KEYSER.

CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY OF VIRGINIA

OFFICERS:
President
E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS
Vice-Presidents
RT. REV. COLLINS DENNY, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Recording Secretary
C. P. WALFORD, JR.
Treasurer
W. A. ROPER
Counsel
S. S. P. PATTESON

FRANK DAVIS PRESTON, General Secretary

1121 BANK STREET, RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

DEAR VIRGINIAN AND AMERICAN:

If you were to actually see a small child cold, hungry, unclothed, with neither friends, relatives or parents to care for her, you would immediately provide for her. Of course you would—you would count it a privilege to help in the saving of such a human life.

That is exactly what the Children's Home Society is doing every day in the year. For example, we were recently called to a nearby county. Our worker found a ten-months-old baby girl, who had been left by her half-crazed mother uncovered in a freezing room during the bitterest winter weather. Her hands and feet were already frozen. After a few days in the hospital, and a period of special care in our Receiving Home, the child entirely recovered and has now been placed in an excellent home.

In another county our worker brought in two little boys from a shack on a mountain side. As she rode down that mountain road on a mule carrying the younger boy, the older boy said, "I am so glad you have come to take me away, so that I can have something to eat."

About this time of the year, in response to a letter you have generally sent a check or gift to help carry on this work. This year we sent you a letter, but we missed your contribution. I am greatly distressed about that, because bills for food, clothing, supplies, and other expenses keep coming in every day and your support is really important to the lives of more than 1,200 children dependent upon this organization.

Perhaps our letter didn't reach you, or you have been away, or unusually busy. Whatever the reason, won't you send along whatever you can spare now to help in the noble work of caring for these hundreds of little ones? They will all join in the gratitude which will be an ample reward.

Cordially yours,
FRANK DAVIS PRESTON,
General Secretary.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 7, 1929. No. 36.

"CHRISTIANITY"

JESUS CHRIST, MAN'S ONLY SAVIOUR

And thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins. Matt. 1:21.

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. John 3:17..

FOR THE SON OF MAN IS COME TO SEEK AND TO SAVE THAT WHICH WAS LOST. Luke 19:10.

Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Acts 4:12.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. 1 Tim. 1:15.

And we have seen and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. 1 John 4:14.

He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. Isa. 53:5.

BUT GOD COMMENDETH HIS LOVE TOWARDS US, IN THAT, WHILE WE WERE YET SINNERS, CHRIST DIED FOR US. Rom. 5:8.

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. 1 Peter 3:18.

Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 1 John 4:10.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Eph. 1:7.

For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Thess. 5:9.

FOR GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD THAT HE GAVE HIS ONLY BEGOTTEN SON, THAT WHOSOEVER BELIEVETH IN HIM SHOULD NOT PERISH, BUT HAVE EVERLASTING LIFE. John 3:16.

He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him. John 3:36.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Matt. 11:28, 29.

IN THE LAST DAY, THAT GREAT DAY OF THE FEAST, JESUS STOOD AND CRIED, SAYING, IF ANY MAN THIRST, LET HIM COME UNTO ME, AND DRINK. John 7:37.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; Come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price. Isa. 55:1.

For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. 1 Tim. 2:5.

If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. Rom. 10:9.

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. John 3:14, 15.

AND JESUS SAID UNTO THEM, I AM THE BREAD OF LIFE; HE THAT COMETH TO ME SHALL NEVER HUNGER; AND HE THAT BELIEVETH ON ME SHALL NEVER THIRST. John 6:35.

Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. Heb. 7:25.

IF ANY MAN SIN, WE HAVE AN ADVOCATE WITH THE FATHER, JESUS CHRIST, THE RIGHTEOUS. 1 John 2:1.

AND THE SPIRIT AND THE BRIDE SAY, COME. AND LET HIM THAT HEARETH SAY, COME. AND LET HIM THAT IS ATHIRST, COME. AND WHOSOEVER WILL, LET HIM TAKE THE WATER OF LIFE FREELY. Rev. 22:17.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For the Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

Episcopal school for girls, maintaining best Virginia traditions of refinement and culture.

Thorough College Preparation. Varied General Course. Outdoor Life.

EIGHTY-SIXTH YEAR BEGINS SEPTEMBER 13, 1929

For catalogue, address

MRS. H. N. HILLS, Principal

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

DIVINITY SCHOOL

of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia

42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett. D. D., Dean.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls

The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Mrs. Marvin Bristol Rosenberry, Acting Principal. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

St. Christopher's

A Church Boarding and Day School

Richmond, Virginia.

Heathful, beautiful, and historic surroundings. Boarding Department Limited to 50 Boys.

Rate $750.

Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL.D., Headomaster.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial—Knighthood	5
Bishop Gore on the Old Testament—Rev. James M. Morris	6
Good Parents Americas' Need—Rev. O. A. Sauer	7
The 1929 Convention at Keswick, England	8
Strife in the Holy Land	9
The Murder of Christ—G. Osborne Troop	10
Favorite Scripture Verse	10
Book Reviews	10
Letters to Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	16
Childrens' Department	17
Personal Notes	22

GUNSTON HALL

School for girls, Kindergarten, primary, academic, collegiate, Art, music, expression, domestic science courses. Small classes. All the refinements of a beautiful Washington home. Three handsome residences near Dupont Circle. Instructors with highest standards and ideals, with personality and experience. Riding, swimming, golf, tennis, dancing, fencing. Established 1892. Catalog. Mary L. Gildersleeve, Mary B. Kerr, M. A., Principals. Richard N. Mason, Business Manager, 1930 Florida Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Anne's,

Charlottesville, Va.

Box G.

Beautiful location in far famed Blue Ridge Mountains College preparatory and elective courses. Fully accredited. Open gymnasium allows sports in the fresh air in all weather. Sleeping porches. Riding taught by expert. Music. Art. Bishop of Virginia President of Trustees. Margaret L. Porter, M. A., Principal.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

SAINT MARY'S SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina.

Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Have your daughter receive her education in a Church School.

Saint Mary's offers four years' High School and two years' College work all fully accredited by the Southern Association. Also Courses in Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics and Business.

20-acre campus. Gym and Field Sports. Tennis, Indoor Tiled Swimming Pool. Horseback Riding.

For Catalogue and View Book address A. W. TUCKER, Business Manager.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

ATTENTION
GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES

Increase your funds for Church work. Send us

25 new subscriptions

and receive

A CHECK FOR $25.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,

628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

EMBROIDERED ALTAR LINENS, SILK ALTAR HANGINGS.

Burses, Veils, Stoles, Markers, Chasubles, Damasks, Fringes, Altar Laces, Embroidery Supplies. Materials stamped for embroidering. MISS M. C. ANDOLIN (formerly with Cox Sons & Vining), 45 West 39th Street, New York. Hours 9 to 1.

CASSOCKS

Surplices, Stoles, Eucharistic Vestments, Choir Cassocks, Cottas, Ties and Collars, Altar Linens, Materials, Tailoring.

J. M. HALL, Inc.
174 Madison Ave.
(Bet. 33d & 34th Sts.)
New York.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
GOTTSCHALK'S
METAL SPONGE
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
"The Modern Dish Cloth"
—WRITE FOR FULL INFORMATION—
METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
DEPT. G LEHIGH AND MASCHER STREETS PHILA.

New York Bible Society Gives Hotel Bibles: Hotel Requests Religious Service.

The beautiful large hotel, The Governor Clinton, was recently furnished and opened to the public in New York. A few days before the opening, 1,160 Bibles were delivered to the hotel by the New York Bible Society, one Bible to be placed in each guest room. The manager of the hotel then requested the Society to arrange for a special religious service dedicating these Bibles, to be held in the hotel on the first Sunday the hotel was open to the public. The Service was held on the third Sunday afternoon in August. The Bibles were piled in the large lobby of the hotel in the form of a cross. The hotel orchestra furnished music, Miss Cornelia Armstrong from the Federation of Churches sang two appropriate solos, one of which was "How Sweet is the Bible". The Rev. Thomas Ross, a New York City pastor, read from the Scriptpres, gave a short address on the value of the Bible and offered the prayer of dedication. Mr. John C. West, in a very appropriate address presented the Bibles and Mr. Kill, the manager of the hotel, responded, graciously accepting the gift. It is interesting to note that nearly all the employees of the hotel were present at this service.

MOLLER PIPE ORGAN

Endorsed by the most eminent organists. Built in the world's largest factory. Every organ a special creation for a particular use and fully guaranteed. Moller Organs lead all quest.

Booklets and specifications on reother makes for church, school and auditorium use. The Moller "Artiste" Reproducing Organ for residence use is without equal.

M. P. MOLLER
Hagerstown. Maryland.

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

SELL

Christmas Cards

at forty to fifty per cent. commission. The best line of Box Assortment and Personal Christmas Cards on the market.

Write for details.

ARTISTIC CARD COMPANY,
Dept. 15. Elmira, N. Y.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Woody's Art Glass Shop

Art Stained and Leaded Glass.

Church Windows a Specialty.

513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

LINEN for the CHURCH

PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture

THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.

T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

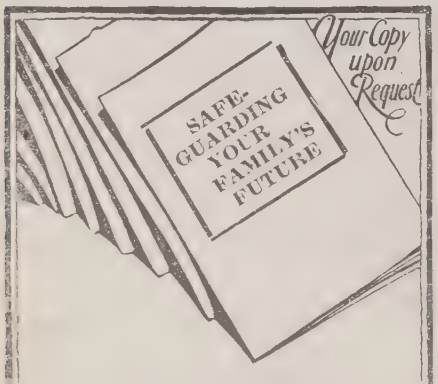
Are You Coming to New York?

The National Bible Institute at the heart of New York City, in its new, modern fire-proof building, offers comfortable and economical accommodations to Christian travelers. Every room with hot and cold running water and telephone. All night elevator service. Rates exceptionally low. For reservations address:

THE NATIONAL BIBLE INSTITUTE
340 W. 55th St., New York City.
DON O. SHELTON, LL.D., President.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.



The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The American has just printed a booklet which gives authoritative information on the important subject of wills and modern methods of "Safeguarding Your Family's Future" (this is its title).

It will gladly mail you a copy, with no obligation on your part, upon request, as long as the supply lasts.

Kindly mention this paper.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Now it is either Christ or chaos."—Lloyd George.

"He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom."

"The Chinese have a saying, "One see is worth a hundred tells".

Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you. Act faith if you do not feel it.—Alexander Whyte.

It is easy to make allowances for our faults—but dangerous; hard to make allowances for other's faults—but wise.—Selected.

The world looks at ministers out of the pulpit to know what they mean when in it.—Cecil.

The reference to the sparrow's fall is not designed to show the grasp of the Divine Mind on detail, but to reveal the Spirit of the Father of all.—Bishop McConnell.

This is the great test by which all our systems, be they political, social, religious, must ultimately be judged: What can they do for the lame man?—Rev. George Jackson.

"Oh, for the peace of a perfect trust,
My loving God, in Thee;
Unwavering faith that never doubts
Thou choosest best for me—
Best, though my pleas be all upset,
Best, though the way be rough,
Best, though my earthly store be scant:
Is Thee I have enough!"

He who has the mind of Christ gives as the spring by the side of the road gives—not what one can spare, not even what the people need, but he gives his all. And he gives for the joy of giving. —J. I. Vance.

It is a favorite belief of mine that no student ever attains very eminent success by simply doing what is required of him; it is the amount and excellence of what is over and above the required, that determines the greatness of ultimate distinction.—C. K. Adams.

By desiring what is perfectly good, even when we do not quite know what it is, and cannot do what we would, we are part of the power against evil, widening the skirts of light, and making the struggle with darkness narrower.—George Eliot.

Washington Cathedral

Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.,

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock	$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned	$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....	$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 7, 1929. No. 36.

KNIGHTHOOD

Chivalry lives and shines. Knighthood yet is in flower, its fragrance giving purification, hope, high resolve and staunch courage to hearts, its beauty gladdening and glorifying life. The crusader soul yet flames and inspires. Also, dragons roam and roar, threaten and destroy, poison the air with tainted, putrid breath. Monsters lurk and lure to entrap and entice the unwary and the innocent and ignorant, to devour weakness and make unavailing the strength of the strong. Giants boastfully challenge to combat virtue and honor. Evil things hover, eager to drain the blood of careless sleepers, to snatch away the food of the hungry. Hideous wrongs are to be righted. Oppressions crush and grind the helpless and stricken, who are lifting beseeching hands and eyes for deliverance. Visibly and familiarly we have among us all these and base cravens, coarse and raucous clowns, stolid and callous churls, mindful of nothing beyond their bodily appetites and their pockets, carpet knights, strutting and seeking admiration with lying proclamations of mighty deeds done or designed, dandies and fops bedizening themselves with fripperies and gew-gaws.

All these characters and fancies of the old tales, fables and ballads and of some of the modern novels, poems and operas, are real and present, parts and elements of our daily experiences and contacts with spiritual, moral, intellectual and physical life. Nothing in human history is so lovely as the conception of knighthood in the earlier years of English civilization and Christianity. It was established as emulation by strong and fearless men of the example of the lowly and smitten Nazarene, as consecration to His service of strength and power and valor, sword and lance. Probably study and analysis would demonstrate that the allegiance to the Cross, the supremacy and splendor of the English-speaking races to this day, are from the flavor of that knighthood of old, transmitted through generations, descending through the centuries, a benison unseen and unheard, pervading and potent. Deference to weakness and readiness to defend it, reverence for womanhood, unflinching loyalty to cause and duty and plighted word, the instinct for honor and faith, are heritages of the best of us. The first knights kept long and lonely vigils, endured periods of menial service, of fasting, self-denial, self-sacrifice. Most of our more important and dignified secret orders frame now their rituals and ceremonies of initiation on that training and preparation and its lessons.

In the old days the ordeals, privileges and honors of knighthood were for the high born and lords of landed estates. In these days they are for all of us. In all stations of life and everywhere we have knights with hearts clean, humble, valiant as ever throbbed beneath cuirass and helmet and were stilled by death stroke beneath advancing banner. And all the old foes are here to be fought and conquered. All the elements of cowardice, sloth, selfishness, vanity, hypocrisy, greed, remain. The popinjays are among us, the carpet knights blustering vaingloriously, while anxiously guarding their own safety and comfort, churls, cravens, all to be shamed and scorned, aroused to courage, manhood and action or thrust aside presently to ignominy, impotence and obscurity. The dragon of atheism prowls with vicious diligence, exhales fetid breathing, seeks victims with unwearied malice. The monster of materialism is attempting to transform men hideously from a soul aspiring heavenward to an animal with nothing more than appetites and passions, to debase the vision of man for the future from place among the triumphant host of eternally redeemed and blest to a heap of mouldering and forgotten bones. The vampires, harpies, vultures, of atheism, infidelity, skepticism, agnosticism, materialism, heresies, are many and busy. Yet, our knights are everywhere, splendid, loving, dauntless and glorious, and in every final and crucial test the spirit of chivalry dominates. Crusader zeal burns within men and women, stirring and lighting and leading them—Salvation Army soldiers and mission workers invading dark and dangerous slums, missionaries going to work more perilous, more beset with pain and privation and ferocious hostilities and cold treacheries, than quest of the Holy Grail or rescue of the Holy Sepulchre.

From deep in the remote mountains of Tennessee, a region little known, came Sergeant Alvin York, for all he or anybody knows a scion of the once knightly and kingly strain that made Summer of Britain's Winter of discontent, but a man unknown, fundamentalist blacksmith and woodsman. Wonderful and magnificent warrior, he was showered with adulation and decoration from presidents, kings, commanders in chiefs and nations. He returned to his blacksmith shop and shack to dedicate his years and fame to spreading the Gospel among his poor neighbors. He presents an immensity of contrast, visible and vivid. Brawny, rawboned, unlettered mountaineer, embodied glory and beauty of the noblest knighthood. Recklessly but calmly daring in deadliest strife, he worships his God and Saviour humbly, toiling and giving to brighten present and future, to alleviate and prevent suffering and sorrow, to enlighten minds and direct them upward to nobility of thought and virility of attainment. Immeasurably, he towers above the pampered and cloistered, publicity and pence pursuing professors and preachers and professional philosophers who, because they can not, or will not, do anything, assume to teach everything. York saw in France something to do and did it. He sees in Tennessee something to do and is doing it. The cravens and carpet knights and dandies—exquisite expositors of literary and artistic elegancies—the vulgar and clownish jesters at sacred and holy things, of cloister and chair and pulpit, undertaking to instruct everybody in everything, tell us continually of nothing, that we and all originate in nothing and must culminate in nothing—beginning with zero, ending with zero, vacuity between.

Thanks to the Almighty and All Merciful, we have some hundreds of thousands of knights as fine as York. Many of them of whom we never hear doubtless have earned and, we have the right to believe, will be given higher place in the honor of the King of Kings than the famous Tennesseean. The average clergyman illustrates in his daily life and work the best and most beautiful qualities and traditions of knighthood. He has kept his vigiils, undergone ordeals known to none but God and his own heart, consecrated all he is and has to service and striving for his Lord, for rescue of slaves of sin, gallant battle against the visible and invisible armies of enemies of his King and country, cause and people. How many of his congregation share his knightly fervor and valor, go at his side in the long, long, battle, help keep his ardor aglow? Many more women than men, usually—brave, true women, their hearts filled with the spirit and impulse of the purest knighthood, accepting hard tasks with uncomplaining lips, faithfully intent on achieving when achievement is hidden and win not even a word of commendation. It is for the average layman to ask himself candidly how much knighthood and of the knightly principle he feels and manifests —whether he presses forward to be shoulder to shoulder with his chosen or appointed leader when fighting is thickest and the way steepest, or lurks and shirks or sulks, ingloriously idle, cravenly comfortable, choosing pleasure and ease before loyalty and truth, preferring to be recreant rather than sore from labor or blows. We Episcopalians take our solemn vow of knighthood—manfully to fight under the banner of the Christ crucified against sin, the world and the Devil—relentless and treacherous foes of God and humanity—and to continue Christ's soldier and servant. The vow is sealed with the sign of the Cross, as the vow of the ancient knight was sealed with the bared blade of his Lord's sword. Are we recreant or valiant, true or false? Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, Episcopalian and Presbyterian, brilliant warriors, devout Christians, knightliest of the knightly, were unfailing workers for their churches and with their pastors. Surely, they are the exemplars to follow instead of the shirkers, the indifferent, profane, the pretenders asking all and shrinking from all real strife and endeavor.

Every congregation is blest with some men, many or few—maybe inheriting from long gone ancestry, obscured by time and changes, the high instincts, cravings and ambitions of the highest knighthood—who answer always and quickly to call or need of rector, minister, preacher or church. For these, however hard and barren the field, however late the call, sore the heat and burden, be the talents entrusted many or scanty, will be at the last, from the Ruler of All the gracious, glorious accolade, "Well done, good and faithful. Enter thou".

And may the ranks of these true knights be thronged by the true and faithful and fearless to power overwhelming all enemies of the King and forever marching onward.

Alfred B. Williams.

BISHOP GORE ON THE OLD TESTAMENT

By James W. Morris

IT is nothing less than a tragedy that Bishop Gore should lend his name and influence to the recently published New Commentary; for in the Old Testament part it seems to have accepted practically all the radical positions of the infidel school of Graf, Wellhausen and Kuenen. That a man of Bishop Gore's eminence, and approved devotion to the Gospel of Jesus Christ should edit such a Commentary is most distressing to all lovers of God's Word written.

But in this woeful Commentary itself there are indications that the Bishop is not altogether easy in his mind about the business. He finds it difficult to rein in the fiery critics that compose his team; but he strives to save some fragments of inspiration from the wreck. But to our ordinary Christian with mind unwarped by critical "all-scholarship", it will appear quite impossible to attribute real inspiration of God to a book so full as these critics make it to be of cunningly devised fables and of pious frauds carefully worked out. A book inspired of God must surely have as its first essential truthfulness, reliability, historic verity. A book, many of whose stories are made to have little more factual basis than the tales of the Arabian Nights, surely cannot claim the inspiration of the God of Truth.

A strange phenomenon meets us in the modern field of Biblical criticism. It is that a vast number of Christian men, of approved devotion to Christ as Redeemer and Lord, have come to believe that God could use as the vehicle of His true and holy revelation, such a false book as they make of most of the Old Testament, more particularly of the writings of Moses, the friend of God.

These distinguished men suppose that by proving large portions of the Old Testament to be a collection of human legends, which the writers recounted as actual facts, they make the Book much more reasonable and establish more firmly its divine inspiration. They think that the "modern mind" needs must have a book that shall conform to its conception of revelation, and that it is easier for the "modern mind" to accept as inspired of God writings that are in great part a tissue of pretended history and of pious inventions, than to believe in the divine authority of the Old Testament as it stands. To them it would appear to be quite unreasonable to expect the "modern mind" with its scientific and historic training, to accept as God's a book containing much mysterious and miraculous material; while on the other hand, it is entirely reasonable for the "modern mind" to receive as God-inspired a series of legendary myths leaving us no more foundation in fact than the adventures of Ulysses. It seems that God may not be thought of by the "modern mind" as giving to His people a revelation through supernatural acts and events and as preserving supernaturally from all error the record of the same, but that conversely God may very well be conceived of as a Being that, though keeping inviolate His truthfulness and holiness, reveals Himself in a record replete with historic falsities and human deceits. And so it appears we are brought as a result of the most recent scientific criticism to this paradoxical position, that a revelation based on false history is worthier of the all-holy God than one founded upon actual, though miraculous history.

Such is the natural conclusion to which many will come in reading this distressing Commentary on the Old Testament.

The position of Bishop Gore, ardent believer as he is in Jesus Christ as his Saviour, in regard to the Old Testament is worthy of careful consideration. He takes his stand, as all Christian scholars have always done with Christ. What does the Lord think of Moses, Elijah and the other prophets of the law and prophecy? Did Jesus accept the genuineness of the Birth of Moses and the reality of the stories in the Pentateuch? It has been ever thought by Christian scholars that our Lord's view of the Old Testament must be taken as the true and final view of the Book.

Now Bishop Gore takes his stand with Christ, and says: "He (i. e., Christ) accepted the Old Testament in its three divisions as conveying really the Word of God to Israel, and would have His disciples regard it, even in its details, as something to be fulfilled and not abolished."

As establishing this, the Bishop gives many references, though one only, namely, Matt. 5:17, 18, would suffice.

Here Dr. Gore surely is on firm ground; for without doubt the Gospels are conclusive that Christ accepted the Old Testament, and especially the books of Moses, as the very law of God, whose essential truth should be fulfilled and consummated in Christ and the Gospel.

Bishop Gore further writes: "He (i. e., Christ) laid great stress on the Old Testament Scriptures as conveying the authoritative message of God to Israel and as destined in all their great manifestations to be fulfilled."

Also he says: "The authority of the Old Testament as being the Scriptures, containing the Word of God in the early stages of its delivery and pointing forward to Christ, was accepted by the Apostles from their Lord, and from the Apostles passed unquestioned into the Catholic Church."

It might be gathered from these statements that Bishop Gore is an out and out fundamentalist, standing solidly on the truthfulness, the historic validity and the divine authority of the Old Testament. But it would be a great mistake. One little phrase "containing the Word of God", shows his real attitude and takes the nerve out of all that he says.

In the same connection he states that our Lord gave His Apostles an authority, but such as was not infallible (meaning, I suppose, always true and according to fact), but "taught us when necessary to appeal against it to the reason and conscience of men". Thus the final authority for us is not the Word of Christ and His Apostles, but human reason and conscience, or what each man thinks to be true and believes to be right, and that lands us back into undiluted rationalism.

And so, we do not read far in Dr. Gore's article on "The Bible in the Church", before discovering that many of our Lord's recorded ideas about the Old Testament came into conflict with those that appeal to the "Modern Mind", with its modern reason and conscience. And when this occurs it seems that the "Modern Mind" must have its way somehow.

Thus the Bishop writes: "It seems to the present writer that our Lord's references to events in the Old Testament record, e. g., His references to the Flood and to Lot's wife, cannot be pressed as requiring of us a belief that these stories are historical descriptions of actual occurrences."

Here the "Modern Mind" may not be asked to conform to the Lord's mind. These stories, Dr. Gore tells us, are symbols of the fact that God frequently punishes human delinquences by physical catastrophies, and so they are still available to us, "just as we constantly draw warnings and encouragements from the incidents of Pilgrim's Progress!"

Let the reader take his Bible and read what sort of symbol the Flood was, and what our Lord thought of it (Genesis 6:9; Matt. 24:37-39; Luke 17:26, 27).

It may be said in passing that when reference is made to "Pilgrim's Progress" no one dreams of thinking that actual history is referred to. The Bible account of the Flood is in another class of writings—it pretends to be fundamental history, and no "symbol" or allegory.

Dr. Gore further writes: "There is grave reason to suppose that Matt. 12:40 is a somewhat misleading gloss and not a word of Christ at all."

The reference is to Jonah's three days' in the whale's belly, and the only "grave reason" discoverable for thinking the verse an explanatory interpolation, is not found in any manuscript, but only in something that is in the "Modern Mind".

In the face of Mark 12:35, Dr. Gore says of Ps. 110: "To us David's authorship seems utterly improbable."

This is nothing less than profane when we read the passage in St. Mark:

> "David himself said in the Holy Spirit:
> 'The Lord said unto my Lord,
> Sit Thou on my right hand
> Till I make thine enemies the footstool of thy feet'."

Put the two statements together.

Dr. Gore: "David's authorship seems utterly improbable."

Our Lord: "David himself said in the Holy Spirit."

Alas! God pity the "Modern Mind!"

Dr. Gore gives other instances in which the "Modern Mind" is made to supersede the Mind of Christ, but the above examples suffice to show how it is done; that is, how the final and decisive authority of the Lord Christ is both accepted and rejected at the same time.

There are two ways in which this is done:

1. One favorite way is to discredit the records of the New Testament. Says our Bishop: "The records of the different evangelists make it impossible to suppose that in all cases we have got the ipsissima verba of the Lord." "In the Fourth Gospel we cannot rely on having the Lord's actual words."

It is evident that by an astute use of this principle, it is possible to eliminate any words of the Lord that may offend the "Modern Mind".

2. Another way of retaining and yet repudiating the Lord's final authority is to represent Him as conforming to the current notions of His time, however erroneous such notions might be.

Hear once more Bishop Gore: "With regard to all the accepted knowledge of His time, we cannot but suppose that our Lord took it for granted; but He cannot be said to have taught it. He can reasonably be said to have taught nothing but those truths about God and about man, and about the kingdom of the New Israel, which were to constitute His Gospel."

It is supposed, too, by Dr. Gore that our Lord's references to incidents in the Old Testament are to classed with His speaking of the sun's rising! Well, if He had based arguments upon the sun's movement, definitely referred to it as a physical fact, declared certain truths that depended upon it, we should be compelled to think that He truly believed in the fact of such movement. His reference to the sun, however, is no more than Bishop Gore employs; but His references to the Old Testament are not the references that Bishop Gore would use. Such casuistry is sad, indeed.

It has always been thought that facts assumed as true, argued from as accepted and needing no proof, are the surest convictions of any teacher. They are his axioms which he needs to do no more than cite.

Thus, it is that when the "Modern Mind" finds a statement of the Lord's in regard to the Old Testament, or, indeed, in regard to anything else, that it cannot agree with, the way is open, either to reject the text by declaring it to be a corruption or an interpolation, or to refer it to our Lord's complaisant and unprotesting acceptance of current errors, if not, indeed, to His ignorance of what now our critics have discovered! And the dishonor done in all this to the inspired Word and to Him who is the Truth, is as patent as it is distressing.

Certain it is that when the genuineness of the Old Testament writings, and their reliability as historic records of God's revelation to men, are impugned, the truthfulness of the Gospels as well as the absolute perfections of the Lord Christ are inevitably involved. Radical criticism of the books of Moses and of the whole contemporary character and Mosaic genuineness of the ancient rituals and laws, lead logically and necessarily to a like man-handling of the sacred Gospels and of the entire redemption in Christ. The Gospel and the Law imply each other as certainly as seed the plant, or as stream the fountain source. They stand or fall together. The testimony of Christ to Moses, is as clear and strong as that of Moses to Christ. And, indeed Christ's words, "He wrote of me", should be enough to sweep away the mists in which have been involved the books of Moses by the ingenious and perversely laborious activities of an army of "higher" critics, who professedly borrow their theories, their arguments, and their skepticism from a frankly unchristian and unbelieving School of German and Dutch Scholars. And this they do, despite the fact that both in England and on the Continent the whole theory of composite anonymous documents of late origin is being increasingly challenged and refuted.

(All references are to Bishop Gore's article, "The Old Testament in the Church", published in New Commentary on the Holy Scriptures.)

GOOD PARENTS AMERICA'S NEED, DR. SAUER SAYS.

In a sermon on parental responsibility, the Rev. O. A. Sauer, D. D., told his congregation at Bethlehem Lutheran Church, Richmond, Virginia, recently that the things that America needs most are not armies and navies, a full treasury, or more tariff lows, but the right kind of parents.

"What America needs," he said, "what every land needs, is true fathers and mothers. Not merely progenitors, but fathers and mothers in the full, tremendous meaning of the words. More than tariff laws, more than a merchant marine, more than a full treasury, more than armies and navies, do we need fathers and mothers, God-fearing, humanity-loving, far-seeing, carefully-planning fathers and mothers. With these our future is secure; without them we face doom, and nothing can stem the tide.

"Important as is the teaching of our children, it is more important that we illustrate what we teach by what we are. We must be the pattern of what we want our boys and girls to be. We may fail even when we teach by precept and example. But the chances of failing are many times greater when we have only the teaching and lack the example. An ounce of example is worth a pound of precept. Children are great imitators. They are all the time absorbing influences.

When we tell the children to choose and love the good and beautiful in life, that they should always tell the truth, and be pure in word and deed; we should be the concrete illustration of what all this means. When we urge the children to shun the things which are little and low and mean in life, our lives should be living commentaries on what it means to be above stooping to deeds of which God disapproves. What will all our preaching about God's Word amount to, if the children never see us use the Bible? What will they think of our urging them to go to Sunday school and church services if we are indifferent, and easily find excuses for remaining away?

In moral and religious matters too many children simply grow. They are not reared, not trained. There is no trimming, no pruning. There is too much mistaken kindness.

"The child should be taught to distinguish the shoddy from the real, to love the one and to dislike the other. There are always evils the young need to be warned against. And they should not only be forbidden, but their true nature should be pointed out. The snares and pitfalls which beset the young people along the path of life must be pointed out to them, and their consequences so portrayed that the young will recoil from them.

"The good and true must not only be urged upon the young but their profitableness made so apparent, and their beauty so attractive, that they will want to achieve them, not as a matter of dull duty, but of eager desire. And the view the children get of these things early in life, the atmosphere they breathe in the home-life, the things their parents love and desire, will be a decisive factor in influencing the choice of the child."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

THE 1929 CONVENTION AT KESWICK, ENGLAND

Written for The Sunday School Times By E. L. Langston, D. D.

Church of England Clergyman of Wimbledon, England.

It was a sermon preached by Evan Hopkins in 1874 that had much to do with the beginning of the Keswick conventions. Canon Battersby, a Keswick pastor, heard that sermon and his life was transformed. A year later he called together a group at Keswick where he and others unfolded the victorious life. God set His seal upon that meeting, and now the fifty-fourth convention has just closed. The story of this latest and blessed conference is here told by one who has been connected with the movement for twenty years.

THE Fifty-fourth Keswick Convention was held at Keswick, England, July 13 to 21, and eternity only will reveal what these annual gatherings have meant to the whole Church of God at home and overseas. The inception of the Convention Movement was really an outcome of the great revivals that spread throughout America and Great Britain between 1850 and 1860, when hundreds of thousands were swept into the Church of God. Following this remarkable movement of the Spirit of God there came a great desire in Great Britain for a deeper spiritual life and a more permanent experience of Scriptural holiness. In 1874 the Rt. Hon. W. Cowper-Temple called together some hundreds of persons at his residence, Broadlands Park, to consider the question of both deepening all their own spiritual lives and a new and deeper movement of the Spirit of God in the churches. In a wonderful way the Spirit of God brooded over these gatherings, bringing them into harmony and unity, with a result that a few months later a convention was called at Oxford.

After Oxford came Brighton. Both these conventions were epoch-making; for arising out of them, there came forth teachers who had experienced in a new way the ministry and function of God the Holy Spirit. So the glorious message of victory over indwelling sin was heralded forth. On the Friday evening of the Oxford Convention, the Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, M. A., preached a powerful sermon upon the possibility of living a life here and now day by day, realizing fellowship with God the Father and with His Son, Jesus Christ. Many entered into great and lasting blessing, among whom was the Rev. Canon Battersby, the incumbent of St. John's Keswick, who at that service entered into an entirely new spiritual experience which transformed his life, ministry, and personality. So great was the blessing upon his own soul that (fifty-four years ago) he called together at Keswick a crowd of kindred souls where he and others unfolded "the life victorious".

What the Keswick Movement Stands For.

From the very first God set His seal upon the gatherings at Keswick. Who could tell the story of the past fifty-four years? Only God Himself knows of the hundreds and of the thousands who have met with Him day by day on the hills around the lake or in the secluded valleys or upon the shores of the lake! What confessions! What renunciation! What whole-hearted consecration to missionary service! Possibly no place in the British Isles has seen such marvelous outbursts of spiritual power as in the little lake town of Keswick.

What is the secret of this success? The Keswick movement stands for holiness of soul and of life. It is true it has had to face serious criticism, opposition, and almost persecution on the part of the churches; but no longer is there the same opposition that its founders had to encounter. One of the most remarkable features of the convention is that when we are gathered together before God it is comparatively unimportant to any of us to think of what part of the Christian Church we belong to. On the platform are Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, Plymouth Brethren, Quakers, and the like. The motto of the convention is "All One in Christ Jesus". Keswick is not the place to discuss the differences that pertain among the followers of our Lord. Another one of the outstanding features of the Keswick Convention is the very careful observance of the successive steps in the Christian life. As a rule it is generally taken for granted that those who attend the convention have been through the experience of regeneration, justification, and assurance. Though it has often been discovered as a result of the searching light of the addresses and of the after-meetings, that these initial steps had yet to be taken. The addresses each day follow a precise order; on Monday, "The Sins of the Christian"; on Tuesday, "The Need of Heart Cleansing"; on Wednesday, "Consecration"; on Thursday, "The Fullness of the Holy Spirit"; and on Friday, "Service". The one and great object of the speakers is to bring their hearers into the living experience of the life victorious. The charge of teaching sinless perfection has been constantly leveled against the Keswick platform. But this arises from the want of understanding on the part of those who criticize.

The late Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer very definitely in a little pamphlet makes the following statement:

"It is important, in this connection, to emphasize the fact that the teaching of conventions on the Keswick model, abstains from using the phrase 'the death of self'. When we come to the cross for sanctification, as we came once for justification we do not say that 'self' has ceased to exist, or that we are forever delivered from its tyranny and fret; but that we have died to it, which is a very different matter. In the purpose of God we have been crucified with Christ, and may account ourselves free from the thraldom and dominion of the Ego-principle; but as a matter of daily experience, we reckon ourselves dead to it. We become sensible—may I say, extremely so—of the protests of the self-principle, but we instantly reckon that they resemble the appeal of a divorced husband or wife, to whose suggestions we cannot for a moment give heed. The Ego is not dead but we reckon ourselves dead to it."

If one were asked what contribution this teaching has made to the content of our most Holy Faith, not inventing anything new, but excavating the treasures of redemption for general use, we might lay emphasis on the following:

1. The surrender of the will, involving consecration.
2. The reception of the fullness of the Spirit by faith.
3. The deliverance from the power of known sin.
4. A closer identification with our Lord in death and resurrection.
5. A deeper understanding of, and consecration to, the missionary obligations of the Church.
6. All denominational distinction and divisions vanish where the spirit of this blessed movement comes. The motto over the tent is no mere platitude, we are indeed "All One in Christ Jesus". The hurdles that pen different sections of the flock are broken down, and the one flock feeds together upon the mountain pastures under the one Shepherd.

Possibly in no year since the inception of the Keswick Convention have we lost so many leading speakers. They are the Rev. F. B. Meyer, D. D.; the Rev. C. Inwood, D. D.; the Rt. Rev. Harrington C. Lees, D. D., Archbishop of Melbourne; Mr. Albert Head, for so long the chairman of both the Trustees and the Council; and the Rev. Gordon Watt. All these men were sorely missed this year: but we have realized in a truly wonderful manner that He who called Keswick into being fifty-four years ago was presiding over us at all our sessions.

On Saturday evening, July 13, we were surprised to see on the opening night the huge tent crowded to its utmost capacity with somewhere about four thousand people eager and hungry to meet with God in a new way.

Notable Features This Year.

We shall never forget the volume of sound that arose from four thousand voices as we sang in the opening hymn, to the tune of "The Old Hundredth":

All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with fear, His praise forth tell,
Come ye before Him and rejoice.

Dr. Graham Scroggie was the Lord's messenger. From the very first the power of God was upon us, and hearts were searched, as with unusual fervor, he stressed the need on the part of us all for a deeper experience of the life more abundant, producing joy in the heart, victory in the life, and power in service.

Certain special features were noticeable this year:

1. At all the services this year, the singing of the choruses and hymns has been remarkable. We seem to have been given a new fervor in singing, which has greatly helped the atmosphere of the gatherings.

2. Never as far as I remember (and my experience now is for over twenty years) have we seen so many young men and young women, all keen and earnest, hungry to be the "best for God". To look down from the platform upon their faces was a real inspiration.

Evidently, the good old-fashioned Gospel, preached in the old-fashioned way, relying upon the old-fashioned and yet ever up-to-date Bible, has a wonderful appeal to young life.

3. Dr. Graham Scroggie did an unusual thing this year. Instead of giving four Bible Readings as is the custom, he gave us four remarkably fine expositions upon the Apostles' Creed. That he was wise in so doing we now fully realize. Ours is a day when we are hearing a great deal from modern scholars upon the necessity for reconstruction, readjustment in the realm of theology and religion. This most valuable exposition is to be printed in book form with a special iintroduction. It is just the things that we who call ourselves conservative are wanting. It is scholarly, crisp, and concise, and, what is best of all, practical.

4. It is the custom every evening to hold a monster open-air meeting in the Market Place where nearly two thousand people gather night after night. This meeting is attended not only by convention people, but also by the inhabitants of Keswick and others staying at the different hotels who are visiting the lake district.

These meetings were conducted by either the Rev. E. L. Langston or the Rev. H. Earnshaw Smith. The Rev. Dr. John McNeill and W. Nicholson, the great revivalists, spoke often. However, it was not only the great speakers who moved the audience, but the three-minute testimonies, sometimes very stammering, from young men, under-graduates from Cambridge. Oxford, and Edinburgh: young sailors and soldiers from his Majesty's forces; officers from the navy, army, and air force. Night after night souls were saved and wonderfully blessed.

5. Night after night, individuals came one by one for personal talks to several of the speakers, and as a result burdens were lifted and souls were set free and made happy in their Lord. The great feature of Keswick is the missionary meeting on Friday morning when literally hundreds of young lives are laid at the Master's feet for service at home or overseas.

The Missionary and Communion Services.

The thought of this year's convention will ever cause a host of hallowed and very happy memories to crowd back upon the mind of those who were privileged to be present. This has been a great convention and many of the old time convention-goers have said, "One of the best that has ever been held". Names and human praise are out of place, when looking back upon the past ten days of hallowed memory, for all of us experienced in a wonderful way the presence of God Himself overshadowing and overruling everything. All through the week at meeting after meeting and in our social converse the one with the other we were always conscious of the Lord Jesus Himself in our midst. There stand out two meetings, however, that overpower all the rest, namely, the morning missionary meeting and the evening united Communion service.

On the Friday morning there were gathered together between the hours of ten and twelve-thirty four thousand people to listen to representatives of the missionary work oversea who told their overwhelming and challenging stories. Quietly, unemotionally, but with overwhelming conviction, while they were speaking, there came home to every heart afresh the great world task entrusted to us by the Master, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20: 21). At the end of this magnificent meeting the Rev. J. Macbeath made an appeal to the young life present to lay themselves at the Master's feet and to go whither He would send them. It was an inspiring sight to see a gallant band of young men and women, numbering some three hundred, who there and then openly confessed at any cost to give themselves to this great task of world evangelization.

The other outstanding gathering was that of the Holy Communion service at the end of the missionary day. As last year this service will never fade from the memory of any of those present. During the past week those who gathered around the Lord's Table had either come under conviction of sin, or had consecrated themselves afresh, or had waited upon God for the fullness of the Holy Ghost. All had been wonderfully blessed; now they were gathered around the Table of the Lord to remember Calvary. Literally they were "al lone in Christ Jesus" and met together "of one mind, and of one heart".

Again as last year the Lord drew very near so wonderfully that that which happened is almost indescribable. Any attempt to make that scene live causes us to realize the poverty of language. The great crowd of worshippers thronged the precincts long before the entrances were opened. There was quietness over the waiting worshippers and an expectancy of unusual blessing, and some with the touch of true spiritual understanding, while waiting, began to sing the well-known Communion hymn, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is", and in this way an atmosphere was created, that prepared the way for the blessing that was about to come. The table was set in front of the platform and behind it sat Dr. J. Stuart Holden, who conducted the service, with four helpers, one a clergyman of the Church of England, a Free Churchman, an evangelist, and a layman. On either side in two groups there were some forty brethren who were set apart to distribute the bread and wine, and it would be difficult to imagine a more representative body. It was comprised of ministers and laymen of almost every branch of the Church. Very simply and in the closest obedience to our Lord's example as recorded in the Gospels, the service proceeded. Praise and prayer were offered, and in a stillness that might be felt and without the slightest confusion the distribution of the bread and wine was made. At the end of this unforgettable service everybody sang the hymn, "My Jesus, I Love Thee, I Know Thou Art Mine". Nothing can describe the thrill that went through the crowd of worshippers while that hymn was sung. Silently and under the spell of holy awe, the great crowd dispersed and made its way homeward. Possibly never since the institution of the Lord's Supper nineteen hundred years ago was there such a memorable gathering as this. Surely it was a foretaste of joys that are yet to be when the true Church of God unites around the Throne of God in Heaven.

The praise meeting on the Saturday morning revealed what God had been doing in the lives of those that attended. It was a more than usually impressive hour; no record could possibly be given of the hundreds of testimonies that were uttered in tones of gladness, joy, and triumph by young and old alike. That many had entered upon an experience of great blessing was made evident at this closing meeting. We look with anticipation as a result of this year's Keswick to a great spiritual movement both at home and overseas. Is it the earnest of coming revival?

The nearest approach in this country to the teaching and blessing of the Keswick Convention is to be found in the Victorious Life Conferences at Keswick Grove, New Jersey, and the Christian Life Conference at Eliada, near Asheville, North Carolina. The latter is under the direction of the Columbia Bible School, Columbia, South Carolina, with the Rev. R. C. McQuilkin as director. (See back cover page, this issue.) Why should not our beloved Church in this country have the same interest as in England and share in the Water of Life which flows so freely? Those interested please drop a card to the Rev. Wm. J. Gordon, Spray, North Carolina.

STRIFE IN THE HOLY LAND.

The effects of the anti-Jewish riots in Palestine will be felt far beyond its borders. The extent of the harm done there could hardly be determined when this was written. The Jewish suburbs of Jerusalem had been pillaged and burned, the rabbinical college at Hebron had been attacked and outlying Jewish colonies had been raided—all to the accompaniment of a steadily mounting death toll, which included nearly a score of Americans, most of them students. What additional tragedies the world may read when all the facts become known can only be a matter of conjecture. The speedy despatch of British troops from Egypt and Malta at first permitted the hope that the crisis was over, but later reports seemed to indicate that what began among the Moslems as an anti-Jewish demonstration at its minimum is grave enough to prompt a deliberate challenge of the way in which Great Britain has administered the mandate over Palestine. It has been a peculiarly difficult task, unquestionably. The Zionist experiment has juxtaposed within the intimate geographical confines of Palestine two races, two religions, two cultures, whose profound self-consciousness and separateness were already deeply and sombrely engraved in history. But the very nature of the difficulty should have produced special safeguards. The very fact that clashes of a bitter and bloody sort were almost inevitable should have elicited a clear and decisive policy which would have made them impossible. The government responsible for peace in Palestine should never have withdrawn the garrison from that country; and it should have long ago defined and defended the right of the Jews to worship in their immemorial holy places.

Under the present arrangement, this right is, as it were, half admitted. The Moslems own "legally and absolutely" the site of the famous remnant of Solomon's Temple which is the centre of the controversy; the Jews have permission to resort thither for worship under conditions of restriction against which they have always protested. Inevitably, they have striven to enlarge their claims. Inevitably, the Moslem counter-claims are pressed, and exasperate—as lately, when the Moslem Supreme Council received permission to build so near the sacred Wall that to the devout Jew the action constituted a desecration. Such a compromise is clearly more mischievous than the most positive decision would be; and since a positive decision is the indicated alternative here, there can be no doubt that it should be given for the Jew. His right in the holy places is anterior to the Moslem's in history; and, speaking as Christians, we hold that his right is spiritually superior, as well. We have no wish to deny that certain sections among the Palestine Jews have supplied their share of provocation in the present feud. For the Zionist Fascisti to stage a nationalist demonstration before the house of the Grand Mufti in Jerusalem, as the correspondent of the New York World alleges them to have done, was a piece of incredibly childish folly. Zionist leaders deny the story, in so far as it charges the nationalist section with "Fascist" tactics, but the demonstration is not denied. Meanwhile, with the killing of American nationals made the subject of a formal note of expectation from our government to Great Britain; with Britain's own Labor party (which a year ago bitterly protested an almost parallel action of the Conservatives in China) ordering every engine of force immediately available to the scene of the conflict—the world is listening to a grim sequel to the talk of universal disarmament.—The Commonweal.

THE "MURDER" OF CHRIST.

To the Editor of The Globe: With your permission, I desire to point out that the "murder" of Christ, as such, had nothing to do with His Atonement for sin. Neither the Jews, who delivered Him up, nor the Gentiles, who crucified Him, had the slightest idea of offering Christ as a sacrifice for the sin of the world.

It is most important to remember the absolute freedom of Christ throughout the appalling tragedy. He Himself definitely declared that freedom before He died. "Therefore doth the Father love Me," He says, "because I lay down My life that I may take it again. No one taketh it away from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment received I from My Father" (St. John 10: 17-18, R. V.).

As sinless, death had no claim on Christ, for death is the penalty of sin. He was free from sin, and therefore free from death. All the legions of Rome could not have crucified Him, had He not freely surrendered Himself. It was love—love that passeth knowledge—love for His Father and for us, thot led Him victoriously through Gethsemane and Calvary. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews sums it up majestically, when he says:

"If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the Blood of Christ, Who through the eternal spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Hebrews 9:13-14). No human hand offered Him in sacrifice. "He offered Himself without spot to God." The Atonement is the only rational explanation of the crucifixion of the sinless Redeemer. "Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Why should any sinner reject the Atoning Saviour?

G. Osborne Troop.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by J. W. Ware, Orange, Va.:

> For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face. Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—1 Cor. 13:12.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

Book Reviews

CHRIST AND MODERN EDUCATION: By Charles E. Raven, D. D. Cloth. Pp. 223. Published by Henry Holt & Company, New York City. Price, $1.75.

This volume has grown out of the addresses given by the author at the Jerusalem Council in 1928. Differing views of that missionary gathering are maintained. But the gist of thought is that it was a legitimate outgrowth of the war and called for the recognition of the unity of forces which before the great conflict had worked in isolation.

Dr. Raven seized upon this recognition of the need of correlation and threw into his subject of Christian Education the emphasis which it supplied. It is pitiable that he had to begin his work by pointing out the failures of former methods. Were the methods so much at fault as the manner by which they were interpreted? True, incompetent teachers would embarrass rather than enlighten their pupils by an unwise presentation of Scriptural truth. We do know that many wonderful lives were generated under those now questioned former methods. And that is why we may doubt the wholesale rejection of them.

Still, Dr. Raven does show us a clear and definite way to capture the adolescent mind for the Lord in his, "The Place of Religious Education", "The Content of Religious Education," "The Method and the Scope of Religious Education." Of one thing we may be sure: Education of any kind demands dedicated tutorship. Of the men and women who have been lustrous in the past, all would witness to the fact of being led into truth by dedicated Christians who lived the life they professed to teach. And modern religious education will fail signally if it is but the framework of a system of teaching which is not vivified by personal experience of fellowship with the Lord Jesus.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE SCOFIELD REFERENCE BIBLE WITH CYCLOPEDIA DICTIONARY. Preface to the Present Edition. Oxford University Press. Price, $8.

The very large demand for the Scofield Reference Bible in every part of the world, and the consequent large and repeated printings, have made it necessary to reset the entire Bible in new type that the high standard of the Oxford University Press may be maintained, and the public furnished with this Bible in the highest form of the printer's art. To the attainment of this high purpose no labor of Editor or publishers has been counted too great.

The Scofield Reference Bible has now been nearly eight years in the hands of the Christian public. The editor would be more, or less, than human if he were not profoundly grateful, not only, nor chiefly, for the large sale accorded to it, but rather for the assurances which have reached him from every part of the earth of blessing through its use.

That this testimony has come in part from great Biblical scholars has been most gratifying, but it has been an especial cause of gratitude to know that the plain people of God in their homes, and far away missionaries in heathen lands have been helped to a clearer and more spiritual apprehension of the Word of God.

But the very warmth of this welcome given to his labors has made the Editor solicitous that in any new typing of it he might find his opportunity to add, here and there, such further help as experience has shown to be desirable. This he has endeavored here to do. The Panoramic View of the whole Bible will, it is believed, show the unity of the Book—a fact in danger of failing to be perceived in face of the other and more evident fact that it is made up of many books.

Chronological data have also been supplied; and, on the mechanical side, more distinct type; larger type in the reference columns; and the substitution of Arabic for Roman numerals will be noted as distinct improvements.

The Editor is especially grateful to the many eminent and spiritually-minded brethren who have aided him by suggestions and counsel, and to those whose most Christian liberality has made such a work possible. He is sure that they, not less emphatically than himself, in again putting forth this testimony to Him whom having not seen we love, will say: "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me."

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

Mr. Editor:

In response to your appeal for the deficit in Alaska, I am enclosing check for $50.00 to join hands with The Southern Churchman in enabling Bishop Rowe to restore the cut, which he found necessary to make, in the salaries of his faithful co-workers, both men and women. Let us all earnestly pray that our Heavenly Father will put it into the hearts and minds of all His professed followers, not only to supply the full amount of this deficit, but to give so liberally and generously in the future that there will be no repetition of this unwholesome, anaemic and unnecessary condition of our Church's finances.

I have been a constant reader of The Southern Churchman all my life and have always enjoyed the wholesome, moral and spiritual atmosphere it brought into our home, and I desire to congratulate you upon its present deeply spiritual tone, and its strong, true evangelical stand, as regards the teaching of our Protestant Church, the Inspiration of the Bible, and the Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

I trust you may be long spared to continue this splendid work in which you are engaged.

With kind regards and personal esteem, I am,

John D. Letcher.

Lexington, Va.

Mr. Editor:

Please excuse my sending this check to you instead of Bishop Tucker, but I want to thank you for all your editorials and all the good in your paper. I don't know who sends it to me, and thank them for it.

I love my dear old Church and am distressed to see it drifting to Rome. I shall cling to my old Prayer Book and have requested dear old Methodist brethren to read the Burial Service over me when I pass away. I don't want any mass said over me.

Mrs. Lucy M. Barrett.

Pedlar Mills, Va.

Mr. Editor:

I enclose money order for $3.00 in payment of subscription as per the accompanying bill received today. I am a little surprised to get this notice, as I generally renew my subscription during the first week of September, without a notice. I've read the Churchman since I was a small child, as it has been a regular visitor in the family almost since its first numbers. Perhaps that education is one reason I am so heartily in sympathy with its Prayer Book Evangelical Churchmanship.

Hoping it will continue to "fight the good fight" until the victory is ours, I am,

Miss Charlotte J. Dennis.

Mr. Editor:

Could not live without your Southern Churchman.

Lookout Mountain, Tenn. W. J. Dodge.

Mr. Editor:

My aunt, the late Mrs. A. B. Galloway, was a subscriber to The Southern Churchman for over sixty years. I have always made my home with my aunt, and in this way have learned to love and appreciate your valuable paper.

While I am not an Episcopalian, I wish the Churchman to always be in my home, and I shall continue taking it.

I wish to mention the strong article in August 24 issue, "Whither Are We Drifting?" The Southern Churchman is undoubtedly the grandest Church paper I have ever read, and it is one of the big factors in my devotional life.

With best wishes for you in your work,

Mrs. Hardin Graham.

Elkins, N. C.

Mr. Editor:

The enclosed account of our moving our mission work, workers and buildings by raft down the Yukon River, 180 miles to Tanana, may be interesting to you. I am writing to ask you to change my address from Lanara, Alaska, to Tanana, Alaska, and spell Harriet with one "t".

We all enjoy The Southern Churchman more than we can say—its spiritual tone, news of the Church, and helpful reading matter.

May I ask who is sending it to us. Thanking you, I am,

Harriet M. Bedell, Deaconess in Charge.

Rowe Hall, Mission of Our Saviour,
Tanana, Alaska, August 5. 1929.

Bishop Rowe visited us in June with the Ven. L. F. Kent, the new Archdeacon. They planned to come on the steamboat from Fort Yukon and have Mr. Nicholson come up from Nanana in the Pelican to meet them at Stephen's Village. Mr. Nicholson moved the hospital in Fort Yukon, built the new school in Nanana, and is now putting the other mission buildings in good condition. On Saturday, June 16, the Pelican arrived. The crew consisted of natives—Moses John, Jimmie Bruce, and three boys from the Nanana School. Miss Blacknall and Miss Helm, missionaries from Nanana, were also aboard. They had taken this opportunity for a little trip up the Yukon River.

The Bishop and Archdeacon came on Tuesday on the steamboat, which brought our winter supplies. Greeting the Bishop, seeing some Church people, who were tourists, and looking after freight, etc., kept us busy.

Stephen's Village is very isolated, especially in winter—no mail, etc., after the steamboats stop running. The Bishop or Archdeacon, in making their annual visits, had to break trail for ninety miles to get to us and eighty-five miles to the nearest town in going away. This is hard work, especially when the thermometer is around fifty degrees below zero. It is necessary to go ahead of the dogs wearing snowshoes to make a trail, as the dogs cannot go through very deep snow.

Each year found fewer and fewer people. As the old natives passed away, the young people married from other places and went where they could do better for their families. Game is getting more and more scarce. It is impossible for two outfits to be maintained, one for the hunting camp and one for the village, so the children could go to school.

A friend of the Alaskan work made possible a new wing to our cabin; others gave the roofing and floor and furnishings. The Memorial Fund enabled us to plan to take six children who would not have had opportunities for school. Eleven were taken between four and twelve years of age. This proved too much for one to do, and it was impossible to get the help we needed. The children could do a little but they had to learn new ways of doing work. I tried having school in the afternoon, leaving the morning for Industrial Teaching. This plan, too, was not satisfactory. There is no doctor nearer than Fort Yukon, 160 miles from us, and it did not seem wise to be responsible for children under these unfavorable conditions.

All this was talked over with the Bishop and he decided to make the venture of moving the work and buildings of Stephen's Village to Tanana, a white town 185 miles down the Yukon River. Here the Tanana River empties into the Yukon, thus making it an important distributing point for the North. Three miles from here is the Indian or Native village, where the Mission is located.

There is a government hospital in Tanana and the Mission hospital building is not being used as such. The Bishop was willing to use it for the work that was started in Stephen's Village , but as there is no appropriation for this new venture, he said that we could take only as many children as the Memorial Fund would support. The children that live in Stephen's Village will still have school privileges here in Tanana and under better conditions.

Soon the steamboat brought a letter from the Bishop "to pack up". That Mr. Nicholson and crew of men would be up in about two weeks. Such busy days! One never realized that there is so much to pack until the boxes begin to fill up one by one.

Three o'clock in the morning on July 9, the Pelican was back to the village. Such efficiency! In a short time the buildings were down and in a raft ready to be pushed down the river. A second trip was necessary, and in six days they were back again.

As the mission cabin went down, log by log, a feeling of sadness came over me. It had been my home for ten years; girls under my care had begun new lives there; and the people in the village found it a haven when the storms of life beat hard upon them. But sentiment must be put aside and the future of the natives thought of.

This means work among the children and in Tanana more effective work may be done.

July 24 found us going down the Yukon with the last load. On account of there being so many tourists, I could not get passage on the steamboat, so Mr. Nicholson had a tent put on the raft for me. I enjoyed it all so much. The river winds through the country like a snake and the scenery was beautiful, relieved by here and there a fine camp, a porcupine in a tree, or a bear on the side of a hill.

You are our partners in this work. Without you we could not do it. With the fund, the building, and the workers we hope, with God's help to train the children under our care to be faithful soldiers and servants of Christ.

Henry Moses, our Lay Reader and Interpreter in Stephen's Village, is still to be on the staff here as Interpreter and Lay Reader.

Will you join us in our prayer that God will use us and bless your gifts in training these native boys and girls to be examples of Christian living among their people?

Mr. Editor:

Many thanks for your letter of August 26, with enclosures.

I always enjoy everything you write; and I have not yet seen you come off second best.

What in the world came over the Richmond Times-Dispatch recently, when it said in an editorial that if a minister did not believe in the creed of his Church, he ought, in common honesty, to get out of the Church? Admirable statement, but why does the Times-Dispatch continually exploit men like ———— and that little fellow from Richmond, now in New York, who seems to have no definite belief in anything, ————.

With high regards and best wishes,

College President.

Church Intelligence

Church-Going Among Dairy Farmers.

The results of a religious survey of nearly two hundred dairy farmers in McHenry County, on the northern boundary of Illinois, have been summarized in Rural America. The two hundred are about one-tenth the total number of farmers in the county.

Their church preferences were: Lutheran, 66; Catholic (Roman), 50; Methodist, 35; Baptist, 12; Congregational, 8; Universalist, 1; none, 20.

It may be a coincidence that 51 per cent said they had not been called on by any minister for a year, and 51 per cent said they were too busy to go to church. Only 15 per cent had been visited more than twice in a year; 34 per cent are reported as "strong for the church"; 57 per cent listen to radio services.

At least thirty-four different reasons were given for not going to church, none of them good reasons, at least at their face value. No doubt circumstances really do make church-going impossible in some cases. One man said he would sooner shoot rabbits. Better excuses were that "services come at inconvenient hours," "motorists come to buy produce," "don't feel at home in the village church."

The Episcopal Church, according to the Living Church Annual, has only one parish and two missions in the county.

Letter From the Flying Nurse.

The first letter has come from Miss Margaret Foster, the nurse who left home and work in Colorado at a moment's notice to answer an emergency call from the Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, and flew in on a plane from Fairbanks to save many weeks of waiting for the first boat when the ice broke up. They "flew over snow-covered mountains along the river valley, all in the beautiful sunshine"—it sounds like a Hans Andersen fairy tale.

"When I landed my feet on the ice of the river, the first thing that I saw was a huge crack in the ice near the bank, and I could but wonder how I was to cross it, but not for long. Dr. Burke was close by and in spite of my pounds he picked me up like a sack of corn and landed me safely over. All along the bank were gathered both natives and white people to bid me welcome. Off in the green tree tops I saw the cross and bell tower of our dear little church, glistening in the sunshine to strengthen my faith and give me courage.

"I was most happily surprised to find such a splendid, well-equipped little hospital so far away from the outside world. In spite of the fact that only one nurse was on duty, it was spotless and running on very smoothly. The fifteen patients were happy and content. . . . Of course, our needs are many, and first on the list is more room, more equipment to replace what wears out, and new to make the work easier and the hospital able to render better service.

"To you who labor for this work outside, I can only say, go on with new courage each day, for the work is growing, and I know if more were known about it, more funds would come in to keep it going. I am pleased that I could answer the call when it came, for it has been in my heart for many years to do this work."

Bishop Rowe spent the last week of July at Fort Yukon and reports everything in satisfactory condition. The Hudson Stuck Hospital was more than full, with an overflow of patients in tents. Dr. Burke is successfully grafting skin on the head of the little three-year-old Indian girl who was so badly mauled and bitten by dogs. Another patient was a man who had come two hundred and fifty miles from Eagle, almost hopelessly scalded. The Bishop felt profound respect for the nurses as he watched them dressing the fearful wounds. The yards and yards of bandages required would prove to supply departments the value of their efforts.

The Bishop says that the many tourists who visit Fort Yukon are deeply impressed with the greatness of the work. It dispels criticism of missions and inspires missionary interest.

Athens.

The Rev. Dr. C. C. Edmunds, of the General Theological Seminary, visiting Greece, writes in St. Margaret's Quarterly:

"Whatever may have been the case in the sad days of Turkish domination in Greece, the present training given candidates for Orders and the intellectual requirements for ordination are well up to our own standards. We certainly discovered nothing lacking, either in the native ability or in the acquired learning of the higher ecclesiastics. It was also noticeable that laymen of real scholarship and deep devotion are making large contribution to the Church life. . . .

"I talked to the three hundred theological students of the University of Athens, and tried to answer their intelligent questions. I visited also a sort of high school for young men looking forward to Orders, of about one hundred students. Altogether I was much impressed with the vigorous life of the Church. There are practically no dissenters—only three hundred Protestants and a very small number of Roman Catholics, mostly from the islands under Roman Catholic rule."

"The Coast Guard has just celebrated its one hundred and thirty-ninth birthday," says the Seamen's Church Institute of Newport, "and the record of that many years of useful and heroic work, which as far as this world is concerned, has been unhonored and unsung. We try to serve in many practical ways men in this organization and we have a great respect for their fine character and good seamanship."

What We Should Advertise.

"In common humanity we could not send them away," says a report from St. Luke's Hospital, Phoenix, Arizona, of some of its neediest patients. The medical director, Dr. E. W. Phillips, quite as much interested in the prevention of tuberculosis as in its cure, and trouble by the number of cases he sees which care and education could have prevented or arrested, includes some general advice in his brief report. He says in part:

"While the rising standard of living has nearly abolished undernourishment, a great number of people, especially the young, are working and playing harder than ever before. They never rest. They produce in the aggregate much wealth, and what they earn they spend, often before they get it. They have no economic surplus and no physical reserve. It is from this large group that tuberculosis selects most of its victims.

"They are accustomed to having their thinking done for them; they are governed in their lives and thoughts by publicity, of one sort or another, and if we are to protect them against tuberculosis we shall have to keep on advertising it to them, like cigarettes or motor cars. . . . .

"The early cases are easily repaired; the moderately advanced have an excellent chance. . . . All doctors know these things, but in the press of other work some fail to use their knowledge. Therefore it is desirable that laymen be continually reminded . . ."

Items—Here and There.

The Church Hospital in Zamboanga, Philippine Islands, has been officially renamed Brent Hospital, to honor the memory of the Bishop who founded it in 1914. It was the first hospital to be established for the civilian population in Zamboanga. There is now a Government Hospital also. Brent Hospital is in charge of a young Filipino surgeon, Dr. J. C. Trota, trained in the United States and experienced in the treatment of tropical diseases. The nursing staff, under Mrs. Ruth T. Garrett, consists of six nurses, all trained at St. Luke's Hospital, Manila. During a single month not long ago, the patients included Filipinos, Chinese, Americans, Moros, Japanese, Armenians and Spaniards.

California Churchmen are too modest. Not in any Church paper have we seen the news that Dr. Miriam Van Waters, of Los Angeles, a Churchwoman, daughter of one of our clergy, and a member of the Los Angeles Diocesan Social Service Department, was elected President of the great National Conference of Social Work, at its San Francisco meeting. The next meeting, the fifty-seventh, over which she will preside, takes place in Boston, June 8-14, 1930. Dr. Van Waters is referee in the Los Angeles Juvenile Court.

Starting rural work with 120 families a year ago, Deaconess Peppers, in the Diocese of Olympia, added 157 more families during the year. She has just recently started on a trip to cover twenty towns, which she had not yet visited. On her last trip she found eight children to be baptized as soon as a clergyman's visit could be arranged. These families are shut off, with no roads available except by using a ferry. For one family to attend church once would cost five dollars.

Zeppelins may come and go, but there are still missionaries in China thirty-five days from the nearest railroad. A letter from the Rev. George K. Harris, of the China Inland Mission, stationed at Sining, in the Province of Kansu, took just nine weeks to reach New York. Mr. Harris is one of the comparatively few missionaries in China working among Moslems. He writes: "We should appreciate your prayer interest on behalf of the Moslems of China. They are as needy as the Moslems in any land, and while a little more accessible are more neglected, owing to the difficulties of presenting the Gospel to them."

A gorgeous poster used in his work, in Arabic and Chinese, has been attracting attention in the Fourth Avenue window of the Church Missions House in New York. It has four broad bands, of black, red, white and gold, representing sin, redemption, purity, and glory, with inscriptions, highly mysterious to most New York, in the beautiful Arabic and Chinese characters.

The whole population of the entire world could be divided into families of five and each family given a half-acre lot in Texas. If you have a passion for arithmetic—the World Almanac gives the area of Texas as 265,896 square miles; 640 acres equal one square mile; the figures accepted in 1927 by the Secretariat of the League of Nations for the population of the world is 1,906,000,000. (In passing, all but 17 per cent of these are nationals of countries belonging to the League.) The calculation leaves a mere 40,000,000 to be accommodated in some neighboring state.

The Prime Minister of Canada is quoted in a European paper: "The United States is our nearest neighbor, our only neighbor on the Continent of America. France is our nearest neighbor on the Continent of Europe. Japan is our nearest neighbor on the Continent of Asia. We hold immediate relations, and relations ever increasing in importance, with each of these countries. Surrounded as we are on three sides by great Powers, our frontiers are completely exposed. In friendship and good will more than in ought else lies our security."

They are celebrating in Siam this year the coming of the first missionaries, in 1829, Messrs. Tomlin and Gutzlyaff, of the London Missionary Society. They were compelled to leave before long, on account of sickness, but they had in the meantime interested the American Board (Congregational) in entering the field. A number of societies now have work there.

The S. P. G. reports that the Diocese of Ceylon has become so far self-supporting that no further grants will be requested from the general funds of the S. P. G. The Society began work there in 1830.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was to sail on a Japanese liner from Marseilles in July, according to an Associated Press report, for a tour of the Far East. "She was to be accompanied by her cousin, Dr. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital, and Mrs. Teusler."

For those who are keen about problems in Haiti, there is an article by Dr. Millspaugh, recently the American financial adviser in Haiti, in Foreign Affairs for July, if that distinguished and expensive quarterly is in your library. It is a discussion of economic and educational matters, especially in relation to American participation.

Twenty airplanes have been ordered by the Aviation Corporation of the Philippines, says The Associated Press, for a passenger, mail and freight service to be started in November between various Philippine Island points.

Conversation with a chauffeur in Honolulu, reported by Mrs. Ellis, of Quincy:

"Jo, you aren't true Hawaiian, are you?"

"Oh, no; my father was part German and part Portuguese, and my mother was part Hawaiian and part Chinese."

"Well, Jo, what are you?"

"Me? I'm an American!"

Charming conversational map of Hawaii in the weekly paper, "Time", for July 8. Office, 350 East Twenty-Second Street, Chicago. Fifteen cents.

Some figures from Hilda's School, Wuchang, for last year, showed that two-thirds of the girls were Christians. Of the non-Christians, four claimed Buddhism, one Taoism, two Confucianism, and forty-four no religion.

In Santurce, San Juan, Porto Rico, on St. John the Baptist's Day, they laid the cornerstone of the new Church of St. John the Baptist, which is to form part of the new group of four institutions. (See The Spirit of Missions for August, 1928.) The Governor of Porto Rico and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court were speakers at the ceremony, in addition to Bishop Colmore and the Rev. Kenneth O. Miller, rector.

"You are the first person I have ever envied. You have a real job," said a man to Bishop Bennett, after the Bishop had been telling the story of the Church's Indian work in the Diocese of Duluth.

News From Borneo.

The Diocese of Labuan and Sarawak comprises the northwestern side of the Island of Borneo, which is more or less a neighbor of the Philippines, on the road to Mandalay. Sarawak is the country governed by the English Rajahs of the Brooke family. The Borneo people are land Dyaks and sea Dyaks. The diocesan work is carried on by the Borneo Mission Association of England, in connection with the S. P. G. The Bishop is the Rt. Rev. E. D. L. Danson. As in almost every mission field that one can mention, the work is straining at the leash for more workers and more funds.

A gentle old Chinese priest, the Rev. Chung Ah Luk, who died last year, had been connected with the diocese since 1851. All his ordained life was spent among the land Dyaks, with whom he so far identified himself as to forget his own Chinese language. He was ministered to at the time of his death by a priest whom he himself had baptized and whose daughter is head of a mission school.

Two Chinese deacons were ordained to the priesthood last year. The diocese now has ten Asiatic clergy, six Chinese, three Dyak, one Indian.

The Rev. William Howell, now over seventy years of age, has just recently retired after fifty-one years of service among the sea Dyaks. In his work of ministering and teaching, he walked thousands of miles; he erected many mission buildings; for many years he was the only doctor in a wide area, and he is the leading authority on the Dyak language and customs, having helped to compile the sea Dyak Prayer Book and the only sea Dyak dictionary.

Conference at Winslow, Arkansas.

The Federation of Episcopal Young People of the Province of the Southwest had its third annual Summer Conference in July at Winslow, Arkansas, using, as heretofore, the Helen Dunlap School building, devoting twelve days to a program of worship, study, fellowship and service.

Preliminary arrangements were splendidly made by Miss Dorothy M. Fischer of Texas, Executive Secretary for Young People's Work in the Province, who also taught a course on Program Building, and another for Counselors.

Bishop Seaman, of North Texas, taught a course on The Church and the Prayer Life, and was Director of the Conference.

Mrs. E. C. Seaman and the Aev. Bertram Smith, of Dallas, met classes of girls and boys, respectively, to discuss "Adventuring for Christ".

The Rev. H. A. tSowell, Arkansas, and the Rev. Everett Jones, West Texas, gave Bible courses.

From the National Council, the Rev. Richard M. Trelease, whose home is in West Missouri, brought a most winsome and inspiring course on the Church's Program, entitled "Carrying the Colors Forward".

Other administrative officers were Mrs. Fay F. Hope and Miss Julia Harris, both of Arkansas; Miss Lynette Giesecke and Miss Nell Freund, both of Texas.

There was a record and almost capacity attendance of seventy-five.

On one Sunday evening Vespers were held in the large living room of the Mountain Lodge, with an attendance of about two hundred. After the service the young people gave a perfect presentation of the Chinese student pageant, "The Colored Line".

Sunday morning Communion Alms and two other offerings were voted to the Helen Dunlap School for its Scholarship Fund. The school is for mountain girls.

Officers for the Provincial Federation were elected at the annual business meeting and installed at the second Sunday morning service:

President—Sarah Ewart, Kansas.

Vice-President — Almer Childers, Texas.

Secretary—Norwood Hilton, Arkansas.

Treasurer—Alice May Ahrens, Oklahoma.

The Advisory Committee was also elected to serve with Miss Dorothy Fischer, Executive Secretary, as follows: the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, Texas; the Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman, North Texas; the Rev. H. A. Stowell, Arkansas.

Miss Lynette Giesecke, of Texas, was called while at the Conference to be Director of Young People's Work in Christ Church, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Mrs. S. L. K.

Dr. Stetson Would Keep Church Out of Politics.

Participation of the Church in politics is criticized by Dr. Caleb R. Stetson in the year book of Trinity Parish, made public recently.

"The political activities of churches and denominations which has become so strikingly a feature of our national life since the passing of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution is definitely hurting the cause of religion in this country," he said.

"There is a growing resentment on the part of many loyal to religion that churches are used as centers of propaganda for either pacifism or prohibition."

Trinity is the largest Episcopal Parish in Manhattan and "Old Trinity", at Wall Street and Broadway, is its mother church.—Washington Star.

Unfrocking Awaits Dr. Empringham.

New York.—Should Dr. James Empringham return here to face the various charges against him, he will find the Episcopalian Church ready to unfrock him, probably by the medieval rite of bell, book and candle.

In a public letter, which Empringham said he sent to Bishop William Manning of the New York Diocese of the Episcopalian Church, the clergyman asked to be relieved of holy orders, announcing he had lost faith in the Episcopal Gospel fifteen years ago.—From Buffalo Evening News.

The Wailing Wall.

Jews in Jerusalem are suffering a form of persecution, which may seem a small matter to other people, but which is very real to them. It is in connection with what is known as the Wailing Wall. This wall is a part of the foundation wall of the Temple, built by Solomon, and which was not torn down, when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the Temple. Ever since the days of the return from the Captivity in Babylon, the Jews have been accustomed to go to this wall and pray and to weep because their Temple was destroyed. Under the Turkish rule over Palestine the Jews suffered much, but we believe they were never interfered with in their devotions at the Wailing Wall. Recently, although Palestine is now under the protectorate of Great Britain, for some reason, which we cannot understand, the Mohammedans have been allowed to disturb the Jews very much in their devotions. Whether we agree with the Jews in their religion or not, it does seem that they might be protected in their harmless visit to this spot, which to them is the most sacred on earth, and which for 2,500 years has linked them to the glory of their past. There is no claim that they disturb or inconvenience any one. It seems to be just a petty form of persecution on the part of those who do not agree with them in religious matters, and who happen to be in the majority. It does seem like Great Britain should not allow the weak to be oppressed, when under its protection.—The Presbyterian of the South.

Send Books to Alaska.

There is no library in the town of Seward, Alaska, a fact which has led the people of St. Peter's Church, with the missionary, the Rev. William R. Macpherson, to establish one in the basement of the church. It will be much appreciated, especially in the long, dark winter nights. Gifts of good books will be welcome. Mr. Macpherson's address is Box 575, Seward.

The mission has recently succeeded in repairing and renovating both church and rectory, equipping them with electric light and putting chairs in the place of the former rough benches which have served as pews.

Mr. Macpherson's field is Southwestern Alaska, includes Anchorage, where he has services once a month in All Saints' Church, and other small towns to the north, such as Matanuska, where a government experimental farm is located, and Eklutna, an old Indian village where the government maintains an orphanage, and industrial school. Eighty-five children are there now; many had been brought up in the Russian Orthodox Church and are familiar with much of our service. They join in saying the Creed and some of the Prayers. Mr. Macpherson writes: "We request prayers for this work; also for the Church School in Seward."

On the "Firing Line".

How is this for a missionary letter? It comes from the Rev. R. C. Rudgard, written to his college, St. Augustine's, Canterbury, from the Solomon Islands, where "the mails come pretty regularly every eight weeks".

"I am enjoying life out here very much. My main job is on the staff of a school for lads. We have a hundred of them here. They come from the other islands in the group, and school for five years about, and then become teachers. They are a very lovable crowd and keep one on the hop all day long. Besides myself there are another white priest and three native teachers. We have a daily Eucharist voluntarily attended and have an average of about thirty communicants daily. That is a great influence for good I am sure—it seems to bind the place together, for there are hardly ever any rows and quarrels in the school, although the boys come from different islands, many of which have been at continual warfare with each other in the past. On Sundays and festivals we have choral celebrations sung to Merbecke, translated into Mota. All the mornings are spent in work and school and then we have free afternoons. I am in charge of the Ugi District, which contains six villages, and I go round once a month, staying a night in each and taking services, and doctoring sick folk to the best of my ability. That is all very interesting, and one sees something of what native life is really like.

"I get plenty of football and cricket, which is a great thing; it helps to keep one fit. Saturdays I usually go out for the day, fishing, orchid-hunting or buck-shooting. Life is delightfully free and easy—and I just wear shorts and a shirt—anything more is too hot!

"We get our stores twice a year from New Zealand by our ship, "The Southern Cross". Mails come pretty regularly every eight weeks, and we often get small vessels calling in which give us a chance of hearing news and getting letters away.

"I get quite a lot of theological reading done. My colleague is a scholar and keeps me up to scratch. I've just been reading Canon Quick's book on the Sacraments, which I enjoyed."

Another letter from the Solomons, by the Rev. G. E. F. Leggatt, says: "I am given the charge of the islands of Mota, Motalava, Ra, Rowa and the east coast of the large island of Vanualava. These islands are barely distinguishable on the average map, but they are all (and more than) a man can manage. Except little Ra, each island is about ten miles distant from its neighbor, and most of the traveling is done by open whaleboat. . . . Accommodation on these visits is always, of course, a native leaf-house—in the company of rats, fleas, and mosquitoes. But it is surprising how one can get used to such things, and the islands grow on one."

East Central Africa contributes a third letter to St. Augustine's, whose "Occasional Papers" are always a fascinating collection. A young English priest assisting at King's College, Budo, among the Baganda people, writes:

"I am having holidays now after the strenuosity of an exciting term. I left Budo last Friday on the school motor-bike and did eighty miles to my first place of rest. Kako. It was rather exciting from there to here, Mbarara, as the bike is old and liable to stop unaccountably, and I am young and know next to nothing about motor-bikes, and for the last fifty miles of the hundred I was passing through a country stiff with lions! But I never saw one of the brutes. . .

"I wonder if you would ask the Warden sometimes if he would have a remembrance and prayer for Grace, our Headmaster. You know that Budo is an old school, but about three years ago a new scheme was formed of joining another school to it, increasing the building and staff, and making it a big school. This was to be forwarded by the chiefs, who promised much money. Some money came, but it is very slow. We have got 250 boys now, and Grace had just effected the joining, against great difficulties, when he went down with tuberculosis. By injection and careful self-treatment he recovered—also through great prayer. But he did not wait quite long enough and went down again. He is now at the end of his treatment and it rests with our prayers, I think. From our point of view he can ill be spared, and he is a tower of strength to the young Baganda at this very critical time."

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF NORTH TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. Eugene Cecil Seaman, D. D., Bishop.

Young People's Conference.

The North Texas Summer Conference for Young People and Adult Leaders was in session for eleven days on the campus of the Texas Technological College at Lubbock, whose classrooms, library, cafeteria and one dormitory were offered and used with complete satisfaction.

Bishop Seaman was Director, and taught a course on the Prayer Book and one on Poung People's Program Building. The Rev. L. G. H. Williams, of Lubbock, was business manager, and taught a course on Church School Administration. Mrs. E. F. Page, of Canyon, and Mrs. E. C. Seaman taught classes on Weigle's "The Pupil" and on Woman's Auxiliary Ideals, respectively. All were credit courses and an unusually large percentage of examinations were successfully taken.

Evening lectures were given by President Horn and Professor J. C. Granberry, of the College, and by each of the clergy of the district, every one of whom attended the conference.

Rural Work and Christian Sociology were specially stressed in the evening lectures.

Miss Alice Arnold, of Amarillo, was awarded the District scholarship to the Winslow Provincial Young People's Conference.

There were baptisms, confirmations and a beautiful pageant in the church.

Tennis and swimming and horse-shoes were the principal forms of athletics, and stunts received due attention.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Virginia Diocese Growth Notable.

A notable growth in all branches of the work of the Episcopal Church in Virginia is indicated in the publication in book form here of "The Centennial Addresses of the Diocesan Missionary Society of Virginia."

This collection of addresses, which were delivered at the time of the centennial celebration of the Diocesan Missionary Society, held last May 14-15 in this city, covers in a general way the history of the Episcopal Church in Virginia from the settlement at Jamestown in 1607 down to the present day.

That the sum of $70,000 is to be expended this year in mission work in the Diocese of Virginia is shown, which is an interesting matter when comparison is made with the $423.72 that represented the total receipts of the Missionary Society for the first year of its organization in 1829.

A corresponding growth of the work is noted in the other three dioceses of Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia, and West Virginia, all of which were originally included in the old Diocese of Virginia and were later established as the development of the Church work necessitated.

Particular interest attaches to the work begun in 1900 and being carried on in the Blue Ridge Mountains under the direction of the Venerable Archdeacon Frederick W. Neve, D. D.

This mountain work has grown to such proportions that an associate has been appointed to assist Archdeacon Neve and hundreds of people old and young are being ministered to.

The subjects of the several addresses now made available in book form are as follows:

Opening address, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., LL. D.; "The Colonial Church," the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D.; "Diocesan Beginners," the Rev. MacLaren Brydon, D. D.; "The Church in Virginia, 1829-79," the Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., LL. D.; "The Diocese of Virginia Since 1878," the Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D.; "The Diocese of West Virginia," the Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D.; "The Diocese of Southern Virginia," the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D.; "The Diocese of Southwestern Virginia," the Hon. Don P. Halsey; "Missions the Life of the Church," the Venerable F. W. Neve, D. D., and "Address to the 134th Annual Council of the Diocese," the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The Seventh Annual Conference of Church Workers Among Colored People.

In the Third Province, including the Dioceses of Harrisburg, Erie, Pittsburgh, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Washington, Virginia, Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia and West Virginia, the seventh annual conference will be held at St. Philip's Church, St. James and Leigh Streets, Richmond, Virginia, the Rev. Junius L. Taylor, D. D., rector, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 1, 2 and 3, 1929.

The officers of the conference are: The Rev. Edgar C. Young, M. A., D. D., President; the Rev. Junius L. Taylor, D. D., Vice-President; the Rev. Edmund B. Trotman, M. A., Secretary; the Rev. Theodore Richardson, Treasurer; the Rev. E. S. Thomas, Necrologist.

Among those who will address the conference are: the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., the Venerable Archdeacon Russell, D. D., LL. D., the Rev. G. Maclaren Brydon, D. D., the Rev. Wm. L. Ransome, A. M., D. D., Hon. J. Thomas Hewin, the Rev. E. C Young, A. M., D. D., President of the conference

Those who will read papers are: the Rev. J. H. Hudson, S. T. B., of Philadelphia; the Rev. E. H. Hamilton, B. D., of Hampton; the Rev. Robert H. Tabb, of Philadelphia; the Rev. B. W. Harris, Norfolk, and the Rev. L. A. King, Washington, D. C.; the Rev. J. E. Elliott, Charleston, W. Va.; the Rev. Prof. S. W. Grice, B. D., Petersburg, Va.; the Rev. John R. Logan, D. D., Philadelphia; the Rev. C. E. Green, Emporia, Va.; the Rev. Aston Hamilton, B. D., Millers Tavern, Va.; the Rev. E. B. Trotman, M. A., Cumberland, Md., and the Rev. W. B. Crittenden, D. D., General Secretary.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop.

The many friends of the Rev. James Cosbey, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Buffalo, N. Y., and Mrs. Cosbey, are glad to learn of their safe return from their vacation and trip to New Zealand. Not only Mr. Cosbey's own immediate flock, but also his radio congregation rejoice at his home-coming, and were pleased, on Sunday last, to once again hear his voice from the Churchill Tabernacle, over Station WKBW. M. Y. T.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Rt. Rev. G. F. Mosher, D. D., Bishop.

Holy Trinity Church, Zamboanga.

Last month we mentioned the "real and gratifying interest" in our work which was shown by the Rev. John A. Wade, of New York, when he passed through here recently. There is now in the Church tangible evidence of that interest. Due to Mr. Wade's generosity we have been able to lay water pipes onto the Church property and to install a sink in the vestry. During the twenty-five years of the use of the Church there has been the need of water, and for the past fifteen there have been city mains along the street, but never before have we been able to install this necessity and convenience. Bontoc is not the only station which rejoices in a new water supply!

Although but few ocean-going boats pass through this port there is nevertheless opportunity for work along the lines of the Church Periodical Club. Each large freighter which comes through now is boarded and supplied with magazines both secular and slightly religious. The last one gave an especial opportunity to minister to the only American member of the crew.

B. H. H.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

The Historical Windows in St. James' Church.

Perhaps few realize that in addition to the subjects taken from our Lord's life and the life of the early Church we have in St. James six windows that are strictly historical, covering different periods of the life of the Church, and carrying out the design in the mind of your rector to make them present everlasting to those who study them, the fulfilment of the promise of our Lord, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world". The Scriptural windows end with that of St. Paul witnessing before Agrippa, and the historical windows begin with:

A. St. Augustin appearing before King Ethelbert and Queen Bertha in Kent, England, about 596 A. D., and when he arrived, finding a church with a three-fold ministry already upon the ground, with customs at variance with his, but yet a component part of the Christian world.

B. Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, with the barons wresting from King John the Magna Carta at Runnymeade in 1215, the first article of which guaranteed to the Church in England its liberty.

C. Robert Hunt celebrating at Jamestown the Holy Communion. This being the first service of that kind known to have been held on the Atlantic Coast, and being the first to continue in the English tongue. This was in 1607, and is further commemorated by the erection of a little shrine with a representation of this service near where it first took place at Jamestown, to which pilgrimages are made every year.

D. The Consecration of Bishop White and Provost in Lambeth Chapel, London, by the Bishops of Peterborough and Bath and Wells assisting the archbishops of Canterbury and York, this secured to us Apostolic Succession, and took place on February 4, 1787.

E. George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton worshipping in old St. Paul's Chapel, New York, April 30, 1789, immediately after Washington's inauguration as the first President of the United States, where they went at his request to offer up prayers for their guidance in the administration of the affairs of the new Republic and was given by the Y. P. S. L. as an answer to those who would traduce the character of the founders of our Nation as being godless men.

F. Laying the cornerstone of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., in 1858, by Bishops Polk of Louisiana, Elliott of Georgia, and Otey of Tennessee. This shows the Church on

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

SEPTEMBER.

1. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
8. Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
15. Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18, 20, 21. Ember Days.
21. S. Matthew.
22 Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
29. S. Michael and All Angels. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
30. Monday.

COLLECT FOR FIFTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy perpetual mercy; and because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fail, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvation; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

A PRAYER FOR THE WORLD'S REBUILDERS.

We send them off to school again today,
This cool September morning. All the street
Is musical with patter of small feet,
And little, shining faces all the way
Seem wayside posies for our smiles to greet.

I wonder if they ever guess or know
With what strange tenderness we watch them go?

Just children on their way to school again?
Nay, it is ours to watch a greater thing—
These are the world's rebuilders, these must bring
Order to chaos, comforting to pain,
And light in blasted fields new fires of spring.

Dear Lord, Thy childish hands were weak and small.
Yet had they power to clasp the world withall,
Grant these, Thy little kindred, strength as true—
They have so much to learn, so much to do!

—Theodosia Garrison, in Good Housekeeping.

The Challenge of the Metropolis.

Yesterday we were an agricultural people, today we are rapidly becoming a people of the city. Then we were characterized by farmsteads, with their spreading fields, and the near-by town in which centered the business and social life of our people. Now our area is dotted by cities with their vast aggregations of people, their humming factories, magnificent stores, congested traffic, and omnipresent apartment houses. More than one-half of our people live in cities, while possibly only one-fourth actually live on farms. Nor is there any indication of our reaching the end of this cityward drift. It bids fair to continue in response to changing economic and social conditions.

The city constitutes the outstanding challenge to the organized religious forces of the nation. It presents a challenge which we of the Christian Church cannot escape. We may offer the excuse that we have been and are a Church of the smaller town and the open country. True, and we must not for one moment neglect our country churches and the communities which they serve. We must rather cultivate this field more thoroughly by vigorously pushing a program of service adapted to the urgent needs of rural communities. "This ye ought to have done and not to have left the other undone." We owe it to ourselves as a Church seriously to accept the challenge of the city. In one rural community peopled very largely by members of the Christian Church, during a period of ten years, from two-thirds to three-fourths of the young people graduating from the high school left the community, generally going to surrounding cities. In most of these cities they found no Christian Church. Their religious needs, if met at all, had to be met by some one else. A small rural church in another state has seen in two years some twelve or thirteen of its young people go to three cities in which there was no church of their own persuasion. In the city where this is being written, literally hundreds of former members of our Church reside, but we do not have a single church home for them. We are challenged by the needs of our own people flocking to the cities.

But more than this is the larger fact of the urgency of permeating the life of our cities with the ideals of Jesus. Let us seriously face the possibility that the spirit of American cities may be pagan rather than Christian. The city is fluid, changing, experimental. It presents diverse tendencies. It presents a genuine spirit of democracy and, at the same time, the spirit of snobbishness and the fact of wide gaps between economic groups. The spirit of cooperation flourishes in the city alongside of bitter racial and religious antipathy. Beautiful parks, public buildings, and wide boulevards may exist in spite of the most shameless corruption and graft in the city hall. The evidence of a close working relation between city officials and gangs of gunmen is sufficient to awaken the careless good citizen to civic responsibility. Big business has frequently preferred to pay tribute to crooked politicians rather than make the effort and sacrifice demanded for clean politics. The truth is, the city presents a continual challenge to the forces of righteousness by the threat of the vicious elements to control the city's political life.

Dare we take the attitude that the Church has no stake in this contest between decency and indecency; between crooked and clean politics; between wholesome cooperation of groups and group animosity; between business and professional ethics and mere expediency or chicanery? The life of the Church is bound up with this struggle.. A leading authority on urban Protestantism said a few days ago: "The fate of Protestantism in our cities will be determined in the next few years. Either the Protestant churches will unite in a constructive effort to redeem city life or they will be compelled gradually to retire from the field." Let us not be lulled into false security by recounting past victories. Let us face the stark, unpleasant fact that the whole Christian way of life sponsored by the Church is threatened by powerful tendencies and forces prevailing in metropolitan centers.

This is not a defeatist's wail. Rather, it is a call to the Church to marshal her forces for victory. It is a call to remind ourselves that "we are well able to go up and possess the land"; that "they that be for us are more than all they that be against us". It is a call to consecrate ourselves anew to the age-old task of Christianity—that of making of the cities of this world, cities of God. Above all, we need a vision of the possibilities of city life, such as inpired Paul in his work among the cities of the Roman Empire, and as kindled the spirit of the seer on the Isle of Patmos, when he beheld the city of the New Jerusalem established on this earth, where sin and suffering and sorrow were no more. The city as it is challenges us to behold the city as it ought to be and as, by the help of the Almighty, it can be. We must behold with the eye of faith the time when our "Alabaster cities gleam, undimmed by human tears". The vision and passion which led Christ to dare and die for a city and its people must compel us to give ourselves unreservedly to the holy task of saving the soul of the American city. This task is an outstanding challenge to the followers of Christ, a challenge which our own brotherhood dares not ignore.

"A distant music mingles
With all our songs today,
The choral from a city fair
Where sin has passed away.
There rides the Christ triumphant
And victor songs ring clear
O God, give us the strength to build
With Christ that city here!"
—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Suffering Patiently.

By the time of his death, Viscount Haldane had come into his own. The bitter persecution and misunderstanding of which he was the victim during the war years had passed away and the nation came to recognize him as the great Englishman that he was. In his recent autobiography he speaks quite calmly about that dark passage in his life when he was deserted by all except his dearest friends and when even his political friends dared not publish the records that would have fully vindicated his honor.

He found great solace in that inner faith which was found upon his philosophy of life and of the universe. In the words of the Epistle: "When he suffered he threatened not," for he tells us that he bore no malice towards any man.

On the day of the great Victory Procession through London, Lord Haldane was left to himself, and he spent it alone in his study at Queen Anne's Gate. That evening his man opened the study door and announced that an officer, who did not give his name, wished to see him. In those days precautions had to be taken for Lord Haldane's safety, and it was with some hesitation that the servant admitted the visitor. In walked Sir Douglas Haig, who had just returned from riding with his Sovereign at the head of the procession. He had come to present Lord Haldane with a volume of his private despatches with the inscription in his own handwriting: "To one of the greatest War Ministers that England has ever had."—Church of England Newspaper.

By my tasks of every day,
By the little words I say,
By the friendships which I make
By the roads my footsteps take,
My allegiance I proclaim—
My allegiance to a Name—
Prove my right His cross to wear,
Cross and name of Christ to bear.
—George Klingle.

For the Young Folks

MERCY.

To tell of things celestial,
That lift the spirit high,
To bear the lot terrestial,
(When soul and body sigh).

With courage, not repining,
On each new sun-born day;
God's love within thee shining,
To show the heavenly way;

To bring to men a greeting
From higher regions pure,
To sing a hymn repeating
God's mercies that endure;

Love's path to widen gladly;
With roses build the way
To hearts where thorns prick sadly,
And of thyself naught say—

To live thus, power fails us;
But prayer leads to the goal;
May'st thou find what avails us!
God's grace illume thy soul!

—L. E., in the Hochweg. Translated by E. T. Mann.

The Birthday Surprise.

The Raymond twins, Robert and Rachel, lived in Pickensville, a nice little town in South Alabama. There were two more of the Raymond children, Billy, aged five, and little Sue, just a year and a half old. Then, there were mother and daddy, "Black Mammy", who helped mother in the house, and Uncle Tom, who looked after the garden and yards.

School was out and Robert and Rachel were having a nice, lazy time. Rachel liked to read and she spent long hours, each afternoon, lying in the hammock, reading, when mother did not want her for anything. Robert was a born carpenter. He just loved to make things with his saw and hammer. He had made chicken coops for mother and a house for his dog. Now that school was out, he was planning to make something wonderful for Rachel, for a birthday surprise. He didn't have much time, either, for their birthdays came on the very last day of June.

Robert did something he had never done before. He kept the door to the little workship, that daddy had made for him, locked, and he put a curtain over the window.

Rachel didn't notice it until one day she wanted Robert to mend her little rocking chair. "Where is Rob, mother?" she asked.

"In his workshop, I suppose; that is where he has lived ever since school closed," answered mother.

Rachel ran to the shop and turned the knob of the door, but it would not open. She knocked and called. Robert unlocked the door and opened it just a little crack. "What is it?" he asked.

"Why all the secrecy?" asked Rachel. "Anybody would think you had something to hide."

"I have," answered Robert, grinning.

"What is it?" asked Rachel, interestedly.

"Can't tell you, sis."

"Does mother know what it is?"

"Nope. Nobody but me."

"I think you might tell me," pouted Rachel. "I always tell you everything."

"I know it, but I just can't tell you this."

"Well, keep your old secret, I don't care," and Rachel turned away without telling her errand. Straight to mother she went and poured out her grievance. "I think it is mean of him to go into his workshop and lock the door, and not tell anybody why, especially me. I always tell him everything."

"Well, now, dear," soothed mother, "everybody at some time wants a little privacy. You know Robert is not doing anything wrong. Daddy gave him the workshop for his very own, and he deserved it for making so many nice things for me, and if he wishes to go into it and close the door and lock it, that is his affair. Daddy gave you the dear little clothes press, where you keep all of your letters and treasures. Have you seen Robert prying into it?"

"No," admitted Rachel.

"Well, then, don't be so wrought up because Robert has locked the door of his workshop."

The days of June slipped by and every day Robert went into his workshop and locked the door. One day he took mother in and when she came out, there was a beautiful smile on her face. But every time Rachel saw him go into it she felt angry.

"Well," said mother one day, "it is about time we thought about birthdays, don't you think?"

"Oh, mother," cried Rachel, "are you going to give us a birthday party?"

"I was just wondering about that," said mother. "Yes, I think we will have a birthday party."

"Oh, goody, goody!" cried Rachel, and forgetting all about her tiff with Robert, she ran over to him and hugged him tight. "I love you, even if you won't tell me what you are doing in your workshop."

Robert looked over her head at mother and smiled. "Well, I'm glad to hear it," he said, "for I hate for my old twin to be mad at me." And he went straight to his workshop and closed and locked the door.

Rachel looked after him half crying, "Wouldn't you think he would tell me after that?" she asked mother.

"Now, forget all about the workshop," advised mother, "and let's decide what you are going to give him for a birthday present. He is crazy for a jig saw that you can buy for $2.50. You have something over five dollars in your bank and I know you could not please him better. It would be such a nice surprise."

"But, mother," objected Rachel. "You know I am saving to get a bedroom set for my doll house. It will take more than I have for that."

"How much do you love Robert?" asked mother.

"Of course, I'll get his saw," said Rachel, hastily. "I'll go up right now and get the money," and Rachel hastened to her little clothes press and soon had $2.50 taken out of her bank. "Perhaps I will get a doll set for Christmas," she murmured.

On the afternoon of June 30, the Raymonds front yard was alive with boys and girls. Some were playing "Drop the Handkerchief," some were swinging and some were playing croquet.

After awhile mother called to them. "I want you all to come and see Robert's gift to Rachel. He made it himself."

Close behind mother trooped the eager children, until the little workshop was crowded.

Suddenly a little girl breathed, "Oh! oh! oh!"

And another said, "Oh, I wish my brother was so good to me."

Rachel's face suddenly turned very red. She peered over the shoulders of some little girls and there on the work bench she saw the dearest little bedroom set she had ever seen for a doll. There was a little bed, a dresser and a washstand and a little table. They were all painted blue. On the bed was a cunning little set of sheets, spread and pillow cases. On the dresser and washstand were little scarfs and on the table a tiny centerpiece. You could never buy such dear little things. Mother had made them.

"O Robert," she cried, "this is what you have been doing so long, with the door of your shop locked. I am so sorry I was so cross with you."

But Robert was testing his jig saw and his eyes were glistening with the thoughts of what he was going to make for mother and all the others for Christmas.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

From a Missionary's Letter.

I caught the bus and as the ride is almost an hour long I got out my book and began my Chinese lesson. It is the only time I have during the day to prepare it. I had to change busses and on this one was a girl who spoke the dialect that I try to. It was the third time she had waited for me so she could take the bus I did. She said, "I waited for you, for I wanted to ask you a question, 'Where do you go every day so early'?" "Why?" "Do they force you to work a certain number of hours a day?" "What is there about your doctrine that makes you willing to leave your home and come away over here?"—"Why, that sounds more real than anything I ever heard. Do you really love your God?"—"I'm going to wait for you tomorrow." This girl is a student in a big heathen college here. She was not just curious. I'm praying that she will wait for me enough mornings that I may lead her to know the Master.—Exchange.

The Dewdrop.

On a certain June night, a cool breeze swept over the sun-warmed earth, and dewdrops by millions gathered, ready to sparkle in the next morning's sunshine. Two of these, lingering near each other, spoke together.

"I," said the first, "shall shine tomorrow by a country road. I shall reflect the pink of the briar-rose, the golden-yellow of the daisy's heart, the purple of the late violet, the living green of the field grass, and the clear blue of the sky. Children on their way to school will call me a diamond. And you, brother, will shine beside me, will you not?"

"No," the second dewdrop replied, "I will rather shine in a great city where the children do not see bright things to make them glad."

"But," objected the first dewdrop, "in the city of dull stone and brick, you will not find the colors to reflect the pink of the briar-rose, the golden-yellow of the daisy's heart, the violet, and the green of the grass."

"But, anyhow," answered the brother drewdrop, "I will shine as well as I can, and between the roofs there is a part of the sky to give me its heavenly blue."

When the sunshine on the next morning flooded the earth, the first dewdrop trembled near the heart of a pink briar-rose, and in its tiny sphere glimmered the colors of the flowers, the green of the field grass, and the blue of the great sky arch, and the school children laughed and cried, "See the diamond in the rose!!"

The second dewdrop twinkled in a little patch of dust-gray city grass at the edge of a brick pavement; not a flower grew near and between the lofty roofs was only a narrow ribbon of sky. And yet, in the dewdrop's glittering crystal were all the glowing colors of the briar-rose, the golden-hearted daisy, the violet, the green grass field, and the blue sky arch; for dewdrops do not need flowers to give them color, but only light.

A little city child passed by the scrap of dusty grass, looked at the glittering dewy gem and cried joyfully, "Oh, here is a little rainbow dropped straight down from the sky to earth!"—Susan Alice Ranlett, in The Congregationalist.

BIRD TRADES.

The swallow is a mason
And underneath the eaves
He builds a nest and plasters it
With mud and hay and leaves.

Of all the weavers that I know
The oriole is the best,
High on the branches of the tree
She hangs her cozy nest.

The woodpecker is hard at work—
A carpenter is he—
And you may hear him hammering
His nest high up a tree.

Some little birds are miners;
Some build upon the ground;
And busy little tailors, too,
Among the birds are found.

Canadian Baptist.

IN SEPTEMBER.

I walked down the lane
Past the Maple Tree,
And Post Man Wind
Brought down a note to me—
A small yellow note
From my friend, the tree!

You call it a "leaf"
Just drifting down?
Why, it says, "Old Winter
Will soon be in town!"—
So it's really a letter
The tree sent down!

—Child Life.

Florence Nightingale.

When Miss Nightingale was a child, says a writer in "Little Folks", she had many dolls, and her greatest hobby was to affect to believe that they each in turn caught a serious illness and needed the most careful nursing. There was one rag baby that had fever so badly that her life was despaired of; and little Florence would only go to her own bed one night on the positive assurance of her nurse and her mother that they would watch beside the sick doll. And watch they had to with a vengeance. For if any of the nurses tried to go away, thinking Florence was asleep, the little lady was alert in a moment and would not lie down until the duty was resumed.

Early in the morning, Florence arose to take her share in the nursing and then the others were allowed to retire. She was soon able to say that the rag baby was much better.

Fix It to Stay.

Two sisters were putting away some of their belongings in a larger drawer that mamma had set apart for them.

"Here are so many things," said Lulu, "we can't take time to put them in as we want to. Tumble them in anyhow today, and we'll put them in order some other time."

"No, no," said wiser Mary. "Let's fix them to stay now, while they are going in. That'll be better, I'm sure."

Mary's way was right. She set a good example, too, in other things. If all the Sunday-school lessons and bits of knowledge were put into the mind and memory in the right way, they would be "fixed to stay", and when any one wanted to find in his memory something he wished to remember and use again, he would know how to do it. It would be in the place where he put it.

It is much better in every way to put away things we want to keep, whether in drawers or in our heads, in such good order that we can keep them and find them. Do a thing right, once for all, and it will not have to be done over again. Isn't that sensible and right? Then do it.

EVOLUTION DISPROVED 50 "masterful" arguments; "unanswerable"; 25,000 ed. Cloth, $1; agts, 50c; 25 for $10—60 per cent! $6 a day! $1,000 sends 5,000 to lawmakers, etc. Help! Dr. W. A. Williams, Camden, N. J.

How A Christian Solved A Perplexing Money Problem

THE PROBLEM A Christian woman, devoted to the Bible, was anxious to make a contribution to the work of providing Bibles for others.

She knew that the American Bible Society was a distinguished agency in the work of translating, publishing, and distributing the Bible. She knew that every year the Society distributed millions of copies of the Scriptures in many languages. She longed to help!

But her income was modest. She could not give away any of her principal. Her problem was to discover how to aid a notable missionary agency without affecting her income.

Happily, this woman learned about the "annuity plan" of the American Bible Society. THE SOLUTION

Satisfied that this plan was absolutely safe and that it would help the Bible cause, she sent a check for $500 to the American Bible Society and received an "annuity bond agreement," in which she was assured that she would receive twice a year a specified sum as long as she lived.

Others have sent as little as $100 and as much as $50,000 with equal satisfaction.

This woman now receives a regular and reliable income as a result of her contribution to this great religious enterprise.

Send for the booklet, "Bibles and Bonds," and learn how you, too, may befriend the Bible and assure yourself an income.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY
The Bible House
Astor Place, -:- New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Please send me without obligation on my part your booklet, No. 29-R, entitled "Bibles and Bonds."

Name.....

Address.....

Read these touching letters and then put the S. G. M. and their Volunteer Distributors on your Prayer List. Shall we send you sample Gospels?

"May God bless your work, for there are only a few of these children who would ever have an opportunity to own a Testament without you."—From Tennessee.

"I know it would do the above company's heart good to see how willingly most of my pupils are learning the verses and reading the Gospels through, getting ready for me to send in verses and names for Testaments. One boy who entered school last Monday read his Gospel through that night. I was told he was very bad last session, but so far is one of my best pupils. May every teacher find out about this Scripture Gift Mission."—From Alabama.

"It gives me pleasure to remit to you again the widow's mite. I am working for my bread and as I collect I lay by 10 cents of each dollar. I am truly thankful to have this privilege. Before many months my work will stop and I'll be practically dependent."—From Ohio.

"Very few homes have Bibles and these mountain people are too poor to buy any. We are especially concerned about the children. Could you help us in this urgent need?"—From Virginia.

To the SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

I'll help pray ☐ distribute ☐ give ☐

Name.....

Address.....

THE NEW PRAYER BOOK

CLEARTYPE EDITION

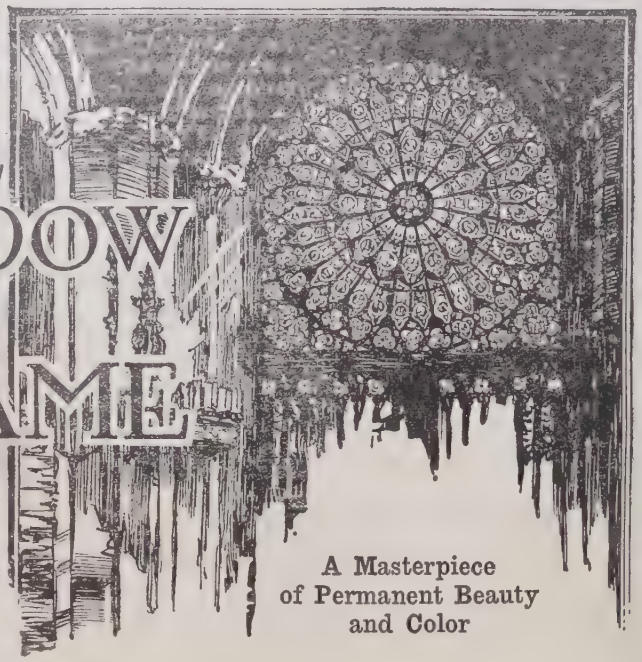
At last it can be definitely stated that the New Prayer Book will soon be ready for distribution—probably in early November, possibly before. Morehouse Publishing Company will be able to supply the Prayer Book at the earliest day possible in several styles and many bindings, with or without the Hymnal.

Our CLEARTYPE EDITION, 32 mo. size, will be published in a variety of beautiful and durable bindings, as follows:

Cloth, for pew use (black, maroon, blue, purple, or red), at 25 cents.

Entomax (insect-resisting), for pew use in tropical climates, at 30 cents and 35 cents.

Durotex, a handsome binding for individual use, from $1.00 up.



Genuine Goatskin Morocco, in a variety of styles, many on India paper, from $2.00 up.

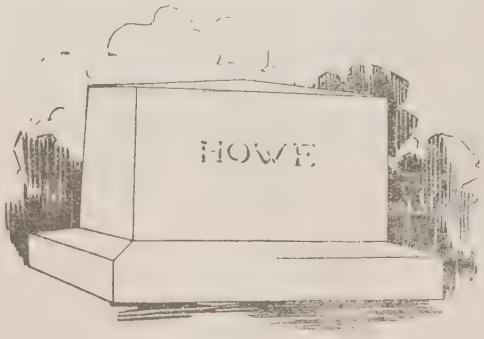
Complete Illustrated Catalogue Now Ready—Free on Request

MOREHOUSE PUBLISHING CO.

1801-1811 Fond du Lac Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

The BEAUTIFUL ROSE WINDOW of NOTRE DAME

A Masterpiece of Permanent Beauty and Color



THE Famous Rose Window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris is a work of infinite beauty and splendor. It is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. The color of gorgeous gems and precious stones are wrought into this magnificent spectacle for the admiration of passing thousands through all the years. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of The Trade"

Trade Names of Precious Stones Cut From the Same Kind of Mineralogical Crystals as Are Found in Winnsboro Granite

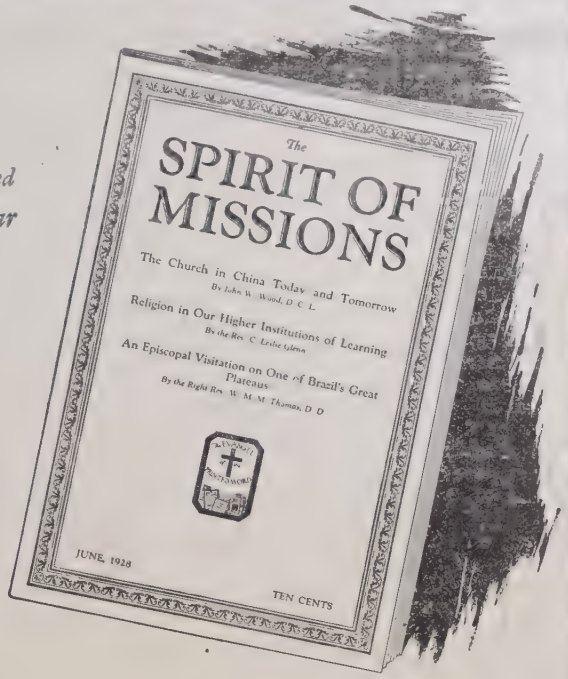
ALASKA DIAMOND	BOHEMIAN RUBY
ALPINE DIAMOND	CEYLON OPAL
AMAZON DIAMOND	ELDORATOITE
AMETHYST	EMERALD
AMPHIBOLE	EMERALDINE
ANCONA RUBY	FELDSPAR SUNSTONE
AQUAMARINE	GOLD QUARTZ
AQUAMARINE TOPAZ	HELIOTROPE
ADVENTURINE	INDIAN AGATE
AZURE QUARTZ	JASPER
BAFFA DIAMOND	MOONSTONE
BASANITE	RAINBOW QUARTZ
BERYL	ROSE QUARTZ
BISHOP'S STONE	SAPPHIRE QUARTZ
BLOODSTONE	TOPAZ
BLUE MOONSTONE	YOGO SAPPHIRE

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.



The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Write for free descriptive literature.

Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

B. H. Heyward Treas. & Gen. Mgr.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY
Since 1836
Well Illustrated
$1.00 a year

Reveals in Story and Picture
THE WORK of THE CHURCH
at HOME and ABROAD

The SPIRIT OF MISSIONS
281 Fourth Ave. New York, N. Y.

GIBRALTAR
A PORT OF CALL ON THE IDEAL CRUISE

This great fortress guards the portals of the largest inland sea in the world. It has been called the "Pillars of Hercules." Crouched on the edge of Spain, it has guarded the Straits for hundreds of years. Disembarking from our ship we will drive through streets thronged with British soldiery in khaki. In contrast to this we will see the red fezzed Moors of Spain, Arabs in their flowing robes and the famous Alameda. The old Moorish Castle, built in 742 B. C. is now used as a prison. The government house and the famous South Port gate upon which are still visible the carven arms of Spain are places we will visit. Gibraltar derives its name from the first fort of Tarik, a Moorish general.

Gibraltar is only one of the interesting ports that we will visit on THE IDEAL CRUISE. Glamorous days ashore will be spent at FUNCHAL, ALGIERS, MONACO, NAPLES, ATHENS, CONSTANTINOPLE, THE HOLY LAND, and EGYPT. Every detail has been arranged for your comfort and convenience by this organization, having over 53 years experience.

PLAN NOW TO SAIL WITH US THIS WINTER.

62 DAYS $625

Write today for full information.
SEND THE COUPON

Simmons Tours
1328 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Gentlemen: Please send me your descriptive catalog on the Ideal Cruise. No obligation, of course.
Name .....
Address .....

A-6

A Bank of Strength and Character

CARTER N. WILLIAMS, President — ROBERT W. DANIEL, Chairman of Board

RICHMOND TRUST COMPANY
7th and Main — 211 West Broad

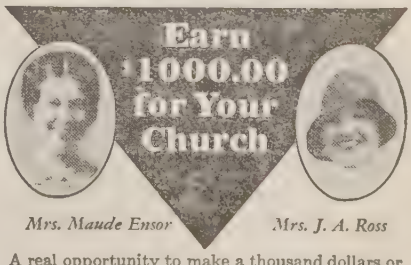
XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.



INCORPORATED 1836

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

Mrs. Maude Ensor — Mrs. J. A. Ross

A real opportunity to make a thousand dollars or more before Christmas for your church, your home or yourself taking orders from church people and others for America's most attractively priced and widely known Christmas Greeting Card Line with which Mrs. J. A. Ross of Los Angeles earns $3000 in commission every year, while Mrs. Maude Ensor of Baltimore has earned over $1000 in two months. We pay liberal commission in cash every day, also liberal monthly bonus, and furnish samples and everything necessary for you to do business with FREE. Address as follows:

Sales Manager, Dept. AM
THE PROCESS CORPORATION
Troy at 21st Street — Chicago, Illinois

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

Contributions Sent to Bishop Tucker in Answer to Appeal in the Southern Churchman for Alaska Missionary District.

Southern Churchman	—$100.00
Jno. Stewart Bryan	25.00
Friends	150.00
Mrs. E. R. Williams	25.00
Two Virginia Churchwomen	200.00
Mrs. Marion C. Oliver	25.00
Lucy M. Barrett	5.00
Mrs. S. R. Harrison	50.00
Miss Jennie R. Faile	25.00
Carolina H. Preston, Miss Mary C. Preston and John P. Frost	16.00
Mrs. W. B. Watson	100.00
Sallie J. Mann	50.00
Douglas Forsyth	50.00
Kathleen M. Burch	25.00
Mrs. Alfred C. Palmer	10.00
Mrs. B. H. Buckingham	100.00
Isabel C. Freeman	100.00
Helen M. Weidman	10.00
E. Medora Jones	5.00
Mrs. F. H. McGuire	25.00
Emily T. Mengel	100.00
Alice K. Earnshaw	25.00
Elizabeth M. Washington	50.00
Cornelia M. Colhoun	5.00
Charlotte J. Dennis	20.00
Mary C. Roberts	5.00
G. T. Patton	25.00
L. S. Macon, Jr.	25.00
Sarah P. McCraven	100.00
E. R. Palmore	2.00
"A Widow's Mite" (cash)	1.00
Annie Leigh Ely	100.00
Benjamin Whiteley	100.00
Mary S. Wallis	30.00
Samuel A. Wallis	30.00
Annie C. Spilman	100.00
Charlotte G. Rock	15.00
Hevila Cockerille (in memory of Harry Cockerille)	5.00
J. W. H.	10.00
John D. Letcher	50.00
Thos. W. Blackstone	10.00
William J. Cox (in memory Miss France C. Cox)	10.00
Annie D. Powell (in memory of Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Powell)	50.00
Lizzie G. Rennolds	15.00
Mrs. John Dunn	10.00
Miss Porterfield	5.00
Mame H. Mathewson	5.00
Cash	5.00
E. R. Goldsborough	100.00
Lucy M. Marshall	5.00
N. Carrie Jones	50.00
Lucy S. Cary	5.00
Alice C. Cary	2.00
Annie Belle Yancey	18.00
Isabel C. Myers	10.00
Marion S. Peterkin	100.00
Constance L. Peterkin	10.00
Martha L. W. Jones	5.00
Walter Chandler	5.00
G. H. T. Greer	5.00
Howard Winston	5.00
Nellie T. Gibbs	30.00
Janet W. Boyd	100.00
Margaret D. Mason	10.00
Murray M. McGuire	25.00
William A. Robertson	40.00
Mrs. J. Fenton Taylor	50.00
Dr. John Garlick Scott	50.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

OLD STAMPS.

WANTED.—OLD ENVELOPES FROM letters written before 1875. Highest prices paid for envelopes with patriotic designs used during Civil War. Old stamps purchased.—George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

FROM A SHUT-IN.

I HAVE FIFTEEN FOUNTAIN PENS, and I want to sell them at once, for I need the money, and I am forced to give up my mail order business, since I have not got a home to stay at regular. Twelve of these fancy pens are my $1.25 pens, and the others I have been selling for $1.00. But in order to sell them at once, I am asking $1.00 each. Buy one at once. Edward P. Broxton, Keysville, Ga.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold Thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and Veil from $15. Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church Vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED: BY REFINED, CHRISTIAN woman, with highest reference, a comfortable and quiet home for the winter, and very small salary in exchange for light household duties; or perhaps the tutoring of a child. Would consider looking after home in absence of family, etc. Address, Mrs. H. L. Browne, Weedonville P. O., Virginia.

A MIDDLE-AGED WOMAN, OF EXPERIence, wishes position as companion to semi-invalid woman, or child, or as teacher in private home. References exchanged. Address "B", Box 37, Ronda, N. C.

REFINED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION with invalid, or semi-invalid, as nurse-companion References. Address "F", care of Southern Churchman.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

the side of true education, that she is not afraid of search after the truth, and that she believes that science is the handmaid of God, and that the more we know the more humble we become in the sight of our Creator. Bishop Polk is foremost, Bishop Elliott is on the right side and Bishop Otey carrying the pastoral staff is in the rear. Bishop Polk was in reality the founder of this University and dreamed great dreams for this institution, and had collected a large sum for its endowment, but the War Between the States swept it all away except the domain—10,000 acres of woodland on the top of the Cumberland plateau. The time will come when pilgrimages will be made to St. James' Church to study our scheme of windows, which deserve study and will amply reward those giving them to a careful examination of them in detail. We have a treasure in our midst, but we do not as yet realize it.

Personal Notes

The Rev. John W. Norris, for four years assistant at Old St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, took charge of the Memorial Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, Bustleton, Pa., September 1.

Mr. Morris, who is also president of the Philadelphia Choral Art Society, is well known as a musician. Prior to his ordination, he served five years as bass soloist in the choir of St. Peter's Church. Before entering the ministry, Mr. Norris was engaged in newspaper work in the Middle West. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

To the ranks of the clergy of the Diocese of Pennsylvania there will be added this month (September), the Rev. Canon Ernest C. Earp, a widely known and distinguished priest of the Church of England. Official announcement has just been made of his acceptance of a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, one of the outstanding parishes of the diocese, situated in the prominent main line district suburban to Philadelphia.

Canon Earp succeeds to the rectorship so long and so ably held by the Rev. George Calvert Carter, one of the nationally known leaders in the Liberal movement within the Church, and who retired from active ministry last spring. The new rector comes highly recommended by Dr. Endicott Peabody, Principal of Groton School, and Dr. Francis L. Patton, former President of Princeton University. Canon Earp takes charge of the Redeemer September 8.

He comes to Pennsylvania from Bermuda, where he has been in charge of two parishes and two missions. His acceptance of the call to Bryn Mawr came in the form of a cable reading: "Accept. Romans Fifteen, Verse Twenty-nine." Born in Leads, England, in 1882, he went some twenty five years ago to Canada, where he entered Wycliffe College, Toronto University. Ordained priest in 1906, he became Curate of St. Paul's, Toronto. Three years later he became rector of the church at Dunnville, in the Diocese of Niagara, going from there to Grace Church in the Province of Saskatchewan. Resigning his rectorship at the outbreak of the Great War, he served overseas as Chaplain with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces and saw much active service on the Western front.

Following the Armistice he remained in England, becoming Deputation Secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. Subsequently he was made Precentor of Holy Trinity, at Hull, England, said to be the largest parish in England. In addition to his parochial work he was appointed an honorary lecturer to the League of Nations' Union. Simultaneously with his appointment as Vicar of St. Barnabas, in the ancient city of York, in 1921, he was called to the rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, at St. John's, Newfoundland, which he accepted upon the advice of the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Hull.

Subsequently, he received appointment to a Stall in the Cathedral left vacant through the resignation of Canon Hewitt. Two and one-half years later he left St. John's, going west to the Cathedral at Saskatoon and from there a few years later to Bermuda.

In Canada, he was Chaplain to the Seventeenth Brigade, Canadian Artillery; Chaplain to the Provincial Great War Veterans' Association, and also Chaplain to the Grand Lodge of Free Masons in the Province of Saskatchewan. He is a graduate in Arts and an honor graduate in Divinity, receiving the same degree from Toronto University, Licentiate in Theology, as that received by Dr. Francis L. Patton, former President of Princeton University and Bishop Acheson, of Connecticut. In Bermuda, he was Vice-President of the English-Speaking Union, and was active in many other organizations.

R. R. W.

Jamboree Notes.

Cablegrams have been received from Vernon Adrion and Pete Bambas. Both state that no mail has been received by them, but all is well.

The following taken from "Jamboree News", published at headquarters in New York, will be of interest to the friends of our boys "over there":

"American Youths Lead Parade of Scouts from Seventy-one Countries!" One thousand three hundred American Boy Scouts lead the parade of 50,000 Scouts from seventy-one countries at Arrowe Park, Birkenhead, England, on Wednesday afternoon, July 31, marking the opening of the third and largest World Scout Jamboree. As the American delegation passed the reviewing stand and the Scoutmasters saluted with "eyes right", the Scouts sprang a surprise by waving small silk American flags, evoking tremendous outbursts of applause. . . . The parade was the greatest peace-time demonstration ever staged in England. . . . Ambassador Dawes was present with the Prince of Wales on Friday at the parade; and he said: "Every American Scout should lose no opportunity for forming personal acquaintance and developing friendship among members of other contingents. Where there is organized endeavor for a common purpose, the spirit of comradeship is bound to be developed. The spirit of comradeship is the world's best effort for peace. . . . Every one understands that Scouts will "carry-on", and I hope every one understands what that will mean for the peace and understanding of the world. The memories boys who are participating in the Jamboree will take home will last forever."

Eight American lads from Troop 1, B. S. of A. of Berlin, Germany, are at the Jamboree.

Scout Donald Forbes, of Honolulu, traveled furthest, and Louis Dahl, of Skaguay, Alaska, next farthest of the American delegation.

New Orleans Scouts staged a burlesque, which drew great applause from the throng. Jack Pierson was the "hero" and John Bedwell the "heroine". The New Orleans contingent handled "The Pine Tree Patrol".

Seven full-blooded Indians from Bacone College in Oklahoma, are camping in two conical tepees, which are peculiar to the Indians of the plains.

Mr. Mortimer L. Schiff, Vice-President and International Commissioner of the Boy Scouts of America, donated to them $50,000, which he afterwards, in their name, presented to the Prince of Wales for the British organization for the promotion of international friendship among boys of all nations.

For The Southern Churchman.

Thoughts on Immortality.

Louis Deschamps.

Though the mind strive in vain to see beyond the apparent havoc of Death some visible, logical signs of immortality, yet there are thoughts that prove indirectly what reason can not attain.

An obscure father, dying in his humble home, apparently about to enter oblivion for all that reason knows, spoke these words from the threshold of Death: "My children, I must go I know not where, trusting God as to my fate. Yet, take from my faltering consciousness these ideals that must live and will live on in the hearts of men long after my dust is forgotten. Be just, love God, be kind, yet defend the Right and keep the Sacred Faith."

Like the crest of falling waves, catching for an instant the sun's rays, we reflect toward the infinity of human destiny the rays of an immortal spirit. If doubts assail our fearful minds, it is because we are selfishly concerned with our individual fate, thinking not of the simple truth that we are as immortal as our ideals.

Once the corpse is laid away, self is never seen nor heard again. But that which the heart cherished, ideals of religious truth and beauty that survived mortal weakness, examples of courageous service, the mystery of love—all live on in racial memory. Tradition is sacred because it protects the immortality of our fathers.

Does the mind shudder at the grim loneliness of the inevitable hour? Is immortality doubted because of the darkness of Death? Yet no life is spared such trials that teach courage. Dawn has inevitably followed the darkest night of our experience, courage and faith have persisted. We need but recall past vigils, alone in the night of spiritual agony, to realize how certain must be the victory.

That which is mortal in our human experience, transitory pleasures, the passing ray of fame's fickle spotlight, the uncertainty of material fortune, all indicate with the sharp outlines of contrast the nature of our immortality—not physical, selfish, nor the pride of self-righteous reward, but rather the spiritual, loving, reverent, existence of a God-like mystery reflected onward through the ages of human history. Surely we lay up treasures in Heaven while striving amid the dust and noise of this world.

What happened later I have no means of knowing, for there the story ends.—Methodist Recorder.

For The Southern Churchman.

A SPURPRISE.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

One day while walking in my yard,
I had a great surprise;
A saucy little pansy face,
Looked right into my eyes.

Time to me this truth has taught,
It is a truth that's worth revealing.
More offend from want of thought
Than from a want of feeling.

Coming! Sept. 30th

The 1930 International Uniform Sunday School Lessons Discussed by America's Religious Leaders

The LESSON ROUND TABLE

1930

Round table discussions of the Sunday School lessons by Joseph Fort Newton, Peter Ainslie, Francis J. McConnell, Joseph A. Vance, C. Walter Fiske, Frederick Lynch, Wm. H. Leach, Burris Jenkins and other outstanding ministers, educators and Christian workers the world over. A unique feature is the use of Dr. Moffatt's translation of the Bible for finer shades of lesson interpretations. Price, $1.25

COKESBURY PRESS
Nashville, Tenn.

Your Bookseller Will Take Your Advance Order

RAISE CHURCH FUNDS--Easy

Sell Christmas Cards! Make 50c on each $1 Box of 24 Finest Assorted Engraved Designs. 40 per cent on personal greetings. Deal with Manufacturers. Write for Samples and Details. THISTLE ENGRAVING & PUBLISHING CO., Dept. A, 20 Vesey St., New York.

THE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS IN THE CITY OE RICHMOND

1615-1619 MONUMENT AVENUE.

A private day and boarding school for girls, with kindergarten, primary, intermediate and high school departments. College preparatory, general and graduate courses. Home Economics, Stenography and Typewriting.

Accredited by Southern Association of Colloges and Schools.

Letters of inquiry should be addressed to Miss Greenleaf, Head of Collegiate School for Girls, 119 Monument Avenue, Richmond, Virginia.

THE ENTERING WEDGE

to independence is your savings account. Why? Because it gives you when needed a lump sum with which to take advantage of a business opportunity.

Keep a growing account with us!

State-Planters Bank & Trust Company

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

ROBERT C. McQUILKIN, Dean
J. A. MORRIS KIMBER, Secretary of Faculty and Registrar
H. T. PATTERSON, President and Treasurer of Board

"To Know Him and to Make Him Known"

COLUMBIA BIBLE COLLEGE

Hampton and Pickens Streets

COLUMBIA, S. C.

MONTHLY NEWS AND PRAYER LETTER

Dear Friend:

"BUT I . . . PRAYER." Those of you who were at the conference in Eliada will remember Psalm 109:4 as one of the day verses. "But I give myself unto prayer," is the way our English Version reads. But David used only three words. His enemies were fighting against him; he recognizes their hatred and their strength and then says, "But I . . . prayer."

As I write you this first letter of the new school year David's words came back with great force. Never was there greater cause for praise and never greater opportunities; but also the needs and problems were never greater, as we are in the midst of preparations for the new year. However, the news about the school plans must await the next prayer letter. In this letter I want to ask you to join in special prayer concerning our new conference center.

First, shall we give thanks for the answers to prayer for the conference at Eliada. Beginning with the Industrial Girls' Camp, when over fifty accepted Christ as Saviour, many of them from non-Christian homes, on through the pre-conference weeks and climaxing in the general conference from August 4th to 11th, there was continued evidence of God's own working. About forty young people came to the front at a missionary meeting as volunteers for the foreign mission field, more than half of them taking the step for the first time.

Eliada Camp Grounds can accommodate about 125. About 200 came this year, keeping the daily number at about 175. What was done with the extra number? In the pre-conference weeks the young people "went everywhere" they could preaching the Gospel, and a boys' home and school two miles away was one of the fields. Several boys were saved, and Bible classes started. They were housed in a beautiful new building, erected by the county. "How fine if that could be used for the conference," was a chance remark made by one of our group. "You can have it if you want," the superintendent said. "The boys go off next week for a two weeks' camping trip." And the building, with excellent accommodations to take care of about forty, was turned over.

Everything that happened at camp drove home the conviction of the urgent need for the permanent conference center. And it is concerning this that I am asking you, if the Lord leads you, to pray with us. The last payment on the seventy-five acres of land, which was secured after several years of search and prayer, must be made by September 13th. The payment is $5,000 and there is about $500 toward the amount.

The problem is great, for no funds are in sight: "BUT I . . . PRAYER." And are not all the resources of God back of that word, "prayer"?

Yours in His faithfulness,

R. C. McQUILKIN.

For further light on this wonderful work of God, see article this issue on The 1929 Convention at Keswick.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 14, 1929. No. 37.

Young men, believe your beliefs
And doubt your doubts,
And don't make the mistake of
Believing your doubts
And doubting your beliefs.

Submit to the Lordship of Christ,
Admit Him to every part of your life,
Permit Him to do everything for you,
Commit everything to Him,
Transmit all blessings to others.

Don't exchange the sign of the Cross for a question mark.—Griffith Thomas.

GENERAL WASHINGTON'S PRAYER

All Mighty God; we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government, and entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another and their fellow citizens of the United States at large. And, finally, that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, without whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation. Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

ATTENTION

GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES

Increase your funds for Church work. Send us

25 new subscriptions

and receive

A CHECK FOR $25.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,

628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS. D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN.
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
A Door Once Barred and Bolted Now Open	6
"Higher Criticism"—When It Is and Whither Tends—Rev. J. W. Morris, D. D.	7
Stratford Hall to be Scene of Pageant	8
Favorite Scripture Verses	8
The Shameful Birth of Our Marriage Canon—Another Critical Examination—Rev. Walker Gwynne, D. D.	9
As Others See Us	10
Playing the Soviet Game	10
Phi Beta Kappa	11
Wood-Pulp Magazine	11
Book Reviews	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	16
Childrens Department	18
Personal Notes	23

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

Episcopal school for girls, maintaining best Virginia traditions of refinement and culture.

Thorough College Preparation. Varied General Course. Outdoor Life.

EIGHTY-SIXTH YEAR BEGINS SEPTEMBER 18, 1929

For catalogue, address

MRS. H. N. HILLS, Principal

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Offce, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Anne's,

Charlottesville, Va.
Box G.

Beautiful location in far famed Blue Ridge Mountains College preparatory and elective courses. Fully accredited. Open gymnasium allows sports in the fresh air in all weather. Sleeping porches. Riding taught by expert. Music. Art. Bishop of Virginia President of Trustees. Margaret L. Porter, M. A., Principal.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.
Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M. A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

STRADIVARIUS.

"When any master holds twixt hands and chin
A violin of mine, he will be glad
That Stradivarius lived, made violins
And made them of the best . . .
. . . For while God gives them skill
I give them instruments to play upon,
God using me to help Him; . . .
. . . If my hand slacked,
I should rob God, since His fullest good,
Leaving a blank behind, instead of violins.
He could not make Antonio Stradivarius' violins
Without Antonio."

—George Eliot.

It is possible for you to preach a Gospel which nobody else can preach. It is possible for you to know Christ as I cannot know Him. Hence, there is a Gospel according to Matthew, a Gospel according to Paul, and a Gospel according to you, and if you do not mediate Christ, and if I do not mediate Christ, the world will never get a full witness for Jesus Christ, never.—Stuart Holden.

A Poet by Accident.

There are some people who talk in rhyme without knowing it, and I have for long taken a keen delight in the story of the old-time minister who complained one night that the light was dim. I have forborne from repeating it here because I had certain doubts as to its absolute truth, but this week has brought me sufficient evidence to enable me to pass on the story to those who do not know it, with the assurance that the incident happened exactly so.

It was in the far-off days when organs were unknown in churches, when congregations were illiterate, and when to enable the folk to join in the church's service of praise it was necessary for the preacher to read the words to be sung a line, or two lines, at a time. Day was dying in the west as the good old minister reached for his hymn book, glanced at a page, and said: "The light has grown so dim, I scarce can see to read the hymn." Then up rose the congregation to its feet, and, led by the clerk, sang to the tune of Old Hundred: "The light has grown so very dim, I scarce can see to read the hymn." Then they paused for the next lines to be read to them.

Raising his voice a trifle, because he was just a little disturbed at the happening, the minister explained: "I did not mean to read the hymn, I only said my eyes were dim." As it was still in the proper meter, again the congregation lifted up their voices, and sang the dictated words, and then looked expectantly for more lines to sing.

They got them, for, now in quite a temper, the parson shouted: "I didn't mean a hymn at all. I think the devil's in you all." And again the rafters rang with the song.

For The Southern Churchman.

A MORNING PRAYER.

Maude F. Mumma.

Dear Lord, I lift my eyes to pray,
And ask Thy blessing on the day;
Ask Thee to guide my feet aright,
And keep me safe until the night.

I pray Thee for my loved ones, too,
Hearts that love Thee, loyal, true;
Help them to know, though scattered far,
How kind, how good Thy precepts are.

I pray Thee for the stranger here,
Though far removed from loved ones dear;
Help him to feel Thy guiding hand,
Though travelling in a distant land.

These mercies I of Thee implore,
Keep Thou the well, the sick restore;
Until the day of life be past,
And we are safe with Thee at last.

Ah, How skilful grows the hand
That obeyeth Love's command.
It is the heart, and not the brain,
That to the highest doth attain.
And he who followeth Love's behest
Far exceedeth all the rest.

—H. W. Longfellow.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W & E. SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

Church Furniture
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

$50 TO $100 IN SPARE TIME
Write for Schwer's CHRISTMAS CARD & NOVELTIES PLAN. Popular and different from others. $50. to $100. easily made. No investment. Great for Home Effort. Write at once to CHARLEY C. SCHWER, DEPT. WESTFIELD, MASS.

PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD
Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria
Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.,
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

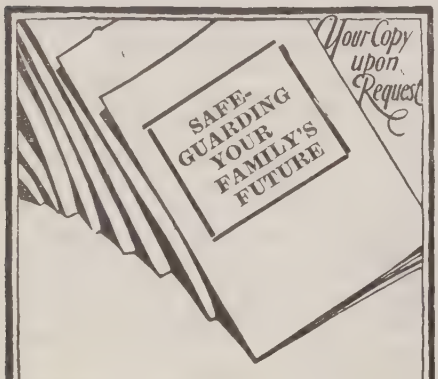
Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

When in need of
MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES
and want honest treatment see
BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.
Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.



The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The American has just printed a booklet which gives authoritative information on the important subject of wills and modern methods of "Safeguarding Your Family's Future" (this is its title).

It will gladly mail you a copy, with no obligation on your part, upon request, as long as the supply lasts.

Kindly mention this paper.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Do not be laughed into doing that which you know to be wrong.

"We are all liable to be tripped up by our triumphs."

Let us learn more about the greatness of God that we may rise above our own littleness.

There is such a thing as hidden power. It is a quiet, yet moving force. It is the result of communion with God.

The trouble with most men is not that they do not know the right; but that while they know the right they choose the wrong.—Chadwick.

What other book beside the Bible could be heard in public assemblies from year to year, with an attention that never tires, and an interest that never cloys?—Robert Hall.

"God gave us memory," says Sir James M. Barrie, "that we might have roses in winter."

The Church stumbles along in its program for want of funds and service. Of both of these there would be an abundance available if the actual consecration of the inner spirit could be accomplished. A multitude of victories remain unwon by the Church because the spirit of her members is indifferent. There are many churches thinking they have problems of finance, leadership, or attendance, whereas the real cause of what seems to be problems is a lack of an intense desire to follow Christ in motive and practice.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The fruits of the spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—are all natural and normal reactions of a healthy soul. It is the fruits of evil that are unnatural and abnormal.

O Father, haste the promised hour,
When at His feet shall lie
All rule, authority and power
Beneath the ample sky;
When He shall reign from pole to pole,
The Lord of every human soul;
When all shall heed the words He said
Amid their daily cares,
And by the loving life He led
Shall seek to pattern theirs.
And He who conquered death shall win
The nobler conquest over sin.
—William Cullen Bryant.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 14, 1929. No. 37.

RADICALS

About thirty-two years ago a man in his early twenties went to New York. He was of a distinguished family, well educated, handsome and in every way attractive and at home had made reputation as a newspaper writer. Among other accomplishments, he was an unusually graceful horseman and, finding work at thirty dollars a week, undertook to keep a riding horse and parade mornings and afternoons in Central Park. In a confidential moment he confessed that his scheme of life was to have an heiress fall in love with him and to attain quick supremacy in journalism. No heiress noted him, his liveryman took his horse for the board bill and managing editors declined to consider him except as a subordinate and would pay him no more than he could earn by prompt and regular work. In a few months he was telling his intimates that he hoped to live to see the downtown streets blocked with barricades and the gutters running blood—not his blood, hearers of his oratory gathered, but just blood generally. He wrote several very fiery articles along this line and they were printed in "advanced", "liberal", and sensational publications.

He disappeared, probably returned to his small city home, and may be now—probably is—a fairly prosperous, well-behaved, orderly citizen and sedate vestryman, standing for law enforcement and the rights of property. He is recalled and referred to as representing a type that recurs quite regularly as each generation of cultivated youth begins to approach maturity and acquires the habit of believing itself to be thinking widely and profoundly. The type would be harmless and funny, but for the fact that it is being developed and used for real mischief by habitual and professional agitators—Communists, Socialists, Bolshevists, Atheists, "Liberals", Modernists, Pacifists, all the several varieties of assassins of religion, decency, orderly society and government. Uniformly, these hate and war against Christianity. Yet, they are being aided by persons and organizations professing to be Christian and depending for support on Christian people. Here in the South we have been little troubled, thus far, by these menaces. Defeat in devastating war and long adversities have taught us common sense, and conservatism, saved us from imported radicalism. The fundamental principle of our dominant political party is the rights and responsibilities of the individual citizen and consequent abhorrence of communism and socialism and their alliances. Whether or not we continue to escape invasion by foes of church and state and peace, it is our duty, as Christians and citizens, to give all the strength we have toward defeat of these foes and especially to repudiation and condemnation of those pretending to be ministers of God's Word and members of His Churches, drawing their daily bread from the God fearing and working ceaselessly to cajole, persuade and frighten the nation away from God.

Observant and practical business men, in contact with conditions and trends, send out warnings of the radical activities, directed recently to students of universities and colleges, whose minds are in the formative stage, who are at what may be called the misanthropic period of life and who, too often, are under influence of "liberal" instructors. Some months ago reference was made in this column to an address before the Chamber of Commerce of an Eastern city reciting the sympathetic labors of professors in institutions for "higher education" in behalf of two Italian anarchists and murderers. Now, an important manufacturing and commercial concern in Chicago sends an exhaustive review of what is being done and attempted in spreading propaganda of destruction among students and through the country and a partial list of accomplices.

"Education for a new social order, based on production for use and not for profit." "Abolish the wage system and do away with capitalism." These are the slogans of the "Fellowship for a Christian Social Order" and the "League for Industrial Democracy", formerly "The Intercollegiate Socialistic Society". This last is said to have permanent representatives and workers in one hundred American colleges and universities. The Fellowship for a Christian Social Order arranged, in 1927, a conference at Hillsdale College, Michigan, co-educational, with four hundred students, a Baptist minister president, with Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for governor of New York, in 1924—when he received 45,000 votes in a poll of 1,150,000—as leading orator and director. Mr. Thomas is, or was, a director of the League. He boasted that he and three other Socialists had addressed, in 1927, 52,000 students in 136 colleges and universities, from Maine to Texas. Of course the boast was part of an appeal for funds.

Perhaps the drive on the colleges and universities is caused by the determined and increasing conservatism of the American Federation of Labor, the great organization of those who really work for their livings. The Federation rejects radicalism more sternly as its members become more prosperous and intelligent and realize more clearly the blessings of cordial friendship and mutual confidence and cooperation between labor and capital. Samuel P. Luzzo, a prominent A. F. L. official of Chicago, in a published letter to President Green, asks his attention to the continual efforts of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, supported largely by the $2,000,000 endowment fund given it by Andrew Carnegie, to encourage and stimulate the Communists and Socialists, who join the Russian Soviets—open and blatant assailants of Christianity and all religion—in fighting the Federation and laboring to destroy it. An element of comedy is supplied by the fact that these radical movements are entangled and connected with each other and, by interlocking directorates and otherwise, with the Pacifists and Pacifism, while the Soviets, proclaimed as maintaining the ideal system of society and government which we are urged to adopt, keep under arms the largest standing army in the world.

Eleven organizations in this country are composed of persons sworn never to take part in war, offensive or defensive, by service, labor or subscription to war loans. Nine are obtruding themselves on relations of capital and labor, five of these including in their names "Christian" or "Church" and one calling itself "Methodist". There are five organizations of Communists, one composed of boys, eight organizations of Socialists, one for Negroes. To the sorrow of many in this part of the country, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are classed as participating vigorously, in New York and Western cities, in pacifism and its allied endeavors.

The leaders and workers contrive to take fairly good care of themselves. They have the Carnegie total of ten millions for advancement of world peace—certainly used in ways which Mr. Carnegie would denounce strongly. The Garland fund, an inherited million, given by a young man of feeble mind and "liberal" tendencies, who was sent to jail in Pennsylvania for establishing a free love farm and contributing to the delinquency of sixteen young women, is another help. Apparently, there are other sources of revenue. Before a congressional committee in 1926 expenses of the American Civil Liberties Union—which specializes in defending persons charged with incendiary and disloyal utterances and conduct—were reported at over $40,000; League for Industrial Democracy, $30,000; Fellowship of Reconciliation, $5,400, and so on.

The Christian Church is the one powerful, ceaseless, resistless driving and leading force in progress toward ideal social conditions, peace on earth, good will among all men, the strong ready always with help for the weak, life made happier, brighter, more hopeful for all. All progress of that kind has been and is in the Christian countries, or by their guidance. We here have Canada on one side of us and Mexico on the other and the difference between the Canadian working man and the peon in Mexico—where effort of the government to exterminate religion has just failed ignominiously—is plainly before us. The French 140 years ago undertook to establish a country with religion banished. Such experiments end in disaster invariably. The disturbers, incendiaries, radicals, are not new. Always there has been a certain proportion of the dissatisfied, embittered, disappointed and natural and instinctive mischief makers. Such led revolt against Moses and Aaron and extolled the flesh pots of Egypt and the golden calf as their successors here now tell us of the glories of Russia and the beauty of the policies there. Shakespeare knew them—"Moody beggars starving for a time of pell-mell havoc and confusion." They were noisy and pestiferous at the beginning of our government. With 62,000,000 members of religious bodies, 30,000,000 members of secret and charitable orders, all sworn to uphold government and law, and 14,000,000 stockholders in corporations—the vast majority of them wage earners—in this country we are not in danger of revolution. We are not likely to adopt the laws and customs of the scores of small Russias in Central Africa and parts of Madagascar, in which there is no capitalism, all property, including wives, is held in common and the communist and socialist systems are in perfection. There is need, however, for the churches and their loyal and reasoning memberships to scan carefully the faculties and methods and associations of all institutions asking their patronage and all organizations, including particularly those wearing Christian and Church names, soliciting their help. It is to be remembered that all these liberals and modernists are very practical people. According to their doctrines and teachings, such things as honor, truth, patriotism, loyalty, allegiance to solemn oath, are mere abstractions, unsupported by science or any geological, or archaelogical discoveries, or sociological, or psychological investigations and mankind is the spawn of rotting and stagnant water of countless ages ago. Persons who pervert the philanthropies and betray the confidence of the dead are not likely to be scrupulous in representations when seeking to advance their purposes or secure for themselves the notoriety they ceaselessly crave and easy livings by using the credulity of the callow and the passions, prejudices and greed of the foolish and malicious.

We are informed that in more than one hundred of our colleges in the United States there are stationed representatives of the so-called Industrial Democracy, formerly designated Intercollegiate Socialistic Society. We are reminded of Macaulay's great work, wherein he makes Horatius at the bridge say: "Then none were for the party and all were for the state and the great man helped the poor and the poor man loved the great, in those great days of old, as the Mason says, 'So mote' it be."

Langbourne M. Williams.

LEE AND BEAUREGARDE—WHY NOT DAVIS ALSO?

(Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser.)

Secretary of War Good has approved the suggestion of Major-General William Smith, Superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point, that "large and appropriate portraits" of Lee and Beauregarde be hung in the cadet mess hall.

Both of the Confederate generals were superintendents of the academy and small pictures of each are already in place. General Smith considered, however, that either picture should be as large as those of the other superintendents. Funds for the portraits will be provided by the academy.

This is commendable and gracious of Secretary Good and General Smith. But their action serves to remind us that West Point owes an unpaid debt of recognition to Jefferson Davis.

West Point owes more to Jefferson Davis than to any other Secretary of War since its establishment. Mr. Davis, a graduate of the academy, conceived and put into effect the idea that its educational standards should be raised to a point equal to the standards of the great universities. The scholastic standards of the academy had not been notably high. Mr. Davis made it his special care as Secretary of War to see that intellectually the institution should be equal to any university. His vision and enterprise thus marked a turning point in the history of the academy and many thousands of our bright young men have since profited by his foresight and the fame of West Point has been correspondingly enhanced. Mr. Davis, by all fair accounts, was a great Secretary of War and the importance of his services in that capacity are not diminished by the circumstance that later he was the Confederate civil chieftain.

Nevertheless, it is our information that there is nothing at West Point to acknowledge the academy's debt to Mr. Davis. There is no memorial to him, and his portrait is missing from its walls. It is from the pages of history rather than from the memorials of the academy that one hears of Davis' service to his country by raising the standards of West Point.

Somewhere on the walls at West Point there should be a life-size portrait of Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi.

CHRIST'S EARLY SURROUNDINGS.

By Bishop of Lahore.

There are many little hints in the Parables which enable us to guess the circumstances under which He was brought up. His home was one of decent, not of squalid poverty, but the little house was so small that the lighting He lived among people who had no great margin, whose He lived among people who had no great margain, whose supply of daily bread, baked for the day, did not suffice to cover sudden additional calls, and so the parable of the friend at midnight may have come vividly from His own experience. If Joseph died as Jesus was coming to manhood, and while his brothers and sisters were still young, Jesus Himself, we must suppose, became the chief breadwinner and shared with Mary the cares of the household. He certainly watched the leaven at work in the meal, when she made the bread, and He may well have rejoiced with her over the successful search for a lost coin. He lived among people the only playground for whose children was the village street and He had watched the children playing as ours do still today, at weddings and funerals. He lived among simple people and was familiar with simple cares and interests and therefore through all the records of His life there is no trace of a hint that He was ever "bored". I like too to think that His attitude towards womanhood, which has revolutionized the position of woman in Christendom, was due to His relationship with that wonderful mother. The link between a widowed mother in a small house and a thoughtful son growing to manhood and sharing her burdens is a very close and beautiful link.—Lahore Diocesan Magazine.

"HIGHER CRITICISM," WHENCE IT IS AND WHITHER TENDS

By the Reverend James W. Morris, D. D.

ONE real service Bishop Gore's New Commentary will render to the Church. It should make very clear what even the "moderate" critics teach. It sets forth with approval the chief ideas of devastating import that continental critics hold and that are now enthusiastically propagated by hosts of Christian teachers and preachers. It asserts and builds upon as scientifically established facts many views of the radical critics which, once accepted and logically applied, must destroy any worthwhile belief in supernatural revelation. It claims for the whole portentous theory of Wellhausen, barring certain details, the quality of scientific certainty.

It puts before us in simple and untechnical language the whole scheme, so that plain people of good sense may see just what it is all about. It makes it possible for those of us who cannot claim Olympian scholarship to see what the inevitable results must be of these "assured facts of modern criticism" and thus to recognize in it all the old familiar marks of barren naturalism.

We know what will happen if people come to believe that the books of Moses are a conglomerate of doubtful documents and late traditions, which have been compiled and edited after the exile, and then falsely ascribed to the great Moses, thus getting the authority that they have. It is not hard to know what the "uncritical" mind will think of the moral status of a long history pretended to be given of God through Moses and most of it professing to be contemporaneous with him, that is proven by a mass of discrepancies, contradictions and scientific blunders to be of late and utterly uncertain authorship. That such an astonishing fraud, such a long and careful literary forgery should be considered by serious men a proper vehicle for a revelation from the God of wisdom and truth, will be regarded by most people as a hardly credible phenomenon. Most of us will think such a thing an offense to God and a dishonor to truth, and will repudiate any divineness in such a production.

Professor Erith, of Jamaica, writes a short history of higher criticism. He tells the whole unsavory story with a straight face, and with no sense of humor. He appears to think that a bad ancestry is a good asset.

It was a French physician of low character named Astruc that gave the start to the whole business. His ideas, taken up by a line of confessedly rationalistic writers who developed and added to his "discovery", were at length brought to full flower and fruitage in the speculations of a school of Dutch and German scholars who frankly rejected all supernatural religion. Professor Erith, after running over this unedifying story, bids us receive from such profane and unchristian sources the new light that shall make more rational and more spiritual all the books of Moses and the prophets!

As well might we be asked to get our Christian teaching from the writings of Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll. God's Word cannot be understood either critically or morally by men, however brilliant, who have made shipwreck of their faith in God. Yet it is from the writings of men of this character that Professor Erith and other higher critics have imbibed their woeful notions of the books of Moses.

Astruc, who began the kind of speculation now called criticism, did not deny Moses' authorship of Genesis. Indeed he wrote his book in 1753 in defense of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. He thought that Moses composed his book from two main ancient sources distinguished by their use of two distinct names for God. The use of these two names is very potent in Genesis. One named Elohim is translated God in our Bible: the other name Jehovah is translated the Lord. And so Astruc supposed that Moses made use of two principal documents, the E document and the J document.

This idea, of course, does not in any way impugn the authorship of Moses. That Moses had ancient documents at his disposal, in composing under the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, the most ancient continuous history in all the world, may reasonably be supposed. And if that were all that is meant by the modern higher critical theory, no question need be made. For clearly God inspired men to record His revelation, not only through direct communication, but also through the use of written documents (Luke 1:1, 2) and in the selections from oral traditions.

And so Astruc's notion of two sources as denoted by the two divine titles—God and the Lord—may have some basis in fact. The Catholic explanation of the names, however, is much more satisfactory. Elohim refers to God in His eternal nature and being; while Jehovah refers to him in His covenant relationship with His people: the one is God as pertaining to all the universe, the other is God as especially belonging to His people.

Now it is this use of the divine names that was at the beginning made the basis of all the "analyses" of the early Old Testament books. And it is still upon this basis that the critics proceed in very many instances.

Of course, it is the fashion now to say that this use of names is not made so much of as it was. It is no longer regarded as one of the "principal criteria" that distinguish different writers. The critics have been forced to do a good deal of hedging in this matter, while still using the rule. It has been shown to their confusion that the Septuagint, the famous translation of the Old Testament into Greek, made during the second or third century before Christ, does not use the divine names in the same way that the Hebrew does. And yet the Septuagint is, according to many scholars, based upon an older Hebrew text than that found in our Hebrew Bible.

This harmless theory of Astruc was taken up by the Scotchman Geddes and a line of German rationalistic students, beginning with Eichorn and continued by DeWette, Ewald and others. They discovered other additional strands of old documents, and they extended this sort of separating into documents to Joshua, making what they call the "Hexateuch". Then set in the work of late dating, of inventing editors and redactors, very cunning and yet at the same time quite stupid, and of twisting the history into shape to suit any theory.

Up to the time of Ewald, while the books were roughly handled and split up into fragments, there was quite a general acknowledgment of the Mosaic authorship, or at least origin of the books. But the real Simon-pure modern higher criticism did not emerge till Graf, Wellhausen and Kuenen began their baneful labors. They indeed are the real authors of modern higher criticism, and the acknowledged masters and teachers of the writers in the "New Commentary" as well as of the multitude of Hebrew teachers in our colleges and seminaries.

These men deny utterly any peculiar divine element in the Old Testament writings. They regard them as human documents, many of inferior quality both as to history and as to moral value. They reduce the history of Israel to ruins. They obliterate the whole history of the wilderness, and reduce to what they call "anachronistic" imaginings the entire account of the tabernacle, its construction and its ceremonials. The whole was an imaginary throwback from the exile, invented to give authority to the priestly authors! They make the history ascribed to Moses, a very late compilation from vague traditions and fragmentary documents, thus undermining its factual value.

Graf made what Dr. Oer calls the great somersault of criticism. He made first things last and last things first. With earthquake violence he threw down the whole sequence of events, so that the evolutionary theory of a gradual discovery of God by the Hebrews might be constructed out of the fragments. He "proved" we are asked to believe, while Wellhausen clinched the proof, and that what is now called the P. document, or the priestly writings (characterized usually by the use of Elohim for God), was compiled and written by unknown priests after the exile. These P. writings include large parts of Genesis, most of Exodus and Numbers, and all of Leviticus!

The other parts of these books and the book of Joshua largely existed in some form about the time of Amos the prophet; but they too were not put together till after the exile. The pitiful time therefore after the exile is, in the opinion of these men of uncanny prescience, the greatest literary period in the whole history of Israel!

At that time a keen company of editors and redactors, forgers and falsifiers of extraordinary skill, put together and arranged all the books, harmonizing them where they needed it, putting in certain passages where it was necessary to make one document older than another, etc., and thus succeeded in hoodwinking all the world of scholars, historians and critics, so that their crafty and cunning deceits were not discovered and disclosed till near three thousand years afterwards!

In all the range of literature, in all the history of mankind, in all the documentary records of the world, there never was so stupendous, so marvelously concocted, so cunningly and successfully executed a falsification of old documents. Such a clever record of pretended history and of fabricated institutions, the critics with sublime prescience and magical second sight have dug up out of the ages. There never was a fraud perpetrated upon the whole world of devotedly religious peoples that had so immediate, so far-reaching and so abiding and beneficent a success. For thousands of years none of the millions of earnest students and pious readers of these books had any suspicion of their extraordinary falsification of history, of laws, of religious regulations. It remained for a select company of Dutch and German scholars—men who had abandoned all credence in a supernatural revelation—to tear away the mask, to expose the deceit and to relieve the world of the burden of believing such fables. And so we seem to have come to the point where we must believe no longer in the inspiration of Moses, but in that of Wellhausen and his followers. It seems easier and more reasonable, if we are to believe Professor Erith and the rest, to suppose that a set of scholars of the nineteenth century are able to dissect documents dating at least from the fifth century before Christ and to expose their falsities, than to believe that Moses inspired of God composed and edited the books. This all amounts to accepting the inspiration of these unbelieving critics and denying that of Moses.

There are difficulties in the Old Testament books: there are problems there of history, of literature, of morals that tax our best gifts and demand our most anxious thought. Many of these problems are probably insoluble. But surely to pretend to take these ancient documents and to rewrite the whole history on principles discovered only in the nineteenth century, is not to resolve any difficulty: it is rather to set up an absurdity. Says a distinguished critic, "Nothing is simpler than the Grafian hypothesis. At one stroke the Mosaic period is wiped out." And so the history is not explained: it is expunged.

From what has been said, all of which and much more may be verified by any one who takes the patience to read the "New Commentary", it is very certain that we should not allow ourselves to be deceived by the constant assertion that nothing is intended or done in modern criticism subversive of sound Christian teaching or of faith in supernatural revelation. It is the fashion to tell us that dates of books and their authorship may be discussed and many changes made without injury to Christian faith. But it is abundantly clear that this whole scheme involves much more than the discussion of dates and of the probable authorship of old documents. It demands a falsification of the history of the Hebrew people, from which the very Gospel has come. However much many believing critics may seek to stop short of the terrible conclusions of the Graf-Wellhausen hypothesis, it is logically impossible to do so. The legitimate and inevitable result of the whole system is a dishonoring of God's holiness and veracity and the repudiation of anything like divine inspiration.

A great scholar, deeply read in all the critical theories, asks this question—

"Is it (e. g., Old Testament history and literature) the natural product of the development of the human spirit, as Kuenen and others allege, or is it much more, the result of special, supernatural revelation to Israel, such as other nations did not possess?"

"Must man's changing and erring thoughts about God henceforth take the place of God's words to man? Are the erstwhile "lively oracles" of God simply the fragmentary remains of a literature to which no special divine quality attaches? Is the supposed history of revelation largely a piecing together of the myths, legends and free inventions of an age whose circle of ideas the modern spirit has outgrown?"

It is confessedly and frankly from scholars who make the Old Testament "a natural product of the human spirit" that the writers of this disastrous New Commentary get their theory, their "analyses", their persistent and perverse misreading and discrediting of the ancient history of Israel. Where the history can be made use of to support their theory that the poor post exilic time was the golden age of Hebrew literature, laws and religion, it is meticulously and very literally accepted and where it cannot be straightjacketed into submission to the theory, it is scrapped or "redacted" out of shape.

It is time for all who think that the truth of the New Testament is intimately bound up with the historic verity of the Old, to take a firm stand—and to call the bluff of these men, who in their self-conceit ignore all scholarship except their own. A grandiose system of radical criticism, forged in the armory of outspoken and arrogant infidelity, should no longer be allowed to parade itself as the last word of scientific Biblical research. A theory whereby the traditions of men are made to supersede the teachings of God cannot stand the test of impartial examination.

Our Lord has definitely proclaimed the futility of the teaching that puts traditions of men in the place of commandments of God. He has put His stigma on the work of religionists and scribes "who leave the commandment of God and hold fast the tradition of men" and "who make void the Word of God by their tradition" (Mark 7:16-13). He has passed sentence on all such efforts. He says of them, "In vain". They are worthless.

STRATFORD HALL TO BE SCENE OF LEE PAGEANT.

Fredericksburg, Va.—A pageant depicting scenes in connection with Stratford, birthplace of General Robert E. Lee and his forbears, will be presented at the old estate in Westmoreland County at eight o'clock on the evening of September 27. This announcement was made by Mrs. Charles Stuart, of Stratford, wha has arrangements in charge.

Mr. Paul Kester, distinguished author and resident of the neighboring county of King George, whose new novel, Diana Dauntless, written in the period of Queen Caroline and King George II of England, has been such popular summer reading, is arranging the tableaux.

The pageant will be strictly historical and all those acting will be appropriately costumed in period dress. Included in the series of tableaux will be:

Powhatan, the great Indian King, with his family, receiving Captain John Smith and his men on the shores of the historic Potomac, on the Stratford estate.

Richard Lee, the immigrant, acquiring the land on which Stratford now stands, by original charter from the British crown and subsequent negotiations with the Indians.

Queen Caroline, King George II., and Sir Robert Walpole, the queen, is sending a gift of three hundred pounds to assist Colonial Thomas Lee to rebuild his home in Virginia, which had been destroyed by fire in February, 1729. Colonel Lee was grandfather of Richard Henry Lee, "The Cicero of the House".

Mrs. Augustine Washington, mother of George, comes from Wakefield with her baby, George, to visit Mrs. Thomas Lee.

John Wesley preaching in the Colony in 1736 to the backwoodsmen and Indians.

Colonel Thomas Lee negotiates the treaty of Lancaster with the Indians in Pennsylvania in 1744. This opened the whole West to English settlement.

Richard Henry Lee writing the Westmoreland resolutions nearly ten years prior to the Declaration of Independence and the forerunner of the Declaration.

William Lee and Arthur Lee meet Dr. Samuel Johnson in London at dinner. Dr. Johnson regards them askance over his shoulder.

Richard Henry Lee moves the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, June, 1776.

Arthur Lee with Benjamin Franklin at Paris negotiating the treaty with the officials of the French capital.

Light Horse Harry Lee brings home the bride.

Minuet.

Robert E. Lee as a baby in his mother's arms, attended by an old mammy.

General Lee bids farewell to the Confederate soldiers at Appomattox, closing the Civil War.

General Lee seated in his study at Lexington, Va., a solitary figure.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. J. Ortwyn, of Los Angeles, California:

> The shortest biography: 1 Timothy 3:16—"God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

A DOOR ONCE BARRED AND BOLTED, NOW OPEN.

Current events in the Near East lend interest to these recent remarks from Dr. Samuel Zwemer, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of modern authorities on Islam:

We may say that at last the whole of Christendom faces the whole Moslem world in the open. The day of clandestine or indirect approach or contacts is past. They know and we know that Christianity and Islam face each other as rivals for world dominion. Compromise of principles is as impossible for them as it is for us. But a new sense of brotherhood and of international trust will result, if we play fair. A great and effectual door has been opened for the Gospel. A door once barred and bolted is nailed open.

The Cross of Christ is the missing link in Islam's creed; it is our glory. The life of Christ alone can elevate their moral conceptions; dare we withhold that life from them? The power of Christ alone is able to set them free in the liberty of the sons of God; shall we not proclaim to them this freedom? Their political hopes in a pan-Islamic program are ruined. But they deserve sympathy and help in their struggle for a new nationalism and the principles of democracy. The soil of their hearts has been broken up by the plowshare of God. Now is the time for sowing; tomorrow, the harvest.

THE SHAMEFUL BIRTH OF OUR MARRIAGE CANON--- ANOTHER CRITICAL EXIMINATION

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D,

Secretary of the Sanctity of Marriage Association.

IT is a notable and hopeful sign that during the almost ten years of the existence of the Sanctity of Marriage Association, after the publication of more than fourteen pamphlets in defense of the Christian doctrine of marriage, no public challenge has ever been made of any of our facts or arguments. Criticism has been confined to two courteous personal letters addressed to the Secretary by members of the late General Convention, the chancellors of two of the most important dioceses in the Church. "The rest is silence."

The only difficulty found by one of these eminent lawyers was this: He "was not clear enough about our Lord's actual teaching to maintain that the Eastern Churches are wrong in their tradition of it, even though the Latin tradition be different". The objection made by the second writer was to the use of certain words employed by the Secretary concerning the revolutionary action of the General Convention of 1868, which turned the "resolution" of the insignificant and half-educated House of Deputies of 1808 (fourteen clerical and thirteen lay), but clearly not the House of Bishops (only two, very troubled, men—the Ven. William White, of Pennsylvania, and Thomas John Claggett, of Maryland), into a canon making possible the remarriage of the "innocent party" in a case of adultery.

The particular statement objected to in the Secretary's article was that this action was taken "with refusal to refer the matter to a commission, and ignorantly, illegally, and in rejection of our pledge in 1789 to uphold both the doctrine and discipline of the mother that gave us birth." (See Preface to the Prayer Book, page 5, and Article X of the Constitution, which requires that all changes in the doctrine, and even wording, of the Prayer Book must be referred for final approval to the succeeding General Convention.) The Chancellor claimed that this statement was "unwarranted and misleading, and should be corrected".

As the difficulties felt by these two able lawyers may also be the difficulties of others, especially members of the now enlarged Joint Commission, I trust that space may be granted me for at least a portion of my replies. My answer to this second letter was in substance that the case was even worse than I had stated it. I reminded the Chancellor that all our ecclesiastical lawyers of recognized authority have held that from 1607 and 1620 up to October, 1868, this American Church was living under the inherited law of the Church of England, unbroken through twelve hundred years of national existence, as well as six hundred earlier years of primitive and Catholic tradition. That is the unanimous judgment of Dr. Hawks, Judge Hoffman, Dr. Francis Finton, and Dr. Edwin A. White, a priest of legal training and practice, and for twelve years chairman of the Committee on Canons of the House of Deputies. (See his American Church Law, 1898, and his Annotated Constitution and Canons, published by order of the House of Deputies in 1924.)

It was probably in complete ignorance of this fact that the diminutive House of Deputies (not the "General Convention", for there is no evidence, rather the contrary, that the two Bishops, without power of veto until 1811, acceded) adopted the "resolution" which attempted to revolutionize the Christian law of marriage, "as this Church had received the same from the Apostles' time". It is true that this action had no force of law, nevertheless it helped mightily through the succeeding sixty years to vitiate the moral atmosphere, already for nearly two hundred years poisoned by the low views of marriage brought to New England by the Puritans.

Let us now look forward for sixty years. Two generations have lived and passed away. Young men who knew nothing of the ancient law of God have taken their place. There have been great changes in the land—the war with Mexico, a new empire in the South, the conquest of the west to the ocean, population multiplied sixfold, the turmoil of the Civil War. In the Church also great changes. From less than 200 clergy all told to a thirteenfold increase, 2,662 clergy and 35 dioceses. But meanwhile the false resolution had been sowing its evil seed, both within the Church and beyond. Following this bad example, civil law was loosening the bonds of marriage still more. Divorce with remarriage was increasing rapidly.

The General Convention of 1868 meets in the Church of the Transfiguration in the city of New York. Alarm is felt and expressed in both Houses. In the House of Bishops a special committee (not "commission") of five is appointed on the tenth day, October 17. This consisted of the Bishop of Rhode Island (Clark), chairman; the Bishop of Connecticut (Williams), both of whom I knew and admired; Bishops Atkinson, of North Carolina; Talbot (assistant), of Indiana, and Armitage (assistant), of Wisconsin.

Five days later, October 22, they report a proposed canon, which is referred to the Committee on Canons. (See Journal, pages 208, 229, 230.) The next day, October 23, "agreeing in the views presented in the report", the committee recommends it, and the revolutionary canon is "unanimously adopted" (page 237). On October 26 a slight amendment by the House of Deputies is agreed to (page 253), and on October 28 final action of concurrence is taken with the other House (page 266).

In view of the foregoing facts it is easy to explain the readiness with which these five excellent bishops, after only five days' "study", amid the natural confusion and demands of a large body of clergy and laity, brought in their unanimous report which, after another day, is "unanimously adopted" by the House, namely, that the revolutionary "resolution" of 1808 should now be crystallized into a canon with all the sanction of law.

All of these bishops had probably never known any law on the matter other than this resolution, which was not law, but only the rash and ignorant act of a diminutive House of Deputies. The oldest, Bishop Atkinson (69), was only a baby when the fatal resolution of 1808 was adopted. Bishop Clark (56) was not born till four years later; Bishop Talbot (52) eight years later; Bishop Williams (51) nine years later, while Bishop Armitage (38) was not born till twenty-two years had passed. They never knew anything different.

And what, let us ask, are the only reasons which the five bishops give for their recommendation. First of all, that "they are impressed by the attention which the subject has received in several of the diocesan conventions, and the numerous publications upon it by both clergymen and laymen" (page 229). No mention whatever is made of the character of these publications, nor of the weight of their arguments, but only "the importance of action by this General Convention". In brief, something must be done, that is all. This is the sum of their reasons.

Nor is this the worst. In their next sentence they proceed to quote with complete confidence "the opinion which the General Convention (?) in the year 1808, pronounced giving it verbatim, namely: "Resolved, That it is the sense of this Church that it is inconsistent with a law of God, and the ministers of this Church shall not unite in matrimony [italicized words sic] any person who is divorced, unless it be on account of the other party having been guilty of adultery." Their imagination as to divine law, custom, tradition and "the ancient canons" (see the solemn question addressed to them at their consecration, Prayer Book, page 526, did not extend farther back than to the city of Baltimore in 1808, nor even to the revisors of 1789 and the solemn promise that still stood in their Prayer Book (page 6, Preface). Surely here was bathos! The next day, October 23, the proposed canon, with the proviso of the uneducated and turbulent House of thirty-seven Deputies, which so alarmed Bishop White, was reported back from the Committee on Canons and "unanimously adopted" (page 237).

This report of the bishops' special committee was the fullest and the only one that gave any reasons for their action; even borrowed reasons, from a House of Deputies so insignificant, and concerning whose history they seemed to be wholly ignorant! Let us now turn to the House of Deputies, where conditions are no different. On October 22, Dr. Adams, of Nashotah, offered a proposed canon, and on the twenty-fourth the Committee on Canons proposed one of their own, but both contained the fatal proviso (pages 105, 106, 122). On the same day the House referred the canon of the bishops to its own committee (pages 125, 126), and two days later the committee recommended concurrence with the bishops, introducing for the first time that very elusive phrase, "the innocent party". Thereupon it was reported to the bishops and by them finally adopted on October 28 (pages 139, 253, 266), after eleven days of such careless consideration.

Here we have the unvarnished tale of the conception and birth of this revolutionary canon. Neither reasons nor arguments are given for its adoption. And if we consult the verbatim record of the debates in the House of Deputies (providentially ordered by the House, and preserved to us in bound volumes in the Public Library of New York and that of the General Theological Seminary), we shall fail to find there any reasoned argument from Holy Scripture, or logic, or history, in defense of the novel proposal. In fact, one is impressed with the very slight consequence attached to the question.

"Let the ancient customs prevail", was a great maxim of the early Church. This was not because the customs were ancient, but because uninterrupted custom through all the centuries "from the beginning", as St. John puts it so often, is the best possible evidence of truth; as in the case of the two great sacraments of the Gospel, Baptism and the Holy Eucharist. It is the same great principle of "continuing stedfastly" in the apostles' doctrine, etc. (Acts 2:42), which is given in the Preface of the Ordinal; namely, that "from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of ministers in Christ's Church". It is the principle of "continuity" underlying our belief also in Holy Writ, as expressed in the sixth and twentieth of the Thirty-nine Articles.

Only a few words will be necessary from my reply to the letter of the Chancellor of the Diocese of X, whose chief or only difficulty in accepting the plea of our Association was "the tradition of the Eastern Churches"—"the changeless East"—in regard to divorce and remarriage. I referred him to the history of that break with tradition, as given by Oscar Watkins in Holy Matrimony (Macmillan Co.), and as summarized by Bishop Hall in Divorce in America (Macmillan Co., pages 117-134), which found its nemesis in the victorious attacks of polygamous and cruel Mohammedanism in the seventh and following centuries. In fact, the departure of the Eastern Churches from the ancient path is well illustrated in our own case; in our new environment in the West, with outnumbering dissenters, all committed to the loose and unscriptural ideas of Luther and Calvin and Milton. In America it has taken only a hundred and twenty years to establish in the minds of our own people an utterly false tradition, unknown still to every other branch of the Anglican Church—a much shorter time than it took in the Eastern Church.

In the East another five hundred years pass, and in the eleventh century, by the inevitable logic of the case, looser ideas were adopted, so that Watkins is compelled to write: "It is not too much to say that at the present day [1895] the Church allows divorce for well-nigh 'every cause'" (page 317). Only thirty-three years have passed since that was written, and "the mills of God have ground" out the inescapable result in the vast empire of Russia by another power as cruel as that of the Turk.

Here is solemn warning to the world, as well as to America. A single rift in the divine dam of the moral law, just as truly as a single rift in the Church's faith in the Incarnation, leads on logically to the mighty flood that ignores all law and ends in disaster. There is no logical resting place between the easiest of all methods of getting rid of husband or wife and the fifty others provided by our State Legislatures, some harder to endure and to prove than adultery.

No wonder that St. Augustine in the fourth century should write: "If by the adultery of a spouse the marriage bond is dissolved, the absurdity follows—that the woman may be loosed from her bond by her unchastity; and if she is loosed she shall not be an adulteress if she sin with another man; which is as foolish a thing as could be said" (Comm. on Romans, 7:2, 3; see also Watkins Holy Matrimony, page 334). No wonder that the great Old Catholic historian, Dollinger, wrote that to suppose that our Lord could have uttered such a sentiment is "inconceivable".

Nevertheless, our canon, alone among all the Churches of the Anglican Communion and of the whole Eastern Church, contains this "inconceivable" falsehood. Thus also, as no Roman Rota ever dared to do, it has been preaching since 1868 that holy matrimony is not the complete and absolute condition and "holy state" which our Prayer Book declares it to be unequivocally—"for better or for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, till death" —but only a temporary contract until a civil court declares it sundered; in brief, "trial" marriage. Let us pray that, not only in our own Communion, but among "all who profess and call themselves Christians", this "inconceivable thing may be forever done away.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The name of Captain I. B. Edwards, Deputy Governor of the Province of Cotabato in the Philippine Islands, will be familiar to many as a long-time friend of the Church's work, especially of its more recently established mission among the Tiruray tribe. To Captain Edwards a Tiruray man, recently gave free expression to some of his ideas about Americans, which Captain Edwards has reported in the "Philippine Magazine". Underneath the quaint humor, there is, for those who can see it, a serious viewpoint, which does not take for granted the racial superiority so easily assumed by Americans. It may be added that the Tiruray are superior to most if not all of the surrounding tribes, and are likely to become their leaders, for which reason the Church's work among them is of special importance.

Said the Tiruray man to Captain Edwards:

When the Spaniards were driven from Mindanao by Americans, the Moros began killing Filipinos and Tiruray. The Americans heard about this cruelty and came to defeat the Moros and save us all. They did this effectively and just in time. There would have been none of us left in another year under the Moros.

It is not known why the Americans took the trouble to thus help us. They say they just wanted to and, although this seems an improbable motive, we always admit it when in conference with them, as there is apparently no more adequate motive.

All Americans think they are superior. We do not think so. It seems impossible, but what can one say in a discussion? All tangible evidence supports their contentions —machines, fine clothes, an abundance of food, et cetera, against our inexpressible sense of a superior realization of things as they really are.

They can sometimes be as polite as we are, having a word for "tabia" (excuse), never passing in front of one without permission, not eating until one's companions are ready, and in many ways showing as good custom as we do.

They treat women as we do persons of rank, carefully saluting them, helping them complimentarily when there is no need of it, never permitting them to carry things, and always showing them a smiling face. How they must love them! Of course this would be all wrong if their women were like ours, but we like to see it, and wish our women might be so treated.

All Tiruray like Americans, although they seem mostly crazy. Crazy people are always liked. Americans do not get angry at little things, easily, as do our own people, the Moros or Filipinos, but when they do get angry they are really awful. Except when trying to buy some valuable thing, they do not haggle. They appreciate little things you do for them. They are brave, but not aggressive, and they know how and when to forgive. These are the things Tiruray like. We Tiruray want to be real Filipinos, like the teachers from the North, but the real reason we want to be so is so that we may get along with the Americans as they do.

PLAYING THE SOVIET GAME.

Those who are anxious to develop business relations with Russia, which up to now have been conducted in considerable volume on a cash or barter basis, might recall an old proverb, "A liar should have a good memory". In the matter of Zionism these pocket sympathizers with the Bolshevists in their worldwide campaign against Great Britain forget the circumstances of British rule in Palestine.

Within a few years of the armistice and the Balfour pledge of sympathetic support to the Zionist movement in 1919, the British put their Palestine mandate on a genuine peace basis. The French mandate next door in Syria was still administered by an army of occupation but the British withdrew their troops, including the military police and established a native police force of some thousand men with British officers. This and a well founded detachment of aeroplanes was the total force for preserving law and order.

It is already forgotten that this gesture was hailed with enthusiasm all over the world and particularly at Geneva. Neither Washington nor any one in Congress had a word to say nor did a single Jewish organization of any kind whatever denounce the policy as dangerous. It was compared with the action of the British Government within a few years of the Boer War and all its ill-feeling, in conferring autonomous government on the Boers themselves in South Africa. Not only the Transvaal and the Orange Free State were turned over to a majority rule certain to be Cape Dutch, but the English colonies of Natal and the Cape of Good Hope were added to the Dominion.

This large-minded policy had effects so admirable that the Boers and the English Colonists were trusted to handle the conflict with Germany in Africa. The whole world thought that a similar policy in Palestine was justified. It counted without Moscow. There are three hundred million Mohammedans in the British Empire and unrest was stirred up amongst them. But the Soviets this time had the assistance of Jewish sympathizers, especially in America, and of American newspapers who chose to take offense because the Young Plan was not unconditionally accepted by tht British Government.

Those who think to curry favor with the Soviets by suppotring such a campaign against the British Empire might well remember another proverb, "He who sups with the Devil should have a long spoon".—Selected.

PHI BETA KAPPA.

In Recognition—Character and Love of Learning and In Further Consideration of Promise of Efficiency or Of Distinction Already Attained.

In Articulo Mortis.

A bullet from the Nicaraguan jungle tore through the throat of Captain Robert S. Hunter, of the Marines. He sprayed a machine gun at his enemy. A second bullet crushed his chest. He fell, and whispering to his men, "Don't go back. Go ahead!" he died.

What last spark flares in moribund minds? What is man's exit line, as he walks off the stage of life into the Wings? Anticipation? Charles Mathews, famous English actor, said quietly, "I am ready". Goethe prophesied, "More light!" Byron greeted the abating of his life's fitful fever with "I must sleep now". Stonewall Jackson said in a clear voice, "Let's cross over the river and rest in the shade of the trees". Ecstatic, Daniel Frohman heralded the Lusitania's sullen plunge with, "I am starting on the most wonderful adventure!"

Do some depart with a brave jest on their lips? Said Madame de Pompadour to the priest leaving her deathbedside, "A moment, Father; we'll go away together."

Does the ruling passion still hold sway? Wolfe, victorious at Quebec, cried, "What, do they run already? Then I die happy!" The Earl of Chesterfield, quintessence of courtesy and breeding, received a visitor that last morning, and ordered his valet to "Give Dayrolles a chair". On July 4, y826, fiftieth anniversary of the signing of of the Declaration of Independence, died John Adams, second President of the United States. Said the patriot, "Thomas Jefferson still survives". But Thomas Jefferson died that very morning: "I resign my soul to God, my daughter to my country." Seven years after Gettysburg, Robert E. Lee died, crying, "Tell Hill he must come up!"

Does the moment override all else? Caesar challenged, "You, too, Brutus!" Mirabeau begged, "Let me die to the sound of delicious music!" Washington murmured, "It is well." Sir Walter Raleigh ordered the hesitant axeman, "Strike!"

And One soothed the mourners huddled at His feet, "It is finished".—Richmond News Leader.

WOOD-PULP MAGAZINE.

"Always remember that we are getting out a magazine for the Great American Moron." These were not cynical words, but official instructions from the editor to a writer on the staff of one of the "wood-pulp magazines" that infest the news stands the country over. The writer, who has now risen to The New Republic, discusses, in the issue of August 28, the quality and the almost incredible quantity of these vigorous journalistic weeds, stories of sport, the West, adventure, air, war, sport, crime, "love", confession and the like, which have circulations carrying from 75,000 to 600,000 a week or a fortnight, mainly from news stand sales. They have small subscription lists and carry little advertising. A fortnightly which reached a mere 50,000 died almost immediately. "Wood-pulp literature," says the writer, "caters exclusively to the adolescent mind," almost repulsively moral on the surface, but full of suggestion and the harmful influence of unreality. The detective story magazines are the intellectual kings of the tribe, and their circulation is smaller. "Occasionally a really good story does find its way in. There are even some writers whose work can be read by an adult without nausea. But, as a rule, if you find a yarn of genuine literary merit in a wood-pulp magazine—well, it is probably because the author did not know enough to send it elsewhere."

SAVING OUR SUNDAYS!

A Successful Endeavour.

A popular handibook, bristling with facts and figures on the Sunday question, has just been issued by the Lord's Day Observance Society. It is entitled Our Year Book.

The forty pages are full of heartening reports of the Society's recent successes up and down the country in opposition to enencroachments on the Lord's Day such as Sunday games, Sunday cinemas, Sunday concerts, Sunday prizefights, Sunday dirt track races, etc. The latest attempt to secure the Sunday opening of theatres and music halls has met with unceasing opposition.

The progress of the Come-to-Church Campaign is reported—including the recent observance of Come-to-Church Sunday, when in 5,061 churches special sermons were preached emphasizing the religious uses of our Sundays. The latest development, the acquisition of new headquarters for the Society's expanding work, is also recorded.

No one can read Our Year Book without feeling (1) that, notwithstanding many adverse factors, the battle for our Sundays is by no means lost, and (2) that the Churches have a fighting force in the Lord's Day Observanse Society which after ninety-eight years is justifying its existence more than ever. Our Year Book is published at sixpence, post free. Address: 22, Red Lion-square, London, W. C. 1.

Book Reviews

BETWEEN THE DESERT AND THE SEA: By I. Lilias Trotter. Cloth. 8vo.; Pp. 63. Published by Marshall, Morgan and Scott, London, England. Issued in Association with the Algiers Mission Band.

A beautiful presentation of life in Northern Africa, recalling the pirate days of terror and the monontonous life of Mohammedan staidness and religiosity. Illuminated with superb colored plates, matchlessly producing the scenes, customs and manners of the people. This is not a guide book, but the personal relating of events and experiences incidental to residence in that contrastive land of religious bigotry and aspiring civilization. This charming volume deserves American circulation; and we have but to estimate the exchange to ascertain the probable cost. No doubt it may be had of any book-seller.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

DREAM CARGOES: By David W. Cade. Cloth. Pp. 64. Published by Dean and Company, New York City. Price, $1.00.

The fact that the first edition of this charming book of poetry was sold before publication, is the guarantee of its acceptance by the poetry-reading public. One is not so much impressed by the framing of these poems as that the writer has thrown upon the screen a portraiture of his own soul. And we all love this element in literature. Here is life unvarnished by the conventional exactitudes of social modes. Human nature in simple revelation of its genuineness is herein disclosed.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

ANGLO-CATHOLICISM.

Mr. Editor:

I am today in receipt of a letter from a leading layman of a very large Eastern parish, which further illustrates in a striking way the character of correspondence reaching me from all sections of the country and which speaks for itself:

August 27, 1929.

Hon. C. L. Marsilliot,
928 Exchange Building,
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Fellow Churchman:

It is with much concern that I view the alien doctrines and extreme formalism that are being fastened upon our rational and beautiful ritual by the "Anglo-Catholic" party.

The doctrines and practices set forth in the Book of Common Prayer are far more beautiful and impressive in their Christlike simplicity than all of the superstitious and elaborate ceremonials being introduced by this disloyal group.

The apathy exhibited by the laity in this period of chaos, when the unity and very life of the Protestant Episcopal Church is at stake, is astonishing and deplorable.

The response to the warning sent out by your Society, judging by my own indifference and that in my immediate circle, was doubtless rather meagre in the circumstances. Here I hasten to apologize, for I trusted that the conditions which you set forth were remote and impossible; but I have been rudely awakened to find that your warning was not the ranting of an unduly apprehensive and radical element, but the logical expression of loyal Churchmen who know the facts. These facts have been translated in terms of personal experience, for the church to which I have given my best for thirty years has been snatched away by this ritualistic group, and its identity as a Protestant Episcopal Church has vanished. The "Anglo-Catholic" party, and especially a quasi-secret society, the "Confraternity of Unity", in their fanaticism for unity (unity of Catholics only) are bringing about chaos and even disruption in our own dear church. I presume to observe that if unity be destroyed in our great middle, conservative body of more or less like-minded constituents, the possibility of achieving unity of the extreme Protestant section and the Roman section of the Christian Church is made remote to the vanishing point.

Unity, I believe, can be achieved only through a high regard for personal preference. If Christ is the inspiration and the ideal, regardless of the angle of approach, we have unity, provided that there is no meddling of one following with another.

The "Anglo-Catholics" are determined that their Roman doctrines and practices be followed, even if it means to us a forsaking of our mode of worship, dear to us because of heredity, personal inclination and God-given intelligence. This thrusting of alien practices upon us is a disregard of our personal preference and it is meddling. It may be Catholic, but it is not Christian.

They aim to set up, and do set up, doctrines and practices which are not in accordance with the Ten Commandments, the full example and teaching of Christ, nor with the usages and doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

In order to make their use of images and relics square with the Ten Commandments, they hold that the Second Commandment is inoperative and that it applied only to the early Hebrews. Likewise the Fourth Commandment is not applicable, for there is no longer in practice a Sabbath Day. If that position is maintained, then God spoke only to the Hebrews when He said, "I am the Lord thy God", and He is not our God at all.

The command of Christ to preach, oft repeated and practiced by Him, is being neglected and disregarded by the disproportionate emphasis on the Sacraments. The "appeal to the eye" method by the use of images and brilliant trappings is, in addition to a violation of the Second Commandment, an abandonment of the example of Christ to preach and of His example of simplicity and informality.

The Protestant Episcopal Church, in its interpretation of the "Higher Law", sets forth doctrines and practices subscribed to at the last General Convention. To these the Clergy, when ordained, pledge and vow to conform. So long as these laws are a part of the doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and are contained in the Prayer Book, they cannot honorably be disobeyed. To teach and practice anything contrary is a monstrous absurdity. This serious and insidious practice cannot help but bring chaos in the Church and distress to the minds of Episcopalians.

This disregard of our laws has taken place in my own church. Auricular confession to the Priest is urged and pressure is brought to bear to secure it. Communion has been denied, in one instance at least, to those who believe that fasting is not necessary to a proper Communion. Adoration and Reservation of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper are practiced. The laity are denied the cup in the Eucharistic Service. Invocation of the Saints is practiced. Introduction of images and relics has begun and is being further planned. In short, the exponents of "Anglo-Catholicism" are not bound by the laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to which they made a solemn vow and promise to conform.

The responsibility of those in authority, in the face of complaints, is being shirked, no doubt in the interest of tranquility and unity; but disruption can be forestalled only by immediate reasonable enforcement of the laws of the Church. The longer the delay, the more serious the results.

What has happened in my Church will doubtless occur in other Protestant Episcopal Churches until the laity awaken and assert their right to be consulted and heard in matters that concern their security and felicity. This can best be accomplished by a rigid preservation of the most beautiful, rational, well-balanced liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Please accept my application for membership in the Protestant Episcopal Church League, which aims not to inflict our views on others, but to worship in our own churches in our own way.

Faithfully yours,

_____."

It may be that expressions of this character are meaningless and unworthy of serious consideration on the part of Bishops and Clergy, but, judging from their number and the widely separated communities from which they come, it looks as though the time is fast approaching when the great body of communicants of the Church will no longer stand idly by and see it taken away from them.

C. L. Marsilliot.

Memphis, Tenn.

NEW CHURCH FOR LUTON, ENGLAND.

Mr. Editor:

Among the many problems of Church extension in England, a very great one is the rapid growth of Luton, Beds, and the necessity of the Church to keep pace with her spiritual news.

Three years ago the Iron Church of St. Andrew's in the Parish of Christ Church, stood alone in the cornfields, approached by a cinder path from the Biscot Road. Now it is in the centre of a rapidly developing neighborhood of small houses and the need of a permanent church is urgent.

Plans for a new church have been made by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, the Architect of Liverpool Cathedral, and the estimated cost is £15,000. Of this sum about £8,000 has been given or conditionally promised.

The committee feels that there may be readers of The Southern Churchman who formerly lived in Luton and would like to help.

Any donation from such well wishers would be gratefully received and should be sent either of us—Rev. J. W. Woodhouse, Christ Church Vicarage, Luton; or, Rev. T. H. Pyke, Priest-in-Charge, St. Andrew's House, Biscot Road, Luton.

LINCOLN'S DREAM.

Mr. Editor:

When all the North was rejoicing at Lee's surrender, Mr. Lincoln called a Cabinet meeting.

Stanton was late. Mr. Lincoln told the Cabinet that he was troubled because of a dream he had the previous night. It was the third time he had had that dream. That he was on an open boat at sea alone—a black night—drifting! The first time he had that dream was followed by the Bull Run defeat. The next time he had it was followed by some similar disaster. And now he had had it the third time!

That night he was shot.

These two incidents might well have been included in my article.

P. O. Box 405. S. A. Ashe.
Raleigh, N. C.

THE GOSPEL OF DIVINE PERSONALITY.

Mr. Editor:

My book, entitled "The Gospel of Divine Personality", was issued last year. I feel that the standpoint of the book is such as to commend it to Evangelical readers. As a series of devotional studies on the Gospel of St. John, it elicits the following comment in an otherwise appreciative notice by a modernistic reviewer (in the "Anglican Theological Review" for July, 1929): "Unfortunately the treatment is marred by a strictly literalistic attitude towards the Fourth Gospel. Even St. John 5:4 is restored to the text." (This refers to the words about the angel going down at a certain seasin into the Pool of Bethesda, and troubling the water, which passage is placed by the Revisers of 1883 in the margin; it is they who have removed it from the text.) But, as my reviewer goes on to say, I have "restored" these words to the text "on the ground that the MSS. which lack it (among them are Eleph and B.,—i. e., the Sinaitic and the Vatican MSS.),—"are not the soundest and most reliable!"

I am prepared to defend my conviction that these two manuscripts—Aleph and B.—so referred to by Westcott and Hort and the New Testament Revisers of 1883, are not among the soundest and most reliable manuscripts of the

New Testament, as Dean Burgon has so convincingly demonstrated. (I wish every one would read Philip Mauro's, "Which Version? Authorized or Revised?")

With all good wishes to you and The Southern Churchman, which is doing such splendid work in the defense of the authority of God's Word Written.

Wm. S. Bishop.

Washington, D. C.

Church Intelligence

National Junior Brotherhood of Saint Andrew Convention.

Geneva, New York.—A convention unique in the annals of the Church took place at Hobart College September 5-8, when 150 delegates, most of them between the ages of ten and eighteen years, attended the first National Junior Brotherhood of Saint Andrew Convention, which took "Growth" as its keynote. The allegiance of the youth of the land to Christ was emphasized again and gain in the speeches, the addresses and the informal talks of the lads themselves.

The convention was the first one in which the Junior Brotherhood met separate from the Senior Brotherhood in annual gathering. The delegates represented many different dioceses as far-flung as Maine to California and the Church in foreign lands was present in a Japanese delegate, one from Yukon, Canada, while a delegation of five sturdy lads came from Toronto, Canada. Two Bishops, the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, and the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop of Northern Indiana, addressed the delegates, a number of clergymen came with their parish delegations, and Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, of Washington, D. C., president of the National Brotherhood of Saint Andrew, and Mr. Leon P. Palmer, its general secretary, and a number of other National Council members of the Brotherhood were present as interested observers, and helpful in advice and suggestion, although they had no direct part in the management of the convention. All the officials and managers of the convention were men under thirty-one years of age, who had been connected with Brotherhood work in some way.

The general chairman of the convention was Russell Lamson, of Waterloo, Iowa; Donald Gerow, of Washington, D. C., was its business manager, and Douglas C. Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, acted as athletic director. These officers, with the addition of John W. Lord, Jr., of Philadelphia, made up the committee in charge of the convention.

Shortly after the convention opened, the delegates elected J. Osgood Hart, of Detroit, President of the convention, and Compton Walsh, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, Secretary. John Fumio Yamamoto, of Tokyo, and John Fredson, of Yukon, Canada, were elected honorary presidents of the convention.

Michigan sent the largest delegation to the convention. One of the youngest delegates was Wilfred Penny, of the Diocese of Long Island, Church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, eleven years old, known as the boy evangelist, due to the fact that he has preached several times over the radio and often occupies the out of doors pulpit in front of a church.

The delegates lived in the college dormitories and the communal life was one of the inspiring features of the convention.

The stress of the convention was not so much on set speeches as on the conferences which succeeded each address, in which the youngest lads, as well as the older boys, were encouraged to talk and give their views on the subjects just presented.

Notable events in the spiritual life of the convention were the twilight services with junior boys reading the lessons and prayers, the morning chapels held by the chaplain, the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, of Vicksburg, Penn., the final devotional exercises at night held on the big campus of Hobart College under the stars and the constant emphasis by all the speakers on "Prayer and Service", as the underlying aim of the Brotherhood movement.

The crusading spirit of the Brotherhood was portrayed in the organized pilgrimage around Geneva on Saturday, September 7, when one hundred lads distributed personally to the people of that town 20,000 cards of invitation asking them to attend divine service on convention Sunday at Trinity Church, Geneva.

Every morning Holy Communion has been celebrated in the college chapel with practically the entire convention communicating. The celebrants were the Rev. Irving McGrew; the Rev. Fred G. Williams, the Rev. I. Boyd Coxe, and the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, Chaplain of the Convention.

At the opening banquet of the convention, held in Hobart College dining hall on Thursday night, September 5, a letter of greeting from the Most Rev. John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop, was read to the delegates by Russell Lamson, general chairman of the convention. It was written in long hand by the Presiding Bishop from his summer home at Chester, Nova Scotia.

"Mr. Russell O. Lamson.

(Dear friend: Kindly read the message written below to the Juniors, and call their attention to the fact that I have written it with my own hand out of a heart of love for you and them.—J. G. M.)

My Dear Boys, Young and Old:

I regret that I cannot be with you in body on this great occasion. I am with you, however, in spirit and love. I am remembering you in my daily devotions. I am praying for you, one and all. Your convention key-note, 'Growth', is peculiarly pertinent and appropriate.

The most human and gripping words we have regarding Jesus are those telling us of His boyhood growth, 'Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man'.

He grew in Body. He grew in Mind. He grew in Soul.

This threefold growth I covet for you all. Thousands of times I have prayed for it on boys as I have laid my hands upon them in Confirmation, and besought God to give them 'Daily Increase'.

May the Blessed Father bestow this great gift of growth upon you individually and collectively, and make you strong physically, wise mentally, and holy spiritually.

And 'May the God of Peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ the Great Shepherd of the Sheep through the blood of the Everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will; working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever, Amen'.

Affectionately, your friend and fellow-worker,

John G. Murray."

The convention was welcomed by the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, Bishop of Western New York, who spoke on "Personal Growth for Leadership". Bishop Ferris outlined the necessity for stressing the spiritual in leadership, especially when dealing with young boys.

Charles H. Tuttle, of New York City, United States District Attorney for Southern New York, another speaker at the banquet, declared that the greatest danger that can come today to the American people is that for the lack of inspired leadership they may be crushed beneath the mere mass of things.

District Attorney Tuttle declared that the two greatest adventures are those of the American Commonwealth and the adventure of the Christian religion, and pointed out that there are common bonds between these two adventures. Mr. Tuttle urged the youth present to preserve their reverence for religion as the foundation of their citizenship. He expressed the belief also that faith was at its floodtide today, although perhaps not so doctrinal, but none the less sincere and real.

One of the interesting speakers Friday morning was Irwin C. Johnson, Detroit, director of boys' work of the Diocese of Michigan. He took as his topic, "Charting One's Self for Growth". The plan for growth advocated by Mr. Johnson and adopted by the boys of the convention was a fourfold formula, embodying equal stressing of the intellectual, the physical, the social and the spiritual based on what must have been the experience of the boy, Jesus, with suggestions as to how the individual boy might rate himself on each of these four divisions.

A vivid speech was also made Friday morning by Douglas Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, Athletic Director of the Convention. Mr. Turnbull, who was a famous athlete in his college days at Johns Hopkins, took as his topic the "Vitalizing of the Devotional Life". He advocated four special elements in the devotional life, prayer, intelligent Bible reading, meditation and worship.

The delegates were greatly thrilled by the appearance of the Rev. John D. D. Hall, of New York City, known as "Daddy Hall", at the Friday twilight service. This venerable missionary of the city streets, who speaks frequently in Wall Street, captivated the boys with his evangelistic speeches and his fervent appeals to them to lead a Christ-like life.

At the regular Friday night session the speakers were the Rev. John Hart, chaplain to the Episcopal students of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, who spoke on "The Athlete's Need of Christ". He was followed by John Fredson, an Alaskan Indian, who accompanied Archdeacon Stuck on his memorable climb of Mt. McKinley. The young Indian, who is a student at the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., described the growth of Christianity in Alaska.

On Saturday, in addition to conferences and the organized pilgrimage around Geneva, an address was given by the Rev. Charles L. Lathrop, executive secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service.

At the service on Sunday at Trinity Church, the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, Bishop of Northern Indiana, preached a sermon on "The Home and Family", in which he declared that the family is both the germ and the foundation, not only of the Church, but also of the state of all that is worthwhile and enduring in our civilization.

"Not only is it true that the Church and the state have grown out of the family as far as past history is concerned," said the Bishop, "but it is equally true that Church and state depend on the family for continued existence in the future.

"The purpose of all authority, whether of parents, of government, or of the Church," he concluded, "is to train for liberty. And if we are going to keep our liberty, we must respect authority. But it must be an authority for which we can have respect. Otherwise, it is tyranny and we revolt from it. But on the other hand, we want to have our own way, regardless of law and order, then we have chaos and nobody is free. In other words, it works both ways. We must have the proper balance of liberty and authority. Our generation has largely thrown away the liberty for which our fathers fought and so we have much lawlessness. Therefore, your generation has before it the task of recovering the liberty that ours has lost and thus restore order and stability."

At the farewell service of the convention, held in Hobart College Chapel at 4 P. M., Sunday, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Ernest V. R. Stires, of Bellerose, Long Island. That service and vision give the abundant life was stressed in his sermon and he outlined the ways in which it could be found in the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew.

In the closing hours of the convention on Sunday, a resolution was passed asking the National Council of the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew to admit representatives of the Junior Brotherhood to the Council. Also a memorial was addressed to the House of Bishops, meeting at Atlantic City in October, asking that body to request parishes to pay more attention to work among young men and to assist the Senior and Junior Brotherhood in every way possible.

E. E. Poe.

Greer Club Association, Inc.

Greer Club has moved to its new address at 46 West Ninety-Sixth Street. New York City.

This is a Residential Club for Episcopal Girl Students coming to New York to study, giving them a place at which to register and to which mail may be addressed, where they may receive and entertain their friends under proper chaperonage, and where they can obtain good meals at reasonable rates.

It was founded at the request of Episcopal students, by members of the Episcopal Church.

The Bishop of the Diocese is its head, being Chairman of the Advisory Board.

Greer Club supplies a long felt need and many letters of appreciation come from former students, parents and guardians. Students have come to Greer Club from almost every State in the Union, from England, Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Panama, and Honolulu. They have come to study art, music, medicine; and to take library, secretarial, and kindergarten courses; some working for the degrees of A. M. or Ph. D.

It is open all the year round.

The activities are many and varied, Student Receptions, Holiday Entertainments, Dances and Sunday Suppers. Afternoon Tea is served daily without charge to students.

Reservations should be made early by girls who wish accommodations, as the number of rooms is limited.

Transients are accommodated during vacation and holiday seasons.

Address: The Social Director, Mrs. Agnes D. Oakley.

BISHOP ROWE SENDS THANKS.

Seattle, Wash.,
September 2, 1929.

To
The Southern Churchman Company,
Richmond, Va.

Dear Southern Churchman:

How much I am indebted to you for the "Southern Churchman", and for your personal, gracious and helpful consideration. Through the Southern Churchman you have raised the "cut" of approximately $2,700, which I had to make on the salaries of the "workers" in Alaska. To make that —to do it in that way—was like tearing my heart out. But I saw no other way. And that you should so take it to your heart, and appeal to the dear "Southern Churchman" friends, simply gets me. I am yours forever, though I have ever been a lover of the Churchman.

When I got your telegram assuring me that the "cut" was met through your splendid appeal, my heart overflowed. Thank you very much, and how little that expresses my gratitude. While I knew that our workers would understand, unselfishly face the cut in their salaries, yet I am so relieved that they will not have to bear the sacrifice.

Your return of my check for five dollars for the "Churchman" leaves me speechless, for I love the Churchman, and would do anything to support it; and if I can, at any time, be of any help to you, and it, please give me the pleasure.

With my best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
P. T. ROWE.

Princeton Retains Evangelical Standards.

The new board of control of Princeton Theological Seminary, on September 3, according to an Associated Press report, issued a statement addressed to the alumni, students and friends of the institution, declaring that "There will be no departure from the conservative doctrinal position maintained for more than one hundred years".

The Seminary is reopening this year under the single board of control establishtd by the Presbyterian General Assembly in place of the dual control by two boards.

A group formerly connected with the institution, who objected to the single board of control, recently announced the organization of a ntw seminary in Philadelphia, to be known as Westminster.

The Princeton Seminary statement issued and signed by the Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of the Seminary, was issued in connection with an executive meeting of the new board.

"Not only is the traditional and recognized position of the Seminary for conservative theology and strict evangelical teaching to be continued in loyalty to the infallible Word of God and the standards of the reformed faith", says the statement, "but the reputation of the Seminary for sound Biblical scholarship is to be maintained."

Items—Here and There.

Jerusalem has a Hebrew University, opened a few years ago. During its last session it had 241 students. It is soon to begin the erection of another building, in addition to those already in use, which will cost about $500,000, given by Mrs. Sol Rosenbloom in memory of her late husband. Feeling as the Jews do about Jerusalem, it would seem that young men from all parts of the world would be attracted to this University, if it is developed so that it will give the educational advantages needed today by young men who look forward to taking places of importance in the world.

Ambassador Charles G. Dawes, representative of the United States at the Court of England, has taken a stand for which he is to be greatly commended. In entertaining guests at his home in London, contrary to all the customs of that country, he has announced that he will serve no liquor. He has taken this stand, not because his own country has a prohibition law, but from a personal and a higher principle. He is reported to have said: "I do not serve liquor in my home in America, why should I do so in England?"—The Presbyterian of the South.

The Bishop of Ripon left England on August 14 with a party of twenty British clergy and ministers invited by the German Council of the World Alliance to return the visit paid to the British Council last year by a similar number of German ministers. The program included attendance at the annual meeting of the German Council, and an inspection of religious and philanthropic institutions throughout Germany.

Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils.—Duke of Wellington.

"My friend, if the Church fails in its ministry to the world, then the rest of us might as well close up shop."—Lloyd George.

Harvard University recently graduated 1,957 students and reported the receipt of gifts and bequests of $13,500,000 for the year. How many distinctly Christian schools receive such sums or have so many students? And if schools that are not distinctly Christian (many of them being notoriously anti-Christian) receive the lion's share of the money and the students, what will the outcome be? What will be the effect upon the eternal destiny of those who come under the influence of such schools?—The Baptist Advance.

The Roman Catholics are waking up to the missionary opportunities among the Negroes. Recently a class of 500 Negroes were confirmed in Chicago. The present priest of that church has confirmed 1,800 in the last seven years.—Western Recorder.

A list of the historic sites of Palestine, in which archaeologists may have an interest, has been drafted by the

Palestine Government to be protected by law; the list comprises 3,000 sites.

Mahatma Gandhi has taken the leadership in the formation of a very strong committee to push the movement for prohibition throughout India.

St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., will give a course in religion, which the teaching is to be done by representatives of the three general types to be studied. Father Clifford, of Columbia University, will teach the Catholic religion; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Jewish; and Dr. Wm. P. Merrill, of the Brick Presbyterian Church, the Protestant.

The Society for Christian Life Among German Blind is printing what is said to be the first complete German Bible for the blind. The Bible is being published in the Stuttgart translation and will consist of twenty-seven volumes. It will be distributed to the blind free of cost.

Scotch Presbyterianism, divided since the Disruption of 1843, will become one body again when the union of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church is consummated next October.

Masonic bodies are establishing funds in Texas universities for the education of worthy students who are sons and daughters of Masons. Baylor University received $5,000 toward such a fund.

The Western Newspaper Union, serving 11,000 newspapers, will not hereafter use any joke stories whose point is the violation of the prohibition law.

"Every Catholic must take account of the Protestant peril in Italy today," said the Osservatore Romano, the newspaper used for official pronouncements of the Vatican. The article warned that Protestantism, which is "against the soul and tradition of the Italian people", is working with "ardor and tenacity" in Italy and disposing of immense capital. Special mention was made of the British Bible Society and the Methodist Church. The greatest assaults of Protestant propaganda, it was said, are made in the south, and that "of the eleven dioceses of Abruzzi only two were immune from infraction".

The Detroit News says, "Roy Chapman Andrews confesses to an error of 85,000,000 years in estimating the age of the dinosaur eggs he found last summer."

The Hungarian poet, Lorant, addressing a fashionable woman's club in the city of Budapest, highly praised the virtues of trial marriages. The ladies, shouting denials that any woman in the country could be found to agree to such a marriage, threw the pet lecturer out of the hall and then destroyed all the papers he had left behind him. He is now convinced that the subject was not popular with them.

Numerous objects dating from the early bronze age were excavated from beneath the floor of a limestone cave north of Jerusalem by Prof. William F. Bade, dean of the Pacific School of Religion at Berkeley, Cal., who is obtaining important data relative to the character and customs of the pre-Semitic inhabitants of Palestine 3,000 or 3,500 years B. C. The cave from which the pottery and other articles were taken has been buried since the days of the Hebrew prophet Amos, who lived about 750 B. C. Pieces of pottery, jar-handle stamps and seals bear the name of the deity "Jah Jahu" and were probably made by the Canaanites long before the days of Abraham. Traces of a city with a great wall and projecting towers have been unearthed near the site of Tel Nasbeth, which Prof. Bade believes is the Mizpah of the prophet Samuel.—The Bible Champion.

The Rev. P. A. Northam, Anglican missionary at Ft. Albany, Ontario, was recently saved by the kindly care of the Roman Catholic missionary there who heard of his being ill and alone and took him to their mission hospital and he was nursed back to life by Sisters Marie Elmir, who is credited with saving his life by the doctors who later attended him.

A WARNING.

R. J. Schlueter, at one time employed in soliciting subscriptions for The Southern Churchman, has severed his connection with this company. Patrons and subscribers for The Southern Churchman are warned against having further dealings with him.

Southern Churchman Co.

Exhibit A.

$100,000. September 3, 1929.
On December 31st, 1929, we promise to pay to the order of Bank of New York and Trust Company
One Hundred Thousand Dollars
Value Received
The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America,
By: Charles A. Tompkins,
Assistant Treasurer.

Reason for Exhibit.

The dioceses and districts sent us in July and August only $222,216. The proportion of the Maintenance Budget Quota due for these two months was $584,366.

Results of Exhibit.

The interest on the above note can only be paid out of the money given to support missionary work.

What To Do.

There is ample money in unpaid pledges and in the hands of many parochial and a few diocesan treasurers to meet not only the interest, but the principal of the note by October 1. I am sure the bank will allow us to pay it then. Let us do it.

Running Behind.

Total receipts on quota to September 1, are $108,211.12 less than last year.

Hopefully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Organist Serves Fifty-two Years.

Mrs. J. R. Haile, of Miller's Tavern, Essex County, Virginia, probably has a longer record for continuous service as a church organist than any one in the State of Virginia. She has been playing the organ for St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Miller's Tavern, since February, 1877, making fifty-two years last February. On her fiftieth anniversary, in February, 1927, the congregation presented her with a handsome silver vase, to commemorate her long term and faithful service.

Mrs. Haile is still acting and in excellent health, and is likely to be able to render the same faithful service for at least another decade. Before her marriage she was Miss Wright, and her mother before her was an excellent musician, who also filled the position of organist at old St. Paul's for many years.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Church School to be Established in Wise County.

Ever since he became Bishop of the new Diocese of Southwestern Virginia in March, 1920, Bishop Jett has been impressed with the necessity of founding, as soon as it might be possible, a school under Church auspices in the southwest part of the diocese. That which has been a vision for the past nine years is now about to become a reality.

It so happens that a few years ago there was built near the town of Wise, in Wise County, a splendid plant for use as a detention home. It later developed that the need for such an institution was not so great as had been anticipated. Upon learning these facts and making careful examination of the property in conjunction with a number of the members of the Executive Board of the Diocese, the Bishop entered into negotiations with the Board of Supervisors of Wise County with a view to acquiring the property for use as a Church School. In the various conferences on the subject the local authorities and many of the other people of the community have shown the greatest interest in the whole matter and have extended their cooperation in every possible manner.

At a meeting on August 13, 1929, the Wise County Supervisors accepted an offer by the Bishop of $25,000 for the entire property. In submitting his proposal to the Supervisors in writing, the Bishop explained that the school will necessarily begin on a small scale and will not open for its initial session before September 1, 1930, or perhaps later than this. As a matter of fact, it has not yet been determined just what will be the exact character of the school. The tentative plan so far is that it is to be an academic institution of high-school grade, with the probable addition of certain industrial features.

The property being purchased contains 111 acres of land with buildings that cost, when erected, not less than $100,000. At the present time they would cost a great deal larger sum. There are two excellent stone buildings with water system and heating plant, a good frame building, reservoir and filtration plant. The county is carrying insurance on the property to the amount of $70,000. This fact alone is an evidence of the real material value of the property. The buildings are in beautiful condition and ready for use just as they are. In fact, the whole place is splendidly suited in every way for the purpose for which it is being acquired.

Plans for the opening and operation of the school will be carried on gradually and with the greatest possible care in order that, from its very beginning, it may fully justify itself in the eyes of every one concerned with its welfare as a definite contribution to the educational life of Southwestern Virginia.

T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Reopening of Epiphany Church.

The extensive renovation and redecoration of Epiphany having been completed, the church was reopened for divine service Sunday, September 8, and to properly observe this important event the Very Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, was invited to the pulpit as special preacher at the morning service. The other services that day were as usual, namely, 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 8 P. M., Evensong and Address.

Bishop Freeman will attend the eleven o'clock service at Epiphany on Sunday, September 29, the occasion being the sixth anniversary of his consecration as Diocesan of Washington.

Woman's Auxiliary Increases Missionary Fund.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington is ambitious that that Diocese sholl be numbered among those which accept and pay the entire quota assigned from the Missionary Budget of the National Church.

The whole quota of the Diocese was $58,900, of which $53,000 was accepted. Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council, has received through the Treasurer of the Diocese of Washington a check for $4,838.58, "For the specific purpose of covering as far as such a sum will cover the balance remaining between the assigned quota to the Diocese of Washington, and the amount accepted by the Diocese of Washington".

"The amount," continues the letter of transmission, "is not intended in any way to be credited so as to relieve the Diocese of Washington from any part of the accepted obligation, namely $53,000."

This genuine missionary service to the whole Church is in addition to the wide range of activities which distinguish the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, has returned to the Diocese, after a vacation spent at Sorrento, Maine. He preached the sermon at the open-air services at Washington Cathedral, on Sunday, September 8, in the afternoon, this being his first sermon at the Cathedral since his return.

M. M. W.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D.,
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, Suffragan.

St. Margaret's Going Forward.

St. Margaret's Church at Dawson and East One Hundred and Fifty-Sixth St., New York City, recommenced its regular services on Sunday, September 7. The rector, the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, reports the return but writes that some have scarcely been away.

The rector has visited almost every home, acted as Chairman of the Vestry Committee authorized June 17 to make improvements on the rectory and parish house, and to build a rest and conference room for the deaconess and also supervised the securing near and far of the money required.

As the work approaches completion, the number of contributors to the Improvement Fund is 170, of whom 115 are members of this parish and are giving more than a fifth of the amount to date. Yet, at the same time, they have doubled in summer their Sunday offerings. That is significant. The fund is almost raised, but still a few hundred dollars must be had.

Increasing the service by bettering the facilities has brought gifts these few weeks past, from all over the land. Mrs. Charles H. Hewins, of the Church School at historic St. John's in Hampton, Virginia, sent a gift from the Primary Department, because with ten or more races worshipping at St. Margaret's, the work seems to them truly missionary. Long Trustee of New York University, Dr. Henry M. Brown, Congregational pastor at Dana, Mass., sends a check because he believes St. Margaret's to be an inspiration to Christians beyond our fold. Dr. Theodore Sedgwick, long a good friend of the Deaconess and lately of the rector, has added to a gracious gift much personal aid in interesting others. In two weeks gifts have come from California, Ohio, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts, as well as New York.

The Church Army is to help St. Margaret's this year. Captain Frank Jameson begins this week his parish visiting for the rector.

250 Crippled and Handicapped Workers Enjoy Holiday.

On Monday, July 29, at ten o'clock, daylight saving time, from the Forty-Second Street Pier in the North River, the Hudson Day-Boat Chauncey M. DePew put out for Indian Point with two hundred and fifty men and women who were once thought, because of misfortune or mistake, to have been cast permanently in the human discard. These were the workers in the repair shops of three Metropolitan branches of the Goodwill Industries, those from Brooklyn, New York City and Jersey City. In these shops they have been quietly, day after day, finding their way back to new courage and a recovered sense of independence. Many of them have been employed over a period of months in the Goodwill Shops, where they are given employment repairing cast-off clothing and furniture, and paid a living wage while recuperating from illnesses or other tragedies, and preparing themselves for better jobs.

This day at Indian Point was, probably, the only vacation most of them will ever have. It was provided through the generosity of many friends in the three areas from which these three Goodwill Shops collect their contributions of discarded clothing.

This picnic was planned under the auspices of the Brooklyn branch of the Goodwill Industries, of which William Milligan Park, Director, is Chairman. James H. Post, as an active patron and board member, joined the party.

Assisting Mr. Park in this outing was Frances C. Ford, Director of the New York branch of the Goodwill Industries, which is operated by the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, and the Rev. G. E. Hollingshead, Director of the Jersey City Goodwill Industries.

The party proceeded up the River to Indian Point, the three-piece Happiness Orchestra, directed by Dave Caplan of the National Broadcasting Company, Company, providing the music. Swimming, athletics, music and games filled the day, the boat returning to the Forty-Second Street Pier at eight-thirty in the evening.

In Brooklyn, the nine Goodwill stores were not closed, although all of the regular workers and their children were taken on this excursion. Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary manned the stores with their women members, so that no worker was left behind. Workers were brought from Brooklyn and Jersey City by bus to the pier.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Token of Love and Esteem for Memory of Bishop Guerry.

At the last meeting of the convention of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas: This diocese deeply and sincerely mourns the tragic death of the Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina, a man of consecrated soul, of brilliant intellect, of devotion to the cause of Christ and one whom we all loved and admired, because of his noble life and high Christian character, and

Whereas: Bishop Guerry was for many years in charge of this portion of the Master's vineyard before the division of the diocese and had done much to advance the interest of the Church in this Upper Diocese; be it, therefore,

Resolved: That as a slight token of our love and esteem for his memory, we desire to have placed in the Headquarters of our Diocese a large oil portrait of our beloved friend and once chief pastor.

Resolved: That the funds raised to have this accomplished be entirely by voluntary contributions and that we desire to make it as universal as possible.

Resolved: That a committee of three, consisting of two clergymen and one layman be appointed by this convention or by the Bishop to have entire charge in carrying out this desired object.

Bishop Finlay appointed on this committee the Rev. Alexander R. Mitchell, the Rev. Wm. H. R. Pendleton and Mr. William S. Manning.

The committee has sent a letter to the many friends of Bishop Guerry asking for a small contribution for the painting of the portrait and has received replies which have justified the beginning of the work. The portrait will be finished in time for the committee to present it to the diocese when the Provincial Synod meets in Columbia, S. C., this fall.

The Rev. A. R. Mitchell, of Greenville, S. C., is chairman of the committee and contributions from personal friends of the Bishop may be sent to him.

A. R. M.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

"Uncle Remus' Day" at Old Fletcher Church.

Before a crowd numbering over 5,000 people a memorial to Joel Chandler Harris, creator of "Uncle Remus", was unveiled in "The Open Air Westminster Abbey of the South", established by the rector, the Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., at old Calvary Episcopal Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, August 25, at 3:30 o'clock. Large delegations from Atlanta

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

SEPTEMBER.

1. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
8. Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
15. Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18, 20, 21. Ember Days.
21. S. Matthew.
22 Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
29. S. Michael and All Angels. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
30. Monday.

COLLECT FOR SIXTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee, let Thy continual pity cleanse and defend Thy Church; and, because it cannot continue in safety without Thy succour, preserve it evermore by Thy help and goodness, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ST. MATTHEW, THE APOSTLE.

O Almighty God, Who by Thy blessed Son didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist; Grant us grace to forsake all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same, Thy Son Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

"I AM AMONG YOU AS HE THAT SERVETH."

O blessed Jesus! when I see Thee bending,
Girt as a servant, at Thy servants' feet,
Love, lowliness and might, in zeal all blending,
To wash their dust away, and make them meet
To share Thy feast, I know not to adore
Whether Thy humbleness or glory more.

Meek Jesus! to my soul Thy spirit lending,
Teach me to live, like Thee, in lowly love;
With humblest service all Thy saints befriending,
Until I serve before Thy throne above—
Yes! serving e'en my foes, for Thou didst seek
The feet of Judas in Thy service meek.

O blessed name of Servant! comprehending
Man's highest honor in his humblest name;
For Thou, God's Christ, that office recommending,
The throne of mighty power didst truly claim.
He who would rise like Thee, like Thee must owe
His glory only to his stooping low.

Daily my pilgrim feet, as homeward wending
My weary way, are sadly stained with sin;
Daily do Thou, Thy precious grace expending,
Wash me all clean without and clean within,
And make me fit to have a part with Thee
And Thine, at last, in heaven's festivity.

—"A Man of Sorrows."

For The Southern Churchman.

Why It Is Hard to Pray.

Louis Deschamps.

Because we try to pray when tired and sleepy, or when in a hurry to start the day's work or pleasure.

Because we pray thoughtlessly and half-heartedly.

Because we try to pray without taking the time to remove the burdens of petty, routine matters, or to lay down the battle axe with which we have been fighting our adversaries.

Because we forget that prayer is worship as well as petition.

Because we are prosperous and satisfied on the one hand, or indifferent and hopeless on the other.

Because we are too often like petulant children who would argue with the Almighty.

Because we make no preparation for prayer, no silent invocation of a reverent spirit nor thoughts that tend to recall our pious moods, that we may withdraw from the turmoil of life.

Because we repeat a fixed little formula in our individual praying, until some misfortune wrings from our hearts the prayers that really matter.

Because we fail to realize that prayer is the greatest heritage of our humanity, a deeprooted human instinct declaring the immortality of mankind, beyond the limitations of time or race, the sacred guardian of priceless traditions and of humanity's religious victory over fate.

Because we sacrifice our immortal spirits to our mortal mind, and refuse to believe the mystery of communion with the Infinite.

"The White Saint of India."

The Dictionary of American Biography, of which the second volume has recently appeared, contains the biographies of many men and women who have been forgotten by this generation and yet they often prove to have been of surprising usefulness. Here is one of them condensed into a paragraph. George Bowen was the son of a wealthy New York merchant who enjoyed every means of education and travel. A chapter in Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire turned him into a sceptic and bitter critic of Christianity and during his years in Europe he built up an argument against this religion. On returning home one evening he discovered that the librarian by mistake had sent him a copy of Paley's Natural Theology. This drove him to a rereading and fresh study of the Bible with the result that he was converted to Christian faith. This was in April, 1844. Within four weeks he offered himself to the American Board of Foreign Missions and after three years in Union Theological Seminary in New York he sailed for India. He never married, took no furlough and did not even seek health in the hills. Feeling that the chasm that separated the foreign missionary in his mode of living from the natives hindered his work, he renounced the comforts he had always enjoyed and might still have enjoyed and identified himself with the people. He preached daily in the streets in the native languages and served without pay as editor of Hindustani publications. He next joined the Methodists and became a traveling evangelist. His conduct pained his friends who felt "disgraced by this erratic missionary". He became an editor of the Bombay Guardian and his editorials were described as "sharply pungent and sweetly fragrant". Some of these were published in volumes, one of them being issued by our Presbyterian Board of Publication and are even yet read as books of devotion. His death by pneumonia in 1888 revealed in a striking way the hold he had upon the affections of the city of his life-service, and he was known as "the white saint of India". Such was this extraordinary man whose experience and work were unique and whose memory "still smells sweet and blossoms from the dust".—Presbyterian Banner.

Money Sense.

"My grandfather was offered the site of St. Louis for a horse," a certain man used to say rather proudly.

"Why didn't he take it?"

"He didn't have the horse."

Many of us are like that: the opportunity comes, but we haven't the horse. Thrift has not got into our bones; money sense has not lodged in our heads.

In every well-to-do family some one at some time was working, and saving, and planning, and doing without this luxury and that pleasure, putting money aside, getting ready to take advantage of the first opening that might come along. The vision of an established future was stronger to that person than the immediate sense-pull of unnecessary food, and things, and entertainment. It's the senses that rob the till. It's the appetites that gnaw at the foundations of prosperity. It's the mania for "things" that prevents so many from seeing beyond the morrow. Some one in each well-to-do family saw all this.

There is a good reply to the common question, "Why didn't some one in my ancestry begin to save and plan for me?" Obviously, if that's the way you feel about it, it's time for you to begin to save and plan for your descendants.

Some families are always having financial struggles. If you go into one of these homes, and look at the table, nine times out of ten you'll find it overloaded, the family income going steadily out to satisfy sense appetites. Even the children of such families usually have a stick of candy in their mouths most of the day. A shop dealing with trifles in a shack neighborhood, can almost always thrive on the driblets of the unthrifty.

A child adopted from a thriftless home was given a couple of pennies. Immediately he started on the run for the nearest candy store.

"No, you don't," called his new mother. "Come back and put half in your bank.

He felt abused. He'd been accustomed to spend what he got when he got it. But after awhile, when the little tin bank was opened and the pile of small change lay before him, he became excited. All that money his to spend. No, not to spend, he was told, but to open a real account in a bank. Again he felt abused. But the account was started; he and his bank-book, saw the sum recorded there, and later watched it increase as he added to it little by little.

He grew to take a great interest in bank and watching it make more money for him; its influence affected his other interests. He didn't want to spend money repairing toys, for instance, so he broke fewer. One day I heard this conversation between him and his new mother:

"May I go to a movie, mother?"

"Can you afford it?"

"I have the 50 cents I earned beating rugs. I can spend half of that."

"What about that ball you wanted?"

"That's so. Well, I'll get the ball this week and go to the movie when I earn some more."

He had attained that sort of planning, thinking things out, choosing, giving up a lesser joy for the sake of a greater—no argument about it, no coaxing, no fussing, no begging—just thinking things out with a plan in mind; the sort of thing that develops money sense where none was before.

Women sometimes have a false attitude toward money sense, looking upon it as something to deny when they have it, something to decry when they don't. Not so long ago it was considered "cunning" for grown women to be ignorant of money matters, all at sea over the household accounts, perfectly lost when it came to banking—imagining themselves in funds so long as they were in blank cheques. The widow and her husband's insurance policy were soon parted, and responsible-minded husbands and fathers considered it not only their duty to care for their womenkind while in the flesh, but to make their estates foolproof after their demise. We are happily getting away from this archaic view, however, and brains are to the fore in this line as in every other.

There is something stabilizing to one's whole life about owning property, having money out on interest, or even credit. A young woman I know, who is execedingly prosperous, got her start through a loan a bank made her in an emergency. She hadn't realized before the emergency arose, that she could get credit. The fact raised her in her own estimation. She felt thrilled to think that she was trusted, that she had financial standing, that she could borrow money on her name. She began to take herself and her work more seriously, felt the responsibility of being a citizen, took on an obligation—and prospered.

After all, thrifty living is only the result of mental organization, and mental organization is possible to all sane people.—Good Housekeeping.

SONG OF THE IMMORTAL SOUL.

O little birds of the air that call to me!
O orioles brilliant in your song and dress!
O whippoorwills that sob against a tree
And larks of incoherent happiness!
O curlews with your bleak and empty cal!
O wild geese honking home across the sky!
O robins sweet in April twilight! All
Ye little birds of God that sing and fly,
From you I hid this bright bird of my breast,
For if you saw his far-winged journeying
You would fold your wings; you would lay your songs to rest
If you listened behind the stars and heard him sing.

—Jessica Powers, in Commonweal.

Concentration.

I watched two boys of about the same age in the public library. They had entered together and both took magazines from the rack to read. One looked up from his page every time any one entered. The other saw no one; he was lost in what he was reading I predicted the second lad would outdistance the first.

He who can concentrate is on the road to success. A grasshopper mind is not a great mind. Concentration is not definitely included as a subject in any school curriculum, but the foundation for its mastery may be laid in the Home University, in which the whole family should be enrolled. We teach it, in our family, by means of different games.

One game that the children enjoy is telling each other at bedtime everything that we have done from the first moment of waking. The principle is simple. If the mind is not "put" on the thing done, it is apt to be forgotten, unless it is quite an unusual thing. Hence our bedtime recital. Once, when we first began this game, a surprised voice interrupted me in the midst of my story. "But you're telling all the little things." I reminded him that he had the same privilege. He tried but could not recall the "little things". The next night, however, he could. He had given attention to the "little things" as he did them, and was therefore able to recall them.

We ask one another questions that test our powers of observation. One such question was: "Are a cow's ears behind her horns, or in front of them?" Not one could tell. We made it a point, even the smallest member of the family, to slip around where there were some cows and find out. The matter is not of much importance, but the "finding out" was a mental stimulus, teaching us really to see things when we looked at them.

Developing any one of the senses teaches concentration. To illustrate: We sit out-of-doors on a summer evening and vie with one another regarding the number of different sounds we can distinguish and name. The member of the circle who lets his mind wander will fall behind.

One of the children came in one evening quite proud of herself. "Mother," she exclaimed, "Viola and I passed that frog pond and she said: 'Don't those birds sing sweetly?' The very idea!"

My child had been trained really to listen to sounds and to recognize them. Viola had not.

Sometimes we play the game in a different way. One of us will say something and the others will try to repeat it word for word, or we give a list of names, or colors, and call on others to repeat it. Perhaps I recite a nursery rhyme and test the children on their ability to repeat it correctly the first time. This is not too severe a test. They enjoy it, just as they enjoy a physical test.

I avoid, as far as possible, interrupting a child when at some task in which he seems to be much interested. It all his energies appear to be concentrated on that task it is generally best to let him continue at it. He is giving himself valuable training.—Lelia Munsell, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

One Step At a Time.

In accomplishing your day's work, you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy; to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged. Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or the trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of today's duties and all the load of tomorrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them. Paul himself would have broken down if he had attempted the experiment. We have a perfect right to ask our Heavenly Father for strength equal to the day; but we have no right to ask him for one extra ounce of strength for anything beyond it. When the morrow comes, grace will come with it sufficient for its tasks or for its troubles.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

"He Ate Two Eyes."

The Saviour's tender sympathy with the sufferings of the body was one of the outstanding features of His personal ministry among men. The more Christlike we are, the more tender our sympathy with physical suffering and the more eager and determined our desire to relieve it. Few people in this happy country have even the faintest conception of the load of misery imposed by ignorance and heathenism on the people of non-Christian lands. A little glimpse of it is given in a letter from Dr. and Mrs. William Hollister, written from Mokpo, Korea. In one paragraph of this most interesting letter we read:

"This morning at the dispensary, a child came in with its face covered with multiple sores (impetigo). I asked the mother how she had treated it, and she said, 'Twice a day the native doctor puts on the baby's face burning calf bones, to cure it'. I advised her that maybe zinc oxide would be better, and she said she would try my medicine, that the other doctor was no good. Cases like this one are seen daily, and the things people use as remedies are almost beyond belief. A patient last week told me he ate two eyes from a freshly killed snake (viper) to cure conjunctivitis. I told him argyrol was better."—The Presbyterian of the South.

For The Southern Churchman.

LANDON TREES.

David W. Cade.

The Trees; Plumed Trees of Landon-town,
Waved high in joyous summer glee
While the lady moon in cloud made gown
Wound close her filmy drapery.

The Trees; Proud Trees of Landon-town,
Were classic maids from old days drawn.
When glittering tides were swept and blown
Above marching legions of the dawn.

The Trees; Tall Trees of Landon-town,
Kept stately watch through noonday glare.
And were sculptured fays each in tinseled gown
When twilight fires engulfed the air.

The Trees; Loved Trees now faraway,
Are loyal guardians of my youth.
They hold in trust for aye and aye
An earlier tryst of life with truth.

The Trees; Green Trees of morning land,
Rise clear and sharp through dreamy haze.
The world is round and the homing strand
Lies far adown the westering ways.

The Trees; Landon Trees I'll see once more,
Unchanged by waste and weight of years.
When I glimpse again on a friendly shore
The green that homely Sussex wears.

Love has done the grandest things the world has ever known, and is still doing them. Where judgment may be generous, love is lavish; where judgment is cautious in conclusions, love is heroic.—Dr. Peter Forsyth.

For the Young Folks

For The Southern Churchman.

WHAT?

Maude Forest Mumma.

What would happen in this old world,
If all the wrong were right,
And everything that tries us so,
Should vanish as the night;

If all the petty trials—
And all the bitter tears—
And all our pent-up hatreds
Should vanish with the years:

Ah! this would be a world indeed,
Where angels fain would tread;
If morrtals put their hatreds down,
And showed their Love instead.

Be Proud of Your Mother.

Look! That's Grace Hunter's mother!" Phoebe looked, and her face changed strangely. Mrs. Hunter stood on the sidewalk, giving some directions to a servant, while at the curb the chauffeur waited. She was a handsome woman, dressed richly and in good taste. She was nearing forty, but she looked ten years younger.

"Isn't she the prettiest thing you ever saw in your life?" murmured Mamie Waring, in Phoebe's ear. "I guess Grace must be awfully proud of her."

Phoebe made a brief assent. She was trying to fancy what it would be like to have such a mother one could be proud of, a mother of such graceful erectness, with hair elaborately dressed and rose-pink cheeks. Phoebe had always thought of mothers as all little, round-shouldered, with tired wrinkles about their eyes, and faded complexions. In Phoebe's world the mothers did not have much time to spend on their hair. At six o'clock in the morning it was screwed into a tight "pug" that was expected to keep in order till bedtime.

The two girls came abreast of the automobile as Mrs. Hunter took her seat and her careless glance met their eager young eyes indifferently. Mrs. Hunter was used to being stared at. Unconsciously she settled herself as if she were posing for a picture, gave the word of command, and the car whirled away. "That's a stylish hat she has on," said Mamie. "Wouldn't you be proud, though, if you had a mother who looked liked that?"

The question haunted Phoebe. Somehow she could not get away from the thought that she had been almost defrauded. How would it seem to have a mother like Mrs. Hunter, a beautiful mother, on whom one's eyes could rest with the same pleasure one felt in looking at a picture of a rosebud in bloom? Phoebe loved beautiful things with a passion which was, perhaps, all the more intense because it never was put into words. The mere sight of Grace Hunter's beautiful mother had made her heart beat hard and fast. Oh, if only she, too, had a mother of whom she could be proud!

The house was very still when Phoebe entered. In a minute she remembered the reason. There was sickness in a neighbor's family. Her mother had spent most of the night there, coming home in the early morning to get breakfast for the family, and hurrying through the house work for the day. It was a plain, poor little home, but scrupulously neat, very different in its looks of daintiness and order from most of the houses in the row.

The deaconess walked in as Phoebe was hanging up her coat, and Phoebe welcomed her with effusion, for the deaconess, in spite of her plain uniform, was a beautiful woman, though her beauty was not in the least like that of Grace Hunter's mother. She was fond of fun, too, this deaconess, and when she smiled a dear little dimple was in evidence now as she greeted Phoebe.

"Good afternoon, my dear! Is your mother home?"

"She's at Mrs. Gray's, I guess. They're all sick again. Mother stayed there last night and Sunday night.

The deaconess drew a long breath. "Phoebe," she exclaimed, "you must be very proud of your mother!"

The remark chimed in so strangely with Phoebe's thoughts, and yet contradicted them so absolutely, that Phoebe had no answer but a stare. But the deaconess was not waiting for an answer.

"I wonder if you realize, Phoebe, what your mother's life means to her neighbors here. No, you cannot realize it; none of us can. If ever I feel discouraged, I think of her, of her beautiful, helpful life, of the sacrifices she is all the time making, as a matter of course, and then I'm ashamed of being disheartened. You are a fortunate girl, my dear, to have such a mother. I only hope you are as proud of her as she deserves."

The deaconess did not stay long. "I'll go over to Mrs. Gray's and send your mother home for a rest," she said in her decided way, and as the trim figure went out of the door Phoebe was thinking hard. It was all true, what the deaconess had said. When any of the neighbors were sick or in trouble they turned to Phoebe's mother. It was due to her that Jim Leary had signed the pledge. It was she who had interceded with the judge when Johnny Stowe was arrested for stealing. From this little plain, shabby house a constant stream of helpfulness flowed out into the needy neighborhood.

The door opened and a woman entered. She was not young, and she looked many years older than her actual age. She moved a little stiffly. Her lined face was very weary. But the eyes had a shining brightness that was like clear sunshine.

"Little Willie is better," said Phoebe's mother. "I thought last night we were going to lose him, but now it looks to me as if he would pull through." She went to the stove to see if it needed more coal, but on the way was intercepted by a girl whose face was glowing.

"Mother! Oh, Mother!" Phoebe cried, slipping her arm about the dear bowed shoulders, "why didn't I never know before how beautiful you are!"—Selected.

A Lesson in Courtesy.

A mother had need one evening to pass between the light and her little son. With sweet, grave, courtesy, she said: "Will you excuse me, dear, if I pass between you and the light?"

He looked up and said: "What made you ask me that, mother?"

"Because, dear," she answered, "it would be rude to do it without speaking. I would not think of not speaking if it had been Mr. F—, the minister, and surely I would not be ruder to my own boy."

The boy thought a moment, and then asked: "Mother, what ought I to say back?"

"What do you think would be nice?"

He studied over it a while, for he was such a wee laddie, and then said: "Would it be nice to say, 'Sure, you can'?"

This was mother's time to say: "That would be nice; but how would you like to say, just as Mr. F. would, 'Certainly?' It means the same thing, you know."

That little lad, now a young man in college, is remarked for his never-failing courtesy. A friend said of him the other day: "It's the second nature to W— to be polite."—Christian Work.

A MILLIONAIRE.

I know a charming little maid,
So very rich, they say,
It keeps her busy all the time
To give her wealth away;
The more she gives the more she has;
Now, isn't that quite queer?
This little maid's a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

She runs on errands constantly,
And sings along the way,
And when she does each little task
Pretends that it is play;
She dries the dishes, sweeps the floor,
With never frown or tear;
It's fun for such a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

When tired father comes at night
She greets him with a smle,
Her feet his ltlle servants are,
Her merry ways beguile;
She gives alike to rich and poor,
To all that come anear,
For she's a generous millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

Kind deeds and smiles and gentle words
Are like a golden grain
That, when the harvest time is come,
Gives tenfold back again.
Oh, what a happy world 'twould be,
With scarce a day that's drear,
Were every one a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

—Laura Alton Payne.

A Concert on Credit.

"I can't come to school this afternoon, Miss Hollister," Dorothy told her teacher at recess. "Mamma hasn't been out of the house since Dale was sick, and that's most seven weeks. But today she and papa are going to the concert, and I'm going to take care of Dale."

"That's quite a responsibility," said Miss Hollister, smiling at Dorothy's important air. "Your mamma must be very sure that you are to be trusted."

"Well, you see it makes people very queer to be sick such a long time," Dorothy explained, lowering her voice confidentially. "Dale never used to cry, but now he cries about everything that he doesn't like, and then he gets feverish, and mamma's afraid he'll have a relapse. Mamma knows I'll let him beat in all the games, and that's why she dares to leave me to take care of him."

It was not easy to get along with Dale. Dorothy hardly knew her brother, and a dozen times a day she was obliged to comfort herself by remembering mamma's assurance that Dale's temper would improve as his body grew stronger. This afternoon it was worse than usual, for Dale had become so accustomed to his mother's presence that he was inclined to resent her leaving him, even for a few hours. Dorothy tried her hardest to be entertaining, with rather unsatisfactory results. "And if he gets to fretting, and is worse," she thought, despairingly, "why, mamma won't dare to go away again for ever so long."

They were in the midst of a rather uninteresting game of authors when the sound of distant music reached their ears. Dale dropped his cards and looked at Dorothy with brightening eyes. Then he smiled.

"It's a hand-organ," he cried. "I wish he'd hurry and get to our house. Do you 'spose he'll stop here, Dorothy?"

"We'll give him some money, and then he will," replied Dorothy, jumping to her feet, and running to her bank. But though she shook it with all her might, not the faintest jingle answered her. Dorothy's bank had a way of being empty, but it had never failed its mistress at quite such a crisis as this.

"Oh, I wonder if there isn't a nickel or a penny lying around somewhere," cried Dorothy, darting around the room, distractedly, and looking into all sorts of unlikely places.

"He's coming, Dorothy! Hurry," cried Dale, who had pressed his face against the window-pane.

"But I can't find any money. Maybe Norah's got five cents," and Dorothy flew down to the kitchen, only to meet another disappointment. Norah had just finished explaining how she had sent all her month's wages to her mother in Ireland, when Dale's voice, choked with tears, called over the banisters, "He's gone by, Dorothy. He isn't going to stop."

"Oh, yes, he will, Dale," Dorothy called back, cheerily. "Just wait a minute."

Dale heard the outside door slam. Going back to the window he saw a small girl, with flying curls, running after a little Italian, bent double under the weight of his heavy organ.

The man looked surprised when Dorothy pulled his sleeve, and he broke into her explanations with a gentle murmur in his native tongue. If he did not understand English, how was she ever to explain what she wished. Then all at once she discovered at her side a small boy with big black eyes and gleaming white teeth, who was peering around at her with an air of interest.

Dorothy took a long breath, and told the whole story; how her brother had been sick, and how the least little thing made him cry, he was so nervous, and how when he cried he grew feverish, and was worse again. Then she told how much Dale wanted to hear the music, and how she had looked in her bank for money, but in vain.

"And won't you play for us today, and trust us for the money till the next time?" cried Dorothy, appealingly. "Oh, please, please do!"

The white teeth of the Italian boy flashed in a smile as she ended, and when he had translated Dorothy's speech to his father, he smiled, too. Without another word the three went back to the corner. The Italian stationed his organ just under the window from which Dale was looking down so eagerly, and still smiling, began to grind out his music.

What a treat it was, even if the organ was a trifle asthmatic, and wheezed sadly over "Listen to the Mocking-Bird!" Dale beat time on the window-sill, his face wreathed in smiles, and Dorothy sat by, overjoyed to see him happy. The hand-organ man played every tune through twice, and the boy rattled his tambourine vigorously, smiling up at Dale as he did so. And at last the concert was ended, and the musicians waved their caps for good-bye and went slowly down the street.

It was ten days before they came again, and Dorothy worried a little over their non-appearance. "I hope they didn't think I wanted them to play for nothing," she told her mother. "I 'specially asked them to trust me till next time, but they don't understand English very well."

But one night at dinner the strains of "Listen to the Mocking-Bird" came wheezing through the window, and Dorothy was on her feet in a minute.

"It's our hand-organ man," she exclaimed. She flew to the window, and a dark-eyed man and a dark-eyed little boy greeted her with a flash of white teeth. "I've got ten cents for them upstairs," Dorothy cried. "Dale and I have been saving up."

"I think I'll have to add a contribution," said her father, taking a quarter from his pocket, and Brother Tom cried gaily, "Pass the hat, Dorothy; we all want to put in something."

"It is a good thing the hand-organ season is over," papa said to mamma, when the music ended, which was not for an hour or more. And Dorothy and Dale wondered, as they often wondered before, at the strange notions of grown-up people.—Hattie Lummis, in the Congregationalist.

For The Southern Churchman.

TWO POEMS.

By William Allen Ward.

I. Night Is a Prowler.

Night
Is a prowler,
Who creeps on gentle feet
Into the canyon in search of
Sun-beams.

II. Strength.

Strength is
The grip of a
Baby whose tender hands
Grasp the calloused finger of its
Father.

Philip Calls the Roll.

Philip, the youngest of five children, had not only his parents to adore and serve him, but brothers and sisters as well. Philip's ringlets held the sunlight; Philip's cheeks wore a rosy tint; Philip's eyes shone and Philip's piping voice brought homage. What was more, Philip was beginning to realize his kingship. In his precious baby way he ruled the other children with a firm, unyielding hand. Whatever he wanted, he got. No matter who was using a toy, Philip usually merely mentioned his desire for it and it was his. Should the rightful owner hesitate, at least one of the other children remembered personal grievances against the offender and used little Philip as an opportunity to even matters. Expression of disapproval became so vehement that the delinquent repented speedily and Philip profited. It was amusing, but led to no good end, so one day while Philip had his nap, the mother talked with the four older children.

"We love Philip, don't we?" she began.

Warm agreement in varied forms met this question.

"Who loves Carl Craig?" was the next question.

"Nobody could!" came the quick answer.

"Why?"

"He always wants his way," Henry said.

"He's selfish with his toys," David answered.

"He wants our toys, too," Mary added.

"O Mother, why, Mother," Katie almost whispered in her surprise, "surely you do not think our Philip is at all like Carl Craig?"

The comparison startled the other children, still when they thought about it, the two had several traits in common.

"But, Mother, Philip is just a baby," Mary defended.

"And so sweet," David added.

"We do not mind giving up to him," Henry assured her.

"But Philip is growing older," Katie meditated aloud. "He must not grow up like Carl Craig!"

"Every one must love our Philip," Mary declared warmly.

Henry and David agreed.

"It is better for those who love him to correct him, than for those who do not care for him to try to get even with him," their mother reasoned. Then she and the four children laid a plan to help Philip overcome his unsocial habits.

When Philip waked up he was in good humor. For more than an hour, he played in a most friendly manner, then he took a sudden notion that Henry's toy elephant was exactly what he wanted, though Henry was playing with it himself at the time.

"Dive it to me," Philip demanded in his queer little voice that every one loved.

Henry played on, though it was evident to the other children that he had lost his desire to play with the elephant.

"Henwy, Henwy," Philip wailed.

Henry weakened; only the thought of Carl Craig and the family's plan for Philip held him firmly to his course.

Seeing that Henry refused to give him the elephant, Philip turned to his older sister and chief ally. "Katie, Katie, Katie!" he implored and added an energetic, "Wow, wow."

Katie read her book, seeming not to hear.

Mawy, Mawy, Mawy! Wow, wow." Philip yelled, turning to his other sister.

Mary went on dressing her doll without looking up.

"David, David, David!" Philip screeched in despair.

David walked to the window and looked out.

Philip had called the roll. No one was present to take his part. He felt he must do something to win approval. Picking up his fire engine which he knew Henry liked, he offered it to him. When Henry accepted it and thanked him, Philip did not ask for the elephant nor touch it.

Suddenly there was a sound of glad voices. What a relief to have the first lesson over and Philip not hurt. Really he seemed helped. Bless him!

"Let's play tag," Katie suggested. This was Philip's favorite game.

"You be IT," four happy voices said to Philip.—National Kindergarten Association.

Nip and Tuck.

"Oh, look what Uncle Kenneth has sent you, Bob and Ben," cried Mother Peasely, as the twins ran out to the back porch where the express man had just left a crated box.

Out of that box came two velvety rabbits, their ears twitching, pink noses wrinkling, and beady eyes staring at the new world about them.

Bob and Ben, the Peasely twins, shouted delightedly—"'At's mine, Bob," Ben said, pointing to the biggest rabbit.

"No, 'taint—that's mine," Bobbie answered back fiercely.

Whew! How quick tempers can flare up! First thing you know, mother had to catch Ben's angry hand pushing Bob back from the box, and Bob had grabbed the big rabbit so tight he was about to squeeze the life out of him

Mrs. Peasely sighed: "How I do wish you little boys would stop being so selfish!" she said. "Neither one of you ever thinks of the other at all—you are just set on getting the best for yourselves all the time."

The quarrel over "Nip and Tuck" grew so heated that mother said presently, "They must go back to their 'cage', and neither of you can play with them at all."

So Bob and Ben had to watch from a distance while food and water was put in the rabbits' box. Nip, the big one, after a startled look right and left, began to nibble at his carrots and lettuce, but poor little Tuck was so scared by the noise and movement that he huddled down in a corner trembling pitifully.

While the children watched Nip stopped eating, looked at Tuck, put his nose under a nice round carrot, and rolled it over to the frightened little animal. Maybe they talked in rabbit language—at any rate, presently Tuck rubbed against Nip and took a tiny nibble. The big rabbit scurried off and brought back a lettuce leaf then, and by this time Bob was so excited he just had to catch Ben's arm.

"See him?" he squeaked, "he's feedin' the little one. I b'lieve Tuck's goin' to eat up all Nip's lettuce, Ben!"

Mother was standing in the kitchen door, and at this moment she stepped up behind them.

"I know two little boys who could learn something from Nip and Tuck," she said. "Suppose Ben tries looking out for Bob and Bob tries looking out for Ben."

"Mamma, let us take 'em out on the grass," begged Bob, "then Ben and me can see how they do, better."

And I haven't heard a cross word about who owns Nip and who owns Tuck since that day, and I think Bob and Ben are really copying the rabbits' good manners!—Sunshine.

The Little Robin Who Tried His Best.

Once there was a little robin named Softdown who lived in a nest in a big tree in the apple orchard. The trees were covered with beautiful pink and white blossoms, and among them were nests full of baby birds.

Little Softdown felt that the world of trees, apple blossoms and nests was so large, and he was so very, very small, that he did not believe it was any use for him to try to do anything in the world, but Mamma Robin only said when he told her so, "All you have to do is to learn to fly, and to sing 'Cheer up, Cheer-up,' and then fly as far and as fast as you can, and sing as loud and as often as you can."

By and by Softdown learned to fly. Then he would sit on a branch of the tree and sing, "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" over and over.

One morning he flew from the orchard to a tree near the great house. A little girl sat by the window crying over her lessons. "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" sang little Softdown from his tree. "Cheer-up, Cheer-up." The little girl stopped crying to listen. "Why, what a cunning baby robin," she said. "It seems just as if he was saying 'Cheer-up' to me. I remember mother told me they were learning to fly down in the apple orchard and how hard it was to learn. I guess if a little robin can learn to fly, a little girl can learn her geography," and she began to study with all her might. Soon the lesson was learned and she ran out in the spring sunshine to play.

Little Softdown still sat on the branch. Mother came to the door for a minute and looked toward the tree where he was. "Oh, dear," she sighed; "so much to do and only one pair of hands to work with. There is house cleaning and spring sewing. I feel tired already thinking of it."

"Cheer-up, Cheer-up," sang Baby Softdown. Mother looked deep into the tree and laughed. "Thank you, baby robin," she said. "After all, it is only one thing at a time I have to do," and she went indoors to her work smiling.

Grandfather came out and sat on the piazza in the sunshine. He felt old and tired. "Dear me," he sighed. "Once I was young and strong and loved the spring and the work it brought. Now, I can no longer work. I feel I am no use in the world."

"Cheer-up, Cheer-up," sang Baby Softdown, and Grandfather listened. "After all, the sun is shining," he said, "and it is good to rest," and he sat there thinking happy thoughts all the morning.

Softdown spread his baby wings and flew back to the nest in the orchard to hunt for worms with his brothers and sisters; and he never knew how much good he had done with his "Cheer-up, Cheer-up", but he felt very happy that night as he tucked his head under his wing; for had he not sung "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" all day in the sunshine until he was happy himself?—The Child's Hour.

A MESSAGE FOR THE FATHERS.

I wish I could be father
And father could be me,
For then I'd like to show him
How fathers ought to be.

I'd buy him toys and candy
Most every other day
And never be too busy
To join him at his play.

I'd answer all his questions,
So he could understand;
Not hide behind a paper
And wave a "go-way" hand.

I'd take him to the movies
Upon a pleasant night;
And never say it's bedtime
While yet the day was light.

I wouldn't change my father
For any other man.
I know he loves me dearly
And does the best he can.

And yet I can't help thinking
How great would be my joy,
If he'd remember sometimes
To be once more a boy.

—George W. Kerby.

The persecuting emperor, Diocletian, little thought what he was giving us when he banished the Apostle John to Patmos; no more than Augustus, in his political plans as to the census of the empire, knew he was sending a poor carpenter to Bethlehem, with his espoused wife, that Christ might be born there; or the Jews and Pilate's soldiers, that they were sending the thief to Heaven, when they broke his legs in heartless respect for their own superstitions or ordinances. God's ways are behind the scenes; but He moves all the scenes which He is behind. We have only peacefully to do His will. Such is the path of blessing.—J. N. Darby, in the Keswick Calendar.

THE BUTTERFLY.

The garden bed I wandered by
One bright and cheerful morn,
When I found a new-fledged butterfly
A-sitting on a thorn,
A black and crimson butterfly
All doleful and forlorn.

I thought that life could have no sting
To infant butterflies.
So I gazed on this unhappy thing
With wonder and surprise,
While sadly with his waving wing
He wiped his weeping eyes.

Said I, "What can the matter be?
Why weepest thou so sore
With garden fair and sunlight free
And flowers in goodly store?"
But he only turned away from me
And burst into a roar.

Cried he, "My legs are thin and few
Where once I had a swarm,
Soft fuzzy fur a joy to view
Once kept my body warm,
Before these flapping wing things grew
To hamper and deform."

At that outrageous bug I shot
The fury of mine eye.
Said I, in scorn all burning hot,
In rage and anger high,
"You ignominious idiot,
Those wings are made to fly."

"I do not want to fly," said he,
"I only want to squirm."
And he dropped his wings dejectedly,
But still his voice was firm:
"I do not want to be a fly,
I want to be a worm.'

O yesterday of unknown lack,
Today of unknown bliss,
I left my fool in red and black,
The last I saw was this,
The creature madly climbing back
Into his chrysalis.

—Charlotte Perkins Jackson.

THE SIX BEST DOCTORS.

The six best doctors, anywhere—
And no one can deny it—
Are Doctors Sunshine, Water, Air,
Rest, Exercise and Diet.

The six will gladly you attend,
If only you are willing;
Your mind they'll clear, your ills they'll mend,
And charge you not one shilling.

—Kansas State Health Bulletin.

THIS'N THAT.

When mother has just lots to do
And cook is flustered, nursie, too,
I gather up my own affairs
And go and sit up on the stairs
With Fluff, my yellow Persian cat,
And think mostly of this'n that.

It's silly what the big folks do,
They never seem to think of you:
But when I feel that no one cares,
I go and sit up on the stairs
With Fluff, my yellow Persian cat,
To think of mostly this'n that.

—The Mother's Journal.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 10 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates in contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

Contributions to make up Deficit in Alaska Mission Appropriations.

Miss L. L. Brent	$ 5.00
Mrs. Josephine Read	75.00
A. D. Barrett	5.00
Mrs Hugh Ralston	100.00
Mrs. J. R. Williams	10.00
C. B. Chilton	20.00
Mrs. Willie Temple	100.00
Mrs. B. W McCue	10.00
Mrs. John C. Burch	25.00
Mrs. E. A. Harrison	5.00

Near East Relief.

Miss L. L. Brent	$ 5.00

For Printing Bibles in Russian.

Benj. R. Phelps	$ 5.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

OLD STAMPS.

WANTED,—OLD ENVELOPES FROM letters written before 1875. Highest prices paid for envelopes with patriotic designs used during Civil War. Old stamps purchased—George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

BOARDING—TIDEWATER, VA.

WANTED, IN REFINED COUNTRY HOME in Tidewater Virginia, a couple, or one, for winter. Address "Toddsbury", Nuttall P. O, Gloucester county, Va.

FROM A SHUT-IN.

I HAVE FIFTEEN FOUNTAIN PENS, and I want to sell them at once, for I need the money, and I am forced to give up my mail order business, since I have not got a home to stay at regular. Twelve of these fancy pens are my $1.25 pens, and the others I have been selling for $1.00. But in order to sell them at once, I am asking $1.00 each. Buy one at once. Edward P. Broxton, Keysville, Ga.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED: BY REFINED, CHRISTIAN woman, with highest reference, a comfortable and quiet home for the winter, and very small salary in exchange for light household duties; or perhaps the tutoring of a child. Would consider looking after home in absence of family, etc. Address, Mrs. H. L. Browne, Weedonville P. O., Virginia.

REFINED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION with invalid, or semi-invalid, as nurse-companion References. Address "F", care of Southern Churchman.

MIDDLE AGE WOMAN WITH TRAINing and experience, desires position in school or institution as housemother, chaperon, manager, hostess. Excellent references. Address "Box H", care of Southern Churchman.

MIDDLE-AGE LADY, WIDOW, DESIRES poition as housekeeper, manager in home of widower, or bachelor. Experienced. References. Address "S. B", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

JONES: Departed this life, August 21, 1929, JOHN STUART JONES, of Fairfax county, Virginia, son of the late John W. Jones and Marion Stuart Alexander, of Buchanan, Va.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

REV CHARLES S. HARRISON.

The REV CHARLES SYLVESTER HARRISON, a retired priest of the Diocese of Virginia, died at the home of his sister in Richmond on September 2nd, aged 71.

Mr. Harrison was a native of Chesterfield County, Virginia, and graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1891. He was ordained deacon in 1891 and priest in 1892 by the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Whittle, the Bishop of Virginia He was assigned as deacon to the charge of Bromfield Parish, Rappahannock County, in the Diocese of Virginia and held the rectorship of that parish until 1896 when ill health resulting in total deafness compelled him to give up the active work of the ministry. Since that time he has lived in Richmond, performing such limited ministerial duties as opportunity presented.

The funeral was held at St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on September 4th, being conducted by the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. W R. G Irwin, the rector of St. Andrew's, and other clergymen of Richmond.

FRANKLIN A. RIDOUT.

THE REV FRANKLIN A. RIDOUT, rector of Church of the Ascension, Norfolk, died suddenly at his home, Thursday, September 5, 1929.

The Rev Mr. Ridout was born in Maryland September 1, 1868, ordained Deacon in 1895 and Priest the following year by Bishop Randolph, of Southern Virginia. He had charge of parishes in Virginia until 1917, when he entered Y. M. C. A. service with the American Expeditionary Force in France. His health being impaired as a result of his war experiences, he retired temporarily, living at Onancock, Va. In 1926 Mr. Ridout assumed charge of the Church of the Ascension, Norfolk.

Funeral services were held in the Church of the Ascension, with Bishop Beverley D. Tucker and Bishop Coadjutor Arthur G. Thomson in charge. The Norfolk clergy were in the chancel. After the service Mr. Ridout was taken to Onancock Va., for burial.

The Rev. Mr. Ridout possessed an exceptionally sweet and lovable personality and had endeared himself not only to his congregation but to a host of friends in the city of Norfolk His passing is a distinct lost to the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

and other Georgia cities attended and messages were sent from President Herbert Hoover, the Governors of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida, Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison and scores of United States Senators, Congressmen, authors, poets and musicians. The Hon. James B. Nevin, editor of the "Georgian-American", Atlanta, Ga., delivered the address of the afternoon. Mrs. Arthur McD. Wilson, life president of the "Uncle Remus" Association, Atlanta; Mrs. Warren D. White, vice-president, and Mrs. Robert Blackburn, author and reader of "Uncle Remus", were among the prominent people taking part on the program. The Jubilee Singers (colored) rendered a program of Old Negro Spirituals, and there was a procession of flags of all nations from Calvary Church to the memorial. Members of the immediate family of Joel Chandler Harris attended, and the memorial was unveiled by the grandchildren of the beloved storyteller. Wreaths from noted literary societies and from the Harris family were placed at the memorial, which stands next to the John Fox and Francis Scott Key memorials in the "Abbey". Special soloists gave programs of music in the church. Assisting in the service at the church and at the memorial were the Rev. William C. Cravner, rector of All Souls', Biltmore, N. C., and the Rev. George Watkins, rector of the Roman Catholic Church in Hendersonville, N. C. Colonel Frederic J. Paxon, of Atlanta, presided at the ceremonies.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Granite City.

The Mission Church of the Diocese broke ground the last of August for a new parish house to be erected on the rear of the church property. St. Bartholomew's has waited long for this very necessary part of its equipment; the waiting has been partly caused by its loyalty to the program of the diocese. Everything almost that the diocese has asked the parishes and missions to do, this Mission has always taken pride in doing, even if in doing so, it meant waiting for needed improvements at home.

The Rev. Mr. Burford is leading the people splendidly, and it is predicted for this Mission that 1929 will close with the best report it has ever made.

The diocese has recently presented the clergyman with a new Ford coach. The missions at Woodriver and Glen Carbon are also in the care of Mr. Burford.

Annual Conference.

Plans are practically completed for holding the annual conference of the clergy and of the laity for this fall. The clergy will meet on the seventeenth and the laity on the eighteenth, and both conferences will be at St. John's, Decatur.

St. John's Church, Springfield, has just made a contract for the installation of a pipe organ—about the largest big thing this thriving mission on the north side of the city needs.

The Rev. G. Morgan Williams took charge of the missions at Havana and Petersburg, on the first of September.

The Rev. S. H. Williams will assume charge of a string of missions in and about Carbondale on the fifteenth of the present month. He comes to assist General Missionary McCalla in the Cairo Archdeaconry.

F. H. S.

The Bishop's House.

From the Bishop's Address to the Synod at Champaign, 1929:

"Again I come before you with a heartfelt plea for the building which houses your Bishop at present and in the future his successors. You have surely not forgotten the great necessity for the Bishop's House. I had hoped by this time that there would have been many substantial gifts toward providing this home for your Bishops and making it a loving memorial of those past and gone. No more suitable and helpful memorial can be given to express your gratitude for the blessings you receive at the hands of your Fathers-in-God. Comparatively very little has come in towards the payment of the debt upon the property. Your present Bishop is carrying the greater part of the burden. I wish I might touch the hearts of some in the diocese who are able to give substantial sums towards the payment of the debt upon the house. Perhaps this Synod can devise some means whereby it can be accomplished. I commend this also to your serious consideration."

Mr. W. S. Troxell is Chairman of the Committee on Episcopal Residence Fund.

"For the General Missions of the Church."

The men of the Diocese of Springfield have endorsed the One Day's Income Plan in a resolution aaopted at the Annual Laymen's Conference at Decatur, September 18, 1929, whereby the individual promises to give the equivalent of one day's income to the General Missionary Work of the Episcopal Church for the year 1929. It being undrstood that this is an effort sponsored by the laymen to assist the diocese in paying in full everything asked of it for the worldwide Missionary Work of the Church.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop

Convocation Appointments.

At the meeting of Convocation of the District of Wyoming, held at Ethete, July 8, Bishop Bennett appointed the Rev. A. E. Pawla, editor of the Wyoming Churchman, and the Rev. P. K. Edwards to fill a vacancy on the Board of Examining Chaplains.

The Rev. R. E. Abraham, of Rock Springs, was elected Secretary of the District.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan

Christ Church, Little Rock, Commences Fall Activities.

Commencing with the first Sunday in September, Mrs. Effie Clines Fones took charge of Christ Church choir, and Miss Martha McAninch became the organist.

September 11 Miss Lynette Guisecke takes up her duties in Christ Church as Educational Secretary and leader of the Young People's work. With the splendid equipment furnished in the new parish house, fine development in the Church School and other activities of the young is confidently expected.

The rector of the parish has outlined a full program for the fall. September 8, at 7:30 A. M., there was a special Corporate Communion for all those boys and girls of Christ Church who are going away to school this fall.

Rally Day in the Church School has been set for September 22, when all officers and teachers and pupils will have a special service in the church at 9:30 A. M. Also that morning at 7:30, there will be a Corporate Communion for the officers and teachers of the school.

The following week, September 23-28, there is to be a Church School Teachers' Institute, held in Christ Church Parish by Miss Annie Morton Stout, who is an expert in that line and is borrowed from the Department of Sewanee. If there are any Sunday-school teachers and workers from outside of the city who wish to come for the Institute they will be welcome.

October 4, a banquet for all young people of Christ Church Parish, between the ages of fourteen and twenty-five will be held in the parish house. At this time, the program for the young people for the fall and winter will be explained to the young people and from then on much enthusiasm is expected among and by the young people of the parish.

October 6, a special Rallying Service for the whole congregation of Christ Church will be held in the church at 11 o'clock.

September 15-October 20, is a period set aside for the preparation for a special series of services to be held in Christ Church by Bishop Capers, of San Antonio, Texas. The dates for the Mission are October 20-27. Every day during the week there will be a morning and a night service in the church. Members of the church, in other towns as well as the people of Little Rock generally, will be welcome to these services

November 24 is the period of preparation for the Every Member Canvass. November 20, there is to be a parish dinner in the parish house, at which all the adults of the congregation will be expected. November 24, the Every Member Canvass will be held.

A further essential part of the program is steady and enthusiastic working toward the goal of increased activity and enlarged membership of the Church School, Young People's Service League, Men's Club, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Ladies' Aid Society, Woman's Auxiliary, Daughters of the King and the Business and Professional Women's Club and a general promotion of spiritual vitalty in the whole congregation.

T.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Theodore B. Foster, Emeritus-Professor of Dogmatic Theology, Western Theological Seminary, has resigned the office of Registrar of the Diocese of Chicago, also his position as priest-in-charge of the Church of Our Saviour, Elmhurst, Ill., both effective October 1. He will then go on the retired list, and his permanent address will be 27 S. Main St., Rutland, Vt.

The Rev. Frederick W. Harriman, D. D., has changed his address to 620 W. Ferry St., Buffalo, New York.

The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., is expected to return to his parish about October 15, after an extended leave of absence, due to ill health.

September 8, the Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bshop of Lexington, ordained to the diaconate William H. Langley, Jr., and Gerald H. Catlin, and ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Julius A. Velasco, in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky. The Rev. Robert J. Murphy, of Versailles, Ky., preached the sermon, and the Rev. Charles S. Hale, of Lexington, Ky., read the Litany.

The Rev. William H. Langley, Jr., has been placed in charge of the Episcopal Church in Corbin, Ky.; the Rev. Gerald H. Catlin will assist the General Missionary, the Rev. Charles M. Lever, with headquarters in Pikeville, Ky.; and the Rev. Julius A. Velasco will work under the direction of the Bishop at different points in the diocese.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Charles S. Harrison, 71, died September 2, at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. H. Moore, Richmond, Virginia. Funeral services were conducted at St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on Wednesday, September 4.

Mr. Harrison was a native of Chesterfield County, Virginia. He received his theological training at the Virginia Seminary at Alexandria. He retired from active service some years ago when his health failed.

MY LITTLE WHITE RABBIT.

My little white rabbit
Had quite a habit
Of looking at me with a pleading eye
As though he would say, "Dear master, why
Do you forget
To feed your pet?"

He can't run around
On the big, wide ground
To gather green leaves at the dinner hour
And nibble the carrots and cauliflower,
Nor help himself
From the pantry shelf.

But I didn't know
How it feels to go
So hungry to bed, till I dreamed last night
That I was the supperless rabbit boxed tight,
And he the Boy-Lad
Just careless, not bad.

Oh, I promised him there
I'd treat him square,
Remember his water and fresh, clean food—
Or let mother give him to some one who
—Our Dumb Animals.
would!
For boys who forget
Don't deserve a pet.

In considering what the Creed teaches us as to the earthly work of the Lord, we notice that events which to our eyes appear full of the deepest sorrow and humiliation may yet include at the same time a divine glory hidden from us because we have at present no power to see it. Thus, in the immediate prospect of the betrayal, of the agony, of the Cross—looking at His work accomplished, when Judas had now gone out into the night from the circle of Twelve, the Lord summoned up His judgment of all in the memorable words, Now is the Son of Man glorified.—A. C. Benson.

Men talk of the intricate paths of life, and they are many. And none are more so than those which wind about us in the four walls of the house in which we live. And if you would walk there, doing kindly service, and avoiding weak concessions to wrongs on the one hand, and harsh exactions of right, on the other, then let in the blessed Christ into that home. You may give a wide berth to that harsh-tempered one in your home who is exacting; but do you, like the Christ, tread the narrow way of kindliness and love?—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

"Despite not any man that lives,
Alien or neighbor, near or far;
Go out beneath the scornful stars,
And see how very small you are.
The world is large, and space is high
That sweeps around our little ken;
But there's no space or time to spare
In which to hate our fellow-men.

Banish Mosquitoes Easier! Quicker!

Flit is the new, easier, quicker way to rid your rooms of mosquitoes—for comfort and health. The handy Flit sprayer floats a vapor that does not fall in drops, from which no mosquitoes escape! All die—or money back. More for your money in the quart size.

"The yellow can with the black band"

FLIT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

© 1929 Stanco Inc.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

R. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer

J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

Miller & Rhoads

"The Shopping Center"

Known from coast to coast as one of America's great stores.

Richmond Virginia

ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET ON MEMORILAS FREE.

A very helpful booklet on Monuments has been published by Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C. It contains many beautiful designs, and practical suggestions for medium priced memorials, and tells how you may obtain the ideal memorial, possessing the four essentials—beauty, durability, strength and legibility of inscription.

Winnsboro Granite, which is quarried by the above Corporation, is without doubt the finest quality monumental stone to be found in America, and this famous granite is known to most readers of this publication for its beauty, durability, strength, contrast and freedom from deleterious ingredients, such as lime, iron and water. Like other high quality materials, Winnsboro Granite is sometimes confused with the many inferior substitutes on the market that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

The booklet mentioned above, contains much useful information, and tells how you may be sure of getting genuine Winnsboro Granite. Write for your copy today. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

Tne Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles. Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

SELL

Chris tmas Card s

at forty to fifty per cent. commission. The best line of Box Assortment and Personal Christmas Cards on the market.

Write for details.

ARTISTIC CARD COMPANY,

Dept. 15. Elmira, N. Y.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 14, 1929. No. 37.

Young men, believe your beliefs
And doubt your doubts,
And don't make the mistake of
Believing your doubts
And doubting your beliefs.

Submit to the Lordship of Christ,
Admit Him to every part of your life,
Permit Him to do everything for you,
Commit everything to Him,
Transmit all blessings to others.

Don't exchange the sign of the Cross for a question mark.—Griffith Thomas.

GENERAL WASHINGTON'S PRAYER

All Mighty God; we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government, and entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another and their fellow citizens of the United States at large. And, finally, that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, without whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation. Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

ATTENTION

GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES

Increase your funds for Church work. Send us

25 new subscriptions

and receive

A CHECK FOR $25.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,

628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
A Door Once Barred and Bolted Now Open	6
"Higher Criticism"—When It Is and Whither Tends—Rev. J. W. Morris, D. D.	7
Stratford Hall to be Scene of Pageant	8
Favorite Scripture Verses	8
The Shameful Birth of Our Marriage Canon—Another Critical Examination—Rev. Walker Gwynne, D. D.	9
As Others See Us	10
Playing the Soviet Game	10
Phi Beta Kappa	11
Wood-Pulp Magazine	11
Book Reviews	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	16
Childrens Department	18
Personal Notes	23

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

Episcopal school for girls, maintaining best Virginia traditions of refinement and culture.

Thorough College Preparation. Varied General Course. Outdoor Life.

EIGHTY-SIXTH YEAR BEGINS SEPTEMBER 13, 1929

For catalogue, address
MRS. H. N. HILLS, Principal

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address
REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited. Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

St. Anne's,

Charlottesville, Va.
Box G.

Beautiful location in far famed Blue Ridge Mountains College preparatory and elective courses. Fully accredited. Open gymnasium allows sports in the fresh air in all weather. Sleeping porches. Riding taught by expert. Music. Art. Bishop of Virginia President of Trustees. Margaret L. Porter, M. A., Principal.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md. Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

STRADIVARIUS.

"When any master holds twixt hands and chin
A violin of mine, he will be glad
That Stradivarius lived, made violins
And made them of the best . . .
. . . For while God gives them skill
I give them instruments to play upon,
God using me to help Him; . . .
. . . If my hand slacked,
I should rob God, since His fullest good,
Leaving a blank behind, instead of violins.
He could not make Antonio Stradivarius' violins
Without Antonio."

—George Eliot.

It is possible for you to preach a Gospel which nobody else can preach. It is possible for you to know Christ as I cannot know Him. Hence, there is a Gospel according to Matthew, a Gospel according to Paul, and a Gospel according to you, and if you do not mediate Christ, and if I do not mediate Christ, the world will never get a full witness for Jesus Christ, never.—Stuart Holden.

A Poet by Accident.

There are some people who talk in rhyme without knowing it, and I have for long taken a keen delight in the story of the old-time minister who complained one night that the light was dim. I have forborne from repeating it here because I had certain doubts as to its absolute truth, but this week has brought me sufficient evidence to enable me to pass on the story to those who do not know it, with the assurance that the incident happened exactly so.

It was in the far-off days when organs were unknown in churches, when congregations were illiterate, and when to enable the folk to join in the church's service of praise it was necessary for the preacher to read the words to be sung a line, or two lines, at a time. Day was dying in the west as the good old minister reached for his hymn book, glanced at a page, and said: "The light has grown so dim, I scarce can see to read the hymn." Then up rose the congregation to its feet, and, led by the clerk, sang to the tune of Old Hundred: "The light has grown so very dim, I scarce can see to read the hymn." Then they paused for the next lines to be read to them.

Raising his voice a trifle, because he was just a little disturbed at the happening, the minister explained: "I did not mean to read the hymn, I only said my eyes were dim." As it was still in the proper meter, again the congregation lifted up their voices, and sang the dictated words, and then looked expectantly for more lines to sing.

They got them, for, now in quite a temper, the parson shouted: "I didn't mean a hymn at all. I think the devil's in you all." And again the rafters rang with the song.

For The Southern Churchman.

A MORNING PRAYER.

Maude F. Mumma.

Dear Lord, I lift my eyes to pray.
And ask Thy blessing on the day;
Ask Thee to guide my feet aright,
And keep me safe until the night.

I pray Thee for my loved ones, too,
Hearts that love Thee, loyal, true;
Help them to know, though scattered far,
How kind, how good Thy precepts are.

I pray Thee for the stranger here,
Though far removed from loved ones dear;
Help him to feel Thy guiding hand,
Though travelling in a distant land.

These mercies I of Thee implore,
Keep Thou the well, the sick restore;
Until the day of life be past,
And we are safe with Thee at last.

Ah, How skilful grows the hand
That obeyeth Love's command.
It is the heart, and not the brain,
That to the highest doth attain.
And he who followeth Love's behest
Far exceedeth all the rest.

—H. W. Longfellow.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W & E. SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

Church Furniture
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

$50 TO $100 IN SPARE TIME
Write for Schwer's CHRISTMAS CARD & NOVELTIES PLAN. Popular and different from others. $50. to $100. easily made. No investment. Great for Home Effort. Write at once to CHARLEY C. SCHWER, DEPT. WESTFIELD, MASS.

PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD
Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria
Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.,
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED · WOOD · METAL · ETC.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

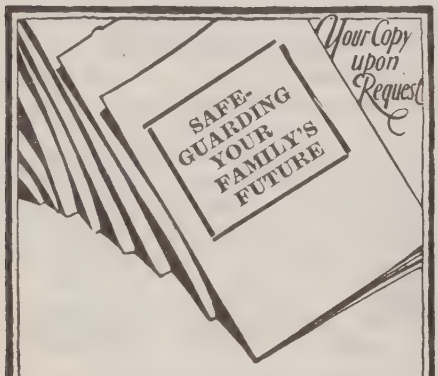
Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

When in need of
MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES
and want honest treatment see
BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.
Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.



The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The American has just printed a booklet which gives authoritative information on the important subject of wills and modern methods of "Safeguarding Your Family's Future" (this is its title).

It will gladly mail you a copy, with no obligation on your part, upon request, as long as the supply lasts.

Kindly mention this paper.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Do not be laughed into doing that which you know to be wrong.

"We are all liable to be tripped up by our triumphs."

Let us learn more about the greatness of God that we may rise above our own littleness.

There is such a thing as hidden power. It is a quiet, yet moving force. It is the result of communion with God.

The trouble with most men is not that they do not know the right; but that while they know the right they choose the wrong.—Chadwick.

What other book beside the Bible could be heard in public assemblies from year to year, with an attention that never tires, and an interest that never cloys?—Robert Hall.

"God gave us memory," says Sir James M. Barrie, "that we might have roses in winter."

The Church stumbles along in its program for want of funds and service. Of both of these there would be an abundance available if the actual consecration of the inner spirit could be accomplished. A multitude of victories remain unwon by the Church because the spirit of her members is indifferent. There are many churches thinking they have problems of finance, leadership, or attendance, whereas the real cause of what seems to be problems is a lack of an intense desire to follow Christ in motive and practice.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The fruits of the spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—are all natural and normal reactions of a healthy soul. It is the fruits of evil that are unnatural and abnormal.

O Father, haste the promised hour,
When at His feet shall lie
All rule, authority and power
Beneath the ample sky;
When He shall reign from pole to pole,
The Lord of every human soul;
When all shall heed the words He said
Amid their daily cares,
And by the loving life He led
Shall seek to pattern theirs.
And He who conquered death shall win
The nobler conquest over sin.
—William Cullen Bryant.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock	$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned	$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust	$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 14, 1929. No. 37.

RADICALS

About thirty-two years ago a man in his early twenties went to New York. He was of a distinguished family, well educated, handsome and in every way attractive and at home had made reputation as a newspaper writer. Among other accomplishments, he was an unusually graceful horseman and, finding work at thirty dollars a week, undertook to keep a riding horse and parade mornings and afternoons in Central Park. In a confidential moment he confessed that his scheme of life was to have an heiress fall in love with him and to attain quick supremacy in journalism. No heiress noted him, his liveryman took his horse for the board bill and managing editors declined to consider him except as a subordinate and would pay him no more than he could earn by prompt and regular work. In a few months he was telling his intimates that he hoped to live to see the downtown streets blocked with barricades and the gutters running blood—not his blood, hearers of his oratory gathered, but just blood generally. He wrote several very fiery articles along this line and they were printed in "advanced", "liberal", and sensational publications.

He disappeared, probably returned to his small city home, and may be now—probably is—a fairly prosperous, well-behaved, orderly citizen and sedate vestryman, standing for law enforcement and the rights of property. He is recalled and referred to as representing a type that recurs quite regularly as each generation of cultivated youth begins to approach maturity and acquires the habit of believing itself to be thinking widely and profoundly. The type would be harmless and funny, but for the fact that it is being developed and used for real mischief by habitual and professional agitators—Communists, Socialists, Bolshevists, Atheists, "Liberals", Modernists, Pacifists, all the several varieties of assassins of religion, decency, orderly society and government. Uniformly, these hate and war against Christianity. Yet, they are being aided by persons and organizations professing to be Christian and depending for support on Christian people. Here in the South we have been little troubled, thus far, by these menaces. Defeat in devastating war and long adversities have taught us common sense, and conservatism, saved us from imported radicalism. The fundamental principle of our dominant political party is the rights and responsibilities of the individual citizen and consequent abhorrence of communism and socialism and their alliances. Whether or not we continue to escape invasion by foes of church and state and peace, it is our duty, as Christians and citizens, to give all the strength we have toward defeat of these foes and especially to repudiation and condemnation of those pretending to be ministers of God's Word and members of His Churches, drawing their daily bread from the God fearing and working ceaselessly to cajole, persuade and frighten the nation away from God.

Observant and practical business men, in contact with conditions and trends, send out warnings of the radical activities, directed recently to students of universities and colleges, whose minds are in the formative stage, who are at what may be called the misanthropic period of life and who, too often, are under influence of "liberal" instructors. Some months ago reference was made in this column to an address before the Chamber of Commerce of an Eastern city reciting the sympathetic labors of professors in institutions for "higher education" in behalf of two Italian anarchists and murderers. Now, an important manufacturing and commercial concern in Chicago sends an exhaustive review of what is being done and attempted in spreading propaganda of destruction among students and through the country and a partial list of accomplices.

"Education for a new social order, based on production for use and not for profit." "Abolish the wage system and do away with capitalism." These are the slogans of the "Fellowship for a Christian Social Order" and the "League for Industrial Democracy", formerly "The Intercollegiate Socialistic Society". This last is said to have permanent representatives and workers in one hundred American colleges and universities. The Fellowship for a Christian Social Order arranged, in 1927, a conference at Hillsdale College, Michigan, co-educational, with four hundred students, a Baptist minister president, with Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for governor of New York, in 1924—when he received 45,000 votes in a poll of 1,150,000—as leading orator and director. Mr. Thomas is, or was, a director of the League. He boasted that he and three other Socialists had addressed, in 1927, 52,000 students in 136 colleges and universities, from Maine to Texas. Of course the boast was part of an appeal for funds.

Perhaps the drive on the colleges and universities is caused by the determined and increasing conservatism of the American Federation of Labor, the great organization of those who really work for their livings. The Federation rejects radicalism more sternly as its members become more prosperous and intelligent and realize more clearly the blessings of cordial friendship and mutual confidence and cooperation between labor and capital. Samuel P. Luzzo, a prominent A. F. L. official of Chicago, in a published letter to President Green, asks his attention to the continual efforts of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, supported largely by the $2,000,000 endowment fund given it by Andrew Carnegie, to encourage and stimulate the Communists and Socialists, who join the Russian Soviets—open and blatant assailants of Christianity and all religion—in fighting the Federation and laboring to destroy it. An element of comedy is supplied by the fact that these radical movements are entangled and connected with each other and, by interlocking directorates and otherwise, with the Pacifists and Pacifism, while the Soviets, proclaimed as maintaining the ideal system of society and government which we are urged to adopt, keep under arms the largest standing army in the world.

Eleven organizations in this country are composed of persons sworn never to take part in war, offensive or defensive, by service, labor or subscription to war loans. Nine are obtruding themselves on relations of capital and labor, five of these including in their names "Christian" or "Church" and one calling itself "Methodist". There are five organizations of Communists, one composed of boys, eight organizations of Socialists, one for Negroes. To the sorrow of many in this part of the country, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are classed as participating vigorously, in New York and Western cities, in pacifism and its allied endeavors.

The leaders and workers contrive to take fairly good care of themselves. They have the Carnegie total of ten millions for advancement of world peace—certainly used in ways which Mr. Carnegie would denounce strongly. The Garland fund, an inherited million, given by a young man of feeble mind and "liberal" tendencies, who was sent to jail in Pennsylvania for establishing a free love farm and contributing to the delinquency of sixteen young women, is another help. Apparently, there are other sources of revenue. Before a congressional committee in 1926 expenses of the American Civil Liberties Union—which specializes in defending persons charged with incendiary and disloyal utterances and conduct—were reported at over $40,000; League for Industrial Democracy, $30,000; Fellowship of Reconciliation, $5,400, and so on.

The Christian Church is the one powerful, ceaseless, resistless driving and leading force in progress toward ideal social conditions, peace on earth, good will among all men, the strong ready always with help for the weak, life made happier, brighter, more hopeful for all. All progress of that kind has been and is in the Christian countries, or by their guidance. We here have Canada on one side of us and Mexico on the other and the difference between the Canadian working man and the peon in Mexico—where effort of the government to exterminate religion has just failed ignominiously—is plainly before us. The French 140 years ago undertook to establish a country with religion banished. Such experiments end in disaster invariably. The disturbers, incendiaries, radicals, are not new. Always there has been a certain proportion of the dissatisfied, embittered, disappointed and natural and instinctive mischief makers. Such led revolt against Moses and Aaron and extolled the flesh pots of Egypt and the golden calf as their successors here now tell us of the glories of Russia and the beauty of the policies there. Shakespeare knew them—"Moody beggars starving for a time of pell-mell havoc and confusion." They were noisy and pestiferous at the beginning of our government. With 62,000,000 members of religious bodies, 30,000,000 members of secret and charitable orders, all sworn to uphold government and law, and 14,000,000 stockholders in corporations—the vast majority of them wage earners—in this country we are not in danger of revolution. We are not likely to adopt the laws and customs of the scores of small Russias in Central Africa and parts of Madagascar, in which there is no capitalism, all property, including wives, is held in common and the communist and socialist systems are in perfection. There is need, however, for the churches and their loyal and reasoning memberships to scan carefully the faculties and methods and associations of all institutions asking their patronage and all organizations, including particularly those wearing Christian and Church names, soliciting their help. It is to be remembered that all these liberals and modernists are very practical people. According to their doctrines and teachings, such things as honor, truth, patriotism, loyalty, allegiance to solemn oath, are mere abstractions, unsupported by science or any geological, or archaelogical discoveries, or sociological, or psychological investigations and mankind is the spawn of rotting and stagnant water of countless ages ago. Persons who pervert the philanthropies and betray the confidence of the dead are not likely to be scrupulous in representations when seeking to advance their purposes or secure for themselves the notoriety they ceaselessly crave and easy livings by using the credulity of the callow and the passions, prejudices and greed of the foolish and malicious.

We are informed that in more than one hundred of our colleges in the United States there are stationed representatives of the so-called Industrial Democracy, formerly designated Intercollegiate Socialistic Society. We are reminded of Macaulay's great work, wherein he makes Horatius at the bridge say: "Then none were for the party and all were for the state and the great man helped the poor and the poor man loved the great, in those great days of old, as the Mason says, 'So mote' it be."

Langbourne M. Williams.

LEE AND BEAUREGARDE—WHY NOT DAVIS ALSO?

(Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser.)

Secretary of War Good has approved the suggestion of Major-General William Smith, Superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point, that "large and appropriate portraits" of Lee and Beauregarde be hung in the cadet mess hall.

Both of the Confederate generals were superintendents of the academy and small pictures of each are already in place. General Smith considered, however, that either picture should be as large as those of the other superintendents. Funds for the portraits will be provided by the academy.

This is commendable and gracious of Secretary Good and General Smith. But their action serves to remind us that West Point owes an unpaid debt of recognition to Jefferson Davis.

West Point owes more to Jefferson Davis than to any other Secretary of War since its establishment. Mr. Davis, a graduate of the academy, conceived and put into effect the idea that its educational standards should be raised to a point equal to the standards of the great universities. The scholastic standards of the academy had not been notably high. Mr. Davis made it his special care as Secretary of War to see that intellectually the institution should be equal to any university. His vision and enterprise thus marked a turning point in the history of the academy and many thousands of our bright young men have since profited by his foresight and the fame of West Point has been correspondingly enhanced. Mr. Davis, by all fair accounts, was a great Secretary of War and the importance of his services in that capacity are not diminished by the circumstance that later he was the Confederate civil chieftain.

Nevertheless, it is our information that there is nothing at West Point to acknowledge the academy's debt to Mr. Davis. There is no memorial to him, and his portrait is missing from its walls. It is from the pages of history rather than from the memorials of the academy that one hears of Davis' service to his country by raising the standards of West Point.

Somewhere on the walls at West Point there should be a life-size portrait of Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi.

CHRIST'S EARLY SURROUNDINGS.

By Bishop of Lahore.

There are many little hints in the Parables which enable us to guess the circumstances under which He was brought up. His home was one of decent, not of squalid poverty, but the little house was so small that the lighting He lived among people who had no great margin, whose He lived among people who had no great margain, whose supply of daily bread, baked for the day, did not suffice to cover sudden additional calls, and so the parable of the friend at midnight may have come vividly from His own experience. If Joseph died as Jesus was coming to manhood, and while his brothers and sisters were still young, Jesus Himself, we must suppose, became the chief breadwinner and shared with Mary the cares of the household. He certainly watched the leaven at work in the meal, when she made the bread, and He may well have rejoiced with her over the successful search for a lost coin. He lived among people the only playground for whose children was the village street and He had watched the children playing as ours do still today, at weddings and funerals. He lived among simple people and was familiar with simple cares and interests and therefore through all the records of His life there is no trace of a hint that He was ever "bored". I like too to think that His attitude towards womanhood, which has revolutionized the position of woman in Christendom, was due to His relationship with that wonderful mother. The link between a widowed mother in a small house and a thoughtful son growing to manhood and sharing her burdens is a very close and beautiful link.—Lahore Diocesan Magazine.

"HIGHER CRITICISM," WHENCE IT IS AND WHITHER TENDS

By the Reverend James W. Morris, D. D.

ONE real service Bishop Gore's New Commentary will render to the Church. It should make very clear what even the "moderate" critics teach. It sets forth with approval the chief ideas of devastating import that continental critics hold and that are now enthusiastically propagated by hosts of Christian teachers and preachers. It asserts and builds upon as scientifically established facts many views of the radical critics which, once accepted and logically applied, must destroy any worthwhile belief in supernatural revelation. It claims for the whole portentous theory of Wellhausen, barring certain details, the quality of scientific certainty.

It puts before us in simple and untechnical language the whole scheme, so that plain people of good sense may see just what it is all about. It makes it possible for those of us who cannot claim Olympian scholarship to see what the inevitable results must be of these "assured facts of modern criticism" and thus to recognize in it all the old familiar marks of barren naturalism.

We know what will happen if people come to believe that the books of Moses are a conglomerate of doubtful documents and late traditions, which have been compiled and edited after the exile, and then falsely ascribed to the great Moses, thus getting the authority that they have. It is not hard to know what the "uncritical" mind will think of the moral status of a long history pretended to be given of God through Moses and most of it professing to be contemporaneous with him, that is proven by a mass of discrepancies, contradictions and scientific blunders to be of late and utterly uncertain authorship. That such an astonishing fraud, such a long and careful literary forgery should be considered by serious men a proper vehicle for a revelation from the God of wisdom and truth, will be regarded by most people as a hardly credible phenomenon. Most of us will think such a thing an offense to God and a dishonor to truth, and will repudiate any divineness in such a production.

Professor Erith, of Jamaica, writes a short history of higher criticism. He tells the whole unsavory story with a straight face, and with no sense of humor. He appears to think that a bad ancestry is a good asset.

It was a French physician of low character named Astruc that gave the start to the whole business. His ideas, taken up by a line of confessedly rationalistic writers who developed and added to his "discovery", were at length brought to full flower and fruitage in the speculations of a school of Dutch and German scholars who frankly rejected all supernatural religion. Professor Erith, after running over this unedifying story, bids us receive from such profane and unchristian sources the new light that shall make more rational and more spiritual all the books of Moses and the prophets!

As well might we be asked to get our Christian teaching from the writings of Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll. God's Word cannot be understood either critically or morally by men, however brilliant, who have made shipwreck of their faith in God. Yet it is from the writings of men of this character that Professor Erith and other higher critics have imbibed their woeful notions of the books of Moses.

Astruc, who began the kind of speculation now called criticism, did not deny Moses' authorship of Genesis. Indeed he wrote his book in 1753 in defense of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. He thought that Moses composed his book from two main ancient sources distinguished by their use of two distinct names for God. The use of these two names is very potent in Genesis. One named Elohim is translated God in our Bible: the other name Jehovah is translated the Lord. And so Astruc supposed that Moses made use of two principal documents, the E document and the J document.

This idea, of course, does not in any way impugn the authorship of Moses. That Moses had ancient documents at his disposal, in composing under the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, the most ancient continuous history in all the world, may reasonably be supposed. And if that were all that is meant by the modern higher critical theory, no question need be made. For clearly God inspired men to record His revelation, not only through direct communication, but also through the use of written documents (Luke 1:1, 2) and in the selections from oral traditions.

And so Astruc's notion of two sources as denoted by the two divine titles—God and the Lord—may have some basis in fact. The Catholic explanation of the names, however, is much more satisfactory. Elohim refers to God in His eternal nature and being; while Jehovah refers to him in His covenant relationship with His people: the one is God as pertaining to all the universe, the other is God as especially belonging to His people.

Now it is this use of the divine names that was at the beginning made the basis of all the "analyses" of the early Old Testament books. And it is still upon this basis that the critics proceed in very many instances.

Of course, it is the fashion now to say that this use of names is not made so much of as it was. It is no longer regarded as one of the "principal criteria" that distinguish different writers. The critics have been forced to do a good deal of hedging in this matter, while still using the rule. It has been shown to their confusion that the Septuagint, the famous translation of the Old Testament into Greek, made during the second or third century before Christ, does not use the divine names in the same way that the Hebrew does. And yet the Septuagint is, according to many scholars, based upon an older Hebrew text than that found in our Hebrew Bible.

This harmless theory of Astruc was taken up by the Scotchman Geddes and a line of German rationalistic students, beginning with Eichorn and continued by DeWette, Ewald and others. They discovered other additional strands of old documents, and they extended this sort of separating into documents to Joshua, making what they call the "Hexateuch". Then set in the work of late dating, of inventing editors and redactors, very cunning and yet at the same time quite stupid, and of twisting the history into shape to suit any theory.

Up to the time of Ewald, while the books were roughly handled and split up into fragments, there was quite a general acknowledgment of the Mosaic authorship, or at least origin of the books. But the real Simon-pure modern higher criticism did not emerge till Graf, Wellhausen and Kuenen began their baneful labors. They indeed are the real authors of modern higher criticism, and the acknowledged masters and teachers of the writers in the "New Commentary" as well as of the multitude of Hebrew teachers in our colleges and seminaries.

These men deny utterly any peculiar divine element in the Old Testament writings. They regard them as human documents, many of inferior quality both as to history and as to moral value. They reduce the history of Israel to ruins. They obliterate the whole history of the wilderness, and reduce to what they call "anachronistic" imaginings the entire account of the tabernacle, its construction and its ceremonials. The whole was an imaginary throwback from the exile, invented to give authority to the priestly authors! They make the history ascribed to Moses, a very late compilation from vague traditions and fragmentary documents, thus undermining its factual value.

Graf made what Dr. Oer calls the great somersault of criticism. He made first things last and last things first. With earthquake violence he threw down the whole sequence of events, so that the evolutionary theory of a gradual discovery of God by the Hebrews might be constructed out of the fragments. He "proved" we are asked to believe, while Wellhausen clinched the proof, and that what is now called the P. document, or the priestly writings (characterized usually by the use of Elohim for God), was compiled and written by unknown priests after the exile. These P. writings include large parts of Genesis, most of Exodus and Numbers, and all of Leviticus!

The other parts of these books and the book of Joshua largely existed in some form about the time of Amos the prophet; but they too were not put together till after the exile. The pitiful time therefore after the exile is, in the opinion of these men of uncanny prescience, the greatest literary period in the whole history of Israel!

At that time a keen company of editors and redactors, forgers and falsifiers of extraordinary skill, put together and arranged all the books, harmonizing them where they needed it, putting in certain passages where it was necessary to make one document older than another, etc., and thus succeeded in hoodwinking all the world of scholars, historians and critics, so that their crafty and cunning deceits were not discovered and disclosed till near three thousand years afterwards!

In all the range of literature, in all the history of mankind, in all the documentary records of the world, there never was so stupendous, so marvelously concocted, so cunningly and successfully executed a falsification of old documents. Such a clever record of pretended history and of fabricated institutions, the critics with sublime prescience and magical second sight have dug up out of the ages. There never was a fraud perpetrated upon the whole world of devotedly religious peoples that had so immediate, so far-reaching and so abiding and beneficent a success. For thousands of years none of the millions of earnest students and pious readers of these books had any suspicion of their extraordinary falsification of history, of laws, of religious regulations. It remained for a select company of Dutch and German scholars—men who had abandoned all credence in a supernatural revelation—to tear away the mask, to expose the deceit and to relieve the world of the burden of believing such fables. And so we seem to have come to the point where we must believe no longer in the inspiration of Moses, but in that of Wellhausen and his followers. It seems easier and more reasonable, if we are to believe Professor Erith and the rest, to suppose that a set of scholars of the nineteenth century are able to dissect documents dating at least from the fifth century before Christ and to expose their falsities, than to believe that Moses inspired of God composed and edited the books. This all amounts to accepting the inspiration of these unbelieving critics and denying that of Moses.

There are difficulties in the Old Testament books: there are problems there of history, of literature, of morals that tax our best gifts and demand our most anxious thought. Many of these problems are probably insoluble. But surely to pretend to take these ancient documents and to rewrite the whole history on principles discovered only in the nineteenth century, is not to resolve any difficulty: it is rather to set up an absurdity. Says a distinguished critic, "Nothing is simpler than the Grafian hypothesis. At one stroke the Mosaic period is wiped out." And so the history is not explained: it is expunged.

From what has been said, all of which and much more may be verified by any one who takes the patience to read the "New Commentary", it is very certain that we should not allow ourselves to be deceived by the constant assertion that nothing is intended or done in modern criticism subversive of sound Christian teaching or of faith in supernatural revelation. It is the fashion to tell us that dates of books and their authorship may be discussed and many changes made without injury to Christian faith. But it is abundantly clear that this whole scheme involves much more than the discussion of dates and of the probable authorship of old documents. It demands a falsification of the history of the Hebrew people, from which the very Gospel has come. However much many believing critics may seek to stop short of the terrible conclusions of the Graf-Wellhausen hypothesis, it is logically impossible to do so. The legitimate and inevitable result of the whole system is a dishonoring of God's holiness and veracity and the repudiation of anything like divine inspiration.

A great scholar, deeply read in all the critical theories, asks this question—

"Is it (e. g., Old Testament history and literature) the natural product of the development of the human spirit, as Kuenen and others allege, or is it much more, the result of special, supernatural revelation to Israel, such as other nations did not possess?"

"Must man's changing and erring thoughts about God henceforth take the place of God's words to man? Are the erstwhile "lively oracles" of God simply the fragmentary remains of a literature to which no special divine quality attaches? Is the supposed history of revelation largely a piecing together of the myths, legends and free inventions of an age whose circle of ideas the modern spirit has outgrown?"

It is confessedly and frankly from scholars who make the Old Testament "a natural product of the human spirit" that the writers of this disastrous New Commentary get their theory, their "analyses", their persistent and perverse misreading and discrediting of the ancient history of Israel. Where the history can be made use of to support their theory that the poor post exilic time was the golden age of Hebrew literature, laws and religion, it is meticulously and very literally accepted and where it cannot be straightjacketed into submission to the theory, it is scrapped or "redacted" out of shape.

It is time for all who think that the truth of the New Testament is intimately bound up with the historic verity of the Old, to take a firm stand—and to call the bluff of these men, who in their self-conceit ignore all scholarship except their own. A grandiose system of radical criticism, forged in the armory of outspoken and arrogant infidelity, should no longer be allowed to parade itself as the last word of scientific Biblical research. A theory whereby the traditions of men are made to supersede the teachings of God cannot stand the test of impartial examination.

Our Lord has definitely proclaimed the futility of the teaching that puts traditions of men in the place of commandments of God. He has put His stigma on the work of religionists and scribes "who leave the commandment of God and hold fast the tradition of men" and "who make void the Word of God by their tradition" (Mark 7:16-13). He has passed sentence on all such efforts. He says of them, "In vain". They are worthless.

STRATFORD HALL TO BE SCENE OF LEE PAGEANT.

Fredericksburg, Va.—A pageant depicting scenes in connection with Stratford, birthplace of General Robert E. Lee and his forbears, will be presented at the old estate in Westmoreland County at eight o'clock on the evening of September 27. This announcement was made by Mrs. Charles Stuart, of Stratford, wha has arrangements in charge.

Mr. Paul Kester, distinguished author and resident of the neighboring county of King George, whose new novel, Diana Dauntless, written in the period of Queen Caroline and King George II of England, has been such popular summer reading, is arranging the tableaux.

The pageant will be strictly historical and all those acting will be appropriately costumed in period dress. Included in the series of tableaux will be:

Powhatan, the great Indian King, with his family, receiving Captain John Smith and his men on the shores of the historic Potomac, on the Stratford estate.

Richard Lee, the immigrant, acquiring the land on which Stratford now stands, by original charter from the British crown and subsequent negotiations with the Indians.

Queen Caroline, King George II., and Sir Robert Walpole, the queen, is sending a gift of three hundred pounds to assist Colonial Thomas Lee to rebuild his home in Virginia, which had been destroyed by fire in February, 1729. Colonel Lee was grandfather of Richard Henry Lee, "The Cicero of the House".

Mrs. Augustine Washington, mother of George, comes from Wakefield with her baby, George, to visit Mrs. Thomas Lee.

John Wesley preaching in the Colony in 1736 to the backwoodsmen and Indians.

Colonel Thomas Lee negotiates the treaty of Lancaster with the Indians in Pennsylvania in 1744. This opened the whole West to English settlement.

Richard Henry Lee writing the Westmoreland resolutions nearly ten years prior to the Declaration of Independence and the forerunner of the Declaration.

William Lee and Arthur Lee meet Dr. Samuel Johnson in London at dinner. Dr. Johnson regards them askance over his shoulder.

Richard Henry Lee moves the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, June, 1776.

Arthur Lee with Benjamin Franklin at Paris negotiating the treaty with the officials of the French capital.

Light Horse Harry Lee brings home the bride.

Minuet.

Robert E. Lee as a baby in his mother's arms, attended by an old mammy.

General Lee bids farewell to the Confederate soldiers at Appomattox, closing the Civil War.

General Lee seated in his study at Lexington, Va., a solitary figure.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. J. Ortwyn, of Los Angeles, California:

> The shortest biography: 1 Timothy 3:16—"God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

A DOOR ONCE BARRED AND BOLTED, NOW OPEN.

Current events in the Near East lend interest to these recent remarks from Dr. Samuel Zwemer, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of modern authorities on Islam:

We may say that at last the whole of Christendom faces the whole Moslem world in the open. The day of clandestine or indirect approach or contacts is past. They know and we know that Christianity and Islam face each other as rivals for world dominion. Compromise of principles is as impossible for them as it is for us. But a new sense of brotherhood and of international trust will result, if we play fair. A great and effectual door has been opened for the Gospel. A door once barred and bolted is nailed open.

The Cross of Christ is the missing link in Islam's creed; it is our glory. The life of Christ alone can elevate their moral conceptions; dare we withhold that life from them? The power of Christ alone is able to set them free in the liberty of the sons of God; shall we not proclaim to them this freedom? Their political hopes in a pan-Islamic program are ruined. But they deserve sympathy and help in their struggle for a new nationalism and the principles of democracy. The soil of their hearts has been broken up by the plowshare of God. Now is the time for sowing; tomorrow, the harvest.

THE SHAMEFUL BIRTH OF OUR MARRIAGE CANON--- ANOTHER CRITICAL EXIMINATION

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D,

Secretary of the Sanctity of Marriage Association.

IT is a notable and hopeful sign that during the almost ten years of the existence of the Sanctity of Marriage Association, after the publication of more than fourteen pamphlets in defense of the Christian doctrine of marriage, no public challenge has ever been made of any of our facts or arguments. Criticism has been confined to two courteous personal letters addressed to the Secretary by members of the late General Convention, the chancellors of two of the most important dioceses in the Church. "The rest is silence."

The only difficulty found by one of these eminent lawyers was this: He "was not clear enough about our Lord's actual teaching to maintain that the Eastern Churches are wrong in their tradition of it, even though the Latin tradition be different". The objection made by the second writer was to the use of certain words employed by the Secretary concerning the revolutionary action of the General Convention of 1868, which turned the "resolution" of the insignificant and half-educated House of Deputies of 1808 (fourteen clerical and thirteen lay), but clearly not the House of Bishops (only two, very troubled, men—the Ven. William White, of Pennsylvania, and Thomas John Claggett, of Maryland), into a canon making possible the remarriage of the "innocent party" in a case of adultery.

The particular statement objected to in the Secretary's article was that this action was taken "with refusal to refer the matter to a commission, and ignorantly, illegally, and in rejection of our pledge in 1789 to uphold both the doctrine and discipline of the mother that gave us birth." (See Preface to the Prayer Book, page 5, and Article X of the Constitution, which requires that all changes in the doctrine, and even wording, of the Prayer Book must be referred for final approval to the succeeding General Convention.) The Chancellor claimed that this statement was "unwarranted and misleading, and should be corrected".

As the difficulties felt by these two able lawyers may also be the difficulties of others, especially members of the now enlarged Joint Commission, I trust that space may be granted me for at least a portion of my replies. My answer to this second letter was in substance that the case was even worse than I had stated it. I reminded the Chancellor that all our ecclesiastical lawyers of recognized authority have held that from 1607 and 1620 up to October, 1868, this American Church was living under the inherited law of the Church of England, unbroken through twelve hundred years of national existence, as well as six hundred earlier years of primitive and Catholic tradition. That is the unanimous judgment of Dr. Hawks, Judge Hoffman, Dr. Francis Finton, and Dr. Edwin A. White, a priest of legal training and practice, and for twelve years chairman of the Committee on Canons of the House of Deputies. (See his American Church Law, 1898, and his Annotated Constitution and Canons, published by order of the House of Deputies in 1924.)

It was probably in complete ignorance of this fact that the diminutive House of Deputies (not the "General Convention", for there is no evidence, rather the contrary, that the two Bishops, without power of veto until 1811, acceded) adopted the "resolution" which attempted to revolutionize the Christian law of marriage, "as this Church had received the same from the Apostles' time". It is true that this action had no force of law, nevertheless it helped mightily through the succeeding sixty years to vitiate the moral atmosphere, already for nearly two hundred years poisoned by the low views of marriage brought to New England by the Puritans.

Let us now look forward for sixty years. Two generations have lived and passed away. Young men who knew nothing of the ancient law of God have taken their place. There have been great changes in the land—the war with Mexico, a new empire in the South, the conquest of the west to the ocean, population multiplied sixfold, the turmoil of the Civil War. In the Church also great changes. From less than 200 clergy all told to a thirteenfold increase, 2,662 clergy and 35 dioceses. But meanwhile the false resolution had been sowing its evil seed, both within the Church and beyond. Following this bad example, civil law was loosening the bonds of marriage still more. Divorce with remarriage was increasing rapidly.

The General Convention of 1868 meets in the Church of the Transfiguration in the city of New York. Alarm is felt and expressed in both Houses. In the House of Bishops a special committee (not "commission") of five is appointed on the tenth day, October 17. This consisted of the Bishop of Rhode Island (Clark), chairman; the Bishop of Connecticut (Williams), both of whom I knew and admired; Bishops Atkinson, of North Carolina; Talbot (assistant), of Indiana, and Armitage (assistant), of Wisconsin.

Five days later, October 22, they report a proposed canon, which is referred to the Committee on Canons. (See Journal, pages 208, 229, 230.) The next day, October 23, "agreeing in the views presented in the report", the committee recommends it, and the revolutionary canon is "unanimously adopted" (page 237). On October 26 a slight amendment by the House of Deputies is agreed to (page 253), and on October 28 final action of concurrence is taken with the other House (page 266).

In view of the foregoing facts it is easy to explain the readiness with which these five excellent bishops, after only five days' "study", amid the natural confusion and demands of a large body of clergy and laity, brought in their unanimous report which, after another day, is "unanimously adopted" by the House, namely, that the revolutionary "resolution" of 1808 should now be crystallized into a canon with all the sanction of law.

All of these bishops had probably never known any law on the matter other than this resolution, which was not law, but only the rash and ignorant act of a diminutive House of Deputies. The oldest, Bishop Atkinson (69), was only a baby when the fatal resolution of 1808 was adopted. Bishop Clark (56) was not born till four years later; Bishop Talbot (52) eight years later; Bishop Williams (51) nine years later, while Bishop Armitage (38) was not born till twenty-two years had passed. They never knew anything different.

And what, let us ask, are the only reasons which the five bishops give for their recommendation. First of all, that "they are impressed by the attention which the subject has received in several of the diocesan conventions, and the numerous publications upon it by both clergymen and laymen" (page 229). No mention whatever is made of the character of these publications, nor of the weight of their arguments, but only "the importance of action by this General Convention". In brief, something must be done, that is all. This is the sum of their reasons.

Nor is this the worst. In their next sentence they proceed to quote with complete confidence "the opinion which the General Convention (?) in the year 1808, pronounced giving it verbatim, namely: "Resolved, That it is the sense of this Church that it is inconsistent with a law of God, and the ministers of this Church shall not unite in matrimony [italicized words sic] any person who is divorced, unless it be on account of the other party having been guilty of adultery." Their imagination as to divine law, custom, tradition and "the ancient canons" (see the solemn question addressed to them at their consecration, Prayer Book, page 526, did not extend farther back than to the city of Baltimore in 1808, nor even to the revisors of 1789 and the solemn promise that still stood in their Prayer Book (page 6, Preface). Surely here was bathos! The next day, October 23, the proposed canon, with the proviso of the uneducated and turbulent House of thirty-seven Deputies, which so alarmed Bishop White, was reported back from the Committee on Canons and "unanimously adopted" (page 237).

This report of the bishops' special committee was the fullest and the only one that gave any reasons for their action; even borrowed reasons, from a House of Deputies so insignificant, and concerning whose history they seemed to be wholly ignorant! Let us now turn to the House of Deputies, where conditions are no different. On October 22, Dr. Adams, of Nashotah, offered a proposed canon, and on the twenty-fourth the Committee on Canons proposed one of their own, but both contained the fatal proviso (pages 105, 106, 122). On the same day the House refused the the bishops to its own committee (pages 125, 126), and two days later the committee recommended concurrence with the bishops, introducing for the first time that very elusive phrase, "the innocent party". Thereupon it was reported to the bishops and by them finally adopted on October 28 (pages 139, 253, 266), after eleven days of such careless consideration.

Here we have the unvarnished tale of the conception and birth of this revolutionary canon. Neither reasons nor arguments are given for its adoption. And if we consult the verbatim record of the debates in the House of Deputies (providentially ordered by the House, and preserved to us in bound volumes in the Public Library of New York and that of the General Theological Seminary), we shall fail to find there any reasoned argument from Holy Scripture, or logic, or history, in defense of the novel proposal. In fact, one is impressed with the very slight consequence attached to the question.

"Let the ancient customs prevail", was a great maxim of the early Church. This was not because the customs were ancient, but because uninterrupted custom through all the centuries "from the beginning", as St. John puts it so often, is the best possible evidence of truth; as in the case of the two great sacraments of the Gospel, Baptism and the Holy Eucharist. It is the same great principle of "continuing stedfastly" in the apostles' doctrine, etc. (Acts 2:42), which is given in the Preface of the Ordinal; namely, that "from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of ministers in Christ's Church". It is the principle of "continuity" underlying our belief also in Holy Writ, as expressed in the sixth and twentieth of the Thirty-nine Articles.

Only a few words will be necessary from my reply to the letter of the Chancellor of the Diocese of X, whose chief or only difficulty in accepting the plea of our Association was "the tradition of the Eastern Churches"—"the changeless East"—in regard to divorce and remarriage. I referred him to the history of that break with tradition, as given by Oscar Watkins in Holy Matrimony (Macmillan Co.), and as summarized by Bishop Hall in Divorce in America (Macmillan Co., pages 117-134), which found its nemesis in the victorious attacks of polygamous and cruel Mohammedanism in the seventh and following centuries. In fact, the departure of the Eastern Churches from the ancient path is well illustrated in our own case; in our new environment in the West, with outnumbering dissenters, all committed to the loose and unscriptural ideas of Luther and Calvin and Milton. In America it has taken only a hundred and twenty years to establish in the minds of our own people an utterly false tradition, unknown still to every other branch of the Anglican Church—a much shorter time than it took in the Eastern Church.

In the East another five hundred years pass, and in the eleventh century, by the inevitable logic of the case, looser ideas were adopted, so that Watkins is compelled to write: "It is not too much to say that at the present day [1895] the Church allows divorce for well-nigh 'every cause'" (page 317). Only thirty-three years have passed since that was written, and "the mills of God have ground" out the inescapable result in the vast empire of Russia by another power as cruel as that of the Turk.

Here is solemn warning to the world, as well as to America. A single rift in the divine dam of the moral law, just as truly as a single rift in the Church's faith in the Incarnation, leads on logically to the mighty flood that ignores all law and ends in disaster. There is no logical resting place between the easiest of all methods of getting rid of husband or wife and the fifty others provided by our State Legislatures, some harder to endure and to prove than adultery.

No wonder that St. Augustine in the fourth century should write: "If by the adultery of a spouse the marriage bond is dissolved, the absurdity follows—that the woman may be loosed from her bond by her unchastity; and if she is loosed she shall not be an adulteress if she sin with another man; which is as foolish a thing as could be said" (Comm. on Romans, 7:2, 3; see also Watkins Holy Matrimony, page 334). No wonder that the great Old Catholic historian, Dollinger, wrote that to suppose that our Lord could have uttered such a sentiment is "inconceivable".

Nevertheless, our canon, alone among all the Churches of the Anglican Communion and of the whole Eastern Church, contains this "inconceivable" falsehood. Thus also, as no Roman Rota ever dared to do, it has been preaching since 1868 that holy matrimony is not the complete and absolute condition and "holy state" which our Prayer Book declares it to be unequivocally—"for better or for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, till death"—but only a temporary contract until a civil court declares it sundered; in brief, "trial" marriage. Let us pray that, not only in our own Communion, but among "all who profess and call themselves Christians", this "inconceivable thing may be forever done away.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The name of Captain I. B. Edwards, Deputy Governor of the Province of Cotabato in the Philippine Islands, will be familiar to many as a long-time friend of the Church's work, especially of its more recently established mission among the Tiruray tribe. To Captain Edwards a Tiruray man, recently gave free expression to some of his ideas about Americans, which Captain Edwards has reported in the "Philippine Magazine". Underneath the quaint humor, there is, for those who can see it, a serious viewpoint, which does not take for granted the racial superiority so easily assumed by Americans. It may be added that the Tiruray are superior to most if not all of the surrounding tribes, and are likely to become their leaders, for which reason the Church's work among them is of special importance.

Said the Tiruray man to Captain Edwards:

When the Spaniards were driven from Mindanao by Americans, the Moros began killing Filipinos and Tiruray. The Americans heard about this cruelty and came to defeat the Moros and save us all. They did this effectively and just in time. There would have been none of us left in another year under the Moros.

It is not known why the Americans took the trouble to thus help us. They say they just wanted to and, although this seems an improbable motive, we always admit it when in conference with them, as there is apparently no more adequate motive.

All Americans think they are superior. We do not think so. It seems impossible, but what can one say in a discussion? All tangible evidence supports their contentions—machines, fine clothes, an abundance of food, et cetera, against our inexpressible sense of a superior realization of things as they really are.

They can sometimes be as polite as we are, having a word for "tabia" (excuse), never passing in front of one without permission, not eating until one's companions are ready, and in many ways showing as good custom as we do.

They treat women as we do persons of rank, carefully saluting them, helping them complimentarily when there is no need of it, never permitting them to carry things, and always showing them a smiling face. How they must love them! Of course this would be all wrong if their women were like ours, but we like to see it, and wish our women might be so treated.

All Tiruray like Americans, although they seem mostly crazy. Crazy people are always liked. Americans do not get angry at little things, easily, as do our own people, the Moros or Filipinos, but when they do get angry they are really awful. Except when trying to buy some valuable thing, they do not haggle. They appreciate little things you do for them. They are brave, but not aggressive, and they know how and when to forgive. These are the things Tiruray like. We Tiruray want to be real Filipinos, like the teachers from the North, but the real reason we want to be so is so that we may get along with the Americans as they do.

PLAYING THE SOVIET GAME.

Those who are anxious to develop business relations with Russia, which up to now have been conducted in considerable volume on a cash or barter basis, might recall an old proverb, "A liar should have a good memory". In the matter of Zionism these pocket sympathizers with the Bolshevists in their worldwide campaign against Great Britain forget the circumstances of British rule in Palestine.

Within a few years of the armistice and the Balfour pledge of sympathetic support to the Zionist movement in 1919, the British put their Palestine mandate on a genuine peace basis. The French mandate next door in Syria was still administered by an army of occupation but the British withdrew their troops, including the military police and established a native police force of some thousand men with British officers. This and a well founded detachment of aeroplanes was the total force for preserving law and order.

It is already forgotten that this gesture was hailed with enthusiasm all over the world and particularly at Geneva. Neither Washington nor any one in Congress had a word to say nor did a single Jewish organization of any kind whatever denounce the policy as dangerous. It was compared with the action of the British Government within a few years of the Boer War and all its ill-feeling, in conferring autonomous government on the Boers themselves in South Africa. Not only the Transvaal and the Orange Free State were turned over to a majority rule certain to be Cape Dutch, but the English colonies of Natal and the Cape of Good Hope were added to the Dominion.

This large-minded policy had effects so admirable that the Boers and the English Colonists were trusted to handle the conflict with Germany in Africa. The whole world thought that a similar policy in Palestine was justified. It counted without Moscow. There are three hundred million Mohammedans in the British Empire and unrest was stirred up amongst them. But the Soviets this time had the assistance of Jewish sympathizers, especially in America, and of American newspapers who chose to take offense because the Young Plan was not unconditionally accepted by tht British Government.

Those who think to curry favor with the Soviets by suppotring such a campaign against the British Empire might well remember another proverb, "He who sups with the Devil should have a long spoon".—Selected.

PHI BETA KAPPA.

In Recognition—Character and Love of Learning and In Further Consideration of Promise of Efficiency or Of Distinction Already Attained.

In Articulo Mortis.

A bullet from the Nicaraguan jungle tore through the throat of Captain Robert S. Hunter, of the Marines. He sprayed a machine gun at his enemy. A second bullet crushed his chest. He fell, and whispering to his men, "Don't go back. Go ahead!" he died.

What last spark flares in moribund minds? What is man's exit line, as he walks off the stage of life into the Wings? Anticipation? Charles Mathews, famous English actor, said quietly, "I am ready". Goethe prophesied, "More light!" Byron greeted the abating of his life's fitful fever with "I must sleep now". Stonewall Jackson said in a clear voice, "Let's cross over the river and rest in the shade of the trees". Ecstatic, Daniel Frohman heralded the Lusitania's sullen plunge with, "I am starting on the most wonderful adventure!"

Do some depart with a brave jest on their lips? Said Madame de Pompadour to the priest leaving her deathbedside, "A moment, Father; we'll go away together."

Does the ruling passion still hold sway? Wolfe, victorious at Quebec, cried, "What, do they run already? Then I die happy!" The Earl of Chesterfield, quintessence of courtesy and breeding, received a visitor that last morning, and ordered his valet to "Give Dayrolles a chair". On July 4, y826, fiftieth anniversary of the signing of of the Declaration of Independence, died John Adams, second President of the United States. Said the patriot, "Thomas Jefferson still survives". But Thomas Jefferson died that very morning: "I resign my soul to God, my daughter to my country." Seven years after Gettysburg, Robert E. Lee died, crying, "Tell Hill he must come up!"

Does the moment override all else? Caesar challenged, "You, too, Brutus!" Mirabeau begged, "Let me die to the sound of delicious music!" Washington murmured, "It is well." Sir Walter Raleigh ordered the hesitant axeman, "Strike!"

And One soothed the mourners huddled at His feet, "It is finished".—Richmond News Leader.

WOOD-PULP MAGAZINE.

"Always remember that we are getting out a magazine for the Great American Moron." These were not cynical words, but official instructions from the editor to a writer on the staff of one of the "wood-pulp magazines" that infest the news stands the country over. The writer, who has now risen to The New Republic, discusses, in the issue of August 28, the quality and the almost incredible quantity of these vigorous journalistic weeds, stories of sport, the West, adventure, air, war, sport, crime, "love", confession and the like, which have circulations carrying from 75,000 to 600,000 a week or a fortnight, mainly from news stand sales. They have small subscription lists and carry little advertising. A fortnightly which reached a mere 50,000 died almost immediately. "Wood-pulp literature," says the writer, "caters exclusively to the adolescent mind," almost repulsively moral on the surface, but full of suggestion and the harmful influence of unreality. The detective story magazines are the intellectual kings of the tribe, and their circulation is smaller. "Occasionally a really good story does find its way in. There are even some writers whose work can be read by an adult without nausea. But, as a rule, if you find a yarn of genuine literary merit in a wood-pulp magazine—well, it is probably because the author did not know enough to send it elsewhere."

SAVING OUR SUNDAYS!

A Successful Endeavour.

A popular handibook, bristling with facts and figures on the Sunday question, has just been issued by the Lord's Day Observance Society. It is entitled Our Year Book.

The forty pages are full of heartening reports of the Society's recent successes up and down the country in opposition to enencroachments on the Lord's Day such as Sunday games, Sunday cinemas, Sunday concerts, Sunday prizefights, Sunday dirt track races, etc. The latest attempt to secure the Sunday opening of theatres and music halls has met with unceasing opposition.

The progress of the Come-to-Church Campaign is reported—including the recent observance of Come-to-Church Sunday, when in 5,061 churches special sermons were preached emphasizing the religious uses of our Sundays. The latest development, the acquisition of new headquarters for the Society's expanding work, is also recorded.

No one can read Our Year Book without feeling (1) that, notwithstanding many adverse factors, the battle for our Sundays is by no means lost, and (2) that the Churches have a fighting force in the Lord's Day Observanse Society which after ninety-eight years is justifying its existence more than ever. Our Year Book is published at sixpence, post free. Address: 22, Red Lion-square, London, W. C. 1.

Book Reviews

BETWEEN THE DESERT AND THE SEA: By I. Lilias Trotter. Cloth. 8vo.; Pp. 63. Published by Marshall, Morgan and Scott, London, England. Issued in Association with the Algiers Mission Band.

A beautiful presentation of life in Northern Africa, recalling the pirate days of terror and the monontonous life of Mohammedan staidness and religiosity. Illuminated with superb colored plates, matchlessly producing the scenes, customs and manners of the people. This is not a guide book, but the personal relating of events and experiences incidental to residence in that contrastive land of religious bigotry and aspiring civilization. This charming volume deserves American circulation; and we have but to estimate the exchange to ascertain the probable cost. No doubt it may be had of any book-seller.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

DREAM CARGOES: By David W. Cade. Cloth. Pp. 64. Published by Dean and Company, New York City. Price, $1.00.

The fact that the first edition of this charming book of poetry was sold before publication, is the guarantee of its acceptance by the poetry-reading public. One is not so much impressed by the framing of these poems as that the writer has thrown upon the screen a portraiture of his own soul. And we all love this element in literature. Here is life unvarnished by the conventional exactitudes of social modes. Human nature in simple revelation of its genuineness is herein disclosed.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

ANGLO-CATHOLICISM.

Mr. Editor:

I am today in receipt of a letter from a leading layman of a very large Eastern parish, which further illustrates in a striking way the character of correspondence reaching me from all sections of the country and which speaks for itself:

August 27, 1929.

Hon. C. L. Marsilliot,
928 Exchange Building,
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Fellow Churchman:

It is with much concern that I view the alien doctrines and extreme formalism that are being fastened upon our rational and beautiful ritual by the "Anglo-Catholic" party.

The doctrines and practices set forth in the Book of Common Prayer are far more beautiful and impressive in their Christlike simplicity than all of the superstitious and elaborate ceremonials being introduced by this disloyal group.

The apathy exhibited by the laity in this period of chaos, when the unity and very life of the Protestant Episcopal Church is at stake, is astonishing and deplorable.

The response to the warning sent out by your Society, judging by my own indifference and that in my immediate circle, was doubtless rather meagre in the circumstances. Here I hasten to apologize, for I trusted that the conditions which you set forth were remote and impossible; but I have been rudely awakened to find that your warning was not the ranting of an unduly apprehensive and radical element, but the logical expression of loyal Churchmen who know the facts. These facts have been translated in terms of personal experience, for the church to which I have given my best for thirty years has been snatched away by this ritualistic group, and its identity as a Protestant Episcopal Church has vanished. The "Anglo-Catholic" party, and especially a quasi-secret society, the "Confraternity of Unity", in their fanaticism for unity (unity of Catholics only) are bringing about chaos and even disruption in our own dear church. I presume to observe that if unity be destroyed in our great middle, conservative body of more or less like-minded constituents, the possibility of achieving unity of the extreme Protestant section and the Roman section of the Christian Church is made remote to the vanishing point.

Unity, I believe, can be achieved only through a high regard for personal preference. If Christ is the inspiration and the ideal, regardless of the angle of approach, we have unity, provided that there is no meddling of one following with another.

The "Anglo-Catholics" are determined that their Roman doctrines and practices be followed, even if it means to us a forsaking of our mode of worship, dear to us because of heredity, personal inclination and God-given intelligence. This thrusting of alien practices upon us is a disregard of our personal preference and it is meddling. It may be Catholic, but it is not Christian.

They aim to set up, and do set up, doctrines and practices which are not in accordance with the Ten Commandments, the full example and teaching of Christ, nor with the usages and doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

In order to make their use of images and relics square with the Ten Commandments, they hold that the Second Commandment is inoperative and that it applied only to the early Hebrews. Likewise the Fourth Commandment is not applicable, for there is no longer in practice a Sabbath Day. If that position is maintained, then God spoke only to the Hebrews when He said, "I am the Lord thy God", and He is not our God at all.

The command of Christ to preach, oft repeated and practiced by Him, is being neglected and disregarded by the disproportionate emphasis on the Sacraments. The "appeal to the eye" method by the use of images and brilliant trappings is, in addition to a violation of the Second Commandment, an abandonment of the example of Christ to preach and of His example of simplicity and informality.

The Protestant Episcopal Church, in its interpretation of the "Higher Law", sets forth doctrines and practices subscribed to at the last General Convention. To these the Clergy, when ordained, pledge and vow to conform. So long as these laws are a part of the doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and are contained in the Prayer Book, they cannot honorably be disobeyed. To teach and practice anything contrary is a monstrous absurdity. This serious and insidious practice cannot help but bring chaos in the Church and distress to the minds of Episcopalians.

This disregard of our laws has taken place in my own church. Auricular confession to the Priest is urged and pressure is brought to bear to secure it. Communion has been denied, in one instance at least, to those who believe that fasting is not necessary to a proper Communion. Adoration and Reservation of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper are practiced. The laity are denied the cup in the Eucharistic Service. Invocation of the Saints is practiced. Introduction of images and relics has begun and is being further planned. In short, the exponents of "Anglo-Catholicism" are not bound by the laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to which they made a solemn vow and promise to conform.

The responsibility of those in authority, in the face of complaints, is being shirked, no doubt in the interest of tranquility and unity; but disruption can be forestalled only by immediate reasonable enforcement of the laws of the Church. The longer the delay, the more serious the results.

What has happened in my Church will doubtless occur in other Protestant Episcopal Churches until the laity awaken and assert their right to be consulted and heard in matters that concern their security and felicity. This can best be accomplished by a rigid preservation of the most beautiful, rational, well-balanced liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Please accept my application for membership in the Protestant Episcopal Church League, which aims not to inflict our views on others, but to worship in our own churches in our own way.

Faithfully yours,

_____."

It may be that expressions of this character are meaningless and unworthy of serious consideration on the part of Bishops and Clergy, but, judging from their number and the widely separated communities from which they come, it looks as though the time is fast approaching when the great body of communicants of the Church will no longer stand idly by and see it taken away from them.

C. L. Marsilliot.

Memphis, Tenn.

NEW CHURCH FOR LUTON, ENGLAND.

Mr. Editor:

Among the many problems of Church extension in England, a very great one is the rapid growth of Luton, Beds, and the necessity of the Church to keep pace with her spiritual news.

Three years ago the Iron Church of St. Andrew's in the Parish of Christ Church, stood alone in the cornfields, approached by a cinder path from the Biscot Road. Now it is in the centre of a rapidly developing neighborhood of small houses and the need of a permanent church is urgent.

Plans for a new church have been made by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, the Architect of Liverpool Cathedral, and the estimated cost is £15,000. Of this sum about £8,000 has been given or conditionally promised.

The committee feels that there may be readers of The Southern Churchman who formerly lived in Luton and would like to help.

Any donation from such well wishers would be gratefully received and should be sent either of us—Rev. J. W. Woodhouse, Christ Church Vicarage, Luton; or, Rev. T. H. Pyke, Priest-in-Charge, St. Andrew's House, Biscot Road, Luton.

LINCOLN'S DREAM.

Mr. Editor:

When all the North was rejoicing at Lee's surrender, Mr. Lincoln called a Cabinet meeting.

Stanton was late. Mr. Lincoln told the Cabinet that he was troubled because of a dream he had the previous night. It was the third time he had had that dream. That he was on an open boat at sea alone—a black night—drifting! The first time he had that dream was followed by the Bull Run defeat. The next time he had it was followed by some similar disaster. And now he had had it the third time!

That night he was shot.

These two incidents might well have been included in my article.

P. O. Box 405. S. A. Ashe.
Raleigh, N. C.

THE GOSPEL OF DIVINE PERSONALITY.

Mr. Editor:

My book, entitled "The Gospel of Divine Personality", was issued last year. I feel that the standpoint of the book is such as to commend it to Evangelical readers. As a series of devotional studies on the Gospel of St. John, it elicits the following comment in an otherwise appreciative notice by a modernistic reviewer (in the "Anglican Theological Review" for July, 1929): "Unfortunately the treatment is marred by a strictly literalistic attitude towards the Fourth Gospel. Even St. John 5:4 is restored to the text." (This refers to the words about the angel going down at a certain seasin into the Pool of Bethesda, and troubling the water, which passage is placed by the Revisers of 1883 in the margin; it is they who have removed it from the text.) But, as my reviewer goes on to say, I have "restored" these words to the text "on the ground that the MSS. which lack it (among them are Aleph and B.,—i. e., the Sinaitic and the Vatican MSS.),—"are not the soundest and most reliable!"

I am prepared to defend my conviction that these two manuscripts—Aleph and B.—so referred to by Westcott and Hort and the New Testament Revisers of 1883, are not among the soundest and most reliable manuscripts of the

New Testament, as Dean Burgon has so convincingly demonstrated. (I wish every one would read Philip Mauro's, "Which Version? Authorized or Revised?")

With all good wishes to you and The Southern Churchman, which is doing such splendid work in the defense of the authority of God's Word Written.

Wm. S. Bishop.

Washington, D. C.

Church Intelligence

National Junior Brotherhood of Saint Andrew Convention.

Geneva, New York.—A convention unique in the annals of the Church took place at Hobart College September 5-8, when 150 delegates, most of them between the ages of ten and eighteen years, attended the first National Junior Brotherhood of Saint Andrew Convention, which took "Growth" as its keynote. The allegiance of the youth of the land to Christ was emphasized again and gain in the speeches, the addresses and the informal talks of the lads themselves.

The convention was the first one in which the Junior Brotherhood met separate from the Senior Brotherhood in annual gathering. The delegates represented many different dioceses as farflung as Maine to California and the Church in foreign lands was present in a Japanese delegate, one from Yukon, Canada, while a delegation of five sturdy lads came from Toronto, Canada. Two Bishops, the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, and the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop of Northern Indiana, addressed the delegates, a number of clergymen came with their parish delegations, and Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, of Washington, D. C., president of the National Brotherhood of Saint Andrew, and Mr. Leon P. Palmer, its general secretary, and a number of other National Council members of the Brotherhood were present as interested observers, and helpful in advice and suggestion, although they had no direct part in the management of the convention. All the officials and managers of the convention were men under thirty-one years of age, who had been connected with Brotherhood work in some way.

The general chairman of the convention was Russell Lamson, of Waterloo, Iowa; Donald Gerow, of Washington, D. C., was its business manager, and Douglas C. Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, acted as athletic director. These officers, with the addition of John W. Lord, Jr., of Philadelphia, made up the committee in charge of the convention.

Shortly after the convention opened, the delegates elected J. Osgood Hart, of Detroit, President of the convention, and Compton Walsh, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, Secretary. John Fumio Yamamoto, of Tokyo, and John Fredson, of Yukon, Canada, were elected honorary presidents of the convention.

Michigan sent the largest delegation to the convention. One of the youngest delegates was Wilfred Penny, of the Diocese of Long Island, Church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, eleven years old, known as the boy evangelist, due to the fact that he has preached several times over the radio and often occupies the out of doors pulpit in front of a church.

The delegates lived in the college dormitories and the communal life was one of the inspiring features of the convention.

The stress of the convention was not so much on set speeches as on the conferences which succeeded each address, in which the youngest lads, as well as the older boys, were encouraged to talk and give their views on the subjects just presented.

Notable events in the spiritual life of the convention were the twilight services with junior boys reading the lessons and prayers, the morning chapels held by the chaplain, the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, of Vicksburg, Penn., the final devotional exercises at night held on the big campus of Hobart College under the stars and the constant emphasis by all the speakers on "Prayer and Service", as the underlying aim of the Brotherhood movement.

The crusading spirit of the Brotherhood was portrayed in the organized pilgrimage around Geneva on Saturday, September 7, when one hundred lads distributed personally to the people of that town 20,000 cards of invitation asking them to attend divine service on convention Sunday at Trinity Church, Geneva.

Every morning Holy Communion has been celebrated in the college chapel with practically the entire convention communicating. The celebrants were the Rev. Irving McGrew; the Rev. Fred G. Williams, the Rev. I. Boyd Coxe, and the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, Chaplain of the Convention.

At the opening banquet of the convention, held in Hobart College dining hall on Thursday night, September 5, a letter of greeting from the Most Rev. John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop, was read to the delegates by Russell Lamson, general chairman of the convention. It was written in long hand by the Presiding Bishop from his summer home at Chester, Nova Scotia.

"Mr. Russell O. Lamson.

(Dear friend: Kindly read the message written below to the Juniors, and call their attention to the fact that I have written it with my own hand out of a heart of love for you and them.—J. G. M.)

My Dear Boys, Young and Old:

I regret that I cannot be with you in body on this great occasion. I am with you, however, in spirit and love. I am remembering you in my daily devotions. I am praying for you, one and all. Your convention key-note, 'Growth', is peculiarly pertinent and appropriate.

The most human and gripping words we have regarding Jesus are those telling us of His boyhood growth, 'Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man'.

He grew in Body. He grew in Mind. He grew in Soul.

This threefold growth I covet for you all. Thousands of times I have prayed for it on boys as I have laid my hands upon them in Confirmation, and besought God to give them 'Daily Increase'.

May the Blessed Father bestow this great gift of growth upon you individually and collectively, and make you strong physically, wise mentally, and holy spiritually.

And 'May the God of Peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ the Great Shepherd of the Sheep through the blood of the Everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will; working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen'.

Affectionately, your friend and fellow-worker,

John G. Murray."

The convention was welcomed by the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, Bishop of Western New York, who spoke on "Personal Growth for Leadership". Bishop Ferris outlined the necessity for stressing the spiritual in leadership, especially when dealing with young boys.

Charles H. Tuttle, of New York City, United States District Attorney for Southern New York, another speaker at the banquet, declared that the greatest danger that can come today to the American people is that for the lack of inspired leadership they may be crushed beneath the mere mass of things.

District Attorney Tuttle declared that the two greatest adventures are those of the American Commonwealth and the adventure of the Christian religion, and pointed out that there are common bonds between these two adventures. Mr. Tuttle urged the youth present to preserve their reverence for religion as the foundation of their citizenship. He expressed the belief also that faith was at its floodtide today, although perhaps not so doctrinal, but none the less sincere and real.

One of the interesting speakers Friday morning was Irwin C. Johnson, Detroit, director of boys' work of the Diocese of Michigan. He took as his topic, "Charting One's Self for Growth". The plan for growth advocated by Mr. Johnson and adopted by the boys of the convention was a fourfold formula, embodying equal stressing of the intellectual, the physical, the social and the spiritual based on what must have been the experience of the boy, Jesus, with suggestions as to how the individual boy might rate himself on each of these four divisions.

A vivid speech was also made Friday morning by Douglas Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, Athletic Director of the Convention. Mr. Turnbull, who was a famous athlete in his college days at Johns Hopkins, took as his topic the "Vitalizing of the Devotional Life". He advocated four special elements in the devotional life, prayer, intelligent Bible reading, meditation and worship.

The delegates were greatly thrilled by the appearance of the Rev. John D. D. Hall, of New York City, known as "Daddy Hall", at the Friday twilight service. This venerable missionary of the city streets, who speaks frequently in Wall Street, captivated the boys with his evangelistic speeches and his fervent appeals to them to lead a Christ-like life.

At the regular Friday night session the speakers were the Rev. John Hart, chaplain to the Episcopal students of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, who spoke on "The Athlete's Need of Christ". He was followed by John Fredson, an Alaskan Indian, who accompanied Archdeacon Stuck on his memorable climb of Mt. McKinley. The young Indian, who is a student at the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., described the growth of Christianity in Alaska.

On Saturday, in addition to conferences and the organized pilgrimage around Geneva, an address was given by the Rev. Charles L. Lathrop, executive secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service.

At the service on Sunday at Trinity Church, the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, Bishop of Northern Indiana, preached a sermon on "The Home and Family", in which he declared that the family is both the germ and the foundation, not only of the Church, but also of the state of all that is worthwhile and enduring in our civilization.

"Not only is it true that the Church and the state have grown out of the family as far as past history is concerned," said the Bishop, "but it is equally true that Church and state depend on the family for continued existence in the future.

"The purpose of all authority, whether of parents, of government, or of the Church," he concluded, "is to train for liberty. And if we are going to keep our liberty, we must respect authority. But it must be an authority for which we can have respect. Otherwise, it is tyranny and we revolt from it. But on the other hand, we want to have our own way, regardless of law and order, then we have chaos and nobody is free. In other words, it works both ways. We must have the proper balance of liberty and authority. Our generation has largely thrown away the liberty for which our fathers fought and so we have much lawlessness. Therefore, your generation has before it the task of recovering the liberty that ours has lost and thus restore order and stability."

At the farewell service of the convention, held in Hobart College Chapel at 4 P. M., Sunday, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Ernest V. R. Stires, of Bellerose, Long Island. That service and vision give the abundant life was stressed in his sermon and he outlined the ways in which it could be found in the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew.

In the closing hours of the convention on Sunday, a resolution was passed asking the National Council of the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew to admit representatives of the Junior Brotherhood to the Council. Also a memorial was addressed to the House of Bishops, meeting at Atlantic City in October, asking that body to request parishes to pay more attention to work among young men and to assist the Senior and Junior Brotherhood in every way possible.

E. E. Poe.

Greer Club Association, Inc.

Greer Club has moved to its new address at 46 West Ninety-Sixth Street, New York City.

This is a Residential Club for Episcopal Girl Students coming to New York to study, giving them a place at which to register and to which mail may be addressed, where they may receive and entertain their friends under proper chaperonage, and where they can obtain good meals at reasonable rates.

It was founded at the request of Episcopal students, by members of the Episcopal Church.

The Bishop of the Diocese is its head, being Chairman of the Advisory Board.

Greer Club supplies a long felt need and many letters of appreciation come from former students, parents and guardians. Students have come to Greer Club from almost every State in the Union, from England, Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Panama, and Honolulu. They have come to study art, music, medicine; and to take library, secretarial, and kindergarten courses; some working for the degrees of A. M. or Ph. D.

It is open all the year round.

The activities are many and varied, Student Receptions, Holiday Entertainments, Dances and Sunday Suppers. Afternoon Tea is served daily without charge to students.

Reservations should be made early by girls who wish accommodations, as the number of rooms is limited.

Transients are accommodated during vacation and holiday seasons.

Address: The Social Director, Mrs. Agnes D. Oakley.

BISHOP ROWE SENDS THANKS.

Seattle, Wash.,
September 2, 1929.

To
The Southern Churchman Company,
Richmond, Va.

Dear Southern Churchman:

How much I am indebted to you for the "Southern Churchman", and for your personal, gracious and helpful consideration. Through the Southern Churchman you have raised the "cut" of approximately $2,700, which I had to make on the salaries of the "workers" in Alaska. To make that—to do it in that way—was like tearing my heart out. But I saw no other way. And that you should so take it to your heart, and appeal to the dear "Southern Churchman" friends, simply gets me. I am yours forever, though I have ever been a lover of the Churchman.

When I got your telegram assuring me that the "cut" was met through your splendid appeal, my heart overflowed. Thank you very much, and how little that expresses my gratitude. While I knew that our workers would understand, unselfishly face the cut in their salaries, yet I am so relieved that they will not have to bear the sacrifice.

Your return of my check for five dollars for the "Churchman" leaves me speechless, for I love the Churchman, and would do anything to support it; and if I can, at any time, be of any help to you, and it, please give me the pleasure.

With my best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
P. T. ROWE.

Princeton Retains Evangelical Standards.

The new board of control of Princeton Theological Seminary, on September 3, according to an Associated Press report, issued a statement addressed to the alumni, students and friends of the institution, declaring that "There will be no departure from the conservative doctrinal position maintained for more than one hundred years".

The Seminary is reopening this year under the single board of control establishtd by the Presbyterian General Assembly in place of the dual control by two boards.

A group formerly connected with the institution, who objected to the single board of control, recently announced the organization of a ntw seminary in Philadelphia, to be known as Westminster.

The Princeton Seminary statement issued and signed by the Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of the Seminary, was issued in connection with an executive meeting of the new board.

"Not only is the traditional and recognized position of the Seminary for conservative theology and strict evangelical teaching to be continued in loyalty to the infallible Word of God and the standards of the reformed faith", says the statement, "but the reputation of the Seminary for sound Biblical scholarship is to be maintained."

Items—Here and There.

Jerusalem has a Hebrew University, opened a few years ago. During its last session it had 241 students. It is soon to begin the erection of another building, in addition to those already in use, which will cost about $500,000, given by Mrs. Sol Rosenbloom in memory of her late husband. Feeling as the Jews do about Jerusalem, it would seem that young men from all parts of the world would be attracted to this University, if it is developed so that it will give the educational advantages needed today by young men who look forward to taking places of importance in the world.

Ambassador Charles G. Dawes, representative of the United States at the Court of England, has taken a stand for which he is to be greatly commended. In entertaining guests at his home in London, contrary to all the customs of that country, he has announced that he will serve no liquor. He has taken this stand, not because his own country has a prohibition law, but from a personal and a higher principle. He is reported to have said: "I do not serve liquor in my home in America, why should I do so in England?"—The Presbyterian of the South.

The Bishop of Ripon left England on August 14 with a party of twenty British clergy and ministers invited by the German Council of the World Alliance to return the visit paid to the British Council last year by a similar number of German ministers. The program included attendance at the annual meeting of the German Council, and an inspection of religious and philanthropic institutions throughout Germany.

Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils.—Duke of Wellington.

"My friend, if the Church fails in its ministry to the world, then the rest of us might as well close up shop."—Lloyd George.

Harvard University recently graduated 1,957 students and reported the receipt of gifts and bequests of $13,500,000 for the year. How many distinctly Christian schools receive such sums or have so many students? And if schools that are not distinctly Christian (many of them being notoriously anti-Christian) receive the lion's share of the money and the students, what will the outcome be? What will be the effect upon the eternal destiny of those who come under the influence of such schools?—The Baptist Advance.

The Roman Catholics are waking up to the missionary opportunities among the Negroes. Recently a class of 500 Negroes were confirmed in Chicago. The present priest of that church has confirmed 1,800 in the last seven years.—Western Recorder.

A list of the historic sites of Palestine, in which archaeologists may have an interest, has been drafted by the

Palestine Government to be protected by law; the list comprises 3,000 sites.

Mahatma Gandhi has taken the leadership in the formation of a very strong committee to push the movement for prohibition throughout India.

St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., will give a course in religion, which the teaching is to be done by representatives of the three general types to be studied. Father Clifford, of Columbia University, will teach the Catholic religion; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Jewish; and Dr. Wm. P. Merrill, of the Brick Presbyterian Church, the Protestant.

The Society for Christian Life Among German Blind is printing what is said to be the first complete German Bible for the blind. The Bible is being published in the Stuttgart translation and will consist of twenty-seven volumes. It will be distributed to the blind free of cost.

Scotch Presbyterianism, divided since the Disruption of 1843, will become one body again when the union of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church is consummated next October.

Masonic bodies are establishing funds in Texas universities for the education of worthy students who are sons and daughters of Masons. Baylor University received $5,000 toward such a fund.

The Western Newspaper Union, serving 11,000 newspapers, will not hereafter use any joke stories whose point is the violation of the prohibition law.

"Every Catholic must take account of the Protestant peril in Italy today," said the Osservatore Romano, the newspaper used for official pronouncements of the Vatican. The article warned that Protestantism, which is "against the soul and tradition of the Italian people", is working with "ardor and tenacity" in Italy and disposing of immense capital. Special mention was made of the British Bible Society and the Methodist Church. The greatest assaults of Protestant propaganda, it was said, are made in the south, and that "of the eleven dioceses of Abruzzi only two were immune from infraction".

The Detroit News says, "Roy Chapman Andrews confesses to an error of 85,000,000 years in estimating the age of the dinosaur eggs he found last summer."

The Hungarian poet, Lorant, addressing a fashionable woman's club in the city of Budapest, highly praised the virtues of trial marriages. The ladies, shouting denials that any woman in the country could be found to agree to such a marriage, threw the pet lecturer out of the hall and then destroyed all the papers he had left behind him. He is now convinced that the subject was not popular with them.

Numerous objects dating from the early bronze age were excavated from beneath the floor of a limestone cave north of Jerusalem by Prof. William F. Bade, dean of the Pacific School of Religion at Berkeley, Cal., who is obtaining important data relative to the character and customs of the pre-Semitic inhabitants of Palestine 3,000 or 3,500 years B. C. The cave from which the pottery and other articles were taken has been buried since the days of the Hebrew prophet Amos, who lived about 750 B. C. Pieces of pottery, jar-handle stamps and seals bear the name of the deity "Jah Jahu" and were probably made by the Canaanites long before the days of Abraham. Traces of a city with a great wall and projecting towers have been unearthed near the site of Tel Nasbeth, which Prof. Bade believes is the Mizpah of the prophet Samuel.—The Bible Champion.

The Rev. P. A. Northam, Anglican missionary at Ft. Albany, Ontario, was recently saved by the kindly care of the Roman Catholic missionary there who heard of his being ill and alone and took him to their mission hospital and he was nursed back to life by Sisters Marie Elmir, who is credited with saving his life by the doctors who later attended him.

A WARNING.

R. J. Schlueter, at one time employed in soliciting subscriptions for The Southern Churchman, has severed his connection with this company. Patrons and subscribers for The Southern Churchman are warned against having further dealings with him.

Southern Churchman Co.

Exhibit A.

$100,000. September 3, 1929.
On December 31st, 1929, we promise to pay to the order of Bank of New York and Trust Company
One Hundred Thousand Dollars
Value Received
The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America,
By: Charles A. Tompkins,
Assistant Treasurer.

Reason for Exhibit.

The dioceses and districts sent us in July and August only $222,216. The proportion of the Maintenance Budget Quota due for these two months was $584,366.

Results of Exhibit.

The interest on the above note can only be paid out of the money given to support missionary work.

What To Do.

There is ample money in unpaid pledges and in the hands of many parochial and a few diocesan treasurers to meet not only the interest, but the principal of the note by October 1. I am sure the bank will allow us to pay it then. Let us do it.

Running Behind.

Total receipts on quota to September 1, are $108,211.12 less than last year.

Hopefully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop

Organist Serves Fifty-two Years.

Mrs. J. R. Haile, of Miller's Tavern, Essex County, Virginia, probably has a longer record for continuous service as a church organist than any one in the State of Virginia. She has been playing the organ for St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Miller's Tavern, since February, 1877, making fifty-two years last February. On her fiftieth anniversary, in February, 1927, the congregation presented her with a handsome silver vase, to commemorate her long term and faithful service.

Mrs. Haile is still acting and in excellent health, and is likely to be able to render the same faithful service for at least another decade. Before her marriage she was Miss Wright, and her mother before her was an excellent musician, who also filled the position of organist at old St. Paul's for many years.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Church School to be Established in Wise County.

Ever since he became Bishop of the new Diocese of Southwestern Virginia in March, 1920, Bishop Jett has been impressed with the necessity of founding, as soon as it might be possible, a school under Church auspices in the southwest part of the diocese. That which has been a vision for the past nine years is now about to become a reality.

It so happens that a few years ago there was built near the town of Wise, in Wise County, a splendid plant for use as a detention home. It later developed that the need for such an institution was not so great as had been anticipated. Upon learning these facts and making careful examination of the property in conjunction with a number of the members of the Executive Board of the Diocese, the Bishop entered into negotiations with the Board of Supervisors of Wise County with a view to acquiring the property for use as a Church School. In the various conferences on the subject the local authorities and many of the other people of the community have shown the greatest interest in the whole matter and have extended their cooperation in every possible manner.

At a meeting on August 13, 1929, the Wise County Supervisors accepted an offer by the Bishop of $25,000 for the entire property. In submitting his proposal to the Supervisors in writing, the Bishop explained that the school will necessarily begin on a small scale and will not open for its initial session before September 1, 1930, or perhaps later than this. As a matter of fact, it has not yet been determined just what will be the exact character of the school. The tentative plan so far is that it is to be an academic institution of high-school grade, with the probable addition of certain industrial features.

The property being purchased contains 111 acres of land with buildings that cost, when erected, not less than $100,000. At the present time they would cost a great deal larger sum. There are two excellent stone buildings with water system and heating plant, a good frame building, reservoir and filtration plant. The county is carrying insurance on the property to the amount of $70,000. This fact alone is an evidence of the real material value of the property. The buildings are in beautiful condition and ready for use just as they are. In fact, the whole place is splendidly suited in every way for the purpose for which it is being acquired.

Plans for the opening and operation of the school will be carried on gradually and with the greatest possible care in order that, from its very beginning, it may fully justify itself in the eyes of every one concerned with its welfare as a definite contribution to the educational life of Southwestern Virginia.

T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Reopening of Epiphany Church.

The extensive renovation and redecoration of Epiphany having been completed, the church was reopened for divine service Sunday, September 8, and to properly observe this important event the Very Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, was invited to the pulpit as special preacher at the morning service. The other services that day were as usual, namely, 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 8 P. M., Evensong and Address.

Bishop Freeman will attend the eleven o'clock service at Epiphany on Sunday, September 29, the occasion being the sixth anniversary of his consecration as Diocesan of Washington.

Woman's Auxiliary Increases Missionary Fund.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington is ambitious that that Diocese sholl be numbered among those which accept and pay the entire quota assigned from the Missionary Budget of the National Church.

The whole quota of the Diocese was $58,900, of which $53,000 was accepted. Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council, has received through the Treasurer of the Diocese of Washington a check for $4,838.58, "For the specific purpose of covering as far as such a sum will cover the balance remaining between the assigned quota to the Diocese of Washington, and the amount accepted by the Diocese of Washington".

"The amount," continues the letter of transmission, "is not intended in any way to be credited so as to relieve the Diocese of Washington from any part of the accepted obligation, namely $53,000."

This genuine missionary service to the whole Church is in addition to the wide range of activities which distinguish the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, has returned to the Diocese, after a vacation spent at Sorrento, Maine. He preached the sermon at the open-air services at Washington Cathedral, on Sunday, September 8, in the afternoon, this being his first sermon at the Cathedral since his return.

M. M. W.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D.,
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, Suffragan.

St. Margaret's Going Forward.

St. Margaret's Church at Dawson and East One Hundred and Fifty-Sixth St., New York City, recommenced its regular services on Sunday, September 7. The rector, the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, reports the return but writes that some have scarcely been away.

The rector has visited almost every home, acted as Chairman of the Vestry Committee authorized June 17 to make improvements on the rectory and parish house, and to build a rest and conference room for the deaconess and also supervised the securing near and far of the money required.

As the work approaches completion, the number of contributors to the Improvement Fund is 170, of whom 115 are members of this parish and are giving more than a fifth of the amount to date. Yet, at the same time, they have doubled in summer their Sunday offerings. That is significant. The fund is almost raised, but still a few hundred dollars must be had.

Increasing the service by bettering the facilities has brought gifts these few weeks past, from all over the land. Mrs. Charles H. Hewins, of the Church School at historic St. John's in Hampton, Virginia, sent a gift from the Primary Department, because with ten or more races worshipping at St. Margaret's, the work seems to them truly missionary. Long Trustee of New York University, Dr. Henry M. Brown, Congregational pastor at Dana, Mass., sends a check because he believes St. Margaret's to be an inspiration to Christians beyond our fold. Dr. Theodore Sedgwick, long a good friend of the Deaconess and lately of the rector, has added to a gracious gift much personal aid in interesting others. In two weeks gifts have come from California, Ohio, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts, as well as New York.

The Church Army is to help St. Margaret's this year. Captain Frank Jameson begins this week his parish visiting for the rector.

250 Crippled and Handicapped Workers Enjoy Holiday.

On Monday, July 29, at ten o'clock, daylight saving time, from the Forty-Second Street Pier in the North River, the Hudson Day-Boat Chauncey M. DePew put out for Indian Point with two hundred and fifty men and women who were once thought, because of misfortune or mistake, to have been cast permanently in the human discard. These were the workers in the repair shops of three Metropolitan branches of the Goodwill Industries, those from Brooklyn, New York City and Jersey City. In these shops they have been quietly, day after day, finding their way back to new courage and a recovered sense of independence. Many of them have been employed over a period of months in the Goodwill Shops, where they are given employment repairing cast-off clothing and furniture, and paid a living wage while recuperating from illnesses or other tragedies, and preparing themselves for better jobs.

This day at Indian Point was, probably, the only vacation most of them will ever have. It was provided through the generosity of many friends in the three areas from which these three Goodwill Shops collect their contributions of discarded clothing.

This picnic was planned under the auspices of the Brooklyn branch of the Goodwill Industries, of which William Milligan Park, Director, is Chairman. James H. Post, as an active patron and board member, joined the party.

Assisting Mr. Park in this outing was Frances C. Ford, Director of the New York branch of the Goodwill Industries, which is operated by the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, and the Rev. G. E. Hollingshead, Director of the Jersey City Goodwill Industries.

The party proceeded up the River to Indian Point, the three-piece Happiness Orchestra, directed by Dave Caplan of the National Broadcasting Company, Company, providing the music. Swimming, athletics, music and games filled the day, the boat returning to the Forty-Second Street Pier at eight-thirty in the evening.

In Brooklyn, the nine Goodwill stores were not closed, although all of the regular workers and their children were taken on this excursion. Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary manned the stores with their women members, so that no worker was left behind. Workers were brought from Brooklyn and Jersey City by bus to the pier.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Token of Love and Esteem for Memory of Bishop Guerry.

At the last meeting of the convention of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas: This diocese deeply and sincerely mourns the tragic death of the Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina, a man of consecrated soul, of brilliant intellect, of devotion to the cause of Christ and one whom we all loved and admired, because of his noble life and high Christian character, and

Whereas: Bishop Guerry was for many years in charge of this portion of the Master's vineyard before the division of the diocese and had done much to advance the interest of the Church in this Upper Diocese; be it, therefore,

Resolved: That as a slight token of our love and esteem for his memory, we desire to have placed in the Headquarters of our Diocese a large oil portrait of our beloved friend and once chief pastor.

Resolved: That the funds raised to have this accomplished be entirely by voluntary contributions and that we desire to make it as universal as possible.

Resolved: That a committee of three, consisting of two clergymen and one layman be appointed by this convention or by the Bishop to have entire charge in carrying out this desired object.

Bishop Finlay appointed on this committee the Rev. Alexander R. Mitchell, the Rev. Wm. H. R. Pendleton and Mr. William S. Manning.

The committee has sent a letter to the many friends of Bishop Guerry asking for a small contribution for the painting of the portrait and has received replies which have justified the beginning of the work. The portrait will be finished in time for the committee to present it to the diocese when the Provincial Synod meets in Columbia, S. C., this fall.

The Rev. A. R. Mitchell, of Greenville, S. C., is chairman of the committee and contributions from personal friends of the Bishop may be sent to him.

A. R. M.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

"Uncle Remus' Day" at Old Fletcher Church.

Before a crowd numbering over 5,000 people a memorial to Joel Chandler Harris, creator of "Uncle Remus", was unveiled in "The Open Air Westminster Abbey of the South", established by the rector, the Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., at old Calvary Episcopal Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, August 25, at 3:30 o'clock. Large delegations from Atlanta

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

SEPTEMBER.

1. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
8. Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
15. Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18, 20, 21. Ember Days.
21. S. Matthew.
22 Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
29. S. Michael and All Angels. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
30. Monday.

COLLECT FOR SIXTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee, let Thy continual pity cleanse and defend Thy Church; and, because it cannot continue in safety without Thy succour, preserve it evermore by Thy help and goodness, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ST. MATTHEW, THE APOSTLE.

O Almighty God, Who by Thy blessed Son didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist; Grant us grace to forsake all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same, Thy Son Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

"I AM AMONG YOU AS HE THAT SERVETH."

O blessed Jesus! when I see Thee bending,
Girt as a servant, at Thy servants' feet,
Love, lowliness and might, in zeal all blending,
To wash their dust away, and make them meet
To share Thy feast, I know not to adore
Whether Thy humbleness or glory more.

Meek Jesus! to my soul Thy spirit lending,
Teach me to live, like Thee, in lowly love;
With humblest service all Thy saints befriending,
Until I serve before Thy throne above—
Yes! serving e'en my foes, for Thou didst seek
The feet of Judas in Thy service meek.

O blessed name of Servant! comprehending
Man's highest honor in his humblest name;
For Thou, God's Christ, that office recommending,
The throne of mighty power didst truly claim.
He who would rise like Thee, like Thee must owe
His glory only to his stooping low.

Daily my pilgrim feet, as homeward wending
My weary way, are sadly stained with sin;
Daily do Thou, Thy precious grace expending,
Wash me all clean without and clean within,
And make me fit to have a part with Thee
And Thine, at last, in heaven's festivity.

—"A Man of Sorrows."

For The Southern Churchman.

Why It Is Hard to Pray.

Louis Deschamps.

Because we try to pray when tired and sleepy, or when in a hurry to start the day's work or pleasure.

Because we pray thoughtlessly and half-heartedly.

Because we try to pray without taking the time to remove the burdens of petty, routine matters, or to lay down the battle axe with which we have been fighting our adversaries.

Because we forget that prayer is worship as well as petition.

Because we are prosperous and satisfied on the one hand, or indifferent and hopeless on the other.

Because we are too often like petulant children who would argue with the Almighty.

Because we make no preparation for prayer, no silent invocation of a reverent spirit nor thoughts that tend to recall our pious moods, that we may withdraw from the turmoil of life.

Because we repeat a fixed little formula in our individual praying, until some misfortune wrings from our hearts the prayers that really matter.

Because we fail to realize that prayer is the greatest heritage of our humanity, a deeprooted human instinct declaring the immortality of mankind, beyond the limitations of time or race, the sacred guardian of priceless traditions and of humanity's religious victory over fate.

Because we sacrifice our immortal spirits to our mortal mind, and refuse to believe the mystery of communion with the Infinite.

"The White Saint of India."

The Dictionary of American Biography, of which the second volume has recently appeared, contains the biographies of many men and women who have been forgotten by this generation and yet they often prove to have been of surprising usefulness. Here is one of them condensed into a paragraph. George Bowen was the son of a wealthy New York merchant who enjoyed every means of education and travel. A chapter in Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire turned him into a sceptic and bitter critic of Christianity and during his years in Europe he built up an argument against this religion. On returning home one evening he discovered that the librarian by mistake had sent him a copy of Paley's Natural Theology. This drove him to a rereading and fresh study of the Bible with the result that he was converted to Christian faith. This was in April, 1844. Within four weeks he offered himself to the American Board of Foreign Missions and after three years in Union Theological Seminary in New York he sailed for India. He never married, took no furlough and did not even seek health in the hills. Feeling that the chasm that separated the foreign missionary in his mode of living from the natives hindered his work, he renounced the comforts he had always enjoyed and might still have enjoyed and identified himself with the people. He preached daily in the streets in the native languages and served without pay as editor of Hindustani publications. He next joined the Methodists and became a traveling evangelist. His conduct pained his friends who felt "disgraced by this erratic missionary". He became an editor of the Bombay Guardian and his editorials were described as "sharply pungent and sweetly fragrant". Some of these were published in volumes, one of them being issued by our Presbyterian Board of Publication and are even yet read as books of devotion. His death by pneumonia in 1888 revealed in a striking way the hold he had upon the affections of the city of his life-service, and he was known as "the white saint of India". Such was this extraordinary man whose experience and work were unique and whose memory "still smells sweet and blossoms from the dust".—Presbyterian Banner.

Money Sense.

"My grandfather was offered the site of St. Louis for a horse," a certain man used to say rather proudly.

"Why didn't he take it?"

"He didn't have the horse."

Many of us are like that: the opportunity comes, but we haven't the horse. Thrift has not got into our bones; money sense has not lodged in our heads.

In every well-to-do family some one at some time was working, and saving, and planning, and doing without this luxury and that pleasure, putting money aside, getting ready to take advantage of the first opening that might come along. The vision of an established future was stronger to that person than the immediate sense-pull of unnecessary food, and things, and entertainment. It's the senses that rob the till. It's the appetites that gnaw at the foundations of prosperity. It's the mania for "things" that prevents so many from seeing beyond the morrow. Some one in each well-to-do family saw all this.

There is a good reply to the common question, "Why didn't some one in my ancestry begin to save and plan for me?" Obviously, if that's the way you feel about it, it's time for you to begin to save and plan for your descendants.

Some families are always having financial struggles. If you go into one of these homes, and look at the table, nine times out of ten you'll find it overloaded, the family income going steadily out to satisfy sense appetites. Even the children of such families usually have a stick of candy in their mouths most of the day. A shop dealing with trifles in a shack neighborhood, can almost always thrive on the driblets of the unthrifty.

A child adopted from a thriftless home was given a couple of pennies. Immediately he started on the run for the nearest candy store.

"No, you don't," called his new mother. "Come back and put half in your bank.

He felt abused. He'd been accustomed to spend what he got when he got it. But after awhile, when the little tin bank was opened and the pile of small change lay before him, he became excited. All that money his to spend. No, not to spend, he was told, but to open a real account in a bank. Again he felt abused. But the account was started; he and his bank-book, saw the sum recorded there, and later watched it increase as he added to it little by little.

He grew to take a great interest in bank and watching it make more money for him; its influence affected his other interests. He didn't want to spend money repairing toys, for instance, so he broke fewer. One day I heard this conversation between him and his new mother:

"May I go to a movie, mother?"

"Can you afford it?"

"I have the 50 cents I earned beating rugs. I can spend half of that."

"What about that ball you wanted?"

"That's so. Well, I'll get the ball this week and go to the movie when I earn some more."

He had attained that sort of planning, thinking things out, choosing, giving up a lesser joy for the sake of a greater—no argument about it, no coaxing, no fussing, no begging—just thinking things out with a plan in mind; the sort of thing that develops money sense where none was before.

Women sometimes have a false attitude toward money sense, looking upon it as something to deny when they have it, something to decry when they don't. Not so long ago it was considered "cunning" for grown women to be ignorant of money matters, all at sea over the household accounts, perfectly lost when it came to banking—imagining themselves in funds so long as they were in blank cheques. The widow and her husband's insurance policy were soon parted, and responsible-minded husbands and fathers considered it not only their duty to care for their womenkind while in the flesh, but to make their estates foolproof after their demise. We are happily getting away from this archaic view, however, and brains are to the fore in this line as in every other.

There is something stabilizing to one's whole life about owning property, having money out on interest, or even credit. A young woman I know, who is execedingly prosperous, got her start through a loan a bank made her in an emergency. She hadn't realized before the emergency arose, that she could get credit. The fact raised her in her own estimation. She felt thrilled to think that she was trusted, that she had financial standing, that she could borrow money on her name. She began to take herself and her work more seriously, felt the responsibility of being a citizen, took on an obligation—and prospered.

After all, thrifty living is only the result of mental organization, and mental organization is possible to all sane people.—Good Housekeeping.

SONG OF THE IMMORTAL SOUL.

O little birds of the air that call to me!
O orioles brilliant in your song and dress!
O whippoorwills that sob against a tree
And larks of incoherent happiness!
O curlews with your bleak and empty cal!
O wild geese honking home across the sky!
O robins sweet in April twilight! All
Ye little birds of God that sing and fly,
From you I hid this bright bird of my breast,
For if you saw his far-winged journeying
You would fold your wings; you would lay your songs to rest
If you listened behind the stars and heard him sing.

—Jessica Powers, in Commonweal.

Concentration.

I watched two boys of about the same age in the public library. They had entered together and both took magazines from the rack to read. One looked up from his page every time any one entered. The other saw no one; he was lost in what he was reading I predicted the second lad would outdistance the first.

He who can concentrate is on the road to success. A grasshopper mind is not a great mind. Concentration is not definitely included as a subject in any school curriculum, but the foundation for its mastery may be laid in the Home University, in which the whole family should be enrolled. We teach it, in our family, by means of different games.

One game that the children enjoy is telling each other at bedtime everything that we have done from the first moment of waking. The principle is simple. If the mind is not "put" on the thing done, it is apt to be forgotten, unless it is quite an unusual thing. Hence our bedtime recital. Once, when we first began this game, a surprised voice interrupted me in the midst of my story. "But you're telling all the little things." I reminded him that he had the same privilege. He tried but could not recall the "little things". The next night, however, he could. He had given attention to the "little things" as he did them, and was therefore able to recall them.

We ask one another questions that test our powers of observation. One such question was: "Are a cow's ears behind her horns, or in front of them?" Not one could tell. We made it a point, even the smallest member of the family, to slip around where there were some cows and find out. The matter is not of much importance, but the "finding out" was a mental stimulus, teaching us really to see things when we looked at them.

Developing any one of the senses teaches concentration. To illustrate: We sit out-of-doors on a summer evening and vie with one another regarding the number of different sounds we can distinguish and name. The member of the circle who lets his mind wander will fall behind.

One of the children came in one evening quite proud of herself. "Mother," she exclaimed, "Viola and I passed that frog pond and she said: 'Don't those birds sing sweetly?' The very idea!"

My child had been trained really to listen to sounds and to recognize them. Viola had not.

Sometimes we play the game in a different way. One of us will say something and the others will try to repeat it word for word, or we give a list of names, or colors, and call on others to repeat it. Perhaps I recite a nursery rhyme and test the children on their ability to repeat it correctly the first time. This is not too severe a test. They enjoy it, just as they enjoy a physical test.

I avoid, as far as possible, interrupting a child when at some task in which he seems to be much interested. It all his energies appear to be concentrated on that task it is generally best to let him continue at it. He is giving himself valuable training.—Lelia Munsell, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

One Step At a Time.

In accomplishing your day's work, you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy; to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged. Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or the trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of today's duties and all the load of tomorrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them. Paul himself would have broken down if he had attempted the experiment. We have a perfect right to ask our Heavenly Father for strength equal to the day; but we have no right to ask him for one extra ounce of strength for anything beyond it. When the morrow comes, grace will come with it sufficient for its tasks or for its troubles.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

"He Ate Two Eyes."

The Saviour's tender sympathy with the sufferings of the body was one of the outstanding features of His personal ministry among men. The more Christlike we are, the more tender our sympathy with physical suffering and the more eager and determined our desire to relieve it. Few people in this happy country have even the faintest conception of the load of misery imposed by ignorance and heathenism on the people of non-Christian lands. A little glimpse of it is given in a letter from Dr. and Mrs. William Hollister, written from Mokpo, Korea. In one paragraph of this most interesting letter we read:

"This morning at the dispensary, a child came in with its face covered with multiple sores (impetigo). I asked the mother how she had treated it, and she said, 'Twice a day the native doctor puts on the baby's face burning calf bones, to cure it'. I advised her that maybe zinc oxide would be better, and she said she would try my medicine, that the other doctor was no good. Cases like this one are seen daily, and the things people use as remedies are almost beyond belief. A patient last week told me he ate two eyes from a freshly killed snake (viper) to cure conjunctivitis. I told him argyrol was better."—The Presbyterian of the South.

For The Southern Churchman.

LANDON TREES.

David W. Cade.

The Trees; Plumed Trees of Landon-town,
Waved high in joyous summer glee
While the lady moon in cloud made gown
Wound close her filmy drapery.

The Trees; Proud Trees of Landon-town,
Were classic maids from old days drawn.
When glittering tides were swept and blown
Above marching legions of the dawn.

The Trees; Tall Trees of Landon-town,
Kept stately watch through noonday glare.
And were sculptured fays each in tinseled gown
When twilight fires engulfed the air.

The Trees; Loved Trees now faraway,
Are loyal guardians of my youth.
They hold in trust for aye and aye
An earlier tryst of life with truth.

The Trees; Green Trees of morning land,
Rise clear and sharp through dreamy haze.
The world is round and the homing strand
Lies far adown the westering ways.

The Trees; Landon Trees I'll see once more,
Unchanged by waste and weight of years.
When I glimpse again on a friendly shore
The green that homely Sussex wears.

Love has done the grandest things the world has ever known, and is still doing them. Where judgment may be generous, love is lavish; where judgment is cautious in conclusions, love is heroic.—Dr. Peter Forsyth.

For the Young Folks

For The Southern Churchman.

WHAT?

Maude Forest Mumma.

What would happen in this old world,
If all the wrong were right,
And everything that tries us so,
Should vanish as the night;

If all the petty trials—
And all the bitter tears—
And all our pent-up hatreds
Should vanish with the years:

Ah! this would be a world indeed,
Where angels fain would tread;
If morrtals put their hatreds down,
And showed their Love instead.

Be Proud of Your Mother.

Look! That's Grace Hunter's mother!" Phoebe looked, and her face changed strangely. Mrs. Hunter stood on the sidewalk, giving some directions to a servant, while at the curb the chauffeur waited. She was a handsome woman, dressed richly and in good taste. She was nearing forty, but she looked ten years younger.

"Isn't she the prettiest thing you ever saw in your life?" murmured Mamie Waring, in Phoebe's ear. "I guess Grace must be awfully proud of her."

Phoebe made a brief assent. She was trying to fancy what it would be like to have such a mother one could be proud of, a mother of such graceful erectness, with hair elaborately dressed and rose-pink cheeks. Phoebe had always thought of mothers as all little, round-shouldered, with tired wrinkles about their eyes, and faded complexions. In Phoebe's world the mothers did not have much time to spend on their hair. At six o'clock in the morning it was screwed into a tight "pug" that was expected to keep in order till bedtime.

The two girls came abreast of the automobile as Mrs. Hunter took her seat and her careless glance met their eager young eyes indifferently. Mrs. Hunter was used to being stared at. Unconsciously she settled herself as if she were posing for a picture, gave the word of command, and the car whirled away. "That's a stylish hat she has on," said Mamie. "Wouldn't you be proud, though, if you had a mother who looked liked that?"

The question haunted Phoebe. Somehow she could not get away from the thought that she had been almost defrauded. How would it seem to have a mother like Mrs. Hunter, a beautiful mother, on whom one's eyes could rest with the same pleasure one felt in looking at a picture of a rosebud in bloom? Phoebe loved beautiful things with a passion which was, perhaps, all the more intense because it never was put into words. The mere sight of Grace Hunter's beautiful mother had made her heart beat hard and fast. Oh, if only she, too, had a mother of whom she could be proud!

The house was very still when Phoebe entered. In a minute she remembered the reason. There was sickness in a neighbor's family. Her mother had spent most of the night there, coming home in the early morning to get breakfast for the family, and hurrying through the house work for the day. It was a plain, poor little home, but scrupulously neat, very different in its looks of daintiness and order from most of the houses in the row.

The deaconess walked in as Phoebe was hanging up her coat, and Phoebe welcomed her with effusion, for the deaconess, in spite of her plain uniform, was a beautiful woman, though her beauty was not in the least like that of Grace Hunter's mother. She was fond of fun, too, this deaconess, and when she smiled a dear little dimple was in evidence now as she greeted Phoebe.

"Good afternoon, my dear! Is your mother home?"

"She's at Mrs. Gray's, I guess. They're all sick again. Mother stayed there last night and Sunday night.

The deaconess drew a long breath. "Phoebe," she exclaimed, "you must be very proud of your mother!"

The remark chimed in so strangely with Phoebe's thoughts, and yet contradicted them so absolutely, that Phoebe had no answer but a stare. But the deaconess was not waiting for an answer.

"I wonder if you realize, Phoebe, what your mother's life means to her neighbors here. No, you cannot realize it; none of us can. If ever I feel discouraged, I think of her, of her beautiful, helpful life, of the sacrifices she is all the time making, as a matter of course, and then I'm ashamed of being disheartened. You are a fortunate girl, my dear, to have such a mother. I only hope you are as proud of her as she deserves."

The deaconess did not stay long. "I'll go over to Mrs. Gray's and send your mother home for a rest," she said in her decided way, and as the trim figure went out of the door Phoebe was thinking hard. It was all true, what the deaconess had said. When any of the neighbors were sick or in trouble they turned to Phoebe's mother. It was due to her that Jim Leary had signed the pledge. It was she who had interceded with the judge when Johnny Stowe was arrested for stealing. From this little plain, shabby house a constant stream of helpfulness flowed out into the needy neighborhood.

The door opened and a woman entered. She was not young, and she looked many years older than her actual age. She moved a little stiffly. Her lined face was very weary. But the eyes had a shining brightness that was like clear sunshine.

"Little Willie is better," said Phoebe's mother. "I thought last night we were going to lose him, but now it looks to me as if he would pull through." She went to the stove to see if it needed more coal, but on the way was intercepted by a girl whose face was glowing.

"Mother! Oh, Mother!" Phoebe cried, slipping her arm about the dear bowed shoulders, "why didn't I never know before how beautiful you are!"—Selected.

A Lesson in Courtesy.

A mother had need one evening to pass between the light and her little son. With sweet, grave, courtesy, she said: "Will you excuse me, dear, if I pass between you and the light?"

He looked up and said: "What made you ask me that, mother?"

"Because, dear," she answered, "it would be rude to do it without speaking. I would not think of not speaking if it had been Mr. F—, the minister, and surely I would not be ruder to my own boy."

The boy thought a moment, and then asked: "Mother, what ought I to say back?"

"What do you think would be nice?"

He studied over it a while, for he was such a wee laddie, and then said: "Would it be nice to say, 'Sure, you can'?"

This was mother's time to say: "That would be nice; but how would you like to say, just as Mr. F. would, 'Certainly?' It means the same thing, you know."

That little lad, now a young man in college, is remarked for his never-failing courtesy. A friend said of him the other day: "It's the second nature to W— to be polite."—Christian Work.

A MILLIONAIRE.

I know a charming little maid,
So very rich, they say,
It keeps her busy all the time
To give her wealth away;
The more she gives the more she has;
Now, isn't that quite queer?
This little maid's a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

She runs on errands constantly,
And sings along the way,
And when she does each little task
Pretends that it is play;
She dries the dishes, sweeps the floor,
With never frown or tear;
It's fun for such a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

When tired father comes at night
She greets him with a smle,
Her feet his little servants are,
Her merry ways beguile;
She gives alike to rich and poor,
To all that come anear,
For she's a generous millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

Kind deeds and smiles and gentle words
Are like a golden grain
That, when the harvest time is come,
Gives tenfold back again.
Oh, what a happy world 'twould be,
With scarce a day that's drear,
Were every one a millionaire—
A millionaire of cheer.

—Laura Alton Payne.

A Concert on Credit.

"I can't come to school this afternoon, Miss Hollister," Dorothy told her teacher at recess. "Mamma hasn't been out of the house since Dale was sick, and that's most seven weeks. But today she and papa are going to the concert, and I'm going to take care of Dale."

"That's quite a responsibility," said Miss Hollister, smiling at Dorothy's important air. "Your mamma must be very sure that you are to be trusted."

"Well, you see it makes people very queer to be sick such a long time," Dorothy explained, lowering her voice confidentially. "Dale never used to cry, but now he cries about everything that he doesn't like, and then he gets feverish, and mamma's afraid he'll have a relapse. Mamma knows I'll let him beat in all the games, and that's why she dares to leave me to take care of him."

It was not easy to get along with Dale. Dorothy hardly knew her brother, and a dozen times a day she was obliged to comfort herself by remembering mamma's assurance that Dale's temper would improve as his body grew stronger. This afternoon it was worse than usual, for Dale had become so accustomed to his mother's presence that he was inclined to resent her leaving him, even for a few hours. Dorothy tried her hardest to be entertaining, with rather unsatisfactory results. "And if he gets to fretting, and is worse," she thought, despairingly, "why, mamma won't dare to go away again for ever so long."

They were in the midst of a rather uninteresting game of authors when the sound of distant music reached their ears. Dale dropped his cards and looked at Dorothy with brightening eyes. Then he smiled.

"It's a hand-organ," he cried. "I wish he'd hurry and get to our house. Do you 'spose he'll stop here, Dorothy?"

"We'll give him some money, and then he will," replied Dorothy, jumping to her feet, and running to her bank. But though she shook it with all her might, not the faintest jingle answered her. Dorothy's bank had a way of being empty, but it had never failed its mistress at quite such a crisis as this.

"Oh, I wonder if there isn't a nickel or a penny lying around somewhere," cried Dorothy, darting around the room, distractedly, and looking into all sorts of unlikely places.

"He's coming, Dorothy! Hurry," cried Dale, who had pressed his face against the window-pane.

"But I can't find any money. Maybe Norah's got five cents," and Dorothy flew down to the kitchen, only to meet another disappointment. Norah had just finished explaining how she had sent all her month's wages to her mother in Ireland, when Dale's voice, choked with tears, called over the banisters, "He's gone by, Dorothy. He isn't going to stop."

"Oh, yes, he will, Dale," Dorothy called back, cheerily. "Just wait a minute."

Dale heard the outside door slam. Going back to the window he saw a small girl, with flying curls, running after a little Italian, bent double under the weight of his heavy organ.

The man looked surprised when Dorothy pulled his sleeve, and he broke into her explanations with a gentle murmur in his native tongue. If he did not understand English, how was she ever to explain what she wished. Then all at once she discovered at her side a small boy with big black eyes and gleaming white teeth, who was peering around at her with an air of interest.

Dorothy took a long breath, and told the whole story; how her brother had been sick, and how the least little thing made him cry, he was so nervous, and how when he cried he grew feverish, and was worse again. Then she told how much Dale wanted to hear the music, and how she had looked in her bank for money, but in vain.

"And won't you play for us today, and trust us for the money till the next time?" cried Dorothy, appealingly. "Oh, please, please do!"

The white teeth of the Italian boy flashed in a smile as she ended, and when he had translated Dorothy's speech to his father, he smiled, too. Without another word the three went back to the corner. The Italian stationed his organ just under the window from which Dale was looking down so eagerly, and still smiling, began to grind out his music.

What a treat it was, even if the organ was a trifle asthmatic, and wheezed sadly over "Listen to the Mocking-Bird!" Dale beat time on the window-sill, his face wreathed in smiles, and Dorothy sat by, overjoyed to see him happy. The hand-organ man played every tune through twice, and the boy rattled his tambourine vigorously, smiling up at Dale as he did so. And at last the concert was ended, and the musicians waved their caps for good-bye and went slowly down the street.

It was ten days before they came again, and Dorothy worried a little over their non-appearance. "I hope they didn't think I wanted them to play for nothing," she told her mother. "I 'specially asked them to trust me till next time, but they don't understand English very well."

But one night at dinner the strains of "Listen to the Mocking-Bird" came wheezing through the window, and Dorothy was on her feet in a minute.

"It's our hand-organ man," she exclaimed. She flew to the window, and a dark-eyed man and a dark-eyed little boy greeted her with a flash of white teeth. "I've got ten cents for them upstairs," Dorothy cried. "Dale and I have been saving up."

"I think I'll have to add a contribution," said her father, taking a quarter from his pocket, and Brother Tom cried gaily, "Pass the hat, Dorothy; we all want to put in something."

"It is a good thing the hand-organ season is over," papa said to mamma, when the music ended, which was not for an hour or more. And Dorothy and Dale wondered, as they often wondered before, at the strange notions of grown-up people.—Hattie Lummis, in the Congregationalist.

For The Southern Churchman.

TWO POEMS.

By William Allen Ward.

I. Night Is a Prowler.

Night
Is a prowler,
Who creeps on gentle feet
Into the canyon in search of
Sun-beams.

II. Strength.

Strength is
The grip of a
Baby whose tender hands
Grasp the calloused finger of its
Father.

Philip Calls the Roll.

Philip, the youngest of five children, had not only his parents to adore and serve him, but brothers and sisters as well. Philip's ringlets held the sunlight; Philip's cheeks wore a rosy tint; Philip's eyes shone and Philip's piping voice brought homage. What was more, Philip was beginning to realize his kingship. In his precious baby way he ruled the other children with a firm, unyielding hand. Whatever he wanted, he got. No matter who was using a toy, Philip usually merely mentioned his desire for it and it was his. Should the rightful owner hesitate, at least one of the other children remembered personal grievances against the offender and used little Philip as an opportunity to even matters. Expression of disapproval became so vehement that the delinquent repented speedily and Philip profited. It was amusing, but led to no good end, so one day while Philip had his nap, the mother talked with the four older children.

"We love Philip, don't we?" she began.

Warm agreement in varied forms met this question.

"Who loves Carl Craig?" was the next question.

"Nobody could!" came the quick answer.

"Why?"

"He always wants his way," Henry said.

"He's selfish with his toys," David answered.

"He wants our toys, too," Mary added.

"O Mother, why, Mother," Katie almost whispered in her surprise, "surely you do not think our Philip is at all like Carl Craig?"

The comparison startled the other children, still when they thought about it, the two had several traits in common.

"But, Mother, Philip is just a baby," Mary defended.

"And so sweet," David added.

"We do not mind giving up to him," Henry assured her.

"But Philip is growing older," Katie meditated aloud. "He must not grow up like Carl Craig!"

"Every one must love our Philip," Mary declared warmly.

Henry and David agreed.

"It is better for those who love him to correct him, than for those who do not care for him to try to get even with him," their mother reasoned. Then she and the four children laid a plan to help Philip overcome his unsocial habits.

When Philip waked up he was in good humor. For more than an hour, he played in a most friendly manner, then he took a sudden notion that Henry's toy elephant was exactly what he wanted, though Henry was playing with it himself at the time.

"Dive it to me," Philip demanded in his queer little voice that every one loved.

Henry played on, though it was evident to the other children that he had lost his desire to play with the elephant.

"Henwy, Henwy," Philip wailed.

Henry weakened; only the thought of Carl Craig and the family's plan for Philip held him firmly to his course.

Seeing that Henry refused to give him the elephant, Philip turned to his older sister and chief ally. "Katie, Katie, Katie!" he implored and added an energetic, "Wow, wow."

Katie read her book, seeming not to hear.

Mawy, Mawy, Mawy! Wow, wow." Philip yelled, turning to his other sister.

Mary went on dressing her doll without looking up.

"David, David, David!" Philip screeched in despair.

David walked to the window and looked out.

Philip had called the roll. No one was present to take his part. He felt he must do something to win approval. Picking up his fire engine which he knew Henry liked, he offered it to him. When Henry accepted it and thanked him, Philip did not ask for the elephant nor touch it.

Suddenly there was a sound of glad voices. What a relief to have the first lesson over and Philip not hurt. Really he seemed helped. Bless him!

"Let's play tag," Katie suggested. This was Philip's favorite game.

"You be IT," four happy voices said to Philip.—National Kindergarten Association.

Nip and Tuck.

"Oh, look what Uncle Kenneth has sent you, Bob and Ben," cried Mother Peasely, as the twins ran out to the back porch where the express man had just left a crated box.

Out of that box came two velvety rabbits, their ears twitching, pink noses wrinkling, and beady eyes staring at the new world about them.

Bob and Ben, the Peasely twins, shouted delightedly—"'At's mine, Bob," Ben said, pointing to the biggest rabbit.

"No, 'taint—that's mine," Bobbie answered back fiercely.

Whew! How quick tempers can flare up! First thing you know, mother had to catch Ben's angry hand pushing Bob back from the box, and Bob had grabbed the big rabbit so tight he was about to squeeze the life out of him

Mrs. Peasely sighed: "How I do wish you little boys would stop being so selfish!" she said. "Neither one of you ever thinks of the other at all—you are just set on getting the best for yourselves all the time."

The quarrel over "Nip and Tuck" grew so heated that mother said presently, "They must go back to their 'cage', and neither of you can play with them at all."

So Bob and Ben had to watch from a distance while food and water was put in the rabbits' box. Nip, the big one, after a startled look right and left, began to nibble at his carrots and lettuce, but poor little Tuck was so scared by the noise and movement that he huddled down in a corner trembling pitifully.

While the children watched Nip stopped eating, looked at Tuck, put his nose under a nice round carrot, and rolled it over to the frightened little animal. Maybe they talked in rabbit language—at any rate, presently Tuck rubbed against Nip and took a tiny nibble. The big rabbit scurried off and brought back a lettuce leaf then, and by this time Bob was so excited he just had to catch Ben's arm.

"See him?" he squeaked, "he's feedin' the little one. I b'lieve Tuck's goin' to eat up all Nip's lettuce, Ben!"

Mother was standing in the kitchen door, and at this moment she stepped up behind them.

"I know two little boys who could learn something from Nip and Tuck," she said. "Suppose Ben tries looking out for Bob and Bob tries looking out for Ben."

"Mamma, let us take 'em out on the grass," begged Bob, "then Ben and me can see how they do, better."

And I haven't heard a cross word about who owns Nip and who owns Tuck since that day, and I think Bob and Ben are really copying the rabbits' good manners!—Sunshine.

The Little Robin Who Tried His Best.

Once there was a little robin named Softdown who lived in a nest in a big tree in the apple orchard. The trees were covered with beautiful pink and white blossoms, and among them were nests full of baby birds.

Little Softdown felt that the world of trees, apple blossoms and nests was so large, and he was so very, very small, that he did not believe it was any use for him to try to do anything in the world, but Mamma Robin only said when he told her so, "All you have to do is to learn to fly, and to sing 'Cheer up, Cheer-up,' and then fly as far and as fast as you can, and sing as loud and as often as you can."

By and by Softdown learned to fly. Then he would sit on a branch of the tree and sing, "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" over and over.

One morning he flew from the orchard to a tree near the great house. A little girl sat by the window crying over her lessons. "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" sang little Softdown from his tree. "Cheer-up, Cheer-up." The little girl stopped crying to listen. "Why, what a cunning baby robin," she said. "It seems just as if he was saying 'Cheer-up' to me. I remember mother told me they were learning to fly down in the apple orchard and how hard it was to learn. I guess if a little robin can learn to fly, a little girl can learn her geography," and she began to study with all her might. Soon the lesson was learned and she ran out in the spring sunshine to play.

Little Softdown still sat on the branch. Mother came to the door for a minute and looked toward the tree where he was. "Oh, dear," she sighed; "so much to do and only one pair of hands to work with. There is house cleaning and spring sewing. I feel tired already thinking of it."

"Cheer-up, Cheer-up," sang Baby Softdown. Mother looked deep into the tree and laughed. "Thank you, baby robin," she said. "After all, it is only one thing at a time I have to do," and she went indoors to her work smiling.

Grandfather came out and sat on the piazza in the sunshine. He felt old and tired. "Dear me," he sighed. "Once I was young and strong and loved the spring and the work it brought. Now, I can no longer work. I feel I am no use in the world."

"Cheer-up, Cheer-up," sang Baby Softdown, and Grandfather listened. "After all, the sun is shining," he said, "and it is good to rest," and he sat there thinking happy thoughts all the morning.

Softdown spread his baby wings and flew back to the nest in the orchard to hunt for worms with his brothers and sisters; and he never knew how much good he had done with his "Cheer-up, Cheer-up", but he felt very happy that night as he tucked his head under his wing; for had he not sung "Cheer-up, Cheer-up" all day in the sunshine until he was happy himself?—The Child's Hour.

A MESSAGE FOR THE FATHERS.

I wish I could be father
And father could be me,
For then I'd like to show him
How fathers ought to be.

I'd buy him toys and candy
Most every other day
And never be too busy
To join him at his play.

I'd answer all his questions,
So he could understand;
Not hide behind a paper
And wave a "go-way" hand.

I'd take him to the movies
Upon a pleasant night;
And never say it's bedtime
While yet the day was light.

I wouldn't change my father
For any other man.
I know he loves me dearly
And does the best he can.

And yet I can't help thinking
How great would be my joy,
If he'd remember sometimes
To be once more a boy.

—George W. Kerby.

The persecuting emperor, Diocletian, little thought what he was giving us when he banished the Apostle John to Patmos; no more than Augustus, in his political plans as to the census of the empire, knew he was sending a poor carpenter to Bethlehem, with his espoused wife, that Christ might be born there; or the Jews and Pilate's soldiers, that they were sending the thief to Heaven, when they broke his legs in heartless respect for their own superstitions or ordinances. God's ways are behind the scenes; but He moves all the scenes which He is behind. We have only peacefully to do His will. Such is the path of blessing.—J. N. Darby, in the Keswick Calendar.

THE BUTTERFLY.

The garden bed I wandered by
One bright and cheerful morn,
When I found a new-fledged butterfly
A-sitting on a thorn,
A black and crimson butterfly
All doleful and forlorn.

I thought that life could have no sting
To infant butterflies.
So I gazed on this unhappy thing
With wonder and surprise,
While sadly with his waving wing
He wiped his weeping eyes.

Said I, "What can the matter be?
Why weepest thou so sore
With garden fair and sunlight free
And flowers in goodly store?"
But he only turned away from me
And burst into a roar.

Cried he, "My legs are thin and few
Where once I had a swarm,
Soft fuzzy fur a joy to view
Once kept my body warm,
Before these flapping wing things grew
To hamper and deform."

At that outrageous bug I shot
The fury of mine eye.
Said I, in scorn all burning hot,
In rage and anger high,
"You ignominious idiot,
Those wings are made to fly."

"I do not want to fly," said he,
"I only want to squirm."
And he dropped his wings dejectedly,
But still his voice was firm:
"I do not want to be a fly,
I want to be a worm.'

O yesterday of unknown lack,
Today of unknown bliss,
I left my fool in red and black,
The last I saw was this,
The creature madly climbing back
Into his chrysalis.

—Charlotte Perkins Jackson.

THE SIX BEST DOCTORS.

The six best doctors, anywhere—
And no one can deny it—
Are Doctors Sunshine, Water, Air,
Rest, Exercise and Diet.

The six will gladly you attend,
If only you are willing;
Your mind they'll clear, your ills they'll mend,
And charge you not one shilling.

—Kansas State Health Bulletin.

THIS'N THAT.

When mother has just lots to do
And cook is flustered, nursie, too,
I gather up my own affairs
And go and sit up on the stairs
With Fluff, my yellow Persian cat,
And think mostly of this'n that.

It's silly what the big folks do,
They never seem to think of you;
But when I feel that no one cares,
I go and sit up on the stairs
With Fluff, my yellow Persian cat,
To think of mostly this'n that.

—The Mother's Journal.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates in contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

Contributions to make up Deficit in Alaska Mission Appropriations.

Miss L. L. Brent	$ 5.00
Mrs. Josephine Read	75.00
A. D. Barrett	5.00
Mrs Hugh Ralston	100.00
Mrs. J. R. Williams	10.00
C. B. Chilton	20.00
Mrs. Willie Temple	100.00
Mrs. B. W McCue	10.00
Mrs. John C. Burch	25.00
Mrs. E. A. Harrison	5.00

Near East Relief.

Miss L. L. Brent	$ 5.00

For Printing Bibles in Russian.

Benj. R. Phelps	$ 5.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

OLD STAMPS.

WANTED,—OLD ENVELOPES FROM letters written before 1875. Highest prices paid for envelopes with patriotic designs used during Civil War. Old stamps purchased—George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

BOARDING—TIDEWATER, VA.

WANTED, IN REFINED COUNTRY HOME in Tidewater Virginia, a couple, or one, for winter. Address "Toddsbury", Nuttall P. O, Gloucester county, Va.

FROM A SHUT-IN.

I HAVE FIFTEEN FOUNTAIN PENS, and I want to sell them at once, for I need the money, and I am forced to give up my mail order business, since I have not got a home to stay at regular. Twelve of these fancy pens are my $1.25 pens, and the others I have been selling for $1.00. But in order to sell them at once, I am asking $1.00 each. Buy one at once. Edward P. Broxton, Keysville, Ga.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED: BY REFINED, CHRISTIAN woman, with highest reference, a comfortable and quiet home for the winter, and very small salary in exchange for light household duties; or perhaps the tutoring of a child. Would consider looking after home in absence of family, etc. Address, Mrs. H. L. Browne, Weedonville P. O., Virginia.

REFINED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION with invalid, or semi-invalid, as nurse-companion References. Address "F", care of Southern Churchman.

MIDDLE AGE WOMAN WITH TRAINing and experience, desires position in school or institution as housemother, chaperon, manager, hostess. Excellent references. Address "Box H", care of Southern Churchman.

MIDDLE-AGE LADY, WIDOW, DESIRES position as housekeeper, manager in home of widower, or bachelor. Experienced. References. Address "S. B", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

JONES: Departed this life, August 21, 1929, JOHN STUART JONES, of Fairfax county, Virginia, son of the late John W. Jones and Marion Stuart Alexander, of Buchanan, Va.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

REV CHARLES S. HARRISON.

The REV CHARLES SYLVESTER HARRISON, a retired priest of the Diocese of Virginia, died at the home of his sister in Richmond on September 2nd, aged 71.

Mr. Harrison was a native of Chesterfield County, Virginia, and graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1891. He was ordained deacon in 1891 and priest in 1892 by the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Whittle, the Bishop of Virginia He was assigned as deacon to the charge of Bromfield Parish, Rappahannock County, in the Diocese of Virginia and held the rectorship of that parish until 1896 when ill health resulting in total deafness compelled him to give up the active work of the ministry. Since that time he has lived in Richmond, performing such limited ministerial duties as opportunity presented.

The funeral was held at St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on September 4th, being conducted by the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. W R. G Irwin, the rector of St. Andrew's, and other clergymen of Richmond.

FRANKLIN A. RIDOUT.

THE REV FRANKLIN A. RIDOUT, rector of Church of the Ascension, Norfolk, died suddenly at his home, Thursday, September 5, 1929.

The Rev Mr. Ridout was born in Maryland September 1, 1868, ordained Deacon in 1895 and Priest the following year by Bishop Randolph, of Southern Virginia. He had charge of parishes in Virginia until 1917, when he entered Y. M. C. A. service with the American Expeditionary Force in France. His health being impaired as a result of his war experiences, he retired temporarily, living at Onancock, Va. In 1926 Mr. Ridout assumed charge of the Church of the Ascension, Norfolk.

Funeral services were held in the Church of the Ascension, with Bishop Beverley D. Tucker and Bishop Coadjutor Arthur G. Thomson in charge. The Norfolk clergy were in the chancel. After the service Mr. Ridout was taken to Onancock Va., for burial.

The Rev. Mr. Ridout possessed an exceptionally sweet and lovable personality and had endeared himself not only to his congregation but to a host of friends in the city of Norfolk His passing is a distinct lost to the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

and other Georgia cities attended and messages were sent from President Herbert Hoover, the Governors of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida, Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison and scores of United States Senators, Congressmen, authors, poets and musicians. The Hon. James B. Nevin, editor of the "Georgian-American", Atlanta, Ga., delivered the address of the afternoon. Mrs. Arthur McD. Wilson, life president of the "Uncle Remus" Association, Atlanta; Mrs. Warren D. White, vice-president, and Mrs. Robert Blackburn, author and reader of "Uncle Remus", were among the prominent people taking part on the program. The Jubilee Singers (colored) rendered a program of Old Negro Spirituals, and there was a procession of flags of all nations from Calvary Church to the memorial. Members of the immediate family of Joel Chandler Harris attended, and the memorial was unveiled by the grandchildren of the beloved storyteller. Wreaths from noted literary societies and from the Harris family were placed at the memorial, which stands next to the John Fox and Francis Scott Key memorials in the "Abbey". Special soloists gave programs of music in the church. Assisting in the service at the church and at the memorial were the Rev. William C. Cravner, rector of All Souls', Biltmore, N. C., and the Rev. George Watkins, rector of the Roman Catholic Church in Hendersonville, N. C. Colonel Frederic J. Paxon, of Atlanta, presided at the ceremonies.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Granite City.

The Mission Church of the Diocese broke ground the last of August for a new parish house to be erected on the rear of the church property. St. Bartholomew's has waited long for this very necessary part of its equipment; the waiting has been partly caused by its loyalty to the program of the diocese. Everything almost that the diocese has asked the parishes and missions to do, this Mission has always taken pride in doing, even if in doing so, it meant waiting for needed improvements at home.

The Rev. Mr. Burford is leading the people splendidly, and it is predicted for this Mission that 1929 will close with the best report it has ever made.

The diocese has recently presented the clergyman with a new Ford coach. The missions at Woodriver and Glen Carbon are also in the care of Mr. Burford.

Annual Conference.

Plans are practically completed for holding the annual conference of the clergy and of the laity for this fall. The clergy will meet on the seventeenth and the laity on the eighteenth, and both conferences will be at St. John's, Decatur.

St. John's Church, Springfield, has just made a contract for the installation of a pipe organ—about the largest big thing this thriving mission on the north side of the city needs.

The Rev. G. Morgan Williams took charge of the missions at Havana and Petersburg, on the first of September.

The Rev. S. H. Williams will assume charge of a string of missions in and about Carbondale on the fifteenth of the present month. He comes to assist General Missionary McCalla in the Cairo Archdeaconry.

F. H. S.

The Bishop's House.

From the Bishop's Address to the Synod at Champaign, 1929:

"Again I come before you with a heartfelt plea for the building which houses your Bishop at present and in the future his successors. You have surely not forgotten the great necessity for the Bishop's House. I had hoped by this time that there would have been many substantial gifts toward providing this home for your Bishops and making it a loving memorial of those past and gone. No more suitable and helpful memorial can be given to express your gratitude for the blessings you receive at the hands of your Fathers-in-God. Comparatively very little has come in towards the payment of the debt upon the property. Your present Bishop is carrying the greater part of the burden. I wish I might touch the hearts of some in the diocese who are able to give substantial sums towards the payment of the debt upon the house. Perhaps this Synod can devise some means whereby it can be accomplished. I commend this also to your serious consideration."

Mr. W. S. Troxell is Chairman of the Committee on Episcopal Residence Fund.

"For the General Missions of the Church."

The men of the Diocese of Springfield have endorsed the One Day's Income Plan in a resolution adopted at the Annual Laymen's Conference at Decatur, September 18, 1929, whereby the individual promises to give the equivalent of one day's income to the General Missionary Work of the Episcopal Church for the year 1929. It being undrstood that this is an effort sponsored by the laymen to assist the diocese in paying in full everything asked of it for the worldwide Missionary Work of the Church.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation Appointments.

At the meeting of Convocation of the District of Wyoming, held at Ethete, July 8, Bishop Bennett appointed the Rev. A. E. Pawla, editor of the Wyoming Churchman, and the Rev. P. K. Edwards to fill a vacancy on the Board of Examining Chaplains.

The Rev. R. E. Abraham, of Rock Springs, was elected Secretary of the District.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan

Christ Church, Little Rock, Commences Fall Activities.

Commencing with the first Sunday in September, Mrs. Effie Clines Fones took charge of Christ Church choir, and Miss Martha McAninch became the organist.

September 11 Miss Lynette Guisecke takes up her duties in Christ Church as Educational Secretary and leader of the Young People's work. With the splendid equipment furnished in the new parish house, fine development in the Church School and other activities of the young is confidently expected.

The rector of the parish has outlined a full program for the fall. September 8, at 7:30 A. M., there was a special Corporate Communion for all those boys and girls of Christ Church who are going away to school this fall.

Rally Day in the Church School has been set for September 22, when all officers and teachers and pupils will have a special service in the church at 9:30 A. M. Also that morning at 7:30, there will be a Corporate Communion for the officers and teachers of the school.

The following week, September 23-28, there is to be a Church School Teachers' Institute, held in Christ Church Parish by Miss Annie Morton Stout, who is an expert in that line and is borrowed from the Department of Sewanee. If there are any Sunday-school teachers and workers from outside of the city who wish to come for the Institute they will be welcome.

October 4, a banquet for all young people of Christ Church Parish, between the ages of fourteen and twenty-five will be held in the parish house. At this time, the program for the young people for the fall and winter will be explained to the young people and from then on much enthusiasm is expected among and by the young people of the parish.

October 6, a special Rallying Service for the whole congregation of Christ Church will be held in the church at 11 o'clock.

September 15-October 20, is a period set aside for the preparation for a special series of services to be held in Christ Church by Bishop Capers, of San Antonio, Texas. The dates for the Mission are October 20-27. Every day during the week there will be a morning and a night service in the church. Members of the church, in other towns as well as the people of Little Rock generally, will be welcome to these services.

November 24 is the period of preparation for the Every Member Canvass. November 20, there is to be a parish dinner in the parish house, at which all the adults of the congregation will be expected. November 24, the Every Member Canvass will be held.

A further essential part of the program is steady and enthusiastic working toward the goal of increased activity and enlarged membership of the Church School, Young People's Service League, Men's Club, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Ladies' Aid Society, Woman's Auxiliary, Daughters of the King and the Business and Professional Women's Club and a general promotion of spiritual vitalty in the whole congregation.

T.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Theodore B. Foster, Emeritus-Professor of Dogmatic Theology, Western Theological Seminary, has resigned the office of Registrar of the Diocese of Chicago, also his position as priest-in-charge of the Church of Our Saviour, Elmhurst, Ill., both effective October 1. He will then go on the retired list, and his permanent address will be 27 S. Main St., Rutland, Vt.

The Rev. Frederick W. Harriman, D. D., has changed his address to 620 W. Ferry St., Buffalo, New York.

The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., is expected to return to his parish about October 15, after an extended leave of absence, due to ill health.

September 8, the Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bshop of Lexington, ordained to the diaconate William H. Langley, Jr., and Gerald H. Catlin, and ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Julius A. Velasco, in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky. The Rev. Robert J. Murphy, of Versailles, Ky., preached the sermon, and the Rev. Charles S. Hale, of Lexington, Ky., read the Litany.

The Rev. William H. Langley, Jr., has been placed in charge of the Episcopal Church in Corbin, Ky.; the Rev. Gerald H. Catlin will assist the General Missionary, the Rev. Charles M. Lever, with headquarters in Pikeville, Ky.; and the Rev. Julius A. Velasco will work under the direction of the Bishop at different points in the diocese.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Charles S. Harrison, 71, died September 2, at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. H. Moore, Richmond, Virginia. Funeral services were conducted at St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on Wednesday, September 4.

Mr. Harrison was a native of Chesterfield County, Virginia. He received his theological training at the Virginia Seminary at Alexandria. He retired from active service some years ago when his health failed.

MY LITTLE WHITE RABBIT.

My little white rabbit
Had quite a habit
Of looking at me with a pleading eye
As though he would say, "Dear master, why
Do you forget
To feed your pet?"

He can't run around
On the big, wide ground
To gather green leaves at the dinner hour
And nibble the carrots and cauliflower,
Nor help himself
From the pantry shelf.

But I didn't know
How it feels to go
So hungry to bed, till I dreamed last night
That I was the supperless rabbit boxed tight,
And he the Boy-Lad
Just careless, not bad.

Oh, I promised him there
I'd treat him square,
Remember his water and fresh, clean food—
Or let mother give him to some one who would!
For boys who forget
Don't deserve a pet.

—Our Dumb Animals.

In considering what the Creed teaches us as to the earthly work of the Lord, we notice that events which to our eyes appear full of the deepest sorrow and humiliation may yet include at the same time a divine glory hidden from us because we have at present no power to see it. Thus, in the immediate prospect of the betrayal, of the agony, of the Cross—looking at His work accomplished, when Judas had now gone out into the night from the circle of Twelve, the Lord summoned up His judgment of all in the memorable words, Now is the Son of Man glorified.—A. C. Benson.

Men talk of the intricate paths of life, and they are many. And none are more so than those which wind about us in the four walls of the house in which we live. And if you would walk there, doing kindly service, and avoiding weak concessions to wrongs on the one hand, and harsh exactions of right, on the other, then let in the blessed Christ into that home. You may give a wide berth to that harsh-tempered one in your home who is exacting; but do you, like the Christ, tread the narrow way of kindliness and love?—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

"Despite not any man that lives,
Alien or neighbor, near or far;
Go out beneath the scornful stars,
And see how very small you are.
The world is large, and space is high
That sweeps around our little ken;
But there's no space or time to spare
In which to hate our fellow-men.

Banish Mosquitoes Easier! Quicker!

Flit is the new, easier, quicker way to rid your rooms of mosquitoes—for comfort and health. The handy Flit sprayer floats a vapor that does not fall in drops, from which no mosquitoes escape! All die—or money back. More for your money in the quart size.

"The yellow can with the black band"

FLIT

© 1929 Stanco Inc. REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer

J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

Miller & Rhoads

"The Shopping Center"

Known from coast to coast as one of America's great stores.

Richmond Virginia

ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET ON MEMORIALS FREE.

A very helpful booklet on Monuments has been published by Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C. It contains many beautiful designs, and practical suggestions for medium priced memorials, and tells how you may obtain the ideal memorial, possessing the four essentials—beauty, durability, strength and legibility of inscription.

Winnsboro Granite, which is quarried by the above Corporation, is without doubt the finest quality monumental stone to be found in America, and this famous granite is known to most readers of this publication for its beauty, durability, strength, contrast and freedom from deleterious ingredients, such as lime, iron and water. Like other high quality materials, Winnsboro Granite is sometimes confused with the many inferior substitutes on the market that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

The booklet mentioned above, contains much useful information, and tells how you may be sure of getting genuine Winnsboro Granite. Write for your copy today. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

SELL

Christmas Cards

at forty to fifty per cent. commission. The best line of Box Assortment and Personal Christmas Cards on the market.

Write for details.

ARTISTIC CARD COMPANY,

Dept. 15. Elmira, N. Y.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

1835 DOMINUS FIRMAMENTUM MEUM

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 28, 1929. No. 39.

ARCHBISHOPS ISSUE PASTORAL LETTER

Canterbury and York unite in sending out this stirring call to their Church people to take religion seriously and to study it worthily

Brethren in the Lord: In the first year of our office we are moved to speak to the clergy and people about some of those things which are nearest to our hearts. Can we fail to have the hope that at this new stage in the story of the Church there may come some renewal of its life and power? Such a renewal will not come by mere appeals to the emotions, still less by new organizations. We are convinced that under the guidance of the Holy Spirit it may come if the whole Church will set its thought and prayer towards gaining a deeper and fuller apprehension of God, of His self-revelation in Christ, and the wonder and glory of the eternal gospel of His love and grace.

This gospel has been given. It is for the Church to proclaim it. The great body of truth about God and man which lies behind it has been given. It is for the Church to bear witness of it. But what has thus been given must be ever newly grasped—made real in life, interpreted and expressed to meet the needs of each successive age.

Is there not at this present time a manifest need of thus renewing the hold and unfolding the truth of the Gospel? Consider some signs of this need.

We are enclosed by a material civilization great in its achievements, confident in its self-sufficiency, in which no place is found for God or even for the spiritual life of man. The Church of Christ is called to give witness to the reality and claim of the things unseen and eternal. How can it give witness to these things unless they are manifestly real and powerful in the lives of its members?

Among our own people, not least among the young, there are many who are perplexed by difficulties or haunted by the fear that new knowledge is shaking the foundations of their faith. To them the Church owes a two-fold duty. It must give them in fuller measure chances of learning what the Christian faith really is. It must show them that through new light thrown upon the Bible and new discoveries of science rightly understood we are reaching a new knowledge of God and of His ways of revealing Himself. The Holy Spirit of God is worshipped and glorified when men are willing to be guided by Him into all truth.

Within the Church there are, we must thankfully acknowledge, many signs of zeal in the cause of our holy religion. Yet sometimes this zeal is narrow in range and in effect. It tends to be given to sections and parties rather than to the whole body of the Church. And aspects of truth and experience, when they are isolated, become one-sided and exaggerated. It is only through the study of the whole Gospel of God that each aspect finds its place in the proportion of one Faith. . . .

Once again, must it not be confessed that in many of our congregations there is a dullness of spirit, a languor of worship, a reluctance to make fresh adventures for the cause of God's Kingdom at home and overseas, strangely out of accord with the splendor of the faith which they profess? Is not one reason this—that people so often take that faith for granted, make or use no opportunities to grow in the knowledge of its length and breadth and height and depth? If by this learning what the faith really is and means they could gain some vision of the love of God ever "coming down from heaven" in Christ to their own lives and their own parishes, drawing them into union with Himself and with one another in the fellowship of His Body, speaking to them through His Word, giving His Life to them through His Sacraments, calling them to work with Him in the fulfilment of His Kingdom, would there not come to them new joy and zeal and power—"the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness"?

It is difficult and indeed impossible for us within the limits of this letter to say fully and clearly all that is in our minds. But our aim is very definite. It is to ask all members of the Church, clergy and laity alike, to make some continuous study of the Gospel of God's revelation of Himself in Christ, of the Bible and the Creeds wherein that Gospel is set forth, part of the corporate life and work of every parish throughout the land.

We make our appeal first to the clergy. We know well the difficulties which beset them, the incessant demands which are made upon them. Our heart goes out to them in sympathy and understanding. But this call will not add to their burdens; rather will it relieve them. If they are encouraged and helped by authority to join frequently and regularly with their brethren in their deanery or district in a fellowship of study and prayer, they will find a real refreshment in their labors. They will be inspired to fulfill with new hope and zeal their office as the teachers of their people.

We make our appeal also to the laity. Let them be willing to set their clergy free for more undistracted devotion to the ministry of word and of prayer. Let them be ready themselves to use whatever opportunities for common study may be offered in due course in their own parishes. Let every parish be a school of sacred learning, wherein groups of men and women, old and young, many or few, may together steadily and prayerfully think out the meaning of the Christian faith. . . .

May the Divine Teacher, the Holy Spirit Himself, further our endeavor with His continual help. May He take of the things of Christ and show them anew to His Church in England now.

Commending all who read or hear these words to the blessing of Almighty God, we are your servants in Christ Jesus,

COSMO CANTUAR.
WILLIAM EBOR.

—The Spirit of Missions.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

ATTENTION

GUILDS AND AUXILIARIES

Increase your funds for Church work. Send us

25 new subscriptions

and receive

A CHECK FOR $25.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,

628 E. Main Street. Richmond, Va.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

One Year $3.00. Two Years $5.00

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Concerning Orthodox Protestant Episcopal Church Doctrine	6
Chriset 's Lamp	6
There Is None Good—No Not One—A. L. Wright	7
Must I Wait?	7
Favorite Scripture Verses	7
Genesis on the Rails—Rev. James W. Morris, D. D.	8
The Church in Cuba—Frank Persons	9
Memorial Rites Held for Patriot	10
Book Reviews	10
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	15
Children's Department	17

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls
The Bishop of Washington, President of Board of Trustees. Miss Mabel B Turner, A. B., A. M., Principal, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

WANTED

1,000 men and women to place our Bibles, Testaments and Religious Books in homes. Big profit. Full or spare time JOIN HANDS WITH US. Write today for free information Established over 40 years.

WILMORE BOOK AND BIBLE COMPANY
Dept 16, 443 South Dearborn Street,
Chicago, Ill.

$50 TO $100 IN SPARE TIME

Write for Schwer's CHRISTMAS CARD & NOVELTIES PLAN. Popular and different from others. $50. to $100. easily made. No investment. Great for Home Effort. Write at once to CHARLEY C. SCHWER, DEPT. 186 WESTFIELD, MASS.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

Church Furniture
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

FROM A SHUT-IN

I would appreciate subscriptions and renewals for the following magazines:

American Magazine	$2.50
Colliers, the National Weekly	$2.00
Cosmopolitan	$3.00
Delineator	$1.00
Good Housekeeping	$3.00
Modern Priscilla	$2.00
Pictorial Review	$1.00
Saturday Evening Post	$2.00
Ladies' Home Journal	$1.00
Nature Magazine	$3.00
McCalls Magazine	$1.00
Woman's Home Companion	$1.00
Popular Mechanics	$2.50
St. Nicholas for Boys and Girls	$4.00

EDWARD P. BROXTON

Keysville, Ga.

HINNERS
PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

TWO WAYS TO BE SURE

Discriminating buyers of monuments, desirous of securing the most permanent, beautiful and perfect stone, specify Winnsboro Granite in their purchase contracts, which affords a granite of greatest crushing strength; freest from water, lime and iron, which are deleterious, and in time tend to disfigure the monument; and which affords a stone of an even and beautiful crystalline structure.

The buyer may be absolutely sure of getting the real Winnsboro Granite if he insists upon the dealer delivering a certificate from the management of Winnsboro Granite Corporation, to the stock used being Winnsboro Granite; but to make assurance double sure the purchaser may test the monument by throwing water upon it. If there are then apparent any black or white streaks, black or white splotches of size, or if there is any wave in the grain, some mistake has been made, and the monument is not of Winnsboro Granite.

Mistakes are always possible, as there is quarried from the Winnsboro quarries a second grade stone, known as "Smith stock"; also as there is quarried from many other quarries stones not so good, but resembling Winnsboro Granite.

The water test made three times at the plant before shipment assures first grade stone being shipped on orders for Winnsboro Granite; and such stone is certificated as Winnsboro Granite Errors, however, might occur unintenally, and all dealers should make the test above suggested before cutting a piece of stone. Buyers can be assured by the same test.

Winnsboro Granite is of flawless, even, straight grain—the ideal monumental material.

Write for free booklet of monumental designs. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

"THE REAL LINCOLN"
From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.
Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.
An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".
Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".
Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD
Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria
Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W & E SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

When in need of
MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES
and want honest treatment see
BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.
Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

they want to know--

so they write to MOTHER RUTH who answers in
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES

How about Sunday picnics, school and class plays, studying on Sunday, social affairs — which are the right kind? If in love, how about this problem or that perplexity that has arisen? Home difficulties, corporal punishment for children, what is to be done? Dancing, cards, slang, choice of companions — what is a young Christian to do? What is a mission call? How can one witness for Christ? Where can one find time for Bible study? When dissatisfied and thoroughly discouraged — what should a Christian do?

[in book form for first time and just off the press]

Girls' Problems of Today

Discussed by MOTHER RUTH

[Richly bound in Blue Cloth; Stamped in gold, 220 pages; $1.50 per copy; postage 10c]

Mail Your Order Today!

The Bible Institute Colportage Ass'n
843-845 No. Wells St., Chicago

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

No crooked path leads to God.

"The Church needs manhood more than machinery."

"We cannot conquer a necessity, but we can yield to it in such a way as to be greater than if we could."

Oh, grant, I pray Thee, Lord, that by Thy grace,
The fragrance of Thy life may dwell in me;
That as I move about from place to place,
Men's thoughts may turn to Thee.
—F. J. Exley.

There's no defeat, in truth, save from within;
Unless you're beaten there, you're sure to win."

"Instead of longing for something easy, make your own work easier by putting earnestness and energy into and leaving worry out."

The appeal of the Church is to be as effective as the appeal of the recruiting sergeant, it also must be a call to service.—Canon Mitchell.

How should the work the Master goes about
Fit the vague sketch my compasses have planned?
I am His house—for Him to go in and out.
He builds me now, and if I cannot see
At any time what He is doing with me,
'Tis that He makes the house for me too grand.
The house is not for me—it is for Him.
His thoughts require full many a stair,
Many a tower, many an outlook fair,
Of which I have no thought and need no care.
—George MacDonald.

The clouds, which rise with thunder, slake
Our thirsty souls with rain;
The blow most dreaded falls to break
From off our limbs a chain;
And wrongs of man to man but make
The love of God more plain.
As through the shadowy lens of even
The eye looks farthest into heaven
On gleams of star and depth sof blue
The glaring sunshine never knew!
—Whittier.

In the Churches of February 1 is recorded the sad song of an African tribe:
"Open the path, open the path,
We want Heaven.
We stay in darkness because we have no teacher,
Five and four years, five and four years;
O the years, the many years."

It is surprising to observe how much more anybody may become by simply being always in his place! One need not be wealthy, or influential, or talented, or even educated, to attain this importance. Try it in the Sunday School, the choir, the church and other gatherings. The people who are always in their place we count on.—Salina Watchman.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock	$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned	$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....	$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 28, 1929. No. 39.

CORAL

In tropic seas are many islands built on coral—lovely islands, some of them, covered with glorious verdure, homes of large, prosperous populations. The coral grew from the depths, nine inches a year, the scientists estimate, on the skeletons and infinitesimal remains of countless myriads of submarine creatures. Day after day, through months, years, decades, centuries, these builders have builded, each living but a few hours, doing the work, too small to be measured or seen, but the total results enduring, beautiful, vastly valuable for all humanity. This familiar fact of natural history, like so many other facts of nature, teaches clearly and eloquently to those who observe and think. It tells us of humility and comfort, faith and diligence. Each of us is such an immeasurably minute part of the billions of our race who have lived and died. The years we have here are such an infinitely tiny section of the time gone and to come. Yet, it is appointed for each of us who would be worthy of the life given us to do something, like the coral makers, to help toward the consummation and destiny, so far beyond our imaginations and comprehensions, surely to be. The ephemeral insect that on a day two thousand years ago left its fraction of an inch of body on a stem fathoms beneath the surface of the Pacific could not know it was establishing land on which fruits, flowers, forests, would grow and cities would rise and thrive. So, we of this day, living and doing as we can and will, may know nothing of the ultimate of what we do and say, of what it may be, how far from where we now are, how many decades or centuries after we have left earth. No whisper of voice nor glimmer of light comes from what seems to us the vast void on the other side of the grave to tell us when, or how, or where, our doing may be used for the designs of the Creator for the universe in which this planet of ours, enormous to us, is but a speck. Our own smallness is difficult for our conception as space or eternity or our possible value and importance. The makers of the coral stalks and branches which made the reefs and foundations of the islands built physical structures which finally have provided origin, birthplace and home for countless forms of new physical life. We may be building, day by day, year by year, in and for the spiritual realm illimitable, incomprehensible, everlasting, for which souls yearn as their dwelling and resting place. Effects and results of our work are beyond our knowledge, may not be seen nor felt anywhere until we are long past and forgotten. We do know there are work and building to be done, ready to our hands, and that always we can find opportunity to serve, to give, to help, to add something to the upward growth and thought and hope of our fellow-man and the peopling of the unseen kingdom, happier, more glorious and beautiful than our sweetest dreams may picture.

Particle by particle the coral foundations are made through the centuries—centuries so very long to our thought, so brief and swiftly passing in history. It may be that the unfathomable purposes will be fulfilled by the slow, small, additions and accretions of good, of self-sacrifice and love contributed by the faithful, grateful and loving through successive generations. However that may be, we are told clearly that the lives entrusted to us are wickedly and wantonly wasted and treasonably squandered unless they are used for betterment and building for the present and the years and people to come; that when we prove true to trust our loyalty will be repaid with endless and boundless bounty. We know it is for us to strive and to trust, that our labor shall not be in vain nor lost, whatever blessings may attend it or appear to be denied to it. Definite, direct, obvious, immediate, results from our most zealous, intense, striving are rare. Real high courage is that patient and hopeful with hope that can wait and be strong, go right on, continue unwearied endeavor, while none will answer to our music of rejoicing or mourning, nor heed warning. Too many of us neglect it. In the Sunday schools we may sing and hear of the drops of water and grains of sand making oceans and land and the little deeds of kindness and words of love that make earth like Heaven; but we grow to maturity and vanity and impatience, demand to be allowed to accomplish quickly what we consider to be the big things and if they be beyond our reach and strength relapse to craven depression, indolence and callousness.

Source and inspiration of the most exquisite chivalry and finest gentility, the Bible exalts as memorable givers to be forever honored three poor and obscure women. One widow baked from her scanty and failing store of food for the stranger who was one of the mightiest of prophets and reformers. Another, nine hundred years later, casting in her two mites, was lifted by the Son of God above all the surrounding rich and prominent to be an enduring example of splendid generosity and devotion. An outcast and sinner wept and worshipped, did as she could with her box of ointment to prove her penitence and desire to serve. There is suggestion of wide thought and of the grim humor of vast contrast and incongruity in the facts that David, great leader of Israel, founding a mighty kingdom, was singing de profundus, in majestic poetry reciting his desolation in the mire and the deep, while creatures to him unknown and unimagined, actually in mire and ocean depths thousands of miles from him, were actively building islands now homes and refuges and yielding sustenance to all lands long after his kingdom has vanished.

We may not know. Faith and purpose consecrate and magnify to wonderful achievement the smallest and feeblest labors. Work of the creatures living under the sea but a day each and so little that the eye cannot discern them, has outlived empires established by conquerors, statesmen, warriors, huge armies. The morsel of bread given in the lost city of Zarephath and the two mites cast at the temple may mean far more in sight of Him to whom all hearts are open than the most lavish benefactions and devotions of the most potent of rulers and leaders among men. Faith, St. Paul says, is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. By faith, he wrote his fellow Hebrews, their great ancestors and national heroes had wrought grandly and won blessings from Jehovah and immortal honor—Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; Joseph, Moses, Gideon, Samson, David—a long, shining list, extending from the beginning. It is not for us to measure these with the two widows and the sinful woman, or those who, in His name, give but a cup of cold water. God knows. The humblest, poorest, weakest, most sorely tempted, most baffled and beaten and shamed of us, may trust Him to see clearly, to weigh justly, to direct consequences by infinite wisdom and to reward love and loyalty and faithful trying with infinite mercy and bounty.

Alfred B. Williams.

CONCERNING ORTHODOX PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH DOCTRINE

September 14, 1929.

Mr. Langbourne M. Williams, President,
Southern Churchman,
P. O. Box 1274, Richmond, Virginia.

Dear Mr. Williams:

I read in one of the two copies of the Southern Churchman, the one dated August 17, accompanying your letter, Mr. G. Osborne Troop's article on the Atonement, with full agreement. It seems to me that his article on page ten of the Southern Churchman of September 7, is even more admirable. It is short, perfectly clear, and seems to me to demonstrate absolutely what is to be believed as to the Atonement.

Now, let us consider the letter from Bishop H. St. George Tucker to you, as Editor, and which you published in the Southern Churchman of August 24, and your reply to it therein. In this letter and in yours there is the spirit of agreement. I believe that one should be true to one's vows and extend the same privilege to all others without question. When the Church of England first took definite form after the great European Reformation, there were, for example, in existence the Apostles' Creed, and the Nicene Creed. Both of them were printed in the Prayer Book of our English denomination, and there were other religious statements which found their way into that English Prayer Book. But, in the effort to get as many persons and groups as possible into the denomination known as the Established Church of England, certain Articles of Religion were agreed upon. My point is that those thus agreeing to start the Established Church of England, as then stated in those Articles of Religion, undertook to uphold the principles of their Church, and consequently agreed that there should not be inserted in the Prayer Book, in the Canons or elsewhere, anything which was not in keeping with the afore-mentioned Articles of Religion. In time there was started in the United States of America the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1801 that Church adopted thirty-nine out of the original thirty-nine, or was it not forty, English Articles of Religion as part of our American Church Constitution. Therefore, our Constitution, those Thirty-nine Articles and the Canons and the Rubrics, clearly limit what is to be accepted as Orthodox as to statement in our Prayer Book. If Bishop Tucker adopts that as his standard, I think we need not cavil at the second paragraph of this letter of his to you. The thing that I believe we should withstand is any departure from the principles I have stated. Reading those principles into the liturgy and practices of our denomination will afford us spiritual freedom as wide as the skies, but any one violating these principles though it be termed a search for width or breadth or depth or unification, etc., etc., cannot strengthen the influence or growth of our denomination, for there will have been then sacrificed righteous character for supine and grovelling and defeatist expediency.

Team work is necessary to best carry on any widespread effort. Such work and such a team will surely lose persuasive power and dwindle and die if it does not keep faith. Therefore, it is clear to me that the person or group pledged to certain principles through membership of an organization should practice those principles definitely, or should cancel membership and join some other organization in full keeping with his pledged principles. It is vain to justify the making of a small hole in the dyke of a reservoir by the plea that it is very small, and that only pure water is to flow through it. That plea will not avert the end. Logically the hole in the dyke will gradually enlarge until the reservoir will be fully destroyed after a development during which, of course, the out fall of the water through the hole in the dyke has depended for its quality upon chance of disturbance. You see that I believe the strength of this movement, in which you are doing such valiant work, must depend virtually upon two things: First, a realization of the clear principles setting forth definitely what constitutes Orthodox Protestant Episcopal Church doctrine in the United States of America; and, Secondly, some means by which its membership can enforce the observance of those principles. As it is, the member in the pew has no means of redress against any violation of the principles of his Church by any of the one hundred and forty-four Bishops, or 6,093 Presbyters and Deacons. There are 1,871,576 lay members of our Church; that is, who are all thus deprived of effective influence in conducting their own Church. The essential difficulty with our Church is this: Instead of duly resting upon the rights of the ninety-nine and two-third per cent of our total membership—the lay members—it is inverted and an effort is being made to hold it as it were upon an apex constituted of one hundred and forty-four Bishops, only .0077, that is, seventy-seven ten thousandths of one per cent of our total church membership. Next to that apex comes the total 6,093 Presbyters and Deacons forming .032; that is, thirty-two one thousandths of one per cent, of our total Church membership. Because the great Roman Church developed that same inversion, the great European Reformation took place. That Reformation formed itself in England, "Broad Based upon the People's Will". The Roman Church inversion progressed until in 1870 it culminated in the Doctrine of Papal Infallibility. Since the English Reformation there have been group defections from it. And in the Established Church of England itself there has been an increasing tendency towards inversion. That has wrested from the vast majority of our general Church membership the right to self-government and subjected thousands to the interpretations and dominance of an increasingly self-determining body of Bishops and Presbyters and Deacons.

I hope that I have met your desire for criticism of this Bishop Tucker letter, and of your reply to it on August 15, 1929. If not, I shall be very glad to discuss the matter further with you. I will say that at this time it seems to me indubitable that our group must agree clearly as to principles, plans and procedure, and work strategically and steadily for them and try to avoid other discussions or religious campaigns.

Our opponents cloud the issue. But they cannot withstand clear, persistent, concentrated demonstration of the absolute facts from the Church members in the pew.

With kindest regards, I am,

DeCourcy W. Thom.

CHRIST'S LAMPS.

His Lamps, are we to shine where He shall say,
And Lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor the light of day;
But for dark places of the earth
Where shame, and wrong and crime have birth,
And for the mirky twilight ray,
When wandering sheep have gone astray,
And when the Lamp of Faith grows dim,
And souls are groping after Him:
And as sometimes a flame we see,
Bright, shining through the night
So dark, we cannot see the Lamp,
But only see the Light.
So may we shine, His love the Flame,
That men may glorify His Name.

These lines, by Annie Johnston Flint, were first quoted by Dr. Archer, of the C. M. S., India, at one of the Summer Conferences at Ridley College, St. Catherine's Canada, and have been frequently quoted since to the blessing of many souls.

MANY VISIT TOMB OF LEE IN AUGUST.

Lexington.—(Special to The News Leader.)—Miss Nettie Stuart, custodian of Lee chapel and tomb, reported a registration of 14,990 visitors during the month of August. This number is in excess of any reported for any one month. The report stated that for three days in August the number of visitors at the chapel exceeded 700. On two days the number exceeded 600, and on nine days it exceeded 500.

The list of those registered included outside of the United States, residents of England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Canada, Japan and China.

"THERE IS NONE GOOD, NO NOT ONE"

By Ava Louise Wright

THE thought of sin is not popular in our day. Neither is the idea of sin popular. We justify many of our sins under the name of natural human instincts. There is a wing of the modern psycho-analytical school that teaches that the repression of certain instincts which we used to call sinful is harmful to the body and the mind. And being harmful, as they think, they would feel that the repression rather than the indulgence is sinful —that is, if they used so old-fashioned a term. Moreover, with many people who discredit the revelation of God as to things that are sinful, there is no authority left as to what is right or wrong. As the gentleman said who addressed the American Association for the Advancement of Science, "Sin goes into the limbo of ancient superstition such as witchcraft and sacrifice".

But even with so-called religious people there is a curious repugnance to the thought of sin. The writer thinks of a certain attractive young woman, quite blameless in her life, so far as current moral standards go, who said with considerable fire, "Indeed, I am not a sinner!" But she was an orthodox member of a church which Sunday by Sunday repeats its General Confession, "We have errod and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep"—a strange evidence of how meaningless and perfunctory ritual can become to many minds. If she were honest with herself she would not repeat that confession.

But, as a matter of fact, from the point of view of the Church, and of Christ on Whom the Church is founded, and of the laws which He enunciated, she is a sinner, and it is nothing short of tragedy for her soul's sake, that she does not know it. For whenever the soul, like the Pharisee, begins to thank God for the few virtues he possesses, totally unconscious of the many things he does not possess, he is in a more dangerous predicament than the publican who beat on his breast and asked for God's mercy, overwhelmed with a sense of sin. As the writer has often pointed out, the Pharisee in his smug self-satisfaction was done for—with his fasting and giving of tithes as his positive virtues, and not being unjust or extortioner or adulterer, as his negative virtues, he had reached the tainly, it happens because of some low standard of right-what he was he never saw what he was not.

But how does that fatal thing still happen to us in this modern day—that we don't see what we are not, and can say with indignation, "Indeed, I am not a sinner". Cersee the absurdity and the tragedy of measuring ourselves eousness that is ours.

The Pharisee thanked God for himself in comparison with a publican. Doubtless, the publican was everything that the Pharisee thanked God he was not. We can always find people in the moral scale lower than we are. The honest man prides himself that he is not dishonest, as is some man whom he knows. The virtuous woman takes pride in her virtue in comparison with the woman who strays from the path of right. The man who gives tithes feels superior to the man who does not. So it goes. Taking an imperfect standard by which to measure ourselves, we look very virtuous and good. And we do not see the absurdity and the trtgedy of measuring ourselves by a measure that is short of the mark.

For it is only in the moral realm that men ever allow such a ridiculous thing. In the human realm, in all our buying and selling, in all our dealing with each other, we measure by the perfect standard—twelve or sixteen ounces to the pound, thirty-six inches to the yard, and so on. It is laughable to think of our being satisfied with a yard of cloth measured by a fifteen-inch stick; and feeling gratified that it is a few inches longer. But in the moral and spiritual realm that is what men and women are doing every day. And if they do not indignantly deny that they are sinners, they are as smug and self-satisfied as a Pharisee.

On the other hand, there are great saints, like Paul, the Apostle, who says of himself that he is the chief of sinners; who makes the simple statement, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing—" And it is a readily observable fact that the closer men and women grow to what seems to us real goodness, they are without exception humble people, and deeply conscious of their imperfection. A curious anomaly! A man like St. Paul pouring out his life in the most intense, unselfish love for his fellows, calling himself a sinner, and a woman, who though moral and respectable and cultured, is noted for nothing of outstanding goodness, hotly denying that she is a sinner. But, of course, the explanation is that the saints have caught a vision of what righteousness is in the person of their Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. They measure their lives by a perfect standard and are humble.

Let us measure ourselves for a little while by this Perfect Standard. Let us take our Bibles on our knees, and turn to the Sermon on the Mount to hear something of Our Lord's standard of righteousness. And first He went back to ancient moral laws and enunciated them over again, "Thou shalt not kill," "Thou shalt not commit adultery." But He did not stop with them; they were not enough. A man, indeed, may not kill—he may have been taught enough self-control or enough fear of law not to raise his hand in murder, but at the same time he may hate, he may be angry with his brother, he may provoke his brother to wrath, and those sins of the spirit are the seeds of which murder is hatched. Sins of the spirit! Bitterness, unforgiveness, the ancient spirit of retaliation or of paying back the wrongs that others do us, the harsh spirit of judgment of others, greed for things or covetousness as Jesus called it—these are some of the things that He attacked. In His mind so great was the sin of the unforgiving spirit, that He made the stern pronouncement, "For if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." And He said of the spirit of judgment, which we have toward our fellows, "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Sins of the spirit! And in face of them what one of us can say, "Indeed, I am not a sinner!" Rather when we contemplate the one new commandment that Jesus gave, "This is my commandment that ye love one another as I have loved you," and when we hear love analyzed by St. Paul in just its one element of kindness, how we must bow our heads in humility and shame at some of the things we have said and done to our human brothers. And realizing with St. Paul the weakness of our flesh and that there is nothing in us to accomplish these divine commands, we kneel on our knees to ask of God, the Giver, as Jesus, Our Lord, directed. For, said He, "If ye then, being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?"

MUST I WAIT?

I have a life with Christ to live,
But, ere I live it, must I wait
Till learning can clear answer give
Of this and that book's date?

I have a life in Christ to live,
I have a death in Christ to die—
And must I wait, till science give
All doubts a full reply?
Nay rather, while the sea of doubt
Is raging wildly round about,

Questioning of life and death and sin,
Let me but creep within
Thy fold, O Christ, and at Thy feet
Take but the lowest seat,
And hear Thine awful voice repeat
In gentlest accents, heavenly sweet,
Come unto Me, and rest:
Believe Me, and be blest.
—John Campbell Shairp.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSER

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. temperance." (Galatians 5:22, 23.)

> "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Galatians 5:22, 23).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

GENESIS ON THE RACK

By the Reverend James W. Morris D. D.

THE critics of Bishop Gore's New Commentary assert very flatly and uncompromisingly, that Moses could not have written Genesis, indeed, that it is impossible that any one author could have done it.

To justify such language these critics should bring forward proof that is absolute. It should be proof that no reasonable man could honestly doubt. Such an age-long fact as the Mosaic authorship of Genesis, must be overwhelmingly disproved; no hypothesis, however ingenious or beautiful, will suffice. It is a fact that has thousands of years at the back of it. A family that has held the title to a great estate without contest for even one hundred years could not be dispossessed in favor of a number of obscure persons, except on grounds as conclusive as a proposition in Euclid. And no one can pretend with any degree of success that the substitution of the great Moses by a set of post-exilic authors has been established on any such evidence.

Why is it impossible that a man like Moses should have composed the book of Genesis? It seems from the language of some critics that we are required to show that Moses wrote with his own hand his books, or that we should have the original documents. Their requirements would play havoc with Livy or Tacitus, or any ancient historian.

Consider these facts:

1. The age of Moses was highly literary. Once the notion that writing was unknown in his time was a favorite objection against the Catholic view. It can no longer be held. As far as literacy is concerned, it certainly may not be said that Moses could not have been the author of Genesis.

2. Moses was confessedly a grand figure. It cannot be denied that he possessed capacities of mind and spirit of the very highest order. His is the greatest name in all history prior to the incarnation of Jesus Christ. What insuperable objection is there to his composing the book of Genesis?

3. It is acknowledged that Moses occupied a key position in the ancient world. He was near enough to the patriarchs and the post-diluvian worthies to be aware of the traditions of primeval times. Aside from his inspiration, he had, in all reason, quite as favorable opportunities to know the earliest traditions of the Creation and of primeval days as the idolatrous Babylonians. Why is it impossible that such a man, so circumstanced could not under God's guidance have recorded the beginnings of things? And when his account is compared with the childish and debasing heathen legends, much admired by our Critics (Pp. 40, 41 of the N. C.), the assertion of impossibility becames ludicrous.

4. That such a book as Genesis, with its unquestioned unity of subject and its lofty moral and theological tone, should have been composed by an unknown "Compiler", or even by a company of them after the exile, and that, too, by piecing together a number of old documents, by furbishing up ancient and doubtful folk-lore, and by editing silly Babylonian myths, would seem to be the real impossibility. All the probabilities, even aside from revelation and inspiration, are with Moses; the impossibilities are with the imaginary redactors.

We, therefore, look for some other reason that leads these Christian writers to abandon catholic traditions and to adopt theories that were hatched in the nest of naturalistic infidelity. It is to be found in the adoption of the evolutionary notion, supposed to be the last word of "science" and capable of being adapted not only to all the physical world, but to all the moral and religious world as well, namely: that every thing has been evolved from germs to worlds and from zero to infinity! It is this "science" that makes it impossible for Moses to have had in his day and time such true and sublime notions of God, as Genesis represents him as having. Such high ideas can result, it seems, only from long ages of striving atter God. And we are asked to believe that the Old Testament registers not God's revelations to man, but rather Man's discoveries of God. Our critics have swallowed that sort of science, and on it they base their impossibilities.

But is this thing science? Science in the proper sense of the word is systematized facts. A scientific theory, is a guess in regard to matters that may be facts, but are not yet so established. There can be nothing that deserves the name of science, that is not concerned with tested and established facts.

We are entitled to ask, What are the facts of science that make it impossible for Moses to be the author of Genesis? What established facts discredit and contradict the account of Creation? The Lord God's question addressed to Job, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?" applies here. Indeed, to men who pretend to say on the basis of science what was done, and what could not have been done at the beginning of the world, the whole divine rebuke to Job is applicable. That at the vast beginnings of the world and all in it, many divine energies and activities, were put forth that now would be classed as miraculous, is not merely probable; it is certain. Matter had to come from somewhere. Whence and how did it come? If it be said without proof that matter possesses the attribute of eternity, and so is a part of God Himself, still life must have come on the earth, and no genuine scientist can say, as a scientist, that matter of itself can produce life. Animal life must have somehow started, and no scientist that values his reputation can say that science anywhere shows that plant-life can of itself originate animal life. And the conscious, and responsible creature must have begun to be; for it is certain that man was not always on the earth, and when he began to be, no scientist, speaking as such, can affirm that it is scientifically established that the non-moral produced of itself the moral, or that the irrational of itself gave birth to the rational. Science must obey the scientific rule—that every effect must have an adequate cause. Only one cause can be conceived of as sufficient for the stupendous effect of the world and all in it, and that is God, almighty and all wise. Science, as science, according to the testimony of many of its greatest votaries, is ignorant of the origin of created things. No science, say these true scientists, does know or can know, on the principles of science, how God chose to effect the miracle of creating, ordering and peopling of the great world. Moses' account in Genesis is just as good science as any modern theory. On the basis of science, they all are past speculations. Only as God has chosen to reveal the facts, can they be known. As revealed in Genesis, we have a reasonable scheme; for it asserts an adequate cause for all earthly beings. So that it may be said without fear of contradiction, that no true science has anything to say as to the possibility or impossibility of the Moisaic authorship and the factual reliability of Genesis. These things stand or fall on the basis of a reliable and reasonable revelation from God.

But our critics, having adopted the theory of the impossibility of the truthfulness and authority of the book, set themselves to the task of making it conform to the theory at all costs. They make artificial "analysis" of the book, whereby its unity and reliability may be shattered, and its history classed with heathen folk-lore.

Chapter 7 of Genesis may be taken to illustrate the sort of work these men do.

This chapter, and indeed the whole account of the Flood, is divided into two parts and given to two sets of writers, supposedly centuries apart. The P. or Priestly writers are said to have lived in the time of the exile and afterwards: the J. writers are put down as of the age of Amos. The P. writers used the divine name, God: while the J. writers used the divine name of Jehovah, translated the Lord in the King James' Version.

So much prevised, we beg the reader to take the Bible, and note the extraordinary "analysis".

The first five verses are given to P. because the divine name in them is God. But verses six and eleven, the last part of v. 17, as well as v. 24, are also asigned to P. though no divine name occurs in them.

Then we are told that verses 7, 10, 12 and the first part of verse 17 belongs to the J. school, though in them there are no divine names to guide us.

The critic seems to have some secret inner sense which enables him to do this wonderful chopping up of an old document. He lays it down as certain that v. 6 belongs to one age, and v. 7 to another; that v. 10 was written 350 years before v. 11; that the last part of v. 17 was written at the time of the exile; and the first part of the same verse, in the time of Amos. What can be more amazing than that? Is it possible that any knowledge of Hebrew and old Scripts, any learning or lore can confer such uncanny prescience? Do these men, indeed, claim a miraculous gift, if not of tongues, at least of documents?

But we soon discover a much less transcendental explanation. They very naively tell us that they are doing all this to solve a most serious "problem", thus stated: "In P. the Flood lasts one year and eleven days, whereas J's estimate is sixty-one days." We rub our eyes and say: "Why, we never saw that discrepancy." No, and the reason we never did, is because we did not know how to make the right sort of analysis. In the story as it stands, the problem does not exist; but if we only cut it up judicially, it comes out.

The problem is framed up, by giving just the right verses, or even part of verse, to one set of writers and the proper sort to the other set, and then the divergency is beautifully made out.

The process is as follows: Assume that there are two documents three hundred and fifty years apart; give to each one of these assumed sources just the verses that will make them appear discordant, and then argue from this manufactured discrepancy that there must be more than one document, and that Moses could not be the author.

But our critics have still another "problem" to solve here. They say: "In P. all the animals are taken into the ark in pairs and no distinction is made between clean and unclean. In J. Noah is bidden to take in seven pairs of clean animals and only one pair of unclean."

According to the use of divine titles, a rule of thumb which the critics themselves acknowledge to be far from satisfactory, verses 2 to 5 are assigned to J. writers, and verses 15 and 16 to P. writers. Thus the formidable discrepancy is made to appear. J. speaks of seven pair of clean beasts, while P. only knows one pair of them all.

A poor uncritical creature might suggest that, even if we admit two different accounts, the one supplements, without necessarily contradicting the other. St. Matthew, for instance, mentions two Gadarene maniacs; St. Mark, only one. But both, in all reason, may be true. Besides, it seems strange that it is the secular or J. document, and not the priestly or P. document, that lays stress on clean beasts.

But now reading verses 8 and 9, we note that, though clearly a P. passage, it makes a distinction between clean and unclean beasts. So that P. as well as J. knew this distinction implying as it does a difference in the treatment of clean and unclean, and so the discrepancy would seem to disappear.

Not so, however. The critics with that superhuman prescience which is theirs alone, know and assert that verses 8 and 9 are the work of an "editor", a fictitious person conveniently called in to help, who inserted these verses for the purpose of harmonizing the P. and the J. documents!

On such principles, any document, ancient or modern, might be made composite and discrepant. To assume two sets of writers; to assign at will one part of a passage to the one, and another part to the other, so that the two shall disagree; to refer to an unknown editor any part that does not suit the scheme; to take such framed-up divergencies as proofs of double documents—all this is claimed to be much more reasonable than a common sense interpretation of the writing as it stands.

Another favorite example of our critics' work is given us in their analysis of Chapter 37, relating to the selling of Joseph by his brethren. This is regarded as an instance of disagreement of such importance that it is explained three times in our Commentary.

In this story two names, Ismaelites and Midianites, are given to the Nomads who bought Joseph; indeed, the two names are used together in one verse, the twenty-eighth. Immediately, the critics, with their mania for different documents, discover in the use of these two national names, a sure proof of two distinct writings. That fact being decided on, they proceed to make an analysis that shall fit.

This great find of the critics has not been overlooked by Bible students. It has been always thought sufficient to refer to Judges 8:24, where Ishmaelites are mentioned as part of the Midianite hordes. That these two Nomad people should be very much intermingled, is not at all remarkable. Even today, we may find British and English mentioned in the same context as referring to the same people. What a mare's nest the critics of 4929 may make of that fact! There is no good reason, therefore, why the narrative should not stand as it is. It should, indeed, be an axiom in the interpretation of ancient documents that any reasonable explanation of an apparent discrepancy is to be preferred to a radical dissection of the passage.

It is, moreover, very strange that these scholars should imagine that by making out of a plain and simple story, two, if not three, conflicting accounts, they are solving any problem. To destroy the historic verity of a passage, is no solution of its difficulties. As well might a surgical operation that kills the patient be taken as the cure of the malady.

The Judah story, they tell us, makes the brothers to sell Joseph to some Ismaelites, who take him down to Egypt and sell him not to Potiphar, but to an Egyptian (see, however, 39:1).

The Reuben story is that the men at Reuben's instance put Joseph into a dry pit, whence, without their knowledge, he is taken (kidnapped) by some Midianite merchantmen, by whom he is taken to Egypt and sold to Potiphar.

To get these stories out as separate and divergent, tricks are played with the text, even to the point of dividing v. 28 in half. For men who desire to destroy the reliability of Genesis, this is good work; but it certainly does seem a strange business for Christian men to be engaged in.

As showing the lengths to which writers in this Commentary allow themselves to go, we may well quote some of the dogmatic assertions made:

"The records of the prehistoric period are based largely upon Babylonian legends." "They express the current Hebrew ideas of the creation of man and of human origins."

(And so these records are no God-given revelation: just Hebrew and heathen legends!)

"The records of Genesis cannot claim to rank with Babylonian and Egyptian records, which are contemporary."

(Imagine that! God's Word less reliable than pagan myths!)

"The Hebrews, like the Babylonians, regarded the sky as a solid vault, confining the upper waters."

(Many Hebrews, like many Americans and English, have held all sorts of vain notions; but this "solid vault" slander has never been gotten out of this Sacred Record.)

"The origin of the Sabbath goes back probably to the early moon cultus of the Semities of Babbylon."

(Thus flouting Genesis 2:3.)

"This chapter (on the Fall) is undoubtedly based on Babylonian attempts to account for human mortality!"

(Undoubtedly is good!)

"It seems that the earliest form of Hebrew religion and worship of Jehovah was connected with the moon cult."

(God's solemn and repeated revelation of Himself made an outcome of moon cult! Profane speculation could scarcely go further.)

This Commentary on the Old Testament is full of such impious declarations. One's indignation waxes hot that such indel speculations, such setting of low, Babylonian myths above the oracles of God, should be thought appropriate in a Commentary for Christian readers. These crudely pagan statements so audaciously proclaimed as the results of unprejudiced criticism of the Sacred Volume, go beyond all questions of authorship. They impugn the Christian faith and the authority of our Lord—and will very much hearten and comfort the enemies of the Gospel.

THE CHURCH IN CUBA

By Frank Persons

THE Twenty-third Annual Convocation of the Church in Cuba assembled in Holy Trinity Cathedral, Habana, on the evening of June 14. Clergy and laity from five of the six provinces were present. There were absent and very much missed Archdeacons Lopez Guillen and McCarthy, both on leave in the States, and the Rev. Mr. Jauregui of Santiago. The Bishop, in his annual address, given at this service, gave a resume of the year's achievements, demonstrating that the Church is slowly but surely forging ahead and "rooting itself in the lives of the people" of Cuba.

The Bishop's Crusade was shown to be one of the important events of the year, helpful everywhere it was undertaken. Isolated missions received a new impetus; the rather remarkable success in Guantanamo was the result of careful preparation for and "follow-up" work after the Crusade. Three special tracts written by the Bishop were effectively used in the Crusade, indicating what could be accomplished if more good literature in Spanish existed for use in the Church Schools.

The Bishop spoke of the excellent work done in the Parochial Schools in various parts of the Island, whose object is not simply to make Episcopalians, but to inculcate a higher ideal of citizenship, both in Church and State. Would that these schools had more generous support! They make no small contribution to the life of the people. Despite terrible economic depression and the forced decrease in the teaching staff, these schools showed this year an increase, both in pupils and in fees. This in itself is sufficient evidence of the approbation of the Cuban people.

The business sessions of Convocation were held in the Cathedral School in Vedado, a beautiful building which commands a fine view of the sea. Unfortunately, the Church does not own it. Many of the clergy were entertained at the School. Few of our Northern friends realize the tremendous distances and difficulties of travel which make these occasional opportunities of getting together such delightful events for the clergy. One country parson traveled several miles over bottomless roads behind a pair of mules, then had a trip of sixteen hours by train before he reached Habana; and his station is quite a distance from the end of the Island.

The Rev. Emilio Planas was felicitated upon the completion of twenty-five years of service in the ministry of the Church.

The routine business of Convocation precipitated many interesting discussions, all tending to recall the clergy from entanglement in parish routine to their real task of leading people to Christ and throwing the light of the Cross upon their problems: individual, social, economic.

The Bishop recommended that the parishes be assessed one thousand dollars more than the present quota, the ultimate ideal of self-support being constantly kept before clergy and people.

The present economic depression was shown to be causing much actual suffering throughout the Island, among both foreigners and Cubans. Convocation, realizing that the proposed increase in the sugar tariff would bring financial disaster to the Island, tend to break down the harmonious relations now prevailing between the people of Cuba and the United States and seriously handicap the work of the Church in Cuba, sent a unanimous protest to the government of the United States. In taking such action the Church is not invading the political field. She would rather be false to her high calling did she not seek to protect her people and her work from threatened disaster.

On Sunday morning the Cathedral was the scene of the ordination to the diaconate of Mr. Jorge H. Piloto. A goodly congregation and all of the visiting clergy took part in the service, which was particularly interesting to the visitor in that it was conducted in both languages. The Rev. Jose G. Pena presented the candidate and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Ramon C. Moreno. His oratorical ability and practical presentation, his grasp of his subject and beauty of diction, impressed all present with the excellent quality of our Cuban clergy.

Archdeacon Thornton preached an inspiring sermon at the Evening Service at Calvary Mission, Jesus del Monte, where Canon Barrios is doing a fine work. This work is carried on in an interesting old building, which originally housed the Seminary founded by Bishop Knight, and which Seminary gave to the Church some very able men.

The clergy remained for an extra day, which was spent in informal discussion with the Bishop of various problems. Harmony prevailed throughout, the only contest of the whole Convocation being over the subject of parish quotas.

In material growth the Church has made distinct advance, despite heavy financial handicaps. The purchase and improvement of the building for St. Cyprian's School in Guantanamo and the new home for the teacher insure the permanence of the work in that section of the city. A lot purchased on the beautiful Ivenido de los Martires in Camaguey for the long-needed Church there calls attention to the necessity for adequate representation for the Church in that large city. In Santiago the Rev. Juan B. Mancebo has begun the erection of a building for San Pedro Mission. The Cathedral Chapter has secured a new deanery in Habana. This charming old building, typically Cuban and ideally adapted to its present use, has attached to it sufficient ground for future needs. The small price paid for such a building in the best residential section of the city is a monument to the financial acumen of the Cathedral Chapter. This time of depression might well be seized by the Church for the acquirement of many advantageously located properties for School and Church use. It is a pity, with the crying need everywhere in the Island for land and buildings, without which the Work of the Church in Cuba cannot possibly expand or even meet present urgent needs, that adequate financial support cannot be had. Other Christian bodies are rapidly taking advantages of such opportunities. Are we lacking in business vision and foresight? The efficient ministry to visiting people from the States, in the Cathedral in Habana and in other parts of the Island, merits some such substantial expression of gratitude.

The Church in Cuba is wide-awake to her opportunities. She is slowly but surely growing in numbers and is assuming a place of leadership among the people. This is a tribute to the practical vision and statesmanship of her Bishop and the faithful work of her clergy and people. But this Work cannot expand normally or even maintain its present position without proper support. "Come over and help us."

MEMORIAL RITES HELD FOR PATRIOT

Berryville, Va., September 14.—The Masonic Lodge of Virginia unveiled a monument with befitting ceremonies in the old Chapel Cemetery yesterday afternoon in memory of Edmund Randolph, a past grand master of the lodge of Virginia, and a man prominent in both State and national affairs during the early days of America's independence.

The ceremonies were presided over by Most Worshipful John T. Cochran, master of the State Lodge, of The Plains, Va. The invocation was given by the Rev. Thomas W. Hooper, D. D., grand chaplain, and was followed by an address by Charles H. Callahan, of Alexandria, past grand master of Virginia.

Governor Byrd was expected to be one of the principal speakers for the occasion, but wired that he was unavoidably detained and would be unable to be present.

Relative Unveils Memorial.

The memorial was unveiled by Master Edmund Randolph Williams, of Richmond, son of Dr. Ennion G. Williams, of the State Board of Health, whose mother is a great granddaughter of Edmund Randolph.

Following the unveiling an address was made by Arthur R. Robertson, United States Senator from Indiana, who is a member of the Capital City Lodge, No. 313, Indianapolis, Ind.

Wreaths were placed on the grave on behalf of the Colonial Dames of America by Mrs. Granville G. Valentine and by Miss Rose McDonald on behalf of the Fort Loudoun Chapter of the Daughters of American Revolution.

The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. F. T. McFaden, deputy grand master of Winchester, Va. A large number of people and members of various lodges throughout this and nearby States were in attendance.

Among the lodges represented were those of Culpeper, Warrenton, Winchester, Brandy, Norfolk, Mount Jackson, Richmond, Clarendon, Lynchburg, Alexandria, Strasburg, The Plains, Front Royal, Potomac, Marshall, Staunton, Upperville, Philomont, Manchester, Pulaski, Charlottesville, Roanoke, Edinburg and Blacksburg, Va., Charles Town and Shepherdstown, W. Va.; Columbus, Ohio; Mexico City, Mexico; Jacksonville, Fla.; Indianapolis, Ind., and Waynesboro.

Shipped From Vermont.

The granite memorial is the largest stone in the historic Old Chapel Cemetery, where rest many of the members of Virginia's most prominent families. The old marble stone that has marked Randolph's grave for over half a century has been embodded in the granite stone and covered with heavy beveled glass for preservation. The inscription on the face of the memorial is:

Edmund Randolph

Born Tazewell Hall, Williamsburg, Va., August 10, 1753.
Died Carter Hall, near Millwood, Va., Sept. 13, 1813.

A bronze tablet on the base of the monument is marked Erected by the Grand Lodge A. F. & A. M. of Virginia, Alexandria Washington Lodge, No. 22; Richmond Randolph Lodge, No. 19; Staunton Lodge, No. 13, and other Lodges, 1929.

Another bronze tablet placed on the grave in front of the memorial bears the following inscription:

Edmund Randolph

Aide de camp to Washington, 1775.
First Attorney General of Virginia, 1776.
Member Continental Congress, 1779.
Governor of Virginia, 1786.
Grand Master of Masons of Virginia, 1786.
Member Constitutional Convention, 1787.
First Attorney General United States, 1789.
Secretary of State, United States, 1794.

The proposal to honor the memory of Randolph was made several years ago by Dr. George Hardesty, of Berryville. Following this Richmond Randolph Lodge announced plans for the memorial and submitted them to the Grand Lodge, which appointed a committee, composed of the following, to take charge of the plans: John B. Walsh, Richmond, chairman; Charles H. Callahan, Alexandria; C. Vernon Eddy, Winchester; P. L. Reed, Richmond; Dr. George Hardesty and L. H. Morgan, Berryville.

Was Disinherited.

Edmund Randolph was a son of John Randolph and Ariana Jennings, of Williamsburg, Va. His father was King's attorney, under Governor Fauquier, a staunch loyalist, and disinherited his son because of disloyalty to the crown during the period of the Revolution. Randolph was then adopted by his uncle, Peyton Randolph, president of the First American Congress, whose estate he inherited. He studied law and became one of the foremost members of his profession in that day. In the trial of Aaron Burr for high treason he was the chief counsel for the defense and won his case. He also was counsel for Joist Hite, when the land case between Hite and Lord Fairfax, which had been in court for fifty years, finally was settled.

Randolph served as aide-de-camp to General Washington during the Revolution. In 1786, he succeeded Patrick Henry as Governor of Virginia, and four years later was appointed the first Attorney General of the United States. In 1794 he held the office of Secretary of State, vacated by Thomas Jefferson.

Edmund Randolph was the founder of Richmond Randolph Lodge of Masons and was also grand master of the Masonic Lodge of Virginia.—The Evening Star, Washington, D. C.

Book Reviews

THE PRESENT CHRISTIAN RELIGION: By W. T. Orchard, D. D. Cloth. Pp. 281. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York City. Price, $2.50.

THE PLACE OF JESUS CHRIST IN MODERN CHRISTIANITY: By John Baillie, D. Litt. Cloth. Pp. 219. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York City. Price, $2.00.

WHAT DO WE MEAN BY GOD? By Cyril H. Valentine, Ph. D. Cloth. Pp. 248. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City. Price, $2.00.

With the same aim and dominated by the same spirit, these writers seek to recapture the escaping souls who habitually find themselves in the mire of an unsatisfying philosophy of life. And the atmosphere is rank with such speculations as these books disclose. Those who have parted from "the faith once for all delivered to the saints", need just such stimulus as these artfully presented concepts offer. Men must think hard when they depart from the paths of truth in which fixed convictions become the habit of daily contemplation of the life "hid with Christ in God". Indeed, perhaps, it is because they have surrendered that exalted privilege, that they have to think themselves into something that will be in some measure a compensation for that which has been forsaken.

Dr. Baillie believes that "the new knowledge" must liberate men from the bondage of traditionalism; even though some of its conclusions are still doubtful. And yet, he cannot, as with Miss Kirtland in her "The Great Conjecture", erase from the page of history and the tablets of imperishable souls, what she calls the "inescapable Galilean". And this Person he reverently mentions as "our Lord". Now, we may stand with the Apostle, who declared that "No man calleth Jesus Lord but by the Holy Ghost". And so we accord to Dr. Baillie a kindly sympathy as he seeks to clarify the sky of darkening modern thinking.

We are charmed to have a contribution from Dr. Orchard. And one is amazed that amidst the multitudinous and complex demands made upon his time and vital forces, a volume so replete with deep study and painstaking research could possibly be even edited by him. He is sure there is a solution of the "present unrest". And fearlessly regards and treats the causes and operations of the trend which is carrying men away from the "old paths". With a heart big with compassion, for he is a lover of souls, he stands sympathetically with the doubter, to be nearer to his heart and the more clearly realize the problems with which he is beset. The longing to spend an hour over a consideration of this signal message is irresistible. But reviews must be brief. Dr. Orchard in substance believes that men will be brought back by the path of the hidden mystical which lies imbedded in every living soul. For we must agree that after all, thinking is but a fringe of the religious experience. It is feeling that dominates. And men in the main feel deeply and think shallowly. Herein lies the great question. And Dr. Orchard helps us see it.

Dr. Valentine goes to the root of the religious unrest by an appeal to the recognition of God as a Person; and that Christianity is a personal response to that fact. There is no other way to understand Jesus as the Founder of Christianity, save as the revealer of God to the spiritual consciousness of men. His chapter on "Divine Grace" is an appealing presentation of God as defined in the New Testament and confirmed by pure thought and personal experience.

One's library will be greatly enriched by these learned and winsome appeals. The man who is entrenched in the faith of his fathers, who finds God in the Bible to be the source of all supply and quite free of all need for explanation, will not need these spurs to thinking. And yet, the man next door may demand from the simple believer the kindly maturity of thought which these volumes extract. We may utilize their processes of reasoning, though we may not accept all they present. For as we have before said in this column, we should exercise a charitable and consistent appreciation of the other man's viewpoint. Drs. Baillie and Valentine have supplied a helpful index, which enables the reader to find essential points of contact. Dr. Orchard's contribution being more discoursive does not require this provision.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

"MADNESS OF WAR."

Mr. Editor:

I want to thank you and your correspondent for the article that appeared in the Southern Churchman of May 11, 1929, entitled, "Madness of War". It gave me a great deal of pleasure to read it and know there are still Virginia women who feel and write in that way.

It is history, and I want to preserve it! (So pardon me if I cut it out of my paper and paste in my copy of Mary Standard's book, "Virginia in the First Century".)

Perhaps I am wrong, but I think she makes a mistake in speaking of the war of Sixty-One as the "Civil War"—it was indeed a most uncivil war! I think Southerners and all daughters of the U. D. C. ought to follow the lead of Jefferson Davis, and speak of it always as "The War Between the States." If it was a "Civil War", then we were "Rebels"—which M. D. C. clearly proves we were not, but fighting for our constitutional rights. Your correspondent has shown a great deal of research in proving her case, and I thank her for introducing me to such writers as General Morris Schaff of Boston, and Dr. Littlefield of New England. It gives me a thrill to read his words: "The South though defeated really saved to America and we now see to the world all that was best in American nationality—the Constitution of the Confederacy furnishes ample proof of that. Lee's shrine at Lexington, not Lincoln's tomb, will become the shrine of American patriotism when once history is told correctly."

Thanking you in advance for publishing this letter—indeed, I am always thanking you for something whenever I open my paper.

Mrs. J. B. L.—"A Virginian of the Valley."

Charles Town, W. Va.

SPLENDID.

Mr. Editor:

I am sending my subscription for your splendid Magazine. I really enjoy reading it, and fully endorse all you say on many subjects. Thank you so much for your splendid editorials. I have been a subscriber for the last three years, as I remember, and I have been helped in many ways. Thanking you so much.

Columbia, Tenn. Subscriber.

CORRECTION.

Mr. Editor:

Will you kindly correct an important misprint in the last paragraph of my paper on "The Marriage Canon" (September 14)? "Eastern" Church should read "Western". Mention might also be called to the name, "Finton", which should read "Vinton" (fourth paragraph).

Summit, N. J. Walker Gwynne.

Church Intelligence

Annual Conference of the Archdeaconry Of the Blue Ridge.

Conferences are generally interesting only to those who attend them. But the selection of the Blue Ridge Mountains as a vacation spot by President Hoover has focussed the attention of the nation on that region. Churchmen will be interested to know of the work the Church is doing in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

The Annual Conference of the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, held at Neve Hall, Charlottesville, Virginia, September 9 to 11, revealed this work to be one of the most important mission fields in the church. The territory covered is over ten thousand square miles. The work is seven counties, with over forty workers, and, when completely manned, with twelve clergymen. There are more than eleven hundred communicants, twelve day schools, and a preventorium for rebuilding undernourished tubercular children. This vast diocese within the Diocese of Virginia is a frontier territory, though only a hundred miles away from the National Capital at Washington, in many cases.

The conference opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion at which the Ven. W. R. Mason, Associate Archdeacon, was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. D. Whittle, of Covington, Virginia. The sessions opened with addresses of welcome by the Ven. F. W. Neve, Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, and the Rev. Noble Powell, of Charlottesville. The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia, made an address, stressing the necessity for great faith and enduring patience in missionary endeavor. Mrs. James A. Hill, of Orange, District Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, pointed out the great work of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Parish.

The various phases of the work were discussed, including the Blue Ridge Industrial School, a fully accredited High School, and "Our Mountain Work", a monthly paper published by the Archdeaconry.

The Bishop of Virginia celebrated the Holy Communion to open the second day of the conference, assisted by the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, of Luray, Virginia. An address in preventive medicine and its relation to missionary endeavor was given by Dr. Ennion G. Williams, head of the Virginia State Board of Health. Dr. George Young, of Albemarle County, Virginia, gave an address on the work of the County Health Department. The relation of the social worker in the city to the rural missionary was discussed by the Rev. Cary Montague, City Missionary of Richmond.

The conference deplored the exaggerated and oftentimes false publicity given to the people of the Blue Ridge by newspaper reporters attached to President Hoover's Camp.

The fine spirit of optimism and consecration of the workers bids well for the future of the Church's work in an area which will be increasingly important to the nation.

F. J. W.

St. Luke's International Hospital.

The half-way mark of the construction fund for St. Luke's International Medical Center was passed on June 26, when a gift of $350,000 from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was received—just on the eve of Dr. Teusler's sailing for Japan. Other generous gifts, including one of $25,000 from Mr. William G. Mather, of Cleveland, brought the total, as of July 1, to $1,404,000.

In Tokyo, Dr. Teusler will resume active direction of St. Luke's and will also be in consultation with the architects regarding details of constructing the new buildings. Foundations have been laid for the central unit and steel work is progressing rapidly. Mr. Rockefeller's gift, while unrestricted, makes it possible to begin construction of the wing of the College of Nursing, which, according to Dr. Teusler, is the most pressing need before the Hospital. The upper stories of the central unit and the wing for the Out-patient Department cannot be erected until the remainder of the fund is subscribed.

Meanwhile, in America, arrangements are being made to continue the effort to complete the building fund of $2,656,500. About $1,250,000 is still needed. Dr. Mabel E. Elliott will remain in the United States to speak on behalf of St. Luke's and it is probable that Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider will come from Tokyo to participate in the undertaking. Mr. Paul Rusch will also be available to cooperate.

A Good-Will Tour Through the Mid-Northwest.

Starting October 12, the Rev. H. W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work on the National Council, will make a "Good-Will Tour" through parts of the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Provinces. Mr. Foreman expects to return to New York around Thanksgiving Day.

Purposes of the Trip: Where Mr. Foreman's itinerary does not permit of deep study of country life and work in any one diocese, he believes six weeks will give him much information concerning the Church's work in the almost limitless areas of the West. This should be especially true of the Province of the Mid-West, which will occupy most of the time allotted to the tour.

Trips similar to the one proposed give tangible proof that the Secretary for Rural Work is as vitally and personally interested in the bishops and clergy who are at work in far-away fields as in those who are near "the home base". Whenever possible, Mr. Foreman's visit to a diocese or district consists of a visit to some rural field and such conferences, both individual and group, with bishops, departments, organizations, clergy and laymen as local conditions will permit.

Tentative Itinerary of Mid-West Tour:

October 15-22—Visit to Diocese of Iowa, including meeting of town and country committee of the Home Mission Council.

October 17-18 — American Country Life Association meeting.

October 19-20—Visit to rural field.

October 21—En route to Ottumwa.

October 22-23—Synod of Sixth Province, Ottumwa.

October 24—En route.

October 25-27—Diocese of Quincy.

October 28—En route.

October 29-31—Diocese of Springfield.

November 1—En route.

November 1-3—Diocese of West Missouri.

November 4—En route.

November 5-7—Synod of Seventh Province, Topeka.

November 7-8—En route.

November 8-10—District of Western Nebraska.

November 11—En route.

November 12-14—District of Wyoming.

November 15—En route.

November 16-19—Diocese of Montana.

November 20—En route.

November 21-24—District of South Dakota.

Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania to be Consecrated.

The election of the Rev. Francis Marion Taitt, S. T. D., as Bishop Coadjutor by the Special Diocesan Convention last June and his acceptance of the call to larger spiritual leadership, advances to the episcopate one whose entire ministry of more than forty-six years has been in the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

Of him it may be truly said he knows the diocese and its people. In preparing to meet the challenging opportunities and responsibilities of the years which, please God, lie ahead of him, the same love and loyalty he has inspired in the hearts of all our clergy and Laity during his more than four decades of consecrated service and undiminishing devotion to the advancement of Christ's Kingdom among men, will continue to go with him in all of his efforts to lead the Church to greater achievement in the Master's cause.

The Presiding Bishop having appointed Friday, October 4, for the consecration of the Bishop Coadjutor-elect, the several special committees of the diocese have proceeded with the necessary arrangements, and the various details have been virtually completed.

The consecration will take place in the Memorial Church of The Advocate, Eighteenth and Diamond Streets, Philadelphia, at 10:30 A. M., and will be followed by a luncheon and reception in the Bellevue-Stratford at 1 P. M.

In order to provide maximum accommodations for the service, the seating capacity of the Advocate will be increased to take care of approximately 1,600 people. All seats will be reserved until 10:30 A. M. Invited guests include all the Bishops of the church and their wives; the clergy of the diocese and their wives; the lay deputies to the convention; and ministers representing other communions in the diocese.

The Presiding Bishop of the Church, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, will be the consecrator, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of Pennsylvania, and the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York, will be the co-consecrators.

The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Davies, Bishop of Western Massachusetts, will be the presenters; and the attending presbyters will be the Rev. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, and the Rev. Martin Aigner, rector of St. John's Church, Franklin, Pa., brother-in-law of the Bishop Coadjutor-elect.

The preacher will be the Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, Bishop of the Diocese of Newark.

The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, former Bishop of Pennsylvania, has been appointed to read the Gospel; the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, to read the Epistle and the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of the Diocese of Easton, to read the Litany.

The Choir of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, will lead the processional, which will assemble in the quadrangle north of the church and proceed east to Eighteenth Street and west on the north side of Diamond Street, entering the church by the west door.

The order of the procession will be as follows:

Choir of St. Peter's Church.
Assistant Master of Ceremonies.
Students of the Philadelphia Divinity School.
Representatives of other Communions.
Visiting Clergy.
Clergy of the Diocese.
The Master of Ceremonies.
Officials of the Diocese.
Standing Committees of the Diocese.
The Bishop Coadjutor-elect and Attending Presbyters.
The Bishops of the Church.
Officiating Bishops.

It is expected that upwards of one hundred and twenty-five Bishops will be present at the consecration, based on their being together at the meeting in Atlantic City the day before, thus making it possible for virtually all of those attending that session remaining over for the consecration.

The service will begin with the Holy Communion through to the conclusion of the sermon, when the Bishop Coadjutor-elect will be brought to the Choir Gate by the attending presbyters and will be presented by the presenting bishops. Then will follow the reading of the Testimonials by those appointed so to do. This will be followed by the Bishop Coadjutor-elect's Promise of Conformity, after which the Litany will be said.

Examination by the Presiding Bishop and the co-consecrators will come next; following which, the Bishop Coadjutor-elect will be escorted to the Sacristy, where he will be robed in the rest of the Episcopal habit. Upon his return all will kneel and sing the "Veni Creator". This will be followed by the Prayers and the Consecration, after which will come the offertory, and the remainder of the service of Holy Communion.

Approximately six hundred people will be present at the luncheon in the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford at one o'clock. Bishop Garland will preside. There will be brief addresses by the Presiding Bishop, General William G. Price, Jr., former U. S. Senator George Wharton Pepper and the Mayor of the city. There are also several presentations to be made to the Bishop Coadjutor, after which he will make an address and give the benediction. Following the luncheon there will be a reception in the room adjoining the ball-room.

On Sunday, October 6, Dr. Taitt will give his entire day to the congregation he served for more than thirty-six years at St. Paul's, Chester. The Church Club of the Diocese will give a reception to Dr. Taitt shortly after his consecration on a date to be determined and to which invitations will be issued.—Church News.

Meeting of House of Bishops.

The House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church will meet in special session during the first week of October in Atlantic City, N. J. Among the matters of business coming before the House will be the election of new missionary bishops for the State of Wyoming and for the Territory of Hawaii.

H. N. H.

Presiding Bishop Asks Prayers for National Council, October 8-10, 1929.

The first meeting this fall of the National Council and its Departments will be held at the Church Missions House, New York, October 8, 9 and 10.

I would be grateful if the clergy and people of our church would remember us in their prayers that the members of the Council and its Departments may be guided to deal wisely in the important matters committed to them by the Church.

John Gardner Murray,
Presiding Bishop and President of the National Council.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Memorial to Dr. Lacy.

Howardsville, September 21.—As a tribute to the memory of the Rev. Thos. Hugo Lacy, D. D., for thirty years rector of Tillotson Parish, the membership of Emmanuel Church, Glenmore, dedicated a bronze tablet Sunday, September 15.

The services were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Beverly D. Tucker, Bishop of the Southern Diocese of Virginia. The ceremonies were simple. Bishop Tucker gave a short sketch of Dr. Lacy's labors in the church from the time of his graduation at the seminary up to his death, closing with a benediction.

The tablet, which was placed on the left wall of the church beside the chancel, bears the following inscription:

"In Memoriam, the Rev. Thomas Hugo Lacy, D. D., 1848-1928. For thirty years rector of Tillotson Parish, Buckingham County, Virginia. He exemplified—forgetful of self—the Christian virtues, patience, humility devotion, charity. 'Blessed are the Dead who die in the Lord.' "

Dr. Lacy was widely known and beloved throughout his parish, and these services in his honor were attended by residents of Buckingham County from every section and irrespective of denomination and religious affiliation.

Mrs. J. K. I.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Interesting Clergy Conference in Roanoke.

On the call of Bishop Jett, the clergy of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia met for an informal conference in Roanoke, September 16-18. In addition to the Bishop, thirty-three clergymen attended, these being all of the clergy in the diocese except four. Of those absent one is a professor at the Virginia Seminary, one on the retired list, and two were unable to be present on account of illness.

Monday evening the Bishop and Mrs. Jett entertained the visitors at supper. Bishop Jett presided at the conference and celebrated Holy Communion on Tuesday morning in St. John's Church. The sessions of the conference were held in the parish house of St. John's.

Among the subjects discussed were: "The Department of Religious Education and the Summer Conference," by the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley; "Young People's Work," by the Rev. Richard H. Baker; "The Virginia Council of Religious Education and Its Relation to the Various Communions," by the Rev. Minor C. Miller, of Bridgewater, Virginia, General Secretary of that organization; "The Place and Value of Convocation in the Life of the Diocese," by the Rev. Dr. W. G. Pendleton; "The Church and Its Social Service Problem in the Light of the Present Industrial Development of Virginia," by the Rev. John J. Gravatt; "Parochial Evangelism," by the Rev. Roland Moncure; "Spiritual Healing," by the Rev. Dennis Whittle; "The Plans of the Diocesan Field Department in the Coming Every Member Canvass and The Financial Needs for 1930," by Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Chairman of the Field Department; "The Colored Work in the Diocese and the Reorganization of the Work at Roanoke," by the Rev. Charles L. Somers.

Miss Esther G. Fifield, one of the field secretaries of the Girls' Friendly Society, with headquarters in New York, described the various functions of her organization and its value in the life of the young girls of the Church. Several of the clergymen requested Miss Fifield to come to their parishes and make surveys to determine the feasibility and method of establishing Girls' Friendly branches.

When the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was organized in 1920, two convocations were formed; the north and east part of the diocese being James River Convocation, and the south and west portion being New River Convocation. For some years a good deal of interest was manifested in the annual meetings of the two convocations but for various reasons this interest declined and the convocations gradually became dormant. As a result of the address of Dr. Pendleton, referred to above, and the discussions which followed, it was decided to revive the two convocations, and officers were elected as follows: James River Convocation, the Rev. C. F. Magee, of Clifton Forge, Dean; the Rev. Dr. Thos. D. Lewis, of Amherst, Secretary-Treasurer. New River Convocation, the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, of Wytheville, Dean; the Rev. John S. Wellford, of Abingdon, Secretary; the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, of Bristol, Treasurer.

The conference enthusiastically endorsed the action of the Bishop in purchasing the Detention Home in Wise County for the establishment of a diocesan school, and heard with the greatest interest the Bishop's discussion of plans and ideals for the institution.

At this conference two new clergymen were welcomed to the diocese: the Rev. Richard S. Martin, who took up the work at Blacksburg in the middle of August, and the Rev. Vincent C. Franks, who, in the midst of his moving from Berryville to Lexington, took time to attend the sessions of the conference on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Meeting of the Executive Board.

The Executive Board of the Diocese held its monthly meeting in the parish house of St. John's Church, Roanoke, on the afternoon of Wednesday, September 18. The most important action at this meeting was the adoption of the diocesan budget for the year 1930, amounting to $62,397, which includes the General Church quota of $17,100. This is the budget that will be laid before the parishes in the diocese, and it is confidently expected that the full amount will be subscribed. The plans of the Field Department and the Publicity Department for the preparation and conduct of the Every Member Canvass were described by Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Chairman of the Field Department. Speakers, clerical and lay, will present the needs of the diocese and General Church in person to vestries at thirty-two churches in the diocese, and it will mean that in each case vestries of smaller, nearby churches will attend these local conferences. In addition to this the missionary work and needs of the Church will be forcibly brought to the attention of all the people by means of three miniature editions, and one special standard edition of the Southwestern Episcopalian, which will be mailed to all families and detached individuals in the diocese.

The Bishop added the Rev. Roland Moncure to the list of regular members of the Department of Religious Education and, upon nomination by the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Chairman of the Department, and approval by the Bishop, the Board elected the Rev. Dr. W. G. Pendleton of Lynchburg, the Rev. Richard S. Martin and Mrs. Martin of Blacksburg, and Mrs. Thos. D. Lewis of Amherst as additional associate members of the same department.

Before the adjournment of the meeting prayers were offered for the Rev. Frank Mezick, who is ill at his home at Arrington, Va.; the Rev. W. A. Pearman, of Bedford, and Prof. O. C. Burkhart, a member of the vestry of Christ Church, Blacksburg, the latter two being patients in the Jefferson Hospital at Roanoke, and Mr. Robert L. Peirce, who is at present recovering from a severe illness at his home in Wytheville.

T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

The Jewell Pilgrimage.

The annual fall pilgrimage of the Laymen's Service Association will be made this year to historic Trinity Church, Hughesville, Charles County, Maryland, on September 22, and will be called the Jewell Pilgrimage, in memory of the late Commander C. T. Jewell, former President and active member of the Laymen's Service Association. Commander Jewell gave so unsparingly of his time, means and effort to the lay work of the diocese, that the Association is glad of this opportunity to honor him and their undertaking, in which he would have had an active part, if he were here. The pilgrimage will consist of an all-day service and a series of religious conferences. Luncheon will be served on the grounds or in the parish hall of the church. It is expected that five hundred laymen from Washington and the combined congregations of Trinity Parish will participate.

The Cathedral Schools.

The two Cathedral Schools, one for boys and one for girls, both of which are integral parts of the Washington Cathedral Foundation, will open this fall with changes of more or less outstanding nature.

The National Cathedral School for Girls will have for its headmistress Miss Mabel B. Turner, who assumes this position with the opening of the School October 2.

St. Alban's School for Boys will enter its new school year with a new headmaster and the use of a beautiful new lower school building, which has been recently completed at a cost of $164,000. The new headmaster, the Rev. Albert H. Lucas, will succeed William H. Church, who, after fourteen years of service, resigned the position last spring.

Mr. Lucas was former assistant headmaster at the Episcopal Academy in Overbrook, Philadelphia, and also saw active service in the World War, before he took holy orders.

The College of Preachers' Buildings, Washington Cathedral, have been practically completed, and will be dedicated some time in November.

Dr. Hubert Scott Smith, rector of St. Margaret's Church, is expected to return to his parish about October 1. His vacation, spent in Europe, has included a tour of Normandy, a visit of some length in Paris, and a trip through the Cathedral towns of England.

M. M. W.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan

The Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington.

After serving the Church of the Holy Comforter as locum tenens for seven months, the Rev. Wm. A. Pearman, formerly rector of St. John's, Bedford, Va., has left North Carolina and gone to Bedford to visit his son and to enjoy a well-earned vacation. He and his family won the love and high esteem of the entire parish and community. The vestry extended them officially a vote of sincere thanks for their splendid work, in the absence of the rector, the Rev. Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

Miss Caroline Holmes, a daughter of the Rev. Wilmot S. Holmes, of Lexington, N. C., has accepted a position here as parish worker and instructor in the kindergarten, which has recently been reopened with about forty little boys and girls in attendance, representing practically every denomination in the city.

T. F. Opie.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

Wedding.

A wedding of much interest to Churchmen of the Lehigh Valley took place in Grace Church, Allentown, Wednesday, September 5, 1929, when Miss Ramola Rudolph, daughter of Mrs. Marguerite Rudolph, of Allentown, was married to the Rev. Gordon T. Jones, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, East Mauch Chunk.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. James Thomas, rector of St. Luke's Church, Germantown. The men were classmates. The couple was attended by the Rev. and Mrs. Frederic W. Trumbore, of Troy, Pa., who were also recently married in the same place. The ushers were the Rev. Messrs. George L. Grams, rector of St. Luke's Church, Ellwood City, Pa., and J. Herstin Travis, of Cranston, N. J.

Improvements.

Extensive improvements are being made to St. James' Church, Jermyn this summer. Two rooms for Church School purposes have been built, a new vestibule and tower added and the whole building put in good repair and then stuccoed, the Rev. A. K. Fenton is the rector.

To St. Paul's Church, Peekville, was added a vestibule, new electric fixtures and a new carpet. Mr. Fenton is also in charge of St. Paul's.

Memorial Issue.

The September issue of the Bethlehem Churchman was made a Memorial Number for the late much-beloved Editor, the Rev. S. Ezra Neikirk, who was the editor from 1920 to 1929, and made the paper a real diocesan institution, which went into every family.

H. P. W.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop.

Diocesan Headquarters.

The Offices of the Diocese of Chicago are now located at 664 Rush Street, Chicago. Office hours: 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Saturdays: 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. The Telephone Number for all Departments is Superior 6410. The Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop; the Rt. Rev. S. M. Griswold, D. D., Bishop Suffragan; the Rev. E. J. Randall, S. T. D., Executive Secretary; Miss Vera L. Noyes, Supervisor Religious Education; "The Diocese of Chicago"; Mr. Joseph E. Boyle, Editor and Director of the News Bureau; The Church Club of Chicago; The Church Mission of Help; Miss Elise K. Walther, Executive Secretary; The Woman's Auxiliary Supply Department; The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

WEST MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. S. C. Partridge, D. D., Bishop.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Council of the Diocese of West Missouri, financial budgets for the year 1930 were adopted. The administrative budget calls for the raising of $15,800, and the missionary and education budget calls for $29,500. The field campaign for the meeting of these budgets will be inaugurated in the Episcopal churches the first of November and the Every Member Canvass will take place between December 1 and 15.

The Property Department of the Diocese of West Missouri is undertaking the repair and re-decoration of St. Paul's Church, Clinton. It is expected that services will be resumed in Clinton during the fall season.

H. N. H.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

St. Luke's, Ferndale.

A beautiful new church building for the Mission of St. Luke's, Ferndale, was formally opened and dedicated Sunday afternoon, September 15, by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D.

The building is of Norman style of architecture, and was designed by Muehlmann and Farrar, architects, of Detroit. Organized about nine years ago, St. Luke's has grown so rapidly in the last two or three years through the Church School that the expansion

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

SEPTEMBER.

1. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
8. Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.
15. Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
18, 20, 21. Ember Days.
21. S. Matthew.
22 Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
29. S. Michael and All Angels. Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
30. Monday.

COLLECT FOR SEVENTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

COLLECT FOR EIGHTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Lord, we beseech Thee, grant Thy people grace to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil; and with pure hearts and minds to follow Thee, the only God, through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

SAINT MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS.

O everlasting God, Who hast ordained and constituted the services of Angels and men in a wonderful order; Mercifully grant that, as Thy Holy Angels always do Thee service in heaven, so, by Thy appointment, they may succour and defend us on earth; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

The Morning Breaks.

Beyond the war-clouds and the reddened ways,
I see the Promise of the Coming Days!
I see His Sun arise, new charged with grace,
Earth's tears to dry and all her woes efface!
Christ lives! Christ loves! Christ rules!
No more shall Might,
Though leagued with all the Forces of the Night,
Ride over Right. No more shall Wrong
The world's gross agonies prolong.
Who waits His Time shall surely see
The triumph of His Constancy—
When without let, or bar, or stay,
The coming of His Perfect Day
Shall sweep the Powers of Night away—
And Faith, replumed for nobler flight,
And Hope, aglow with radiance bright
And Love, in loveliness bedight,
Shall greet the morning light!
—John Oxenham, in "All's Well!"

For The Southern Churchman.

Success and Religion.

Louis Deschamps.

There is a conception of success that winks at religious ideals. In grim business competition religion may seem superfluous if not burdensome. The golden rule requires the acceptance of both parties and often neither is willing to risk the first step lest his good faith deliver him into the hands of an enemy. Old wounds of betrayed confidence throb with pangs of suspicion. Idealism seems childish when contrasted with the cunning schemes of business self-seeking. Even a "righteous" hatred may seem more effectual than a motive of goodwill.

Many a young man has emerged from the hard-fought battle of character development and religious conviction only to find himself confronted with a conception of success that seems to demand the denial of treasured ideals. Some veteran of business battles may compare him to a lamb led to the slaughter, a "sucker" to be deceived by competitors, a college trained man too honorable to compete or too idealistic to detect the malicious selfishness of business success. Success is the goal of youth's self-esteem. It is essential to effect legitimate ambitions and wholesome aspirations. There is no test more severely and unsympathetically applied than that of a critical public to a young man or woman beginning the struggle for success. It often seems that the victory goes to those not quite so scrupulous or conscientious as the so-called "Sunday-school" youth. The result is often a violent reaction.

Sometimes religion then seems illusionary. Its ideals of faith and morals seem to expose the heart for ridicule. Its precepts may suggest the throwing of pearls to swine. Often the age-old instinct of self-defense surges through young blood, substituting battle for prayer. Even the spiritual experiences of personal piety may be questioned when wondering whether religion has anything to do with the problems of meeting the trickery of competitors, problems that require more and more of the time once spent in high thinking. Commonplace business associates may become lynx-eyed denizens of the commercial jungle, demanding the traits of savagery in self protection.

To teach humility and resignation under the circumstances of such an experience would be fatal. But religion is too resourceful for the devil's bag of tricks. There is the virtue of pride, as well as the sin of false pride; and also the virtue of battle as well as the sin of personal hatred. Success does not require a surrender of faith and idealism. Religion is not a hindrance, but the greatest inspiration to struggle. It does not mean that one should stand by humbly when imposed upon. But it does mean to resist the temptation to use the same unprincipled methods in depending manfully upon higher standards of conduct. Idealism must have the respect due a cause worthy of the devotion and defense of true manhood. The suggestion of failure must be met by the pride of an honorable ideal, and the suggestion of fear must be met with the courageous zeal of one who strives to overcome the wrong without hatred for the wrong-doer.

It is largely a matter of patience until the virtues that religion teaches prove their excellence. The greatest danger is within the individual. If the struggle for success is allowed to blight the conception of personal piety, success is too dearly bought. There must be retained the quiet hour when spiritual thoughts may replace the smoke of honest battle, and the finer experiences of the soul bring peace and rest. However necessary the zeal to struggle to the end that religious principles may prevail, pride should not result in self-satisfied attitudes. The chastening influence of frequent reflection upon inevitable death should not be lost. Although the championship of ideals fire the soul with defensive struggle, yet it is equally important to be aware of the sacred Presence when a beautiful sunset suggests the Eternal City or a sacrifice of love suggests the words: "Whosoever would find his life must lose it."

For The Southern Churchman.

OUR NEEDS.

F. B. Stone.

Our souls need the faith of Jesus;
'Tis waiting for you and for me;
To share in the faith that moves mountains
And bids them be cast in the sea.

Our souls need the strength of Jesus;
Our strength's a delusion and snare,
His strength is made perfect in weakness,
And comes when our lack is laid bare.

Our souls need the life of Jesus;
Within us He promised to live,
As unto Him we yield our being,
More abounding life He will give.

Our souls need the joy of Jesus,
That springs from our union with Him,
And grows with the sense of His presence,
Till no man its gladness can dim.

Lay Evangelism.

A correspondent asks if there is a place within the Church, for the labors of a layman who has had both a business and a college education and who at one time intended to offer himself for ordination, but from resentment at the discipline he received for some misdemeanor at the very end of his college course, abandoned the hopes in which his life had centred. Since this layman has had considerable practical experience in all branches of parochial activity including the taking of Church Services and preaching, since his work has always proved acceptable wherever he has served and since the longing that has persisted in his heart all these years to lead in the public worship of God and to bring men under the influence of the Lord Jesus Christ, can only be interpreted as a clear call from God, it would be an extraordinary thing if the Bishop of the diocese in which he is now living cannot find a way in which he can meet the requirements for ordination, and even at this late day enter upon the full time service of the Saviour whom he loves. Surely, it is only necessary for him to lay all the facts confidentially and clearly before his Bishop. But this letter to the Churchman raises a broader question. Are there not hundreds of Church people, men and women, who have given their allegiance to God who long as passionately as this particular layman longs to undertake definite work for God, and the extension of His Kingdom? Obviously the time which they can give is limited, but they do want to give some time. And the Church gives them little or no lead in the matter, and acts as though she is indifferent whether men and women whose hearts are ablaze with love for God are encouraged to attempt to win other men and women to the worship of Christ and to the fellowship of the Church.

For years electric energy was wasted because men did not know how to harness the water falls for the service of humanity. For years Christian man power and man energy have been wasted because the Church has not harnessed them for the services of God. The gifts possessed by church people which they have been willing that the Church should use have not been used, and the Church has been poorer in consequence and work which she could have accomplished has remained undone.

If, as St. Paul tells us, there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, shall not the Church use the gifts of one who does not hold the offices of a clergyman? True the Church does use to some extent gifts of administrators, of architects, of musicians and teachers and sometimes even has an understanding with medical doctors who respond without remuneration and with a little extra attention, to the needs of the poor, discovered by the parson. But are these Christians encouraged to feel a sense of vocation? Are they given to understand that they, no less than the minister of God, are ordained for service in the Kingdom of God? And what about the great multitude of Church people who are not administrators, architects, musicians, teachers, or doctors? Have they no gifts for the bringing in of the Kingdom?

No man or woman who has given his allegiance to our Lord, but feels impelled to be a witness to the Master first in the quality of his daily living and secondly in the persistence of his efforts to bring other men and women to an understanding of the Gospel. In assuming that consecrated Churchmen will desire through prayer and definite effort to bring others to Christ through His Church, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew rightly understands the consequences of a whole-hearted loyalty to our Lord. Of course it is not of consequence through what organization in the Church the work is directed, so long as of their Christian friendship makes these the Church must use the spiritual energy of our laymen and women now so largely running to waste, in gathering into the Church, people who are not now interested and in winning back others who have drifted away. Next to creating a genuine and warm fellowship within the Church which will welcome without formality or fulsomeness all newcomers, and by the continued sincerity of their Christian friendship makes these newcomers conscious of the richness of the communion of Christian belivers, Churchmen and Churchwomen can do more effective work for Christ than through lay evangelism.—From an Editorial in Canadian Churchman.

Freedom Necessary For Growth.

The apartment below me was rented. I realized this as I opened the lower hall door, for these words greeted me, "Daddy will slap you, John, if you touch his cigarettes again."

"A child!" I exclaimed to myself, "cooped up in that three-room apartment."

It was several days before I saw John. He stood on a chair looking out of the window trying to find something to interest him. His downcast little face lit up at my smile and he tried to hold me with some baby exclamations. I judged from the glance that I gave him that he was less than two years old, and had just mastered the art of walking—at the age when everything is new and interesting, the age when his own powers were just becoming known to him. I passed on my way with my heart full of pity for the child.

"But why," you may ask, "was this child to be pitied? Was he not the child of parents who could provide him with the proper food and clothing to make him comfortable and even give him many of the luxuries of life?"

Yes, but could you live with me a few days and hear, as one does hear living in such close proximity with neighbors, you would understand why, provided, of course, that you understood the needs of little children. From the time when I return from my work at four until I retire, I hear the same statement, with variations, that I heard the day that they moved in, "Daddy is going to slap you if you touch that," or, "Take your fingers off," or, "Stop bothering us," or "Go away".

With life just beginning with everything new and interesting, a child must touch something, must investigate, must do something to develop his new-found powers. In a three-room apartment, there is not much room to develop even the muscles of his little body without getting in some one's way, to say nothing of developing his intellectual powers through investigation, without trespassing upon some of the property of his parents.

Even the radio seems to have more rights than he, for its voice is heard all the time, disturbing the child's rest, wrecking his nerves and spoiling his disposition. In the evening when there is company, there is no place far enough from the chatter and the radio, in the small quarters, to allow him to sleep!

Occasionally the door into the hall is left ajar and then the child escapes, raises his voice to the limit and kicks up his heels for pure joy, like a colt that has been long tied in the barn. But it is a short-lived respite, for he is quickly caught and brought back with, "You know you must not make a noise here". For it is a rule that any one with a noisy child cannot remain.

Would not a wise and understanding mother wish to sacrifice her select neighborhood and janitor service for a little house on the outskirts where her child could have a yard in which to play? Would she not willing sacrifice her sense of ease and comfort and elegance for a home less pretentious but more roomy so that her child might have a place to keep his toys and to play with them unmolested in the daytime and where he could sleep undisturbed at night?—Elsie F. Kartack, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

Our Unattained Ideals Argue Immortality.

Life is just a lot of beginnings. We seem to complete nothing here to our satisfaction. Was it not so, in some respects, at least, even with our Lord? In the Acts of the Apostles Luke tells us that his former treatise, the Gospel according to Luke, gave only the beginning of Christ's work—what He "began to do and to teach until the day in which He was taken up". The Master laid the foundations while here upon earth, and now, through the Holy Spirit, He is carrying on to completion the work which He inaugurated while in the flesh. In the attainment of Christ-likeness of character and in achievements for the Kingdom of God, we make only a poor beginning here. In some future life we must look for the fulfillment of our ideals and the completion of our tasks. Henry Ward Beecher once exclaimed: "If this life were all I could have, I should weep, it seems to me, from the present hour to the very end. I must live again. I must make the experiment of life once more. I have made poor work here, but I have met with just success enough to feel that if I had a better chance I could do something. I am like a man that takes the first canvas to paint a picture. He does not know what he will do. He lays in forms in all sorts of ways without coming to any satisfactory results. At last he says, 'I cannot make anything of that picture; but I have a conception. Bring me a fresh canvas and I will try again, when I think I shall have better success'. I have long been trying to paint a true life, and have only partially succeeded; but if God Almighty will give me another canvas, I think I can paint better, and He will."—Dr. H. H. Smith, in The Richmond Christian Advocate.

QUIT YOU LIKE MEN.

Quit you like men, be strong;
There's a burden to bear,
There's a grief to share,
There's a heart that breaks 'neath a load of care—
But fare ye forth with a song.

Quilt you like men, be strong;
There's a battle to fight,
There's a wrong to right,
There's a God who blesses the good with might—
So fare ye forth with a song.

Quit you like men, be strong;
There's work to do,
There's a world to make new,
There's a call for men who are brave and true
On! on with the song!

Quit you like men, be strong;
There's a year of grace,
There's a God to face,
There's another heat in the great world race—
Speed! speed with a song!

—William Herbert Hudnut.

Love to Jesus.

The love which the early Christians felt towards the Lord was not a quiet emotion which they hid within themselves in the secret chamber of their souls, and which they only spake of when they met on the first day of the week, and sang hymns in honor of Christ Jesus the crucified, but it was a passion with them of such a vehement and all-consuming energy, that it was visible in their actions, spoke in their common talk, and looked out of their eyes even in the commonest glances. Love to Jesus was a flame which fed upon the core and heart of their being; and, therefore, from its own force burned its way into the outer man, and shone there.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

For The Southern Churchman.

ASTRONOMER.

William Allen Ward.

He knew the distance
From the Earth to the moon;
He spotted a comet in a
Remote corner of space;
He was awed by the beauty
Of the stars . . . .
But he overlooked a flower
Blooming at his door.

It is told of Thomas a Kempis that once during his student days his preceptor asked the class: "What passage of Scripture conveys the sweetest description of heaven?" One answered: "There shall be no more sorrow there." Another said: "There shall be no more death." Another: "They shall see his face." But Thomas, who was the youngest of all, said: "And his servants shall serve him."

Commit yourself then to God! He will be your guide. He Himself will travel with you, as we are told He did with the Israelites, to bring them step by step to the Promised Land. Ah! what will be your blessedness if you will but surrender yourself into the hands of God, permitting Him to do whatever He will, not according to your desires but according to His own good pleasure?—Fenelon.

For the Young Folks

"THEY LORD HATH NEED."

Peter lent a boat,
To save Him from the press;
Martha lent her home
With genuine kindliness.

One man lent a colt,
Another lent a room,
Some threw down their clothes,
And Joseph lent a tomb.

Simon lent his strength
The cruel cross to bear;
Mary spices brought
His body to prepare.

What have I to lend!
No boat? No house? No lands?
Yet, Lord, I gladly send
The labor of heart and hands.

—Selected.

For The Southern Churchman.

SPARROW'S SONG.

I. Getting Rid of Old Fox.

Adele S. Bailey.

All day long Sparrow flew back and forth from Jay's house to his own home. What in the world is he doing, thought Squirrel. I have never knewn those two to be so intimate before. Something's up. But Squirrel was not a busybody. He believed in minding his own business. He continued to work around his hole, rearranging his nuts, and never so much as asked a question.

As night approached and Squirrel could no longer see to work, he came out of his hole and sat upon the ground near the tree. Suddenly Sparrow chirped down to him.

"Come on up."

You may be sure Squirrel lost no time; in less than a second he was on the branch with Sparrow.

Sparrow was very excited; his tiny eyes sparkled.

"Tonight, when all is dark, before the moon rises, we are going to put one over on old Fox."

Squirrel was alert at once. "Put one over on Old Fox! How come?" he asked.

Sparrow looked around to be sure no one was in hearing, then he said: "Fox is planning to steal some of Hen's new baby chicks. Now I call that a mean trick, after poor Hen has sat for weeks, patiently waiting for the eggs to hatch, then to have—"

Squirrel interrupted: "But that is Fox all over; he is mean, just plain mean. I agree he should be taught a lesson. I shall be glad to help."

"I don't think we shall need you, but you may come and look on if you wish." Further conversation was prevented by Jay's appearance.

Silently the three made their way to the tree which overlooked the henyard.

They had not arrived a moment too soon, for in the distance they detected old Fox stealing toward the henhouse. A patch of white upon his tail gave him away. Stealthily he crept, picking his way alertly. He crawled into the henyard through a hole in the wire.

The watchers in the tree listened intently; then, when they heard a slight commotion in the henhouse, Jay gave one of his shrieks. Again and again he rent the air with it, and Fox dashed out of the henhouse in great haste, his chicken forgotten.

Then something happened that the trio had not planned. Fox fell into a pan of green paint, which was near the entrance of the henyard. For days and days the sight of him was enough to make one sick, for the green paint against his yellow fur had become a greenish-yellow.

Every time he came within hearing, Sparrow, Jay and Squirrel shrieked with laughter, and Sparrow composed a new song:

"Does It Pay to Be Mean?"

The Black Raider.

Lucy Elkins was sitting in the swing under the big locust tree, when something that looked almost like an emerald on wings flashed by her. In and out among the shrubbery it darted until it hovered above the great crimson blossoms of the Japanese quince. Lucy almost held her breath as she watched it.

"It's a bird," she whispered, as she saw the quivering wings, " a real humming bird. I must call mother and Ted and Thaddy so they can see it, too."

Very cautiously she tiptoed into the house. "Come quick," she cried. "I want to show you something."

"What is it?" teased Ted, who was nine years old and liked to pretend that he was quite grown up. "Is it a beetle or a toad? It can't be a worm, or you'd be afraid of it."

Lucy turned red. She was a good deal of a "fraid-cat", and Ted knew it. Once she had run from a big rain worm, thinking it was a snake.

"Stop teasing Lucy," Mrs. Elkins told Ted. "What is it you want us to see, Lucy?" she asked, as she took three-year-old Thaddy in her arms and stepped otu on the veranda.

"Right there by the Japanese quince," Lucy told them softly. "See that big red flower. Now look just above it."

"It is a real ruby-throated humming bird," said Mrs. Elkins delightedly. "See the spot of crimson under his throat. How very lovely he is."

Ted was as excited as Lucy. "I saw a picture of one once in a bird book," he said. "Do you suppose he'll stay?"

"If we're careful not to frighten him," answered Mrs. Elkins. "There he goes, but I think he'll come back for some more honey."

Mrs. Elkins was right. Every day the tiny bird came to the garden. Then one day he brought a mate with him, a lovely little green bird just like himself, except that her throat was a pale, soft lemon yellow.

"Oh, maybe they'll build a nest!" cried Lucy. "What is a humming bird's nest like, mother?"

"I don't know," said Mrs. Elkins. "I never was fortunate enough to see one, but I think it must be very tiny."

It was Ted who found the nest. He came rushing into the house so excited he could scarcely speak.

"I've found it," he panted. "I've found it! The humming birds have made a nest on a limb of the old apple tree, right close to the locust, where our swing is. And, oh, such a nest! It isn't much larger than a thimble. I'd never have seen it, if I hadn't been watching the humming birds."

"May we look at it, mother?" asked Lucy eagerly.

"Tonight we'll ask daddy to put up the step ladder and we'll all look into it just once," said Mrs. Elkins. "Then we won't disturb them again or they will leave the nest."

That night all the Elkins family could hardly wait for the step ladder to be put in place. Ted peeped into the nest first. "There are two eggs," he announced, "two tiny white eggs smaller than any eggs I ever saw before."

"Let me look," pleaded Lucy. "Oh, she breathed a moment later, "I never dreamed eggs could be so tiny! And the nest is all covered in lichens."

"I feel sure the humming birds couldn't have felt much afraid of us," said Mr. Elkins, "or they wouldn't have built their nest so near the swing. It really looks as if they came here for protection and to be near the garden."

Ted looked very earnest. "We'll take care of them, won't we, Lucy?" he said quickly as he gazed up at the tiny thimble-shaped nest.

"Indeed we will," returned Lucy, quite as quickly. She really intended to do so, too, as much as could be. The children never clambered up to the tiny nest again, but every day they watched to see the baby birds come out. Lucy was sitting in the swing one day watching the nest when she saw the father bird come darting back from the garden as if in great fear. Around and over the nest he hovered, then he swooped toward the ground. The grass near the garden path moved. Lucy gave a sharp little gasp. Only one thing could make the grass sway like that.

"It's a snake," she moaned, "and he's wiggling right this way!" She was right. It was a snake, and quite a large one. Lifting his black head, he looked about him. He seemed to think Lucy was harmless, as she sat so still. Again he wiggled along, apparently intent upon robbing the tiny nest in the apple tree.

"Oh, what will I do?" thought Lucy swiftly. "Ted has gone to the store, and mother is sleeping."

She had never wanted to run and scream so much in her life. It was all she could do to keep from doing so. Her heart fluttered almost as fast, she thought, as the wings of the brave little bird, who was still darting at the relentless enemy. The mother bird joined him, and both tried to drive off the intruder with all their pitiful little strength.

Lucy sprang to her feet. "I ought to be ashamed," she said aloud. "I can be as brave as a tiny humming bird, anyway. Get out of here, you horrid, crawling thing! You shan't have the baby humming birds."

She caught up a stick that Thaddy had been playing with and advanced upon the snake. It was not a large stick, but she brought it down in swift, stinging blows that made the snake turn and wriggle toward the stone wall as fast as he could go. Luckily for him, he was almost beside a hole and he was just disappearing into it when Ted came running into the yard. He was so astonished that he could scarcely believe his own eyes.

"Oh, Ted, if you'd only come a little sooner we might have killed the snake!" she said, when she saw Ted. "But I didn't have time to get a big stick, and now maybe he'll come back. Do you think he will, Ted?"

"No," said Ted, "I don't. I think from the way you were switching him, he'll make up his mind this garden is a good place to keep out of. Good for you, Lucy. I—I didn't really think you'd ever fight a snake and drive him away."

"I had to," said Lucy simply. "I couldn't let him have our humming birds."

Ted was right. The snake never returned and one lovely summer day there were four humming birds instead of two flashing in and out among the flowers like living jewels.

"They seem somehow to belong to us," said Lucy, "because we've protected them and loved them."

Ted nodded. "They're ours," he said, "and we'll take just the best care of them we can so they'll come back to us next year. But I'll never call you a "Fraid Cat' again, Lucy."

Lucy's cheeks were pink with happiness. She gave a little skip. "Thank you, Ted," she said softly.—Junior World.

For The Southern Churchman.

REQUIEM OF THE FLOWERS.

Rev. Percy T. Fenn.

Hyacinths and Daffodils,
Violets and Pimpernel,
Pansies sweet, and Marigold,
Eglantine and summer Rose.

Dahlia, Iris, and Fox-Glove,
Mignonette and Golden-Rod,
Wall-Flower, Trillium, and Woodbine,
Verbena, Tube-Rose and Thyme.

Cowslips bending low with dew,
Daisies which the meadows strew,
Orchid, Pink, Forget-Me-Not,
Passion Flower, and Hollyhock.

Sun-flower, Snowdrop, Rosemary,
Tulip, Poppy, White Lily,
Heliotrope and Jessamine,
Blue-bell, Aster, Columbine.

Some have graced the bridal hour,
Some have decked my lady's bower;
Some God's altars have adorned,
Some paid tribute to the mourned.

All have breathed their fragrance sweet,
Filled the earth with beauty deep;
Now they go; to bloom again,
At the tender call of spring.

School Studies.

School will soon begin again and bring back all its rush of studies. Some of you will find the higher grades harder than you had expected, and, if one of the studies isn't made entirely clear to you, no doubt it will cause you considerable worry.

The thing to remember, when starting a new school year, is not to be afraid of the advanced school work, nor let your anxiety to make the grade ruin your health, which, in the end, counts more than all your learning achievements. Fear has been the cause of losing out in many a worth while endeavor. Just take it "slow and careful". Remember Aesop's famous old proverb: "Slow and easy wins the race."

One of the secrets of learning is to listen! When teacher is reciting, keep your ears and mind open. If the day seems dull, or if you have something more interesting to detract your attention at that moment, catch yourself in time and force yourself to listen for the words that come from your instructor's lips. Give every phrase its full attention, for one of these sentences may explain to you a difficult theme or text that has been puzzling you. At the same time, you may learn something entirely new, to help you in your future studies.

For some, memorizing is a hard task. During the waking hours the human brain is like a great sponge, constantly receiving impressions and information, which soaks in as readily as water does in a sponge, with the least bit of concentration. Psychologists say that poor memories are really nothing else than poor management of good memories. If a person reads something and does not remember it, it is because it is read in a blind, passive sort of way. The way to correct this is to read, then mentally review the portion read and analyze it. In other words, read a few paragraphs, then look up from the book and tell it over again to yourself as though you were explaining the lesson to some one else. It will help strengthen and develop your mental capacity for memorizing. Then, ask yourself questions pertaining to lesson and think out the answer. This will stimulate and act on your brain like a plow breaking up hard soil.

Just keep studying and scratching at your new studies, like the old hen who knew that worms were somewhere in the vicinity, and kept on working until she found them. With each scratch or dig into your schoolwork, you will gradually find yourself closer to good marks, and, if you have been distressed over some study, after it has once been mastered and becomes exceedingly easy, you will soon realize that you have been doing a $1,000 worth of worry over a ten-cent trouble.—Selected.

Mattie's Birthday.

Mattie had so longed for the day to come; yet now that it was here she had a sense of disappointment. It was beginning just like other days. She had to be washed and dressed, and, worst of all, have her hair combed.

Somehow she had thought there would be no disagreeable things on this day. For it was her birthday, and she was six years old. She was getting a big girl, big enough to think why things were pleasant or unpleasant.

She was going to have a party and she wished it would begin right off and last all day, but there was no prospect of that.

Mattie began to be cross and to bother her mamma; but mamma was wise and told her little girl that to others her birthday was like any other day, and only her own papa and mamma would remember and be glad that she came to them on that day.

"By being cheerful and helpful to those about you," said mamma, "you may make them also feel glad that you are here."

While mamma was talking papa came hastily into the room.

"Mr. Jones has just brought me word that Brother Ned has met with a dangerous accident, and we are wanted up there right away. I'll bring the team to the door, and we will leave Mattie at Aunt Ann's as we go along."

"But it's my birthday," said Mattie, beginning to cry. Papa was already out of the house.

"Hush," said mamma, "he said Uncle Ned was hurt."

Mattie loved her Uncle Ned, and her tears kept on falling for him. Her mamma hurried away and Mattie was left alone to think.

"No party, no fun; she would have to stay all night with Aunt Ann, who did not understand children very well. And that frosted cake! And those six candles!" It was too much, and she sobbed bitterly.

"I won't have to stay all night with Aunt Ann, will I?" she cried.

"I hope not," said mamma.

"Oh, what will we do with that lovely cake? The children will come, and can't they come to Aunt Ann's?"

"No, no!" said mamma hastily.

"Now, Mattie, I want to see how patient my little girl will be today, for this cannot be helped, and I will give you a party some other day."

It was a very sober little girl who was left standing at Aunt Ann's door as papa and mamma drove away. She watched the carriage as long as it was in sight; then opened the door and stepped into kitchen.

"Who is it?" some one called.

"It is Mattie."

"Come into the bedroom."

Mattie went in and there on the bed was Aunt Ann and the curtain was drawn.

"Are you alone?" she asked.

"Yes," said Mattie, "Uncle Ned's got broked and papa and mamma have gone and left me here, and it's my birthday, and the party cake will spoil—"

"Oh, hush," moaned Aunt Ann. "I have one of my terrible headaches. You must go into the sitting-room and keep quiet until your Uncle Rob comes; he has gone to the store. Now go, and don't touch anything but those magazines on the stool. You may look at those."

Mattie left the room on her tiptoes and went back to the kitchen; to herself she was saying: "I won't stay; I am going to Ethel's. She ought to know about this party being spoiled, and then we will go and tell the other children."

She put her hand on the door-knob, but did not open the door. Her mother's remark about helping those around her sounded in her ears. She went into the sitting room and sat down, thinking hard for a little six-year-old. She noticed Aunt Ann moaning, and not without some fear, she crept softly to the bedroom and to the bed. Aunt Ann had her eyes covered with one hand.

Timidly Mattie put forth her hand and laid it on her aunt's forehead; then she smoothed back the hair with a gentle pressure. Aunt Ann kept quiet and soon removed her hand from her eyes.

"Mamma says this makes her head feel better," said Mattie.

"Yes," said Aunt Ann.

When Mattie's arm began to ache she took her other hand; when that ached she thought she would rest, but as she took it away Aunt Ann asked:

"Can't you rub it a little more? It is doing so much good."

Mattie bravely went to work again, and in less than half an hour her aunt actually fell asleep. Mattie went back to the sitting-room and sat down by the window; she was tired, but when she saw Uncle Rob coming she forgot that and stole softly from the house and down the road to meet him. He got down and lifted her to a seat beside him.

"I saw your papa and mamma, and they told me about it," he said, "and you found Aunt Ann sick and must have been having a hard time."

But Mattie forgot all her trouble and grew merry helping her uncle, and when they went into the house Aunt Ann was awake.

"Where's that blessed baby?" she cried, when Uncle Robert appeared: "Will you believe me, she rubbed my head until I feel asleep, and now that terrible pain is gone. She is going to make people glad that she is in the world. And now, Robert, can't you do something for her? It's her birthday, and she had to give up her party."

Uncle Rob laughed, and what do you think he did for Mattie? He took his big carriage and went for all the children and the party cake, not forgetting the candy. Aunt Ann said she was well enough to have them there, so Mattie had her party at Aunt Ann's after all.

She stayed there all night, and wasn't a bit lonesome, and when her papa and mamma came after her next day, she confided to her mamma that Aunt Ann was beginning to like children, and her aunt called after her as they drove away: "Good-bye, little Sunshine!"—Mary Peru Harding, in the Pacific.

For The Southern Churchman.

MY DEFENDER.

Jane Iredell Jones.

He'll defend me when I'm helpless,
When my earthly friends are few;
When my heart's in deepest trouble,
He'll defend me—He'll be true.

What are other friends beside Him—
Him, the King of Truth and Love?
They may change as they grow older—
Not so with the Friend above.

All the harsh words that are grating
To our souls dissolve in air
When the great Defender enters
And unloads us of our care.

Work thou for pleasure.
Paint or sing or carve
The things thou lovest,
Though the body starve.
Who works for glory
Misses oft the goal,
Who works for money
Coins his very soul.
Work for the work's sake,
Then, and it might be
That these things shall
Be added unto thee.
—Kenyon Cox.

Do you know how the National Department of Religious Education can help you?

FINDINGS IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

OFFERS SUGGESTIONS FOR YOUR

Church School—Adults Bible Classes
Discussion Groups
Work Among College Students

In it you will find accounts of educational methods that other Church leaders have found successful. Book Reviews and Paragraphs keep you informed about the newest books and educational materials.

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY. 50c. PER YEAR.

Findings in Religious Education
281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I enclose { fifty cents / one dollar } Please send Findings to me for { one year / two years }

Name . . . . . .

Address . . . . . .

THE NEW PRAYER BOOK

"CHANCEL EDITION"

5 Inches by 7 Inches

FIFTY CENTS A COPY

Beautifully printed larger prayer book, on rather thin paper, bound like the Pew Editions.

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

(The Church Pension Fund, Owner)

14 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

Churches are again reminded that orders for Prayer Books will be filled according to their receipt, and that, if not previously made, they are advisable now.

BARGAINS IN BOOKS

The Southern Churchman has a limited supply of the following books. They will be sold at a reduction of twenty-five per cent so long as they last:

PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST: Paterson-Smyth	$2.50
PRAYER, WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT DOES: McComb	.50
SPIRIT AND PERSONALITY: Bishop	1.50
SOME LIVING MASTERS OF THE PULPIT: Newton	2.00
SIX FOOLS: Hurlburt	1.50
SHORT INTRODUCTION TO THE GOSPELS: Burton	1.00
SURVEY OF HEBREW EDUCATION: Maynor	1.50
STUDENTS' HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF HOLY LAND	1.00
THE THORN FORTRESS: Brampton	.50
THEOSOPHY AND NEW THOUGHT: Sheldon	.50
TRUST IN GOD, YOUNG CHURCHMAN	.50
UNSPEAKABLE GIFT: Dorke	1.00
UNITY OF THE AMERICAS: Speer	.50
VOCATION OF THE SOUL: Carter	1.00
VIRGIN BIRTH, FACT AND FICTION: Stratton and Potts	.50
VISIONS: Law	1.25
VOLUNTARY CLERGY: Allen	.75
AT MOTHER'S KNEE: Davis	.50
BOOK OF THE PENTATEUCH: Eislin	1.50
BIBLE IN GRADED STORY: Baker	1.50
BIBLE IN LITERATURE: Moulton	1.50
BOY PROBLEMS: Forzush	.50
CHRISTIAN OPTIMIST: Colville	1.25
COUNTRY CHURCH AND RURAL PROBLEMS: Butterfield	1.00

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System
Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Make Steady Money
SELL ROSECLIFF SHIRTS
Ties also
Your OWN Shirts FREE.
Free Outfit
Rosecliff—a real house—gives!
1. One year guarantee
2. No substitutes—we ship exact
3. Silk embroidered initials Free
4. Big commissions in advance
5. A shirt for every size and taste
—8 More Money-Making Features establish our Leadership.
Sell The Best!
Write for your outfit NOW!
Rosecliff Shirt Corp.
R. P. A.-8 1237 Broadway, N. Y.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

AN APPEAL

The little Episcopal Mission at Polloksville, N. C., wishes to call attention to its annual Bazaar which is to be held early in December. And again the Mission will be grateful for any contribution, no matter how small, either in money or salable article.

To those who have contributed in the past the Mission expresses its deep appreciation. And to new contributors it will feel deeply grateful.

The Polloksville Mission is small. Its numbers are few. But these few with the help of the Bishop and the rector of Christ Church, New Bern, N. C., are trying to establish a permanent foothold in this community, and are trying to carry His Message as exemplified in the teachings of the Episcopal Church.

The Mission is making slow but steady progress toward the building of a small Chapel to house its services. With the help of friends and those who are interested and willing to contribute to a worth-while work the Mission feels that it cannot fail.

Contributions should be mailed to Mrs. T. S. Bender, care The Polloksville Episcopal Mission, Polloksville, N. C., and should, if possible, be sent prior to December 1, in order to arrive in time for the Bazaar.

Start Now to Earn

$50.00 to $500.00

For Your Church, School or Society

BY SELLING

The famous Premier Assortment containing 21 Christmas Cards which are extremely attractive and popular. Make no mistake and order this assortment for your organization to sell, as it contains what people expect of a box assortment. Remember, friends, by showing these cards means to sell the box, and by selling 100 boxes you will earn $50.00, which is 100 per cent profit.

COLOR APPEAL—in this assortment is exceptionally good. Lots of real fine coloring which is most attractive in the different shapes and sizes of cards.

OUR DESIGNS—of "The Wisemen," "The Cathedral," "The Village," "Snowdrift," and "Christmas Shopping" are just a few of our outstanding numbers.

VERSES—These cards are brimming o'er with the Christmas Spirit of Joy and Gladness too. "That's the kind of wish that folks like us like to wish folks like you"

LINED ENVELOPES—which are very flashy and add greatly to the attractiveness of this assortment. They really do appear out of place in a box assortment due to their extravagance

FREE WITH EVERY 25 BOXES A SAMPLE BOX FREE
Remember the value of each sample box is $1.00

No. of Boxes	Cost per Box	Sells for	Cost You	Profit
25	60c	$ 25.00	$15.00	$10.00
50	55c	50.00	27.50	22.50
100	50c	100.00	50.00	50.00

EACH BOX SELLS FOR $1.00. SAMPLE BOX 60c

TERMS: One-half of the cost with order; balance in 15 days
We pay the carrying charge if order is paid in full

THE CHURCH SUPPLY CO., INC., Blossomburg, Pa.

.....Clip or Copy and Mail Now.....

Kindly enter our order for.....boxes of the Premier Assortment

Name.....

Address.....

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

To make up deficit in Alaska Mission Appropriations.

W. J. Lipsey	$20.00
Mrs. Mary G. Brown	15.00
Mrs. Andrew M. Kistler	10.00
Mrs. James Dunn	50.00
Mrs. Florence S. Vaughan	1.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

BOARDING—TIDEWATER, Va.

WANTED, IN REFINED COUNTRY Home, in Tidewater, Virginia, a couple of paying guests, or one, for winter. Address "Toddsbury", Nuttall P. O., Gloucester County, Va

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BOOK WANTED.

WANTED, A COPY OF BISHOP WAINWRIGHT'S Collection of FAMILY PRAYERS Any one having a copy of this book for sale, please notify Southern Churchman, stating price.

VIRGINIA HISTORICAL MAGAZINE.

WANTED, FIVE NUMBERS OF THE VIRGINIA HISTORICAL MAGAZINE, dated January, July, October, 1894; January, 1895; July, 1898. Fair price paid. Address Mrs. S Knapp, Esmont, Va

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS, INSPECTED BULBS: 100 $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor: 12, $.75; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. White Narcissus: 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Fred B. Jones, Gloucester, Virginia.

BOARDING—TIDEWATER, VA.

WANTED, IN REFINED COUNTRY HOME in Tidewater Virginia, a couple of paying guests or one, for winter. Address "Toddsbury", Nuttall P. O., Gloucester county, Va.

SITUATION WANTED.

A CAPABLE YOUNG LADY OF REFINEment would like some occupation that will give her work in Richmond, Va. References given. Address "Episcopalian", care of Southern Churchman.

YOUNG LADY DESIRES POSITION AS Companion to an old lady, or semi-invalid, by October first, if possible. Can give good references. Address "A. G. C", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

In Remembrance.

JULIA KEIM JOHNSON

It is rare indeed to meet a personality like JULIA KEIM (Weidman) JOHNSON, whose recent death at her summer home in Andover, has saddened a large circle of friends She was the daughter of W Murray Weidman and Mary May Keim Born into a family of great culture and high traditions, at Reading, Pennsylvania, where her father was a prominent and much-loved physician, much of her girlhood was spent in Baltimore, Maryland, with her uncle and aunt, Mr and Mrs Charles T Mayer She attended private school both in Baltimore and abroad and came out at the home of her uncle, Mr Mayer, who was then president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Another uncle was at the same time president of the Philadelphia and Reading railroad. Her summers were spent largely at Bar Harbor, Me., and later, she met and married Mr. Graham Dove Johnson, of a well-known Massachusetts family, who died a few years ago At her death there was a short service in Andover and the regular service was said in Reading, Pennsylvania, where the burial took place.

Mrs. Johnson's sweet and lovable nature is described best by a friend who knew her when she was young and recently married and the same characteristics, together with her absolute and wonderful Christian trust and love remained with her always. "In those days," wrote this friend to her daughter, "she was a beautiful young woman, and her graces and disposition and her loveliness of character made all who knew her greatly attached to her. She had a distinction and grace of spirit all her own She has left upon my mind a permanent impression of gentleness, loveliness and nobility "

Throughout her life of great happiness, family anxieties and deep sorrows, her unselfishness, optimism and faith were living and touching realities.

Julia Keim Johnson belonged to the Colonial Dames of America, Chapter II, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She was greatly interested in the Garden Club of Andover and found some of her choicest experiences among Andover friends; but her chief interest and loving care, outside of her family, was in Christ Church, Andover, and her other Episcopal Church home in Reading, where her devoted membership is remembered gratefully And now she "walks with God", having "finished her course in faith", here upon this earth.

* * *

BESSIE SMEDES LEAK.

Entered into eternal rest on August 29, 1929, MRS BESSIE SMEDES LEAK, age 76 years Mrs. Leak was the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Aldert Smedes, D D., and Sarah Lyell; a descendant of a long line of distinguished clergymen Her father was the founder, and for thirty-six years Rector of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N C. In early womanhood she was married to M. P. Leak, who preceded her to the grave many years. During the latter part of her life she was totally blind She is survived by a sister, Mrs W. A. Erwin, of Durham, and a number of nieces and nephews.

The funeral services were held in the Chapel of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, where she had been baptized, confirmed and married and were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Blount Cheshire, D. D., and Rev. S. S. Bost, of Durham. In a tribute to Mrs. Leak, Bishop Cheshire said:

"Few persons have been more widely known throughout the State than Mrs. Leak, and more highly esteemed, or more admired and loved by all who knew her. Handsome in person, intellectual and highly cultivated, with a charm and manner and an attractive personality characteristic of all her family, she added a spirit of unselfish love and goodness, which endeared her to all who came within the sphere of her influence. The physical darkness which obscured her latter years cast no shadows upon the highest of her spirit nor upon the cheerfulness and happiness of the social circle which she adorned. There was an inner light, drawn from an unfailing source whose supplies never failed her humble but brave and constant heart."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

in equipment was necessary. The Rev. Gilbert Appelhof, Jr., is the missionary in charge.

Visiting Preachers.

Visiting preachers in Detroit lately have included Dr. William Lyon Phelps, professor of English at Yale University, who preached at Christ Church, Cranbrook, Sunday, September 22; the Rt. Rev. James Wise, D. D., Bishop of Kansas, who preached Sunday, September 15, at St. Columba's Church, Detroit, and the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church, Overbrook, Philadelphia, who preached morning and evening at St. Paul's Cathedral, Sunday, September 22.

Memorials to Miss Mason.

St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, has recently lost by death one of its most valued members in the person of Miss Julia B. Mason, who died about the middle of August. Miss Mason was forty-five years a choirmother, beginning in 1844, under Dr. Clark's rectorship in old St. Paul's on Congress Street, when men and boys made their appearance for the first time (in that parish) in a vested choir, and continuing throughout the tenure of office of four consecutive deans. The services in the Cathedral on Sunday, September 15, were memorials to Miss Mason. Bishop Page made a memorial address at the morning and also at the evening service.

McE.

ARIZONA.

Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Bishop.

Ordained Deacon.

Frederick A. McNeil, of Phoenix, was ordained a deacon during special exercises at Trinity Cathedral at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, September 15. Mr. McNeil was ordained by the Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, Bishop of Arizona.

The sermon was delivered by Dean Edwin S. Lane, of Trinity Cathedral. The Rev. J. R. Jenkins, Archdeacon, was the presenter.

Mr. McNeil is a native of Phoenix and grew up in this city. He was graduated from the Phoenix Union high school in the class of 1919. Following his graduation he attended the University of Arizona for three years.

After becoming a candidate for the Episcopal ministry, Mr. McNeil pursued his studies at the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., where he enrolled in the seminary courses offered by that institution. He was graduated from that university in the class of 1929, receiving his degree last June.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. McNeil, pioneer residents of Phoenix.

Mr. McNeil has been appointed a member of the staff of Trinity Cathedral and as a deacon he will serve as vicar of St. Andrew's Chapel on West Adams Street. He also will have charge of the services to be presented each Sunday in the Camelback Mission.

He will, during the next year, do a great deal of extension work in the Salt River Valley in accordance with the plan of the Church to establish a number of missions.

IOWA.

Rt. Rev. T. N. Morrison, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. S. Congley, D. D., Coadjutor.

Ames!

The Rt. Rev. Theodore N. Morrison, D. D.

The cornerstone of the new St. John's Church and Parish House or Student Center was laid at four o'clock, Sunday afternoon, September 15.

This impressive service was not only the realization of a dream, it marked a notable day in the history of the Diocese of Iowa. The Diocese of Iowa has accomplished its purpose. It has demonstrated the strength of the Episcopal Church when an important and appealing work is undertaken and when there is general and cheerful cooperation.

In 1877 there was an Unorganized Mission at Ames. There were five families, twenty-five individuals, nine communicants connected with the Mission. The Rev. Chester S. Percival was the missionary, C. K. Shinner was the Warden; C. E. Turner, Treasurer; Prof.

Thomas E. Pope, Lay Reader; $373.67 was the amount of money raised.

In 1879 the Mission was organized under the name of Trinity Mission. Professor Thomas E. Pope was Warden and Lay Reader. There were fifteen families, sixty-two individuals, thirteen communicants connected with the Mission.

In 1883 Trinity is reported vacant. P. J. Kaynor was Warden. The Woman's Guild created a fund for the building of a church. This fund grew slowly and was used in the building of St. John's, Ames, in 1899.

There came discouragement. Trinity Mission became defunct. There was no work at Ames reported in the Diocesan Journals from 1885 to 1893.

In 1893 the Archdeacon of Davenport, the Rev. S. R. J. Hoyt, S. T. D., formally organized St. John's Mission, Ames. Dr. J. P. Kaynor was Warden and Treasurer. The Archdeacon held services once a month.

In 1896 St. John's, Ames, was admitted as a parish to union with the Diocesan Convention. In the parochial report the name of Charles Quade appears. Mr. Quade is one of the Wardens, and through all the years that follow, Charles Quade has been the loyal, courageous, devoted Christian Churchman. He would not be discouraged. He would never give up. Charles Quade joined in the service of the Laying of the Cornerstone of the new Church September 15.

Prof. G. W. Bissell represented St. John's, Ames, as a Lay Delegate at the Forty-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese held in Grace Church, Cedar Rapids, November 29 and 30, 1898—the first time St. John's, Ames, had a delegate at a Diocesan Convention. Bishop Morrison was elected Bishop of Iowa at this Convention.

In this period the parish reports give the names of Wardens, Treasurers and Clerks, but not of Vestrymen. Dr. L. H. Pammel may have been connected with St. John's before 1900, but his name appears in 1900 as one of the Wardens of the parish. We all do honor to Prof. Pammel. He has never failed. Dr. Pammel or his family, in good days and in dark weather, when every one was full of hope and anticipation, when there were only the faithful undaunted few, Dr. Pammel has been strong, determined, self-sacrificing, a man of vision, a man you could not discourage.

It was Dr. Pammel, I am informed, who first lifted his voice in the Episcopal Church to urge the development of our work at great Colleges and Universities. His was for some time a voice crying in a wilderness, but he who went on his way bearing good seed; here, even in this world, Dr. Pammel comes again bearing his sheaves with him.

On September 17, 1899, at four o'clock, as I recall, I laid the cornerstone of St. John's, Ames, in what was then no very considerable town—I dare not say village, people are very sensitive. It is now the City of Ames. The church completed, the altar, pews and other furnishings all in place, cost about $1,700. There was a debt of $250.

We cannot follow the history further, but one thing must be said: A bright day dawned when in the good providence of God the Rev. Leroy S. Burroughs became rector of St. John's. That was ten years ago. What a record it is, a splendid record of faithful wise, patient work, creditable to both priest and people. Mr. Burroughs has been a devoted priest. He has labored untiringly, and so has devoted wife. The sacrifices they have made, their wonderful cheerfulness, courage and patience, are known to us all. Many a man would have given up in despair, taken advantage of the tempting offers which were made to him, but Mr. Burroughs had dreamed his dream. He had a vision of a church and student center out near the great institution of which Iowa is so justly proud, and now, on Sunday, September 15, Mr. Burroughs, a very proud man, a very happy man, and in his heart, I am sure, a very humble man, will thank God that his dream, his inspiration, born of faith in God and devotion to God's Kingdom, at last is materialized in stone and that he will soon stand at God's altar in the new church to break the Bread of Life to his people.

How are we coming out financially? Very satisfactorily. Cash, unpaid pledges, and the gift of $15,000 from the National Council, will see all contracts provided for, but—but—we need an organ, say $5,000, an altar, chancel furnishings, pews. What a fine opportunity for memorials or thank offerings.

Perhaps you have not made a subscription, or you would like to increase the subscription you have already made. Perhaps it is in your heart to give a memorial or thank offering. Write to Bishop Longley, or to the Rev. Leroy S. Burroughs, Ames, or to myself, or you can send a check payable to the Ames Fund, address the envelope to the Rev. Jesse D. Griffith, 411 Royal Union Life Building, Des Moines, Iowa.—The Iowa Churchman.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor.

Sixtieth Anniversary Celebrated.

The Rev. Charles M. Perkins, rector of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, West Collingswood, N. J., Sunday, September 22, celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

Bishop Paul Matthews and Bishop Coadjutor Albion W. Knight, of the Diocese of New Jersey, celebrated Holy Communion at the morning service. On Monday special services marking the anniversary were held in the Pro-Cathedral, Christ Church, Trenton.

In the sixty years of his ministry, Mr. Perkins has made 63,000 pastoral calls, conducted 20,500 church services and has missed only six regular church services.

"Your Heavenly Father Knoweth That Ye Have Need of All These Things"

Matthew 6:32.

Your Heavenly Father knows that you have needs for your earthly existence—food, shelter and clothing. But He knows, too, that there is need for a means of forwarding the Gospel to those who are unsaved. And through the Moody Bible Institute Annuity Plan, you can both Give to God and Have resources for Yourself.

Your donation will bring you an income annually at a rate of from 4 per cent to 10 per cent, or more, according to your age. At the same time it is helping eager students to learn the Word to the Glory of Jesus Christ.

Friends are urged to write for further information. No obligation. Just fill in and return coupon.

33 NATIONALITIES are represented in this photo of students in the Winter Term, 1929.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO
Bureau of Annuities
Dept. H94
153 Institute Place
Chicago Avenue Station Chicago, Illinois

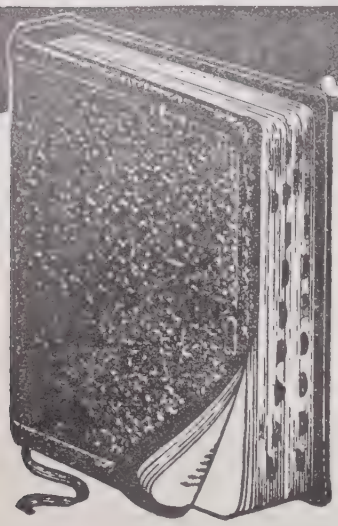
(Coupon)



THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO
Bureau of Annuities, Dept. H94
Chicago Avenue Station, Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: Please send me information as to how I may Give and Have—promoting God's Work and providing myself with an ample income.

Name .....Address .....

City .....State .....Date of Birth .....

JUST OFF THE PRESS!

New and Improved

Chain Reference Bible

The New Second Revised Edition

For years leading Bible students, teachers and pastors heartily praised the Chain Reference Bible. Many thought it perfect, and are now amazed at its many new and unique features. These wonderful new additions have required more than five years of laborious preparation.

THESE GREAT HELPS REMAIN

Added to the great Text Cyclopedia, the Chain Reference System and the Expository Verse Analysis, these new features make the New Second Revised Edition truly the most helpful Bible ever published. It helps you quickly to find the truths you seek, and makes their meaning clear.

TEXT CYCLOPEDIA

This is the only Bible that has this comprehensive encyclopedia of Bible texts and related information classified under easy subject headings. Over 100,000 individual references. Contains contrasted subjects, general Bible information, dictionary material, etc. You must see this to appreciate its great worth.

CHAIN REFERENCE SYSTEM

Enables you quickly and easily to follow any thought, topic or character straight through the Bible. Only Reference System in existence that does away with letters and figures and confusing signs in the text.

EXPOSITORY VERSE ANALYSIS

Nearly every verse in the Bible is analyzed into thought topics. These are printed in the reference column next to the verse. They are suggestive and expository and throw light on hidden truths.

FULL BIBLE LIBRARY IN ONE VOLUME

The New Second Revised Edition is the only one with all these helps. Every feature either binds together the vital truths or throws the searchlight of understanding on them.

Here is the full King James Version, along with 4,000 columns of references and helps. It is all you need to get the fullest blessing from the Scriptures. This is the only Bible published in which all the helps are directly linked up with the Scripture text.

The Most Helpful Bible for Every One

Pastor, Teacher, Student, Business Man, Home groups and all that love the Word need this most helpful Bible. All sermon and lesson helps necessary are contained here in one handy volume—all correlated to the Scriptures. Here is found at a glance all the Bible teachings concerning Home Marriage, Divorce, Business, Health, Pleasure, Patriotism, Dress, Labor, etc., etc. Here is every conceivalbe comparison between secular and Biblical history. Old and New Testament characters, analyses of books and chapters of the Bible, and so many other helps that it is impossible to tell of them all here.

20 NEW FEATURES

1. Analysis of Bible as a Whole.
2. Outline Studies of Bible Period Contrasted with Secular History.
3. The Analysis of the Books—Each of the sixty-six books of the Bible have been analyzed as to the historical occasion of its composition, the most important teachings and a synopsis of the contents is given. This is the most comprehensive and instructive outline study of the Bible in print.
4. The Analysis of the Chapters of the New Testament.
5. Numerical Reference System in the New Testament. This greatly facilitates the turning from text to desired information in the new comprehensive helps.
6. Biographical Analysis—The prominent Old and New Testament characters are analyzed in a new and striking manner.
7. Bible Harmonies—These are a helpful series of pictorial illustrations and charts for such subjects as "The River of Inspiration," "Contrast between Old and New Testaments," "The Life Trees of Moses, Christ, and Paul," etc.
8. Golden Chapters of the Bible.
9. Special Bible Readings.
10. Memory Verses.
11. Topical Treasury.
12. Christian Workers' Outfit.
13. Development of Religious Worship.
14. Bible Mnemonics.
15. Bible Markings.
16. Christ's Hours on the Cross.
17. Chart of the Seven Editions of Divine Law.
18. Chart of Origin and Growth of English Bible.
19. The Messianic Stars.
20. The Temple of Truth.

HIGHLY ENDORSED

"In my judgment the Chain Reference Bible is the most valuable and useful volume ever published. Any one using it a week would not part with it at any price."—Rev. E. E. Holmes, D. D., Pastor of First M. E. Church, Los Angeles, California.

"For completeness, compactness and convenience, the Chain Reference Bible is the greatest single volume it is possible to buy and to own; it makes it unnecessary for you to purchase any other books which would cost a great deal of money."—Rev. Jas. B. Chapman, D. D., Editor of Herald of Holiness (Nazarine Church).

SEND COUPON NOW FOR BIG FREE BOOK

At great expense we have prepared an attractive booklet in colors, describing fully the features of the Chain Reference Bible. It contains sample pages of the Bible and many letters from Christian leaders whom you know well. Examine this Bible before buying another.

CHRISTIAN REPRESENTATIVES WANTED

Many Kirkbride representatives have been making $10 to $150 a week according to amount of the time devoted to the work and ability. This new improved edition will be much easier to sell, and the salesman's earnings will be larger. No one but earnest Christians need apply for the position of representative of the Chain Reference Bible. Its sale is distinctly a service for our Lord and Master, since it helps others to know His will and teachings. People will quickly buy this unique Bible when it is shown to them that the "bread of life" can more easily be gotten from it.

The Chain Reference Bible is not sold in stores. All inquiries from your territory are sent to you, and orders from them are fully credited to you. Only one representative is allowed to a community, so mail coupon now to secure this privilege in your own vicinity.

B. B. KIRKBRIDE BIBLE COMPANY
Desk S3, 903 Meridian Life Building - - Indianapolis, Ind.

B. B. KIRKBRIDE BIBLE COMPANY
Desk S3, 903 Meridian Life Building
Indianapolis, Indiana

Send me free of charge a copy of book describing and giving prices of Chain Reference Bibles.

I am interested in becoming your representative in my locality.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City and State*_____

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 5, 1929. No. 40.

"The Lord loveth whom He chasteneth and scourgeth every one whom He receiveth."

Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forever more have set,
The things which our weak judgment here had spurn'd,
The things o'er which we grieve with lashes wet—
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see, that, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, He heeded not our cry,
Because His wisdom to the end could see:
And, e'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because He knows it good.

And if, some time, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser Hand than yours or mine
Pours out this portion for our lips to drink;
And as some friend we love is lying low,
Beyond the reach of human help and grace,
Oh, trust in Him from Whom all mercies flow,
And bear your sorrow in His wondrous peace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends His own,
And that sometimes the change which men call death
Conceals the fairest boon His love makes known.
And when we enter through the gates of life,
And stand within, and there God's workings see,
We may know all this mystery and strife,
And for each deep problem find the key.

But not to-day. Then be content, O heart;
God's plans like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart:
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold;
And when through His free grace we reach the land
Where tired feet, all journeyings o'er, may rest,
When we shall clearly see and understand,
I know that we shall say, "Our God knows best."

—Selected.

"I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD."
"Come unto me all ye that travail and are heavy laden."

Not now, my child! A little more rough tossing,
A little longer on the billow's foam,
A few more journeyings in the desert darkness,
And then the sunshine of thy Father's home!

Not now; for I have wanderers in the distance,
And thou must call them in with patient love;
Not now; for I have sheep upon the mountains,
And thou must follow them where'er they rove.

Not now; for I have loved ones sad and weary,
Wilt thou not cheer them with My words of grace?
Sick ones who need thee in their lonely sorrow,
To carry My sweet messages of peace.

Not now; for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding,
And thou must teach those saddened hearts of Me;
Not now, for orphans' tears are thickly falling,
They need My Word, and this I give to thee.

Not now; for many a hungry one is pining;
Thy willing hand must be outstretched and free:
Thy Father hears the mighty cry of anguish,
And gives His messages of love to thee.

Not now; for dungeon walls look stern and gloomy,
And prisoners' sighs sound strangely on the breeze,
Wrecked lives, needing thy Saviour's grace and mercy;
Hast thou no ministry of love for these?

Go with the name of Jesus to the dying,
And speak that Name in all its living power;
Let not thy feeble heart grow chill and weary;
Can'st thou not watch with Me one little hour?

One little hour! and then thy Saviour's presence,
Eternal praises and the victor's palm:
One little hour! and then the Hallelujah!
Eternity's long, deep, thanksgiving psalm!

—Selected.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

St. Christopher's

A Church Boarding and Day School

Richmond, Virginia.

Heathful, beautiful, and historic surroundings. Boarding Department Limited to 50 Boys.

Rate $750.

Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL.D., Headomaster.

SAINT MARY'S SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina.

Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Have your daughter receive her education in a Church School.

Saint Mary's offers four years' High School and two years' College work all fully accredited by the Southern Association. Also Courses in Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics and Business.

20-acre campus. Gym and Field Sports. Tennis, Indoor Tiled Swimming Pool. Horseback Riding.

For Catalogue and View Book address A. W. TUCKER, Business Manager.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
What Mean Ye By This Service?—Canon Dyson Hague	6
Favorite Scripture Verse	6
Friendship—H. L. R. Sheppard...	7
The Palestine Mandate	8
Address of General A. T. Goodwyn	8
An Appreciation—Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D.	10
Book Reviews	10
Hudson Stuck	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	16
Children's Department	17
Personal Notes	23

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls
The Bishop of Washington, President of Board of Trustees. Miss Mabel B Turner, A. B., A. M., Principal, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
GOTTSCHALK'S
METAL SPONGE
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
"The Modern Dish Cloth"
—WRITE FOR FULL INFORMATION—
METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
DEPT. G LEHIGH AND MASCHER STREETS PHILA.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., B. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

DIVINITY SCHOOL

of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia

42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean.

CHRISTMAS CARD AGENTS

Earn money for your church. Sell our box assortments of Christmas Cards. Big profits. Start taking orders early. Write today for illustrated folder giving full information.

THE COLONIAL BEAUTY LINE

395 Dwight St. - - Springfield, Mass.
915 Grand Avenue - - Kansas City, Mo.
228 Balboa Bldg. - - San Francisco, Calif.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

M. P. MOLLER PIPE ORGAN

Guaranteed the Highest Grade.

Endorsed by the most eminent organists.
Built in the world's largest factory.
Every organ a special creation for a particular use.
Moller organs leads all makes for every use.
The Moller "Artiste" reproducing residence organ has no equal in its particular field.
Booklets and specifications upon request.

M. P. MOLLER,
Factory and General Offices,
Hagerstown, Md.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

KEEP BUSY.

A finger ever busy cannot point
At any fellowman to bring him shame:
A tongue that utters cheerful happy words
Will not find time to speak a sordid name;
A mind that's hopeful of the things to come
Dwells not on sorrows that have passed away;
A heart that seeks to love its neighbors —all
Finds rich and full each fleeting new born day.

—Barbara Hollis.

Woody's Art Glass Shop

Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street,
Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH

PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

VIRGINIA DAIRY CO.

"THE HOME OF BETTER MILK"

MILK, CREAM, BUTTER, BUTTERMILK, RICHELAC

Phones Boul 938-939 F. F. RENNIE, President.

RAISE CHURCH FUNDS--Easy

Sell Christmas Cards! Make 50c on each $1 Box of 24 Finest Assorted Engraved Designs. 40 per cent on personal greetings. Deal with Manufacturers. Write for Samples and Details. THISTLE ENGRAVING & PUBLISHING CO., Dept. A, 20 Vesey St., New York.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

A Bank of Strength and Character

CARTER N. WILLIAMS, President — ROBERT W. DANIEL, Chairman of Board

RICHMOND TRUST COMPANY

7th and Main — 211 West Broad

Church and Sunday School Furniture

THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.

T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

CASSOCKS

Surplices, Stoles, Eucharistic Vestments, Choir Cassocks, Cottas, Ties and Collars, Altar Linens, Materials, Tailoring.

J. M. HALL, Inc.
174 Madison Ave.
(Bet. 33d & 34th Sts.)
New York.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

AN APPEAL

The little Episcopal Mission at Polloksville, N. C., wishes to call attention to its annual Bazaar which is to be held early in December. And again the Mission will be grateful for any contribution, no matter how small, either in money or salable article.

To those who have contributed in the past the Mission expresses its deep appreciation. And to new contributors it will feel deeply grateful.

The Polloksville Mission is small. Its numbers are few. But these few with the help of the Bishop and the rector of Christ Church, New Bern, N. C., are trying to establish a permanent foothold in this community, and are trying to carry His Message as exemplified in the teachings of the Episcopal Church.

The Mission is making slow but steady progress toward the building of a small Chapel to house its services. With the help of friends and those who are interested and willing to contribute to a worth-while work the Mission feels that it cannot fail.

Contributions should be mailed to Mrs. T. S. Bender, care The Polloksville Episcopal Mission, Polloksville, N. C., and should, if possible, be sent prior to December 1, in order to arrive in time for the Bazaar.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

To believe a business impossible is the way to make it so.—Jeremy Taylor.

Self-saving is a process of death; saving others a process of life.—Bishop Charles H. Brent.

Prayer is the opening of the doorway of the inner life that God may enter.—McIntyre.

To bear adversity with an equal mind is both the sign and glory of a brave spirit.—Quarles.

It is the one half hour which we cannot easily spare for which our Master is hungry.—Powett.

If your foot slips, you may recover your balance, but if your tongue slips, you cannot recall your words.—The Associated Magazine.

If you shift on to the shoulders of another the burden that belongs to you, you will find at last that you have also surrendered to him your crown.

It does not take a great man to do great things. It only takes a consecrated man, a devoted man, because God does everything and man does nothing except what God does through him.—Phillips Brooks.

Temptation comes with our choosing, but we decide whether it is to be an opportunity or a trap.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

"Sometimes—nay, often—God grants the petition without letting us know that it is granted. The soul that we pleaded for is saved; let us believe it because it is not His will that any should perish; because He who creates the love in us will reward the love!"

Oh, what is the end of the highway of prayer!
How great is its measuring rod!
But no wisdom of man
Can know its full span—
For it ends in the bosom of God.
—H. W. Harper.

Jesus stands out of the pages of history as a modern of moderns, because He had a message for all time. A message of vital importance to our own day. If we preach that message, we preach the Christ. If we half bury it under an elaboration of ritual and ecclesiasticism, we leave men free to doubt whether we really believe the Gospel of the Son of Man.—Bishop E. W. Barnes.

All through life I see a Cross
Where sons of God yield up their breath;
There is no gain except by loss,
There is no life except by death,
And no full vision but by Faith,
Nor glory but by bearing shame,
Nor justice but by taking blame,
And that Eternal Passion saith,
"Be emptied of glory and right and name."

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.,

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 5, 1929. No. 40.

CRITICS

One of the queerest of the many queer paradoxes of human life and character is that the most selfish people are those who give the least attention to themselves and the most to others—who study themselves superficially and always with friendly eyes and study everybody else in search for blemishes. None of us gathering courage to consider ourselves honestly, frankly, candidly, can be selfish, vain, intolerant or vindictively severe on other sinners and failures, however justly we may hate the sin. Philosophers of all the ages, nations and languages agree that the guidance for conduct and for right living and dealing with our fellow men is summarized in the two words, "know thyself", which impose the hardest of all human tasks. So far as records indicate, no uninspired philosopher giving that sound advice ever followed it exactly or illustrated in his career and writings the humility, restraint and wide and endless charity which obedience to it invariably brings. Those who faithfully try to know themselves, to search their hearts diligently and to learn from and profit by the knowledge so obtained gather rich and beautiful reward. They free and clear themselves of so much of the smallness, meanness, bitterness, sensitive and offense seeking vanity, snarling criticism of others, acute and unnecessary unhappiness, resulting from refusal of self-examination. The immunity is well worth the painful sackcloth and ashes consequent on honest facing and analysis of our innermost selves.

We must be our own mirrors. No two leaves in a forest are precisely alike, and there are no precise human duplications, externally or internally. Nobody has discovered an apparatus to show us how our respective minds and souls and hearts look and act. We can not judge ourselves by comparisons or contacts with others. Each of us is different from all others in spiritual and mental construction and conditions and influences. People whose welfare depends on physical appearance know they can not afford illusions regarding themselves nor self-deception. They must have and use truthful glasses and must look into them straight and realize what they see, defects to be cured or concealed, beauties to be accentuated and improved. A lamentably large proportion of us will not see ourselves as we are, as reflected in the impressions, opinions and judgments of us, which, however, unpleasant, usually are conveyed to us, one way or another, sooner or later. The player folk of the stage and the men and women naturally and properly intent on looking their best and being attractive, know they must know accurately their own faces and forms and realize the rights and wrongs, good and bad, of them. Innumerable thousands of us, engaged in the serious actualities of every-day life, steadily and absurdly deceive ourselves regarding ourselves. We cherish delusions of our own grandeur persistently and pitifully as any lunatic, apply to obvious villainies or weaknesses a little rouge touch of excuse or palliation or vague promise of future amendment and reform; so deceive and blind and befool ourselves, feel entirely sure of having deceived all spectators and go busily spying out and savagely criticizing the real or supposed misdeeds and shortcomings of others. From the self-appointed, self-decorated, censors pour lamentation and maledictions—shouted or whispered, as occasion allows—against everything, from the general course of the universe, governments and society to local administrations, management of churches, conduct of pastors and congregations.

Many communities and congregations are afflicted with virulent, probably all with modified, specimens of these critics of all but themselves. The Pharisees were of that kind; but more foolish and degraded than the Pharisees are those hypocrites who on pretence of avoiding hypocrisy betray their own hearts by dodging the responsibilities, duties and restrictions of religion and so are guilty of the basest and vilest deception. It may be that the sanctimonious hypocrite hiding iniquity behind disguise of piety is less offensive to Heaven than the blatant hypocrite masking evil design and desire with proclamations of unbelief or ostentatious aloofness from honor to the Almighty.

The direct interest of a Church paper in the unhappily familiar chronic critic, censor and fault-finder is because of the harm done by the type to Christianity and the churches. When the books of the Recording Angel are unfolded, they may reveal glorious, dreadful, soul-lifting chapters telling the beautiful long patience of devoted pastors and their families and the sincere church workers who are and always have been special objects and helpless victims of the carping explorers for motes blind to their own beams. A pithy French proverb says those who excuse themselves accuse themselves. It might be amended truthfully, to say that the most sanguine, energetic and persevering self-excusers invariably are the most rigid and relentless accusers of others. In Hudibras is a biting couplet describing those who compound for sins they are inclined to by damning those they have no mind to, but our constitutional, self-constituted critic of pastor, choir, congregation and congregational and church organizations will not confess to a sin to be compounded and concentrates on real or supposed sins of everybody else. It is an easy, alluring vice. Craving for sense of superiority is one of the most despicable, strongest and most universal of human instincts. It has caused crimes and sins follies and miseries of many grades, from the wild African perching a stove-pipe hat above his nakedness to usurpations of thrones and the pew-holder intently seeking flaws in the sermon. Unless resisted staunchly, it fastens constantly more viciously its poisonous and consuming tentacles. Like some habit-forming drugs, it arouses and stimulates all within us that is bad. Unlike the drugs, it gives no interval of calm or rest.

As the quality of mercy is twice blest, blessing alike giver and recipient, envy, hatred, malice and uncharitableness, from which we pray to be delivered, and the critical habit, growing from them and fostering them, carry double curse. Charity, St. Paul tells us, thinketh no evil. Vigilant and eager critics think and see nothing but evil. Love, kindliness, tolerance, faith, hope and charity, sacred and pure and glorious emanations from the same Divine source, are the sweetest luxuries our lives and souls may know. They warm and strengthen when the body shivers with cold or privations, soothe and comfort and gladden when pain racks or fever scorches, give light and beauty through the fiercest and darkest storm. They are not spineless nor cowardly. The tenderest are the bravest. Those most reluctant to suspect and discern wrong are the sturdiest and boldest in resisting it, foremost in overthrowing it.

In the illimitable arena where the battles really vital to individuals and humanity are fought, invisible and soundless to our senses, victories over all temptation are won by unwearied watchfulness, stubborn valor, ceaseless prayer for help to know ourselves, to weigh and dissect our motives, purposes, the origin of each thought. If we imagine all the men and women in the world, even all members of Christian churches, faithfully waging such war with themselves, within themselves, we imagine the Millennium, the universal reign of the Christ spirit and of righteousness and peace. If we imagine it in our own communities and congregations, we imagine happiness and usefulness and unity surpassing the brightest hopes, pastor and people working joyfully together and achieving magnificent results; no longer the deplorable and disastrous fact of the singing of "Onward Christian Soldier" by those intending comment and conduct which, were they real soldiers, would subject them to summary execution for mutiny, cowardice and desertion to the enemy. We may hardly think possible such searchings and purging and valorous battling by all in even a small congregation. We can strive for it each for ourselves, to make the kind of charity described with such splendid eloquence and fervor in the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians being right at our own homes in our own hearts and souls. Each of us may reverse the way of the habitual critic, fault-finder, flaw inspector, and by very close and studious attention to our own sins and frailties and vigorously sweeping before our own doors be really and finely helpful to the supreme cause and know to the end the tranquil joy of giving and receiving loving and earnest good will.

Alfred B. Williams.

WHAT MEAN YE BY THIS SERVICE?

A STUDY IN CHURCH WORSHIP

By Canon Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada

THE more one studies our Morning and Evening Service, the more one is convinced that its various parts were drawn up in accordance with a great spiritual ideal and that the men who compiled it had before them a great object which was to enable the people of the Church for all time to worship God in accordance with Christ's great Canon of Divine service laid down in John 4:23-24. Their general object was their own statement, to please God and to profit all the worshippers. But when we come to the detailed development of their own general scheme, we find that its devotional elements may be divided broadly speaking, into five main sections corresponding to the five great devotional aspirations and necessities of man as a worshipper. And the marvellous thing is, that the provision for these requirements is not only abundantly furnished, but that the sequence of the spiritual provision is in exact accordance with the demands of a truly spiritual and Scriptural philosophy. They realized in the first place that the great barrier to filial worship is the consciousness of unforgiven sin, and that before there can be any acceptable worship, there must be an accepted worshipper. The heart of the divinely revealed system of the Old Covenant, was that there must be acceptance before there is worship; and an acknowledgment of the sinfulness of man and the guilt of sin, and the need of forgiveness in the New Testament, as well as in the Old, is the first requirement. The Prayer Book compilers, therefore, planted in the very forefront of the Church of England system the necessity and the blessing of obtained forgiveness, and one is struck with the fact that every worshipper in our Church has to pass first of all through the portal of a very lowly and hearty confession of sin. In the Sentences, the Exhortation, the General Confession, and the Absolution and the Lord's Prayer, the precious promises of pardon and the earnest pleading for forgiveness and the blessed gospel of reconciliation, are put into the ear and mouth of all who participate. Thus the great entrance in the Anglican system of Divine worship, is the soul's confession and the soul's acceptance (Rom. 5:1; Ephes. 1:7; 1 John 1-9; 2-12). Now the natural expression of the soul that is reconciled is praise; and the instinct of jubilation is next provided for as the heart of God's accepted sons bursts forth in song. "The mouths that were silenced by sin and opened only by God" (Bishop Sparrow), now give their glory to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, and in a happy unison call on all present to sing and rejoice and be glad in their God. In the Psalms, and the Te Deum and subsequent Canticles, this section of our service provides for the joy of the forgiven (Ephes. 5:19). We do not sing these praise-words at the beginning. But when we have got forgiveness, and taken the place of the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, and asked the Lord to open our lips, then, and not till then, we show forth His praise. But religion is not all emotion. The soul needs nutriment as the body. So next, the Church provides for her children the soul-building food of the Bible, "that the people might continually profit more and more in the knowledge of God", and gives chapter by chapter, "the very pure Word of God, the Holy Scripture". The Psalms, as well as the Lessons, might be included in this section. The next attitude is that of profession, for with the mouth confession is made unto salvation (Rom. 10:10), and the subjects of the Great King must never be ashamed as His loyal and loved soldiers to declare their faith. It was a fine spiritual perceptivity that led our Prayer Book compilers to place the declaration of our faith after the receiving of God's Word in the Lessons and the Psalms, and Scripture, hymns and songs, for faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God (Rom. 10:17). And then, last of all, we kneel as suppliants and in suffrages, collects, litany and prayers, we pray in His Name, following the divinely inspired order laid down by the Apostle Paul in his suggestion to "the first Bishop of the Church of the Ephesians" (1 Tim. 2:1-2). Truly, we can say as we look at it as a completed unit, that it reveals the expression of a great spiritual plan, a goodly order indeed and that Scriptural truth runs through it as the River of Life through the Garden of the Lord. As in the great Communion Service also, it fits every phase of the worshipping heart, because it makes us all do just the things we ought to do when we come before God, in just the order wo ought to do them. It puts first things first, and next things next. Or, to summarize and recapitulate:

Every person who enters our Church to worship in our Morning and Evening Service, draws nigh God in five successive attitudes; first as a sinner to confess guilt and receive pardon; second as a son to offer praise; third as a scholar to get profit by His Word; fourth as a subject to make profession of faith; and fifth as a suppliant to offer prayer. And thus in our Anglican service the consciousness of alienation, the craving for acceptance, the instinct of praise, the duty for confession, and the desire for prayer, one and all of these elemental and perennial necessities of the Christian's life, are amply and simply met in the successive sections of the service: Reconciliation; Jubilation; Instruction; Confession; Intercession.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invied to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mr. Berkleley Minor, of Charlottesville, Virginia:

"It is good for me that I have been in trouble.—I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right: and that Thou of very faithfulness hast caused me to be troubled."—Psalm 119:71, 75.

Who will send one from the far away places as well as very near us?

FRIENDSHIP

By H. R. L. Sheppard

THE longer I live, the more certain I get that one of the only things that matter in life is friendship. We simply cannot get on without a few friends, and if we have got as many real friends as we have fingers on one hand we may count ourselves mighty lucky. How many friends have you? I mean, how many people are there to whom you can go, pouring out all your troubles, exaggerated maybe at the moment, telling them all your fears and apprehensions, and having a real old "grouse" with complete confidence that at the end they will make allowances for your moments of weakness, and that they will try to cheer you up, not by orthodox bracing remarks, but by the presence of a hand, the gift of a cigarette, or a cup of tea? Later perhaps they will see you home, and you will return feeling that you have at least got one real friend.

This friendship is the loveliest thing in the world, and I doubt if men are ever perfect at it without contact with Jesus Christ. I think what Jesus Christ offers to do for you and for me is primarily to make us possible. He makes us possible from the other man's point of view, so that at home and everywhere, at our work or whatever our line of life may be, things may be easier for some one because we are running around. There will not be quite so much sarcasm, not so many bitter words, not so much unkind suggestion and talk.

I get tired of hearing the modern preacher saying that God cannot get on without you or me, or do His work without us. I feel sure God wants to work through us, but I hate the very suggestion that He cannot do anything if we fail, because we fail so frequently and so badly. God has not needed me for His mighty works; He did not need me to create the soul of Gandhi, or to bring into life again the spring flowers, or for His many other miracles of goodness. God can, as a matter of fact, get on perfectly well without us, though His home circle could never be complete unless we were within it. There is, however, one thing that I think He needs of us quite dreadfully—that is, that we should give off a kind of fragrance of the radiance of love in His Name to all who touch our lives. That is what friendship means in our relationship to our neighbors. I know all this Church attendance and services are very helpful at times—of course they are, they keep us true to our ideals and help us on the way; but what most of us need if we are honest in our conclusion, is to have some Christ-like person who really cares for us, and cares not merely for our souls but for us.

You do find who your real friends are when your luck is out, don't you? I have nothing to complain of, for while mine has been out I have met with amazing kindness, but it is extraordinary how some friends drop away when a man is down and out. We thought when we were in a good job that we were loved for what we were, apart from the office we held; but there came a day when the limelight ceased to play upon us and we had to step down—then suddenly, we found there were not as many ready to serve us as there used to be. Did they really care for us, or only for the crumbs that might have fallen from our table? Anyhow, which of you listening in, who has fallen on hard times does not realize the value of friends who stand by whatever be your circumstances?

* * *

I wonder what it would mean to some of those who once helped us if we suddenly began again to remember what we owe them—the woman who first taught us what decency was; the man who first gave us our chance and perhaps our first bit of business; or, still more important, the old people who gave us a welcome in this or that great City before we got as big as we are now, and whose homely comforts we have ceased to need? What about those people? They are ageing now, and it is a long time since we crossed their threshold. They are a little embittered, and can you wonder, because we were so ready to receive their hospitality once, but now they never see us. Is it because we no longer want anything from them? There is probably some one ill too, to whom we should realize we owe much if we thought back for a moment. What about paying a visit there?

May I talk to you for one moment about the art of friendship? By friendship, let us bear in mind that we can serve our generation better than by any other gift. I want to suggest that we should try not to be clumsy in our attempts to be friendly, especially with young people. We should try not to give the impression that we want to do them good. The person who thinks he is going to do good to some one is a most unpleasant person—self-conscious righteousness is an odious thing. We have all suffered, I suppose, from people who have wanted to do us good. I certainly have, and so no doubt have you. They are so heavy-handed. I am not referring to the older people who made life strong for us when we were young, and who were perhaps a little stern in our childhood, especially on Sunday. I confess that those who are always telling me how much they suffered from the number of services they were made to attend in their youth on Sunday, do not seem much the worse for it now. They like talking about it, but for the most part they retain some of that respect for religion and a great sense of the value of spiritual things which is lacking in those for whom Sunday is merely an extra day for games only. But there are people who do try to do us good—aunts are rather clumsy sometimes, at least some are! Sometimes an aunt has her favorite clergyman, the "dear Vicar", and she pushes him at us until we hate the man and his church, merely because she tells us how splendid he is. "I wish you had heard the dear Vicar this morning. He preached such a beautiful sermon." Under our breath we say how much we hate that dear Vicar, and thank goodness we were not at church.

* * *

I can't resist telling you that when I was very young, I was often sent to see an old lady who felt she ought to do me good. I remember one evening when she spent hours, as it seemed to me, talking of the evils of betting. As a matter of fact, horse racing has never been a temptation of mine, but the old lady kept me up so late and made me so angry that the next morning I gave 1s. to the butler, and asked him to put it on a horse!

If you would help people in a simple, strong and happy way, remember the advice on a match box—"rub lightly"—that is the only way to kindle a flame. Believe that our Lord will do most of the work, and commend those you love to the infinite wisdom of God. One thing further is needed—we should ask for the power to see what is now hidden from our eyes, and to hear the sounds that we usually miss because we are blind and deaf. We do not seem to see what is the matter with our neighbors; we do not realize that when they are cross and angry and irritable that it may be that things are very hard at home. If we knew of their trouble; of the weariness of their work, we should make so much more allowance than we do. Think of the sheer dull monotony of the lives of many thousands of men and women, girls and boys; the same old job is every day, the same old bus, the same old rush morning and night, and maybe in the evening nothing to do except sit at home, and wait for the rush to begin again next day, for there is not a penny to spend on fun. For many this goes on year in and year out—stitching the same old garments, hammering the same old typewriter, turning the same old wheel—with no hope, so far as they can see, of things getting better and easier.

Dare you make this prayer? "Lord, open my eyes that I may see and my ears that I may hear." It needs a good deal of bravery to make that prayer, because there are thousands of sights and sounds hidden from us now that if we should see and hear might drive us at times almost to despair. Yet there is no one in the world who helps so much as the person who has dared to make that prayer, and whose ears and eyes have been opened so that they can hear and see the sad and joyful sounds and sights of humanity at large. Christianity is so beautiful and radiant—it is such a wholly gracious thing if once we understand it. It is that which makes a man really love his neighbor, and run at all hours of the day or night to be of service if he can.

Since there is no purpose in these services unless some little acts of service follow from them, I want you tonight to think back over your life and ask yourself, "Who is there who once was good to me, for whom I have done nothing for many a long day?" Perhaps you could put that right this week. If you want still further to lead some one to our Lord, even while you feel that you need leading to Him yourself, just make this prayer for your friend, and then leave him at the feet of Christ: "O Lord, here is John, or Bill, or Mary. Please in Your own way and in Your own time, help them, and give me a chance of serving them, and of learning from them what they have to teach me."

If you know of some one who has lately taken a toss, and is out in the wilderness, right down on his uppers, who once did you a good turn, then even tonight on your way home drop in to see him. You may have a tobacco pouch on you, and perhaps it might end by both of you wanting to go on your knees and say together the "Our Father." Lots of lovely things sometimes follow from a smoke.

* * *

Oh, my dears, it is only love that really matters. I feel sure that we shall find this when we get to the Other Side. It is only love really that God asks of you and me; not great successful ventures, but just that we should love and go on loving, and that we should dare to pray to Him that He would open our eyes that we might see, and our ears that we might hear as His dear eyes saw and His dear ears heard when He pilgrimed amongst men in Galilee.—St. Martin's Review.

THE PALESTINE MANDATE.

(From The Montreal Gazette, Sept. 17, 1929.)

To the Editor of The Gazette:

Sir—Lord Rothermere's recent denouncement of Great Britain's mandate for the Holy Land reveals on his own part a strange disregard of the prophetic Scriptures, and of the Divine will and purpose concerning the Hebrew people. In the light of the Scriptures, I reverently believe that a greater honor was never conferred upon Old England, than that the Living God should have chosen her to be the guardian of the people of Israel, and of the Land of Promise. It is also most significant that the United States should be standing with England in support of the mandate, while all the reactionary forces of the world are, secretly or openly, hostile both to the two great English-speaking peoples and to the Jews. For England to go back on the Mandate, because of the perilous nature of her charge, would be to her eternal dishonor in the Eyes of God and of all sincere Christians. Stainless honor is a glorious heritage for England to hand down to her children from one generation to another.

In the light of what I have thus far written, Lord Balfour's recent and unreserved assurance that England will not desert the Jews, is matter of strong consolation. Moreover Ramsay MacDonald, the present Premier of Great Britain, used language as long ago as 1923, which leads us to believe that we can rely upon his powerful support of the Mandate. The passage here referred to is so singularly beautiful, that I recorded it in my book of remembrance; from which I now transcribe it, in the hope that it may be circulated far and wide. Ramsay MacDonald thus describes his own experience in the Holy Land in 1923: "Another spirit is in the new immigrant . . . The deep wells of tradition in his soul flow again with a refreshing abundance . . . . Carlyle has praised, in tones that thrill our hearts, him who subdues both Earth and Heaven; and I thought I met such men that afternoon at Nuris, hard by Gideon's Spring, and later on Mount Carmel, with dim lamps lighting up their faces, near by where Samuel testified to the power of Jehovah. One goes through Palestine now with the verses of many a prophecy on one's lips. One hears them as though the hills whispered them. The camps on the sea-shore, by the way-sides, on the hills, seem to have come by the command of the Ancient of Days; seem to have been arranged long, long ago, when it was promised that He will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth. Time has brought forth the event, and the Land of Israel again receives her children. She is worn out, she is neglected, she is in bondage to a stranger; but she still retains the treasures of her motherhood, and her children can find peace and happiness in her service."

In conclusion, let me add that I am not an "Anglo-Israelite." I write simply as a British loyalist, and a devoted lover of Israel, rejoicing in the heartening words of the Prophet Isaiah: "In days to come Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isaiah 27-6).

Let us not forget the striking words of Joaquin Miller, addressed "To Russia":

> "Who taught you tender Bible tales
> Of honey lands, of milk and wine,
> Of happy peaceful Palestine?
> Of Jordan's holy harvest vales?
> Who gave the patient Christ, I say,
> Who gave your Christian Creed? Yea, Yea,
> Who gave your very God to you?
> Your Jew! Your Jew! Your hated Jew!"

Surely we should pray for the peace of Jerusalem: for the friend of the Jew is the friend of God.

G. Osborne Troop.

Halifax, N. S., September 12, 1929.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all the peoples; all that burden themselves with it shall be sore wounded: and all the nations of the earth shall be gathered against it" (Zechariah 12:3, R. V.).

ADDRESS BY GENERAL A. T. GOODWYN

Note: This address was delivered by the Commander-in-Chief of the United Confederate Veterans, at their Thirty-ninth Reunion, held at Charlotte, N. C., June 5, 1929. It will be carried in The Southern Churchman in three divisions, this being the first.

1. My Comrades: On this patriotic occasion our hearts are filled with gratitude to our Heavenly Father for our prolonged lives and many blessings. We are happy to greet each other in the spirit of fraternal love with many proud, sad memories of common dangers, common sacrifices, and also glad memories of duty faithfully performed. We are now joyfully realizing a present blessing in being the invited guests of the hospitable people of the great, historic State of North Carolina. Of this state it has been said in more eloquent words than mine, that "no organized community in America is more distinguished than North Carolina for conservatism, fidelity to engagements, sterling honesty and courageous devotion to liberty, that she was not in haste to unite with the Confederate States as she preferred more conservative and successful resistance, but when her faith was plighted no state surpassed her in sacrifices, labors, and courage." Let us not forget that this Reunion is made sacred to us not only by the valor and sacrifice of our brothers in arms, but sanctified by inheritance from our Revolutionary ancestors in their exemplary and heroic struggle for the principles of political self government and religious liberty, the foundation stones of all free, equitable and orderly government.

2. At our Thirty-Seventh Reunion you passed a resolution, unanimously, calling on every veteran to do his part in correcting the errors and falsehoods of prevailing history by writing his experiences and observations in order that future historians may be informed of the causes of the War Between the States, and the spirit in which it was waged.

3. Near the close of the war the Confederate authorities at Richmond issued a proclamation to the people of the South in which these two prophetic statements were made, anticipating our defeat:

4. "The Southern States would be held as conquered provinces by the despotic government at Washington."

5. "Failure will compel us to drink the cup of humiliation, even to the bitter dregs of having the history of our struggle written by New England historians."

6. We fought four years of military war against almost incredible odds, in numbers, equipment and resources, and now in sober retrospection, in prayerful introspection, in the words of another we can say, "We thank God that at Appomattox we were with General Lee and not with General Grant."

7. We fought ten years of political war to save our civilization after our Southland had been divided into military districts by a sectional despotism of selfishness, greed, deception and hate. The wisdom, endurance, courage and loyalty of a people were never more sternly tested than during those deplorable years—selfish, designing politicians were the malefactors of that period, as they are the menacing influence to law and order, today. Must not that be false which requires for its support so much imposture, so much tyranny?

8. Cicero said, "The first aim of history is that it should neither care to say anything that is false, nor fear to say anything that is true, for the establishment of truth is never wrong." The great Napoleon in Italy said, "Respect for property, humanity and religion is our animating principle". This was his policy while invading the enemy's country. Read General Lee's orders to his troops when invading Pennsylvania and you will be impressed with the same humane policy in our intranational war.

Again Napoleon said, "Give the masses a toy and they will play with it and allow themselves to be led, provided always the leader is adroit enough to hide his real aims". This declaration was illustrated when the authorities at Washington—by simulation and dissimulation, led a large per cent of the people of the North into the war by appealing to their loyalty to the flag, which was their toy. The most active influence was in Boston, from the same source that for selfish economic reasons opposed the War of 1812, at that time themselves threatening secession, and rendering practical assistance to the British.

It was at this time that Massachusetts was called on for her quota of troops. Her Governor, Caleb Strong, informed the President that these troops could not be marched beyond the limits of the state unless, he, the President, came for them and marched them. (See "Butler's Book", page 139.) Here you see an open defiance of the Government during the perilous time of foreign war.

9. Without asperity in my heart for any man, alive or dead—but with proud devoted loyalty to Southern traditions and history, I shall recall some facts provoking the war, and uncover some impressive and indefensible facts of the war—doing my mite in promoting the full truth to aid scholarship in giving us an American history that will do justice to all concerned. Such a history would clearly show that it was a veiled economic war of industrial greed against the agricultural South.

10. The great mass of people in every section of our vast country are honest, patriotic and fairminded, and when rightly informed will stand for righteous justice in all relations and activities of life. Man cannot more impressively illustrate exalted patriotism than in freely offering his life in the perils of the battlefield in response to his sense of duty.

During our deplorable war such patriotism was proclaimed on hundreds of battlefields by volunteers in gray and by volunteers in blue. This combined courage is an assurance of safety from any foreign enemy. Do justice to all and all hearts will be one in patriotic spirit and purpose.

11. "Justice cannot be done to the people of the South if the acts of 1861-1865 are to be interpreted by the standards of today in the interpretations of past documents, even of the Scriptures. The critic should not be preoccupied by assumptions, nor prejudice questions and interests of a former period, nor be bereft of an apprehensive sympathy with the environments of those whose conduct and opinions are criticised. The impartial critic or historian must learn to put himself in his place—and cling less dogmatically to the present if he would accurately and justly portray the past. The series of reconstructive measures in bald usurpation, in mad tyranny, in the essence of diabolism, in the deliberate purpose to give supremacy to negroes in some states (as South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, where, by the census, they had the majority in population), and to Republicans in all, has no parallel in the annals of the Borgias and the Caesars", so declared our lamented comrade, Dr. Curry, whose statue is in Statuary Hall of our Federal Capitol.

12. When President Lincoln was inaugurated on the fourth day of March, 1861, the border States of Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Arkansas, having approximately two-thirds of the Southern population, had refused to secede, and their official delegates were pleading for a national convention, confidently hoping to adjust political differences and restore the Union. The three ex-presidents, Tyler, Pierce, Buchanan, were active in calling for this convention ,without avail. The authorities at Washington decided on war, and by duplicity and prevarication secretly organized a military force to capture and hold the forts on the Southern coast. The foremost of these forces was a squadron of men and supplies for Fort Sumter, a fort essential to the protection of the City of Charleston in the State of South Carolina. As these vessels appeared in view our soldiers did not count the mighty odds against them, but like their Revolutionary ancestors responded with open defiance and the Confederate flag waved over Sumter.

13. I now read to you an account by a learned and accurate English historian, Percy Gregg, of a premeditated purpose leading to this eventful day: "The Confederates had obviously done their very utmost to postpone or avert hostilities. Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Seward and their colleagues intentionally and deliberately forced on the collision, determined to leave the South no choice but between surrender at discretion and instant war. They gained their end. Northern feeling would not sanction an offensive war till every effort at peaceful settlement had been exhausted. Hence it was imperative if Lincoln's presidency was not to be signalized by the immediate dissolution of the Union, and to bring the Republican party into universal odium and contempt, or the Chicago platform to be ignominiously retracted, that the North should be hurried into war on false pretenses. The authors of the collision, the men who had publicly pledged themselves to peace while secretly preparing war, profited by their own duplicity, and concealed the transactions which had rendered the reduction of Sumter an instant necessity of self defense. The North was persuaded the South had struck the first blow—had fired on the uniform—had insulted the flag. The imperious self-will of a dictatorial democracy was successfully inflamed to fury; and from this point it would be as profitable to trace the sequences of fancies in a fever dream as to follow the unreasoning impulses of a deluded people. The double policy of the Republican cabinet—the peace negotiations—the war measures of Lincoln and Seward, had served their double purpose; had baffled the earnest efforts of the Confederates to keep the peace, and hidden those efforts from a great majority of the Northern people. The South had been forced, the North tricked into war. The players of that double game have gone where all hearts are open, all desires known. Their secrets cannot long be hidden from the scrutiny of biographers and historians; already, enough is known to reveal, not perhaps their individual intentions, but their collective responsibility."

Frazier's Magazine, published in London, represented a large body of foreign opinions when it said:

Abraham Lincoln is responsible to humanity and humanity's God for all the blood that has been shed in this unholy war, for every life and limb that has been lost, for every widow and orphan that has been bereft (see Wm. E. Dodd's "Lincoln or Lee, Pp. 157-158).

14. Now, I will read to you the words of Lord Wolseley, Field Marshal of the British Empire, in a letter to Capt. Gordon McCabe, a distinguished Confederate Veteran and educator of Virginia:

Farm Haven,
Glyne via Lewes,
Dec. 8, 1902.

Dear Col. McCabe:

x x x x x x

Anything about your war must always have a deep interest for me for many reasons. I shall refer only to one and it is this: that of all wars with which I am acquainted since classical times, your great war stands out as the most remarkable event. It certainly was the most remarkable event during the time that I have been on earth. I do not go into the question as to whether the South was right or whether it was wrong in what she did, but at any rate her struggle was for a great principle which she believed to underlie the Constitution of the United States, to be in fact the basis upon which that great government was formed by its illustrious founders. It is a point upon which, however, I feel great diffidence in expressing my opinion, but, I can as a soldier say, that no struggle for liberty was ever fought with greater daring, energy, knowledge of war, or more devoted patriotism, or in a more chivalrous fashion than the campaigns which will always make the Southern struggle a remarkable event in military history. All who took part in it have every reason to be proud for having done so."

15. It will be a proud and happy memory to the end that I was among the soldiers who faced the enemy at the threshold in the battle of Sumter. The first gun was fired early on Friday morning, April 12, 1861, and I now clearly recall the impressive incidents of that notable day. I see vessels with troops and supplies for the besieged fort at anchor in the bay, just beyond reach of our shells. I see and hear the thundering cannon continuously all day Friday and Friday night until noon Saturday, when flames begin to leap from the smoking fort, greeted by cheers from Confederate forces—for they knew the end was near. In a short while the big guns cease their horrible roar and we heard loud cheering as the white flag waved over Sumter—succeeded by more cheering as the wonderful news was heard that not a drop of human blood had been shed on either side. Terms were arranged whereby the commander was to salute his flag before hauling it down, and he and his garrison were to be transferred to the vessels in the bay. On Sunday, the fourteenth, when the flag was being saluted one or two men were killed, and a few wounded by the bursting of a gun. As the steamer with the garrison on board moved from Sumter to the receiving vessels in the bay, the Confederates along the shore stood in line with hats off, in honor of their gallantry in defense. Non-exploding shells were used by both sides in this bombardment.

16. At our annual Reunion held in Tampa in 1927 the convention unanimously passed the following resolutions:

RESOLVED:

1—We bow in grateful reverence to our Heavenly Father for prolonging our lives with many blessings and for His providence in bringing us together in a spirit of fraternal comradeship reviving many proud and happy memories of our patriotic struggle for the hallowed principles of local self government and constitutional law.

2—We appeal to each veteran to do his part in recording his experiences by speech, by letter and by facts that the future historian may be informed of the causes of the deplorable war, and the spirit with which it was waged. We prayerfully hope for the truth, the whole truth and only the truth of the tragic years of 1861-65.

3—When the war closed we returned to our homes and fields and found them desolated. Under military impositions we were confronted with such trying economic and racial conditions as never before had tested the wisdom, patience and endurance of a stricken people; conditions that in historic review, would bring a blush of shame to intelligent people throughout the whole country. While our duties were calling us to meet these serious conditions, partisans were writing history largely sectional, malicious and false. We appeal to fair minded scholarship for a truthful history that will do justice to all involved.

4—We congratulate ourselves that the thoughtful people of all sections are beginning to see what we have always known, that in pursuing our course we have been within our constitutional and moral rights as taught and exemplified by our Revolutionary ancestors. These facts are clearly illustrated in Statuary Hall of our national capitol, where the statues of Washington and Lee stand side by side, Washington in his Revolutionary uniform and Lee in his Confederate uniform, high exponents of the same sacred principles. We are proud of our leadership. We confidently hold it up for the contemplation of the historian as typical of the highest manhood. The four heroic figures in the administration at the sunset of the Confederacy, were Jefferson Davis, Commander-in-Chief ;Robert E. Lee, Commander-in-Arms; John C. Breckenridge, Secretary of War, and Judah P. Benjamin, Secretary of State. We challenge the student of the ages to produce their equals, in cultural graces, in unselfish patriotism, in patient endurance, in inflexible integrity, in nobility of character. We point to them with pride as exemplars for future generations.

17. It was this rich heritage that enabled our dear Comrade Sam Davis to symbolize to the world that honor is more sacred than life. I challenge the student of military history to recall such supreme self sacrifice to exalted duty as displayed by this martyred hero. It was this rich heritage that has given us the sublime memories of our comrades blind to fear on the battlefield, pale with hunger in camp, still standing bravely by the colors and faithful to the end. It was this rich heritage that inspired and sustained a son of a Confederate Veteran, as President, to carry on the mightiest war of ages without a breath of scandal, Woodrow Wilson. It was this heritage that placed a son of a Confederate Veteran at the head of the Federal military forces today, General Summerall.

(To be continued.)

AN APPRECIATION.

Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, D. D.,
Bishop Coadjutor of Mississippi.

The announcement that the fourth and last Course of "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer," by the late Bishop of Alabama, Dr. Beckwith, is now off the press, suggests an appreciation of the really great contribution that he made to the cause of Christian Education.

More than thirty years ago he published "The Trinity Course of Church Instruction," the fruit of years of study and practical experience. It was appreciated by many, but did not receive the generous and general use which it deserved. With infinite patience, great courage, and, indeed, heroic sacrifice, Bishop Beckwith gave himself to the expansion of his system.

He worked on the principle that the Bible is the Source-Book of the Church's instruction in faith and life, and that the Book of Common Prayer is her interpretative Text-Book. His four volumes or courses of instruction are an unfolding of the Church's process of Christian Nurture as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer. The first lays the foundation in a study of the Church Catechism. The second shows it in operation in the Church Year. The third shows its expansion in the services of worship and the offices in the Book of Common Prayer. The fourth, just issued, deals with the teaching as made through the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary. It is perhaps true that none but well trained and splendidly informed teachers can bring to their use effectiveness and impressiveness. I am convinced, however, that the essence of his principle is inescapably sound.

The greatness of the contribution made by Bishop Beckwith fills me with gratitude. His gift as a teacher, his deep loyalty to the Church, his fine perception of the essentials of her life, his appreciation of her Sacraments, the philosophy of her Orders, and her essential contribution to the training of character through her faith and morals, combined to make him and his work a genuine inspiration. I have never seen his equal, certainly not his superior, in the rare combination of evangelical prophet and impressive instructor.

In the preparation of the last Course, completing the work planned by Bishop Beckwith, but left unfinished by his death, Bishop Bratton, of Mississippi, collaborated and is named as one of the authors. A friendship and intimacy of many years permitted Bishop Bratton to know his mind and purpose better than any other man could know it. No one but he knows just the extent of his labors in putting the final touches on the Course. He deserves our gratitude for giving the Church the opportunity to see the whole as planned.

No good and true work can fail of its reward. No good and true man can labor in vain. I can but believe that time and experience will justify the sacrificial and devoted work of Bishop Beckwith in holding before the eyes of the Church her Book of Common Prayer as her best Text-Book and finest interpretation of Faith and Morals in the Nurture of her children.

Book Reviews

THOMPSON'S CHAIN REFERENCE BIBLE (Revised Edition.) Edited by Frank Charles Thompson, D. D., Ph. D. Published by B. B. Kirkbride Bible Company, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Those who are already familiar with the Chain Reference Bible, edited by Frank C. Thompson, know what a valuable aid it is to Bible Study, and will welcome the announcement of a Second Revised Edition.

The Chain Reference System remains practically the same as in the former edition, but in the New Testament, which is naturally used more than the Old Testament, one will find a combination of the Chain Reference System with a new Numerical System which directly links up all of the Comprehensive Helps with Scripture Text.

It cannot be too highly recommended to Bible students generally and especially to the inexperienced student who so often complains that he would like to study the Bible, but does not know how to go about it. This book seems to meet just that need. With the references printed out and in sequence one can immediately follow a particular line of study without the interruption of looking up the references throughout the Bible.

As a leader of a Bible class I would like to see this edition in the hands of every member, and shall recommend it most enthusiastically. N.

THE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION OF ADULTS: By Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. With Foreword by John G. Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church, and Introduction by Theodore R. Ludlow, Executive Secretary of the Department of Adult Education, National Council, approved by the Teacher Training Commission of the Department of Religious Education of their children. The real problem in religious Adults. Cloth. Pp. 115. Price, $1.25 (in paper, 75c.)

If adults properly appreciated religious education themselves, they would provide adequately for the religious education of their children. The real problem is religious education is not a child problem, or a youth problem, but a parent problem—an adult problem. Education in religion, even more than in secular subjects, is a life-long process, never completed this side of eternity. In the Church today, perhaps more than ever before, we need to emphasize adult religious education; and Bible study is naturally one of the chief elements in adult religious education. But a loyal Churchman is or should be a well-informed Churchman. He will know something of the history of the Church, its doctrines, worship, organization, and work. Then the religious problems of the day, such topics as the inspiration of Scripture, the religious bearing of the theory of evolution, the Sacraments, prayer, miracles, the missionary task, marriage and divorce, the Church in relation to industry, world peace and international relationships, etc., these problems are included in the scope of adult religious education, as of course is, too, the individual difficulties of Christian living.

Mr. Palmer's book is meant for, and should be seriously used by the leaders of the Church, rectors, vestrymen, Sunday-school superintendents, and leaders of Bible classes generally. We recommend it in the highest terms, for its simple directness, its balance, clearness, thorough practicalness, and spiritual values. The Synopsis classifies the whole subject with the logic, precision and clarity that is apt to make an enduring impression on the reader. If the principles and methods of this little book are made the basis of adult religious education on a wide scale through the Church, the dynamic of the Church's life will be vastly increased, and her contribution to society and the individual correspondingly abound. Get it. Use it in your parish.

E. L. Woodward.

TIDEWATER TALES: By William Garnett. Price, $4.

I am sitting in the sunlight on the porch of the Virginia Cottage, overlooking the lake—nestled between two mountains and fringed by laurel bushes and fir trees—at Mountain Lake in Giles County, where some think that Poe wrote (or put the finishing touches on) his immortal work of art, "The Raven". At any rate, I know of no surroundings in which one thinks of literature more naturally than here and especially of books which he has recently enjoyed. Such a book I found "Tidewater Tales," by Professor W. C. Garnett, to be. It is largely a picture of life in the Rappahannock Valley of yesterday and today, and is full of local color and romance.

Near the beginning is found a brief history of Essex County, where the author has spent practically all of his life, by Henry Wise Garnett. Then follows a detailed account of Professor Garnett's observations during an automobile trip through the most interesting portions of Essex, in which he tells, among other things, of the homes of the statesmen: Thomas Ritchie, R. M. Hunter and Muscoe Russell Garnett. The best of all are the stories, at once humorous, true to life, well told, and at times full of real pathos, drawn from life along the Rappahannock. What could be more entertaining or well expressed than the account of Professor Bentley's method of teaching a pupil what is meant by "inverting the divisor"? The boy "got the idea" at last when the teacher took him by the ankles and stood him on his head (literally). This same teacher, according to the author, had been deprived of salt herring for nine long months, while away in Louisiana. When he finally reached his Virginia home, he ate nine of the fish for supper. Then he went to bed, but soon was aroused by an awful thirst. Finding no water at hand, he walked, in the moonlight, down the path to the old spring and "drank and drank and drank, until he drank her dry"!

"Sora shooting on the Piscataway" is highly picturesque and realistic. But here I differ with the author on one point. The scientific books say that the sora are migratory and if the large numbers we find in the marshes remain all the year, why are not more of them seen in non-sora seasons, especially when the marshes are burned? I think the few which remain in winter are cripples. Migratory birds instinctively prepare in advance for their long flights—the sora doubtless by reducing their fat—and they have in their bodies infinitesimal air sacks, which they fill before "hopping" off. Of course, the sora rest at intervals between, say the Piscataway and Louisiana, in which State Mr. Garnett has shot (or shot at) sora in winter. If I did not know the author so well, I should be disposed to dissent from another of his statements. He tells us that he once killed at a single shot a woodcock on the wing and a rabbit on the run, and that the woodcock fell on the rabbit. He is careful to name his witness (witness not actually adduced). However, whether you know the author or not, this experience is matched by that of George Taylor, who told me he once shot from a blind at six wild turkeys and killed seven.

I have read from "Tidewater Tales" to friends, from time to time: "Arch, the Fiddler," "Bob Beazley's Coon Hunt," "Bob and the Panther" (the panther, when seen in daylight, turned out to be a small bull), and others of the sketches it contains, including that describing fox hunting before the Civil War and the other telling of the pathetic longing of an old darky, whom the author accidentally met up with in Louisiana, to return to the home of his youth on the Rappahannock. Mr. Garnett comforted him by explaining that all things in this world change—I have found that even the Dragon marshes change—and that conditions at his old home would be very different from what they were when he left it.

"Tidewater Tales" contains a number of pictures, including one of Porfessor Bentley standing the boy on his head. If you want to enjoy the book, write the author at Dunnsville, Virginia.—Alfred Bagby, Jr., in Free-Lance Star.

HUDSON STUCK.

The Ven. Hudson, Priest, Missionary Pioneer, Entered Into Life, Sunday, October 10, 1920, Fort Yukon, Alaska.

I know a man who walked, but you shall ride.
At his left side
A cross-hilt sword invisible he bore.
Whenever he came you could half hear
The clash of unseen golden spurs he wore.
Often when he was nigh, you heard nearby
Somewhere, a white horse stamping as it stood.
And that all this was so he did not know,
Thinking himself a poor priest far from good.
But I, who hear in part and dimly see,
Knew him for one of Heaven's chivalry.
For oh; my King has captains, and they stand

On either hand
In long, bright rows, and one by one they bring
The new men armed aright from the good fight
To stand among the captains of the King.
And neither you nor I shall ride thereby,
As not found worthy; but we sometimes mark
Men faithful unto death, to the last breath,
Out of the great waste spaces, or the dark,
And know that they are grown his chosen men
To ride behind Him when He comes again.
And so I dreamed the Knights of the Most High

As they rode by
On great white horses, and they came and came,
And, reining past the bed when he lay dead
Saluted him with swords of cold, pure flames,
Tested and true and tried and side by side
The long ranks stood and watched him face to face.
Wherefore he roused and rose; whereupon those
His peers and equals made for him due place.
And rode with him to where we cannot be.
West-over-sea they went: West-over-sea.

—Louise Tucker in The Living Church.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

Mr. Editor:

It is hardly necessary to say that I agree with everything Mr. Thom says.

Analyzing the situation, as I see it from my correspondence as National Secretary (or membership secretary) of the League, and from the correspondence I receive from all over the country, it is this:

1. I have definite and positive information (from one of our loyal Protestant Episcopalian Bishops) that it is the purpose of the majority of the Bishops to do their utmost to prevent any agitation or discussion of the "Anglo-Catholic" invasion of the Church, their idea being to preserve peace at any price. They do not want any disturbance, regardless of the consequences.

2. I do not have definite information that the Bishops have instructed their clergy to keep down agitation or discussion of the matter, but it is perfectly clear to my mind that this is the fact. I know it is true in Tennessee, because one of the leading clergymen in this diocese plainly told me so.

3. The Bishops do not intend to take any steps to put down the "Anglo-Catholic" movement, regardless of the extent to which it goes, as evidenced by the fact that the "Confraternity of Unity", which plainly says that it accepts all of the dogmas of Rome and is endeavoring to bring about corporate union with the Roman Church, is operating right in the very diocese of the Presiding Bishop of the Church, with no objection from him, and with the logical deduction that he approves of it. It even has members in California!

4. The Bishops, as a whole, have therefore deserted the Protestant Episcopal Church and are willing to stand by and see it undermined and destroyed.

5. The parochial clergy, in view of the attitude of their Bishops, are afraid, for obvious reasons, to come out and take a stand.

6. The law of the Church needs to be amended so as to provide to the laity certain remedies which they do not now possess, but the only way to do this is through legislation in the General Convention, and it will be impossible to secure such legislation unless the people in the pews all over the United States are informed and aroused to the situation.

7. In the process of informing and arousing the laity we are confronted (a) with the determination of the Bishops to suppress information and discussion as to what is transpiring in the Church, and (b) by the apathy and indifference of the laity.

8. The only hope we have of saving the Church is to get the information out to the laity—information couched in such simple language that they can and will understand it. And in this connection, as I see it from my correspondence with the people all over the country, what is needed is a statement, in pamphlet form, somewhat along the lines of the pamphlet I wrote a year or two ago, telling the people what the situation is, what the "Anglo-Catholic" party is trying to do, telling them of the refusal of the Bishops to take action, telling them of the necessity of rising up against that movement in their respective parishes and telling them of the necessity of remedial legislation and how to bring it about. The difficulty now is that this takes money and lots of it, and the question is how to get it. The League is sending out fragmentary information, with blank applications for membership in the League; but what they need is more complete information for them. It was said that my pamphlet was too long and that people would not read it, but this proved untrue, because that pamphlet went through ten editions, and about 30,000 were sold and distributed. The people did read it. It was directed at the resolution to do away with the Articles of Religion, and, notwithstanding that fight is over, I still receive requests for copies of that pamphlet, because of the general information it contained.

The situation is more acute than most people realize. Every day or two I receive a letter from somewhere telling of people leaving the Church. Right here, let me say that just as I wrote the last sentence, the postman handed me a letter from a prominent clergyman in the Western Diocese of New York, in which he says, "Furthermore, our parishes will be constantly torn and the Protestant element in our Church gradually drift out into other Churches, as they constantly are at this very writing". We had just as well "take stock" and realize the conditions as they actually are—unless there is, at an early day, some vigorous and concerted action by a very large number of Protestant Episcopalians, our Church is gone. I am neither an alarmist nor a pessimist, but I cannot shut my eyes to reports coming to me from all parts of the country. The reason so many people are leaving, rather than remain and fight is that they say that to remain and fight means stirring up a controversy in their parish; that this means alienating personal friendships and probable adverse consequences in their business relations, hence they feel that the best thing to do is to simply slip out quietly and go elsewhere. And they are leaving in large numbers; make no mistake about that. I see that a number of Bishops have notified the National Council that they cannot raise their apportionment for the work of the National Council for 1929, and that the aggregate of these deficits is right now more than $677,000! Is it possible to believe that the defections due to the "Anglo-Catholic" movement play no part in this deficit?

There is no escaping the stubborn fact that the time has come for concerted and vigorous action, otherwise our Church will surely be taken from us. If any man thinks I have overdrawn the picture, let him read the correspondence in my office, coming from all parts of the country.

C. L. Marsilliot.

Church Intelligence

Rural Life Plays, Posters and Programs.

In order to stimulate interest and provide materials for use in building up the Church's rural work, the Division for Rural Work of the National Council offers the following Awards!

$25.00—For the best play or pageant on "The Church and Rural Life", suitable for use during the Rogation Days.

$15.00—For the best poster on "The Church and Country Youth".

$10.00—For the best actual or possible "Program for a Parochial Celebration of the Rogation Days".

Rules.

Plays and pageants may depict the main theme or some phase of the same. They must be original and must not have been previously published.

Full length plays should require not more than two hours to present: one-act plays about thirty minutes.

Posters may depict either the main theme or some phase of the same: they must be original and inspirational.

Programs for parochial celebrations of the Rogation Days may describe celebrations already held or suggest programs possible in the future.

Plays, pageants and programs must be typewritten on one side of the sheet and must contain the author's name and address.

Posters should be made on one side of the sheet only, and be in the colors intended for the finished poster.

All plays, pageants, posters and programs submitted for award are to become the property of the Division for Rural Work, and must be sent to the Rev. H. W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, on or before the fifteenth of December, 1929.

The Commission on Pageantry and Drama, of the Department of Religious Education, will co-operate with the Executive Committee of the Joint Commission on Rural Work in judging the plays, pageants and Rogation programs.

The staff of the Publicity Department of the National Council will co-operate with the Executive Committee of the Joint Commission on Rural Work in judging the posters Awards will be made as soon as decision is made by the judges.

What Price Pioneering?

Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D.

Dr. Teusler is back in Japan, cheered by the knowledge that the crest has been reached and confident that those who understand the meaning and value of the Medical Centre will establish it.

In a way that is almost unique, St. Luke's is the expression of the personality behind it. Only real courage and perseverance, coupled with the vision of what modern medicine as we know and apply it might mean to the people of Japan, could have brought St. Luke's from its almost negligible beginning to what it is today—generally acknowledged as the most influential institution of its kind in the Orient.

That the spirit of its founder pervades the hospital is demonstrated by the fact that through the contagion of his own example, the staff of Japanese physicians and surgeons choose to receive for their devoted service the modest stipends provided by the hospital while they pour into the treasury the earnings from their private practice.

It is a matter of common knowledge that St. Luke's has been a pioneer in establishing the first College of Nursing in Japan, blazing the way in public health work and preventive medicine, in carrying on the first "well-baby" clinic, the first tuberculosis clinic, the first public nurse service in the empire. What, perhaps, is not so generally known is that almost every nurse who has been graduated from St. Luke's has gone to her work as a Christian woman; that every woman in the first class in the College of Nursing asked for baptism; that so Christian is the atmosphere of the hospital, with its daily services in the chapel and the constant ministrations of its chaplain, that year after year St. Luke's presents as many candidates for confirmation as any Parish in the Diocese.

These facts are almost details in the daily round of the hospital; yet nothing could more surely indicate that while he has given his life to the practical application of scientific medicine for the benefit of the people of Japan, Dr. Teusler has never himself lost sight of, nor allowed those working with him to lose sight of, the very purpose which makes it all worth while.

That the people of Japan appreciate what St. Luke's has done and will do for them is proved by the steady pressure upon Dr. Teusler to inaugurate additional undertakings of a public health character; by the contributions of the Japanese themselves; most of all by the gift from the Emperor's private purse.

Surely it is an investment offering unquestionable security in its record of past accomplishment and of waiting opportunities for usefulness. Why is it that some one to whom has been given the ability to invest large sums without seeking dividends in dollars, has not appeared who will covet the privilege of saying to Dr. Teusler, "Stay in Japan. Give to St. Luke's as only you can the leadership and supervision and inspiration needed at no time more than in the day of transition from hospital to modern medical centre. Here are the funds. Make perfect the demonstration of that to which you have given your life."—The Springfield Churchman.

Million Testaments Campaign.

The Million Testaments Campaign for Latin American Lands, according to most recent reports, is progressing in a wonderful manner. Already 200,000 Spanish Testaments have been printed, and are being distributed; while 300,000 more Spanish and Portuguese Testaments have been ordered, and the funds are largely in hand to pay for them.

Mr. George T. B. Davis, Secretary for the Campaign, writes that the other half million Testaments are sorely needed in Latin America, where darkness and desolation reigns through the people being deprived of the Word of God for more than three hundred years.

Prayers and contributions for the success of the Campaign are earnestly requested.

Archdeacon Goodman on Furlough.

Bishop Rowe of Alaska sends us the following news of one of our missionary heroes on the Arctic frontier:

Archdeacon Fred W. Goodman has just come out from Tigara, or Point Hope, St. Thomas Mission, on the Arctic coast, for a furlough, after four years' service. It took him forty-five days to make the journey. He is a representative of Trinity Church, New York, where he served as assistant until he offered himself for Alaska.

He came on the U. S. Cutter Northland when the cutter went to the rescue of sailors, whose ship was crushed in the ice on the Siberian coast. So the Archdeacon had a visit among the Eskimos of Siberia, where a Soviet functionary ordered the U. S. cutter to get away from the Soviet region.

The Archdeacon reports his people as being well, but he had to leave them to themselves, though under care of the teacher, but it is strange that in our great Church, of many clergy, not one clergyman could be found willing to take the Archdeacon's place for a year, care for a large congregation of Eskimos, while he was on a furlough, deserved and necessary. The Archdeacon will, during the year that he is out, tell to many the story of our Arctic work and the interesting life and character of our Christian natives.

English Editorial Comment.

We have learned, with mingled feelings, of the acceptance of the Archbishopric of Melbourne by Canon Head of Liverpool. The Church of England loses one of her most influential and valued sons, and Melbourne gains as its chief ecclesiastic a man of strong intellect, great personal charm, fervent piety and boundless energy. Of a brilliant Cathedral Chapter he is the outstanding member, for his sanity of judgment, persuasive candor and charm of manner, breaking down opposition by sheer conviction that the man knows what he talks about and has no personal end to gain. We lately reviewed his Pastoral Theology Lectures, "Six Great Anglicans", and advise all who wish to appreciate the frankness and ideals of the Archbishop-Designate to read a book which will tell them much of interest concerning men who influenced Nineteenth Century Christianity and, at the same time, give them a mirror in which they may see the writer. The Church in Australia receives a leader who will not be afraid to lead, and we are thankful that at the Lambeth Conference next year there will be another Archbishop who understands the Reunion question and sees clearly what is at stake. We ask for the prayers of our readers for a man, who at the call of duty, undertakes a great work for Christ and His Church.—The Record.

For loyal Churchmen controversy about the new Prayer Book and the old should be settled at last by the Message from the Archbishop of Canterbury. In effect this historic document accepts the book of 1928 as representing the mind of the Church of England and therefore as a standard by which the bishops ought to be guided in their direction of public worship. But it also accepts the decision of Parliament, and lays down that no minister is entitled to use the book in whole or in part "at his own discretion". It is for the bishops to use their discretion; and the Primate, while authorizing the use of the non-controversial forms and orders, definitely forbids the general practice of perpetual reservation. We welcome the Message, not because it endorses the policy of The Guardian, but because in our judgment it points the road to peace in our time.—The Guardian.

Winning Youth For God.

A Practical Effort: The young people's services on Sunday mornings in the crypt of St. Martin-in-the-Fields Church, London, were resumed last month. Last autumn the crypt was renovated, and so equipped with loud speakers connected with microphones in the church above that it can accommodate an overflow congregation.

The Sunday morning services at 11:30 for young people are, however, entirely independent of the regular morning service. The congregation is largely composed of students from the various schools and colleges in London.

Writing in regard to the services in the St. Martin's Review, the Rev. Pat McCormick says: "Our chief aim has been to develop a service in which they could take a real part, and find expression for their aspirations in a form of worship that is their own rather than what we felt they ought to need. We believe that we are gradually evolving something, although we have not already attained.

One Theme Only: "The main points that have received emphasis are that there should be the one theme running through the service; that the Bible reading and talk on the given subject should be at the beginning; that the group leaders should themselves offer subjects for thanksgiving and prayer such as their groups feel meet their needs each week, and that the service should culminate in a corporate offering of worship followed by two minutes' absolute silence.

"On entering each person is given a small writing pad on which he or she can make any suggestion, or give subjects for addresses, or ask any questions; these we somewhat audaciously try to answer the following Sunday. It is interesting to note that the young people quite know their own minds, one suggestion which we, in our middle-aged wisdom, really thought rather a good one was ruthlessly turned down as quite hopeless in their eyes, and we cheerfully submitted because it is their service, not ours.

What Others Want: "May it not be good for us clergy to be told what others want and for us then to try to do it willingly, even when our mentors are not half our age? Thank God, if we can learn, because there is much that they have to teach us; it may be given to them to see visions which are hid from our eyes and which the Spirit of God can only reveal to each generation in turn. Has not the Church lost a younger generation's vision at times through lack of elasticity and imagination?

"Today we have a younger generation more wide awake, more able to hear God's voice than probably ever before; it is for us to help them to hear that voice and to encourage them to listen. It is our hope that such services as this may help towards this end. At any rate, even after so short a time, we are convinced that the effort is eminently worth while. No doubt critics will say: Would not almost all of these young people be attending the ordinary service of the Church if you did not supply this extra one, and is it not therefore superfluous, and is there not also a danger in letting young people experiment for themselves in the matter of worship?

The Reply: "Our reply would be that statistics alone are enough to show that the rising generation is not showing any signs of regular attendance at the ordinary Church services, and that unless experiments of this kind are made it is difficult to see how we can fail to miss the contribution which they can undoubtedly make to the life of the Church."—The Church of England Newspaper.

Province of Washington.

The Eleventh Provincial Synod of Washington will meet in the city of Harrisburg, in the Diocese of Harrisburg, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 15, 16 and 17, 1929.

The headquarters will be at St. Stephen's Church, North Front Street, near Locust Street.

T. J. B.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Interdenominational Missionary Institute.

The fourth annual Interdenominational Missionary Institute opened a three-day session in Holy Trinity Parish House, Philadelphia, Monday, September 23. It was conducted under the joint auspices of the Federation of Churches, and the Woman's Interdenominational Union of Philadelphia and vicinity.

The Institute was divided into three groups, with afternoon and evening classes, and a supper conference each day. The evening classes were subdivided into studies for young people and studies for adults. Dr. William P. Shriver, director of industrial and immigrant work for the Presbyterian Church, conducted the evening adult classes, and Rev. Walter Getty, of the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada, conducted the forum discussions for young people.

St. Luke's Church, Germantown, was bequeathed $500 in trust to devote the income toward the education of young men of the Parish for the priesthood, by the will of Mrs. Ida Houston Twining, who died August 11, in the Germantown Hospital. She also gave $25 to William Schmidt, sexton, and $50 to St. Luke's ward of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament.

Chimes.

The chimes of St. Matthew's Church, Francisville, Philadelphia, were dedicated Sunday morning, September 22. Rev. C. Herbert Reese, the rector, conducted the service and preached.

No Gretna Green.

In a period of three years, the Rev. Dr. W. Herbert Burk, rector of the Valley Forge Memorial Chapel, has married seven hundred and twenty-two couples. And in that time he has only married one divorced person, whose marriage was sanctioned by the Bishop under the laws of the Church. Further, insofar as he has been able to learn, only six marriages performed in more than thirty years have ended in divorce.

Valley Forge is not a Gretna Green, he says. They can't just walk into the chapel as two, and out again as one. Before any ceremony is performed the couple must subscribe their signatures to a questionnaire.

Dr. Burk won the Philadelphia Civic Award for his accomplishments in building the Memorial Chapel. He is now planning the Washington National Memorial Church, to cost $10,000,000.

R. R. W.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

A Diocesan-wide extension campaign was launched by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Diocese of Pennsylvania at a supper conference on September 19, for the purpose of organizing a chapter, if desired by the rector, in each Parish not already organized. The campaign is in charge of a committee composed of representatives of the national and Diocesan Brotherhood organizations, with Rev. W. N. Parker, of the Church of the Epiphany, Sherwood, as Chairman; E. H. Bonsall, Vice-Chairman, and Leon C. Palmer, Secretary. The Diocese has been divided into ten districts for the purpose of this campaign, and each district is represented by a clergyman and a layman on the general committee.

During the next four weeks, a district supper conference will be held in each of these districts, to which the rector of each Parish, and two key laymen, selected by him are invited. At these conferences the new plans and opportunities of the Brotherhood will be presented by its national officials, and those rectors who desire to do so will be given an opportunity to arrange similar meetings in their respective Parishes for the purpose of presenting the plans and enlisting their laymen.

It is expected that a similar plan will be followed by the Brotherhood in several other large cities.

The Rev. Charles Alfred Ricksecker, minister-in-charge of All Saints' Mission, Darby, Pennsylvania, died Friday, September 20. The burial service was held at the church on Tuesday, September 24, at 2:30 P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Clergy Conference.

That the Diocese of Virginia is giving less than half as much to the national missionary work now as was given in 1920, was one of the facts brought out by Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council, in an address before a gathering of the clergy of the diocese in Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond, September 24. The all-day meeting was called by the bishop for the purpose of discussing plans for the fall financial campaign. Dr. Franklin said, however, that this "cooling off" of the churches toward the missionary program is not peculiar to Virginia alone, but is true of other dioceses as well. He attributes this to a lack of information of the work in the churches and stressed the need of a campaign of education in the missionary work for the church membership.

The day began with a service of the Holy Communion at All Saints' Church, following which Bishop Tucker delivered an address. He stressed the importance of meeting the quota for the mission work of the diocese, which he deems of transcendent worth, and explained the purpose of the meeting as being the consideration of the whole question of the support of missionary work of all kinds outside the strictly parochial. He cited the mountain work as an example of the finest in the missionary work of the Church.

The need for a realization of the fact that business can never take the place of spiritual things in the church was pointed out by the Venerable Frederick W. Neve, D. D., veteran of mountain mission work, in a brief address, in which he said that the Church should "get out of the subjunctive mood and into the imperative mood".

Dr. Franklin spoke at the afternoon session.

Addresses were also made by the Rev. George P. Mayo, D. D., head of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, and the Rev. Fred Goodwin, D. D.

The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, and chairman of the field board of the diocese, presided, and conducted an open forum at the end of each session for the discussion of the plans and suggestions for the campaign.

This campaign, with its goal the raising of the $190,000 quota of the diocesan budget for 1929, will include a series of regional missionary days to be held throughout the diocese and will close with an every member canvass on November 24.

The missionary days, which are for the purpose of arousing the interest of the laity in the missionary program, will consist of two sessions, either a morning and an afternoon session, or an afternoon and night session, and will be held as follows:

Monday, October 28 — Richmond, Grace and Holy Trinity Church.
Tuesday, October 29—Leesburg.
Wednesday, October 30—Warrenton.
Thursday, October 31—Charlottesville, Christ Church.
Friday, November 1—Harrisonburg.
Tuesday, November 12—Alexandria, Christ Church.
Wednesday, November 13 — Fredericksburg, St. George's.
Thursday, November 14—Warsaw.
Friday, November 15—Gloucester.

Accepts Call.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, Texas, has accepted a call from Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, and will assume his new duties November 15.

The call to Mr. Sheerin followed a recent announcement made to the vestry by the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., the present rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, to the effect that due to continued ill health, he wished to be relieved of active parochial duties. Dr. Burkhardt will become rector emeritus of the parish after November 15.

Dr. Burkhardt has served his parish for a number of years, and his illness necessitating his retirement, is the cause of great regret to his parishioners. He was first associate rector and later rector of the church when the two congregations of Grace Church and Holy Trinity Church merged to form the present Grace and Holy Trinity Church.

Mr. Sheerin is well known in Richmond. He has for the past two summers supplied for the rector of St. James' Church, for a month, while visiting with his wife, the former Miss Maria Williams, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis C. Williams.

After graduating from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1924, Mr. Sheerin became rector of Trinity Church, Fredericksburg, Virginia. He left there in January, 1928, to become rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco. It is a source of great pleasure to his friends in this part of the world that he is now returning to his former diocese. A fact worthy of note is that just five years out of the Seminary, Mr. Sheerin is coming to Richmond to take charge of a church with the third largest communicant list of any church in the diocese.

Convocation.

The fall meeting of the Rappahannock Valley Convocation will be held at St. James' Church, Montross, the Rev. Thomas P. Baker, rector, October 8-10.

The Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., of Richmond, will be the preacher at the opening service Tuesday evening. The Rev. John F. Burks will preach the convocation sermon Wednesday morning. Wednesday evening, the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., Chairman of the Diocesan Field Board, will be the preacher.

On Thursday morning, there will be a Corporate Service of the Holy Communion for the Woman's Auxiliary and the Laymen's Association. This will be followed with an address by Miss Margaret K. Montiero, Field Secretary of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education.

At noon Miss Louisa T. Davis will preside at a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mr. James M. Lewis at a meeting of the Laymen's Association. The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., will address the latter gathering.

It has been requested that all delegates and visitors notify the host of the Convocation, the Rev. Thomas P. Baker, Oak Grove, Virginia, the expected time of their arrival.

Piedmont Convocation will meet in St. Timothy's Church, Herndon, Rev. Alexander Galt, rector, October 22-24.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial Dedicated.

At the early service on Sunday, August 25, the Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity, members of the parish presented a beautiful brass communion rail to St. John's Church, Avon-by-the-Sea, New Jersey. The presentation was made by Arthur E. Barlow, the senior warden of the parish, the rail being received and consecrated by the Rev. James T. Lodge, rector of St. John's Church, Montclair, New Jersey, in charge of the Avon Parish during August. A bronze mural tablet bears this inscription:

> This rail is dedicated to the Glory of God, for use in St. John's Church, Avon-by-the-Sea, N. J., in loving memory of Frank Bolles Adams, 1855-1928; Anna Guild Adams, 1862-1928, for many years benefactors of, and devout communicants in, this parish. Erected August 25, 1929.
>
> "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . . Their works do follow them."

Both the rail and the tablet are from the studios of Thomas Brabson, Inc., Newark, N. J.

J. T. L.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

Meeting of Executive Council.

The October meeting of the Executive Council will be held on the second Tuesday in October, October 8, instead of the first Tuesday as provided by the by-laws. The change is made by reason of the fact that the first Tuesday falls on the first day of the month and it is felt that possibly this might prevent a full attendance of the lay members of the Council.

This is the most important meeting of the Council for the year as the by-laws provide that at this meeting the Department of Finance shall present to the Council a budget adequate to meet current expenses of the Diocese and General Church program for the succeeding year. The members of the Finance Department for the year 1929 are, Mr. J. D. Barlow, of Hope, chairman; Mr. S. A. Pernot, of Van Buren, and Mr. C. E. Ratcliffe, of Little Rock, and it is estimated that each member of this Department be present.

The meeting will be held in Christ Church Parish House, Little Rock, Tuesday, October 8, at 3:15 P. M.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Clergy Conference.

"Not five per cent of college students fail to attend church because of intellectual doubt or misgivings. It is extra-curricular and social activities that are responsible for students failing to attend church. Thus declared the Rev. H. H. Mitchell, rector of St. Mark's Church, Moscow, Idaho, and student pastor for the University of Idaho, in an excellent paper on "The Priest and Pastor in the Church of God", delivered before the full clergy conference of the Missionary District of Spokane, which was held at All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, Wash., September 17 and 18.

Each morning Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, S. T. D., Bishop of Spokane, who delivered a meditation. After the laying of preliminary plans for the opening of the new Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, Spokane, on October 20, conferences and discussion about the Every Member Canvass and the reviving of the district paper occupied the balance of the time.

Bishop and Mrs. Cross entertained the clergy at dinner each evening at All Saints' Parish House. All the active clergy of the district were in attendance.

T. E. J.

QUINCY.

Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Bishop.

Seventieth Anniversary.

Grace Church, Galesburg, Illinois, Rev. R. Y. Barber, rector, celebrated its seventieth anniversary September 20-22. The first evening was devoted to a historical program. The mayor of the city, Hon. M. J. Mack, told of the founding and growth of Galesburg, and with it was related the founding of Knox College. It was interesting to see how much the church in the community has to do with the growth of the city, and how its members served in many official positions.

The Parish history was written by Miss Williamson, dean of women at Washington University. The war chapter days were interesting from a political angle.

The tea at the rectory and the smoker at F. E. Sperry's residence gave time for the reading of letters from former rectors and far-away members. All of the letters contained an offering to be added to the Endowment Fund which was started last All Saints' Day. The Parish has been noted for its fine boy choirs, and many of them came back for the celebration. A number of choir medals were given. The first medal ever given to a choir boy was turned over by the owner, Albert Block, Bloomington, Ill., to the rector to be given away each year to some choir boy who has the best record. At the early Communion sixty-eight members received. The evening service was devoted to giving the Parish an idea of its outside responsibility. After Dean Wm. P. James, a former rector, had brought the Parish the greetings from the Cathedral, Mr. Heiligstedt spoke on the Diocese as our opportunity, and Mr. Essex on the National Program as our privilege.

The Parish has had twenty-nine rectors in the seventy years. No rector has stayed over six years. There have been six hundred and eighty-three baptisms, five hundred and forty confirmations, two hundred and twenty-seven marriages and three hundred and thirty-eight burials. The Parish is fortunate in having so complete a set of records, which must have been due to the faithful service of Thomas a' Becket Martin, who was lay reader from 1877 to 1924, and senior warden for a long time.

A booklet has been prepared giving a list of the memorials and gifts, with some information about the Parish, and the rector will be glad to mail one to any interested person.

The big need of the Parish is a rectory on the beautiful lot next door to the church, so that the work can all be centered at the church.

R. Y. B.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Memorial Service.

A service in memory of the late Rt. Rev. George Walpole, D. D., Bishop of Edinburgh, will be held in Christ Church, Georgetown, on Sunday morning, October 27, at 11 A. M.

Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., of Washington Cathedral, and warden of the College of Preachers, will be the preacher, and Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, rector of the church, will have charge of the service.

Bishop Walpole conducted a mission in Christ Church several years ago, and is remembered affectionately by all who came under his influence. This service will be the church's tribute to his memory.

Visiting Preachers.

Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, Bishop of Colorado, and Rt. Rev. James Wise, Bishop of Kansas, who have been attending the conference of the seventy clergymen appointed by the General Convention to carry on evangelistic work, remained in Washington over Sunday, September 22, and were heard in sermons at the Cathedral both morning and afternoon. Bishop Johnson also preached at St. Thomas Church. The morning sermon at the Church of the Epiphany on that day was preached by the Rev. Robert E. Browning, of Baltimore, formerly associate rector of Epiphany Parish.

Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, accepted an invitation to be the preacher at a homecoming service in his old home Parish on Sunday, twenty-second, and the sermon at Christ Church on this date was preached by Mr. John Wright, of the Diocese of Georgia and the Virginia Seminary. The service was read by Mr. Albert Rhett Stuart, of the Virginia Seminary and student assistant of Christ Church Parish.

Bishop Celebrates Anniversary.

Bishop Freeman, in accordance with his custom since his consecration, returned to the Church of the Epiphany on St. Michael's and All Angels' Day, September 29, to celebrate the anniversary of his consecration in the church where it took place. He preached the sermon at the eleven o'clock service.

M. M. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Rev. Dr. Frank M. Gibson.

The Rev. Dr. Frank Markey Gibson, seventy-two, for seventeen years librarian of the Maryland Diocesan Library, died suddenly on Tuesday, September 24, at his home at 235 West Lafayette Avenue, Baltimore.

On Monday, Dr. Gibson was at his usual place in the Library. He had suffered an attack of grippe, but apparently had recovered. On Tuesday morning his wife found him unconscious and he died shortly afterward.

In 1879 he was admitted to the bar and practiced law for four years. He then entered the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church and was made deacon in 1883 and ordained priest in 1884. For two years he served as curate at Emmanuel Church, then was called to the Church of the Holy Innocents, where he served one year. He then went to Grace Church, Elkridge, and served seven years. He then became curate of St. Paul's, St. Andrew's and Trinity Church, Washington, until 1904, he was called to the rectorship of Ascension Church, Westminster, where he stayed until 1912, when he was made librarian of the Maryland Diocesan Library.

From 1912 to 1914 he was editor of the Maryland Churchman, and from 1890 to 1899 he was one of the examining chaplains of the Diocese of Maryland and Washington. He was also a member of the Ecclesiastical Court from 1897 to 1898.

Dr. Gibson is survived by his widow, who was Miss Mary Plummer, and a son, Alexander Stuart Gibson.

The funeral services were conducted at his residence by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., and Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., and the Rev. Benjamin R. Lovett, D. D., and burial was in Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore.

N. E. P.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop.

Council of Colored Churchmen.

The twentieth annual Council of the Colored Churchmen of the Diocese of South Carolina met at St. Augustine's Church, Sumter County, September 19-22, and held a convention, said by many to have been the most pleasant as well as profitable session they have ever attended in that body.

The convention was well attended by clerical and lay delegates from nearly all of the stations in the Diocese. Of the fifteen only four failed to have a representative present.

As is customary, the Council opened its meeting with the celebration of the

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

OCTOBER.

1. Tuesday.
6. Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
13. Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
18. Friday S. Luke.
20. Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
27. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
28. Monday, SS. Simon and Jude.
31. Thursday.

COLLECT FOR NINETEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, forasmuch as without Thee we are not able to please Thee; Mercifully grant that Thy Holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule our hearts; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Aen.

I WILL NOT TELL THE WORLD.

I will not tell the world my woes.
It has full measure of its own.
Deep with its tear the time stream flows,
For man must reap what man has sown.

I will not tell the world my woes,
Nor wear my heart upon my sleeve.
There is a God Who loves and knows,
A heart that grieves with all who grieve.

And I will trust Him and be still,
Keeping the secret of my soul,
Knowing that as I do His will,
I shall appear before Him whole.

A man complete, from sin redeemed,
The struggle o'er, the sorrow passed,
I shall be all that I have dreamed.
God keeps His good wine to the last.
—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy.

Engineering Skill at Kirjath Sepher.

To the eyes of the archeologist, the walls of Kirjath-sepher hardly need explanation, they stand out so plainly. But to the eyes of visitors, all is not so simple and manifest. So we determined to clear a strong stretch of the stone revetment of the great wall that every one might see: "put our goods in the windows", so to speak, that even the most casual visitor may be impressed with the formidable greatness of this old fortress.

Our clearance of the houses of the city had progressed over all the section that we had marked off for first examination. We had gone down to the floor depth of the first period from the surface, Early Iron Two, reaching back from 600 B. C. to 900 B. C., about the time of Rehoboam. Before going down to the next period, Early Iron One, from Rehoboam back to the time of the Conquest, it was necessary to photograph all these walls found and then clear them away. While this is being done, we have put our whole force of workmen on the great wall south and west of the east gate. They are stripping away all the rubbish that has accumulated from the destruction of the parapet of the wall and from the dust which has blown in during a thousand siroccos. Thus the wall in its greatness and all its engineering skill, with all its curves and re-entrants and bastions may appear to every observer. Some two hundred feet along the wall have been almost entirely cleared and another day will add perhaps another hundred feet.

Some things noted two years ago may well be recalled, as we have now more fully confirmed them on this long stretch of the wall. The skill of the engineering appears more and more clearly as we proceed. The great stone Canaanite work at the bottom of the revetment is strangely characteristic. The stones were always laid in the skillful way described in 1926, being pointed in ward and downward toward the focus of an ellipse in such fashion as to get the advantage of the principle of the arch. Thus year by year, even century by century, the wall was pressed together and became stronger. A curved and wavy character was necessarily given to the wall by this use of the arch, requiring as it did the selection frequently of a new focal point toward which to point the stones in laying them. This was sometimes exaggerated until the curve amounted to a re-entrant in the wall, giving a still greater advantage of enfilading fire of weapons by the defenders. On the out-curve of one of these re-entrants, about halfway up to the top of the wall, still may be seen the base of a buttress, like the spring of Robinson's Arch at the temple area in Jerusalem.

* * * *

A curious turn of the wheel of life is going on right under our eyes. As we sort out the pottery, taking the few bits really useful for our purposes, and carry the rest away in baskets, a great help was growing up of those seemingly worthless old potsherds. The heap threatened to grow to great proportions. But not so; an Arab came with camels and great gunnysacks and loaded up those sherds and drove his camels away, the potteries to be crushed into powder and made again into pots! Good clay is hard to obtain and this is a pure source. Thus, the people of Judah under the kings, and back in the history of Israel in the Conquest, and even the old Canaanites before the Conquest, are made to serve modern industry. Is there anything that is not made to serve modern industry in this materialistic age of money-making?

Another portion of the wall is just now claiming our attention, and arousing renewed interest. The great motto underneath the city discovered in 1926 was never completely clear of debris. While waiting for our surveyer to finish surveying, leveling, and plotting the series of house and factory walls in the section of the city that we have this year uncovered, preparatory to clearing away these walls and going down to the next earlier level, Early Iron One, we set a few of the men under a sub-foreman to work at the grotto and the portion of the wall east of the east gate which adjoins the entrance into the grotto.

Whether this grotto was used only as a place for storing grain and water, as by the Israelites it was, or whether also it was earlier used by the Canaanites as a place for tombs is something we wish, if possible, to determine. We broke into the grotto in 1926, but there is a hint that there may have been at, or near, the same place a regular entrance to it. At any rate, there is a curved wall in front of the place at which we broke in that seems to have had no other purpose than that of a court before the entrance.

As we finish our work upon the walls and the section of the houses within the walls, the clearance of which has thus far been undertaken this year, it is becoming increasingly evident, perhaps we may say conclusively evident, that the final destroyer of the city was not Nebuchadnezzar, as suggested last year, but Sennacherib. In 701 B. C., while besieging Lachish, he attacked Jerusalem; according to his own report, shut up Hezekiah "like a bird in a cage". But he prudently refrains from saying that he possessed himself of the bird or of the cage. The Bible tells us no more of the siege of Lachish or of its outcome. The Egyption inscriptions and pictures represent the capture by storm of that fortress. The Bible does tell us, however, that Sennacherib destroyed the fenced cities of Judah. This one, as near Lachish and one of the most important, would certainly not be passed by.

Now the evidence that Sennacherib actually did destroy Kirjath-sepher is this: the jar handles with royal stamps came into use with Hezekiah and continued very common until the end. Thus far not one of these stamped jar handles have we found among the many hundreds coming out of the debris continually. This can hardly mean anything else than that this fortress was finally destroyed in the time of Hezekiah by the raid of Sennacherib.

This is most important for the history of civilization and culture of the period ending with Hezekiah, and reaching back to the time of Rehoboam and the previous destruction of Chishak. The constant representation of the advanced critics is that the high culture reflected in the prophets is much later and hence the prophets themselves are later and the whole fabric of revelation is brought down to a much later age, and the representation of the books at their face value is to be discredited. But here we find thus before Hezekiah the high culture and great industrial development shown by the ruins here, and exactly corresponding to the picture given in the prophets for the time they ostensibly represent. The scores of loom weights coming out of nearly every room in the houses certainly represent the advanced textile industry which we showed the last season from the textile factory then discovered of about the time of Rehoboam or just after. Added to this is now the certainty that the dyeing industry also was established in Israel contrary to former general opinion, but as evidenced by the completely equipped large dye house found this year. These industries together with the great engineering skill displayed on the walls and gates, not only confirmed, but advanced by additional evidence this year as we clear the walls, make it certain that the industrial life of Israel in the Age just preceding the great prophets was all it is represented to be by the writings of those prophets and any excuse for dating their writings later is wholly annulled. Obadiah, for example, whose date is concededly uncertain, and who has been thrust down even as far as the second century B. C., fits exactly into the seventh century.

If our work here does nothing else, and we hope for still greater things, the establishment of the high state of civilization at these early periods is well worth the expenditure. It is exactly in accord with the conclusions of Professor Sellin, conclusions that compelled him to reverse his views on the civilization of the land and to carry the earliest books back again to the Mosaic Age to which they have always claimed to belong.—Condensed from an article by M. G. Kyle, D. D., in S. S. Times.

The Efficacy of Prayer.

The young man who had been examining the row of shining instruments that lined the operating room turned abruptly to the great surgeon.

"Of course you do not believe in the foolishness called prayer," he said.

"And why not?" the surgeon asked, as he held a delicate instrument critically to the light.

"What! A man with your scientific training!" the younger man exclaimed in surprise.

"And why not?" the keen-faced elderly man repeated.

"Oh, come now, doctor," the young man said, smiling. "Surely you cannot believe that God would upset all the laws of nature to grant the request of some one of His creatures. You know how inexorable are the laws of nature."

"That's exactly why I believe so strongly in the efficacy of prayer." The words were spoken quietly but with evident seriousness.

"Explain the riddle, please," the other demanded, and his manner was grave now.

"Why, that's easy enough to do," the surgeon said. "Prayer—or rather faith which is the motive of prayer—is just as much a force of nature as gravity. The skeptics seem to think that if a prayer were answered all the laws of nature would be smashed to pieces. That is not necessarily the case. Let me illustrate: Why does this instrument that I hold in my hand not fall to the floor?"

"Why, because you are sustaining it!"

"Exactly. And yet the law of gravitation is not wrecked nor denied. It is merely superseded for the moment by a higher law—the law of life.

"Now, as we ascend in nature we find this—the basic laws of a higher plane have just this power of over-ruling some of the laws of a lower palne.

"Gravity is the great law of the inorganic world. It is still a law in the organic world, but the great law of the organic world—the law of life—is superior to it. The plant thrusts its stem upward in the face of gravity; man walks about in defiance of it.

"Then why may there not be a law in the next plane of nature—the spiritual—that, just as naturally, supersedes some of the laws of the organic world? The plant reaches down into the inorganic world, and grasping the dead atoms there endows them with life and the ability to rise superior to the force of gravity. May not the spiritual world do as much for the material world without outraging a single law of nature?"

"Why—why, I guess it could," the young man stammered.

"It not only could—it does!" the surgeon declared emphatically.

"Then there is something in prayer, after all?"

"'The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much,'" the doctor quoted. "I tell you, my friend, prayer changes things." And the young man knew from the light on the older man's face that here was one man at least for whom prayer had changed things—many things.—Youth's Companion.

As the welcome of the multitude for Jesus diminished in proportion as they learned the claim of the cross on Him and His; so, too often, does our lip-service diminish before the demand of real self-sacrifice for His sake. Let us then, think how far we welcome the true Christ with His command of redemptive self-sacrifice to the citadel of our hearts.—Exchange.

For the Young Folks

For The Southern Churchman.

TALKING TO GOD.

Maude F. Mumma.

When I talk to God He answers me,
In bird and flower field and tree;
In murmers soft and accents low,
As tiny streams to brooklets flow.

In smiles and sunshine that I see
Each day poured out so lovingly;
In raindrops sent to cool the earth,
He speaks to me in Death—in Birth.

New lessons that I fain would know,
Each day as seasons come and go;
To newer life to higher power,
E'er leading me from hour to hour.

And when I ask He speaks again,
In loving deeds through hearts of men;
And when I cry I seem to hear,
His loving voice speak in my ear—

Whate'er betide, whate'er befall,
I will hear my children's calls.

"Greyfriars' Bobby."

Among all the noble monuments that adorn the beautiful city of Edinburgh there is one of modest pretensions, that rivals in popularity, among children, the proudest of them all. It stands on George IV Bridge, and is dedicated to the memory of a faithful dog, called "Greyfriars' Bobby". In 1858 the owner of this little terrier was buried in the churchyard of Greyfriars, that historic spot where, two hundred years before, the Scottish Covenanters had signed, many of them with blood drawn from their own veins, the famous Solemn League. For three days after the funeral, Bobby, the chief mourner disappeared. On the day following a spectacle of woe and hunger, he entered Trail's restaurant where, with his master, John Gray, he had been a regular mid-day visitor. On two successive days, and punctually at one o'clock, each day when the loud gun booms out the hour from the historic castle, Bobby came for his meal, which consisted of a bun and a bone. The interest of Mr. Trail having been aroused, he followed the dog to discover his whereabouts, and found that he had taken up his abode on the freshly-made grave. Frequent attempts to lure him away, and even to chain him up were unavailing, for piteous howls indicated that such methods were a mistaken kindness. For nine long years Bobby received his daily bounty, and became the favorite of friends at the resturant, and of visitors in the churchyard. Then a tragedy almost happened. Mr. Trail and Bobby were summoned to the Court, and in due course brought before the magistrate, Bobby for the crime of "vagrancy", and his benefactor for "harboring". If Mr. Trail must feed a masterless dog, the Law enacted that he must pay the license, or the animal must be shot. Justice, however, was tempered with mercy, and both offenders were set free "with commendation". For five years more, the wonderful vigil was kept at the silent grave, interrupted only by the severity of weather, during which Bobby would creep under one of the flat tomb stones. Then he, too, was laid to rest beside his master, and the spot, marked by a rose bush, is visited by numerous admirers. One of these was the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who was so impressed by such a fine example of fidelity that she erected a monument in the form of a drinking fountain, surmounded by an image of the dog, taken just before his death. It bears the following inscription, which is read with pride by visitors from all parts of the world:

A Tribute to the affectionate fidelity of
"Greyfriars' Bobby."
In1858 this faithful dog followed the remains of his master to Greyfriars' Church, and lingered near the spot until his death in 1872.

—The Presbyterian Messenger.

Finding Four-Leafed Clovers.

Oh, Grandma, I can't find a single four-leafed clover!" cried Nettie. And she looked as if she were just ready to cry. There were little tiny bits of tears away down in the corners of her eyes just ready to come out. And her lips twitched at the corners—you know—just like when you feel real badly about something.

"And I found seven. Just see, Grandma," said Nellie, the other twin. Then she ran away into the clover to find some more.

"Now I will have to tell you some four-leafed-clover secrets," said Grandma to Nettie. "Come with me and I will show you how to find four-leafed clovers."

Grandma and Nettie went into another part of the field away from where Nellie was.

"Now," said Grandma, "you know there are two kinds of clover. The red clover that has the big deep pink balls on it and the big leaves and stems. Then there is the white clover that does not grow nearly so tall as the red clover nor have such big leaves and stems; and it has little white balls on it.

"Oh! yes, I know the two kinds, Grandma," answered Nettie. Why, she had known that ever since she was a teenty weenty girl.

"Now, in a place where both kinds of clover are growing," Grandma went on, "they will mix a little and you will find clover with larger leaves and stems than the white, but not so large as the red, and with pinkish white balls on them. Four-leafed clovers are what you might call a freak of nature and there seem to be the most of them where two kinds of clover are mixing."

Then Grandma and Nettie went along the edge of the clover field. There was white clover close to the fence and red clover out in the field and along by the path was some clover of the kind Grandma had been telling about, mixed from two kinds.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" cried Nettie, "there's a four-leafed clover the first time." And she ran and picked it and ran on to another clump of the mixed kind of clover to look for more.

"Come, come," called Grandma. "Come back and look all over the plant where you got your four-leafed clover and you will probably find more." Nettie came back and sure enough, there were a lot more of the four-leafed clovers in the same clump where she got the first.

"That's another secret about four-leafed clovers," explained Grandma. "When you find one, you will generally find several others in the same place, because they seem to grow in clusters."

And what do you think? In about half an hour, Nettie found twenty-two four-leafed clovers. And Nellie didn't find nearly so many, because, you see, she didn't know Grandma's two secrets, but Nettie told her, of course.—Lissie C. Farmer, in The Methodist Protestant.

The Little Dog That Went to School.

There is a little dog living in New York City whose name is Bum. He seems to like his name, but it must be that he does not understand the meaning of it. Even so, he was the most interesting speaker at a big school meeting during "Be Kind to Animals Week". He didn't shake hands, but he actually appeared on the platform of a school auditorium, where he faced seven hundred school children in behalf of stray and homeless dogs.

No one knows where Bum was born, nor where he lived when he was a puppy. He is not the kind of dog whose ancestors ever took prizes at dog shows. But he knows a lot, and has feelings.

Once when he was cold and hungry and friendless, he did a sensible thing. He trotted to a police station and most politely asked for food and shelter. The police adopted him then and there. E'en though his coat was soiled and ragged, they could see that he was a gentle loving dog, and that all he needed was a good home. They fed him and bathed him, brushed his coat, patted him on the head, and told him he was a good dog. They named him Bum. And Bum almost wagged his tail off, he was so glad.

Then came a day when Bum was invited to go to school. His favorite policeman went with him.

The children sang and spoke pieces all about kindness to animals. One little girl went up on the platform, made a bow, and read a composition that she had written on "Be Kind to Animals". Then she was given a prize of five dollars because hers was the best composition in her class.

After that a teacher told the children the story of Bum. She seemed to know a great deal about how it felt to be a homeless dog, shivering, and hungry, and unloved. Next, the children presented gifts to him. Of course they had known that he was going to be there that day as the most important speaker for homeless dogs.

They gave him a basket in which to take naps and to sleep in at night. He didn't know what to think of a dog basket, but when his policeman friend told him to climb in and lie down, he wagged his tail and did so, because he is such a polite, good dog.

The children also gave him a license to wear round his neck, and blankets to keep him warm in cold weather.

Bum made a short speech when his policeman friend advised him to do so. Of course he didn't say much. He had never before faced seven hundred children, all glad to see him; so he may have been a bit bashful. Anyway, he gave a few friendly barks of gratitude and didn't seem to know what to think when the children clapped and clapped their hands.

After that there was singing and more speeches.

Bum behaved perfectly until a newspaper man tried to take his picture on the platform, and Bum wouldn't stand that. He didn't care to have his picture in the newspapers, and said so. Three times he ran off the platform and to be dragged back. It made the children laugh and shout to see how badly Bum behaved about having his picture taken.

At last Bum ran off the platform straight to his friend, the policeman. Perhaps the kind policeman understood how Bum felt about letting a newspaper man take his picture in school. Anyway, when Bum said to his friend, "Let's go!" they went. Besides, the policeman knew that Bum might not like to stand on the platform and shake hands with seven hundred children after the meeting. So, while the children laughed long and merrily, Bum and the policeman made their good-bye speeches to the teachers and went home to their police station as fast as they could travel.

Perhaps you know by this time that this story about Bum is strictly true. You must know, too, that New York City is not the only place where there are unfortunate dogs and cats who should be treated kindly.—Margaret Fox, in Christian Register.

CHILD OF GOD.

Dear child of God,
Be still and know
He walks with you
Where'er you go.

Dear child of God,
You need not fear;
His power to help
Is always near.

Dear child of God,
Know all is well,
Since in His love
You safely dwell.

Dear child of God,
Trust Him today;
If dark the path
He lights the way.

Dear child of God,
From worry cease;
He is right here,
Rest now in peace.

—Greenville Kleiser.

For The Southern Churchman.

Imitations.

Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson.

"Whatever you do, or are, my boy, never be an imitation!" The speaker was Robert Bond's father and the occasion was a discussion that father and son were having over George Williams' failure to make the school athletic team. George recently had moved into town and claimed that during his residence in a town in another state he had taken several medals for athletic work. In the preliminary tryout the physical director found that George knew nothing of athletics and the lad was forced to confess that he adopted this method in order to be allowed to take part in the game.

"Never pretend to be what you are not: never be an imitation! Be your real self, whenever it may be. Your father has seen many years of life more than you have, my son, and his judgment is to be trusted.

"I remember some years ago, when I followed the sea, that I was invited to dine at the home of a prominent Englishman. Seated at the table opposite to where I sat I noticed a gentleman who had in the buttonhole of the lapel of his coat a most beautiful carnation. Its color surpassed anything I ever had seen and one or two others, seated near me, remarked the same.

"Looking at the flower more closely, I noticed that it had been freshly watered and that some of the drops had fallen on the wearer's immaculate shirt front. Imagine my surprise when I saw that, wherever a drop of water fell, it left an ugly, pinkish splotch on the bosom of the shirt. The owner soon noticed this and startled the diners by making a public confession. He said that he had neglected securing a boutinnier until the flower marts were closed and that he therefore had been compelled to resort to a very clever imitation flower. Had he not overdone the matter by putting water on the imitation carnation his deception never might have been discovered.

"As I thought of this embarrassing situation, I was reminded that some who profess religion are like artificial carnations. The profession is creditable enough but, sooner or later, they are found out and the counterfeit exposed. The profession of Simon Magus was artificial and Peter was not long in detecting and exposing it. (Read about this in the eighth chapter of Acts, verses 9 to 24.)

"So, my son, I would rather have you be your real self than to be an imitation. For, no matter how clever you are, your artificiality will show itself; quite likely to your discomfiture.

The Scout Who Played Traffic Cop.

He was trudging down the street, in his khaki shirt, cotton puttees and stiff-brimmed Scout hat with the three dents in the crown. He was wondering what "good turn" he would find to do that day, as I stepped alongside of him, and got in step with him.

"Hello, Harry!" I greeted him; he lives around the corner from me and is patrol leader to the Scout troop in our church. "What's up today?"

"Don't know yet; going to see. Got to be there at two. Got a blister, too."

"Why do you go? No idea what they want?"

"Go 'cause it's orders—blisters don't count. I've done most everything, sold Liberty bonds; distributed bills; kept the Fourth of July crowds back in line; carried suitcases for the C. E. girls; stopped a man's artery from spouting—I, crickets! what's wrong here?"

At the downtown street intersection ahead, the traffic was in a tangle at the busiest hour, and no traffic officer on the spot.

"Say, she's tied up in forty bow-knots," said Harry. "Why don't the cop come?"

That's what every one was wondering. Then a portly man brushed up—the mayor. He took in the situation; his eye lighted on the sturdy Scout.

"See here!" he snapped at Harry, something's happened to the cop; next best thing's a Boy Scout. Snap into it and unsnarl this mess; you can do it; it's orders."

"Yes, sir," responded Harry, saluting, sober as a deacon. Orders were orders. People stared at first as they caught sight of the drab-colored youth taking the missing traffic cop's place.

Then, in the matter-of-fact way of one used to doing whatever he is ordered to do, in the best way he knows, Harry began blowing his patrol leader's whistle, and windmilling his arms. He was perfectly cool, and master of the situation. And the tangle began to untangle. Steady, ordered streams were flowing first this way and then that, when the belated cop arrived.

The Boy Scout had made good where it took steady nerve and manly grit. He's a neighbor boy, in our Scouts.—Pittsburgh Advocate.

Start Now to Earn $50.00 to $500.00

For Your Church, School or Society

BY SELLING

The famous Premier Assortment containing 21 Christmas Cards which are extremely attractive and popular. Make no mistake and order this assortment for your organization to sell, as it contains what people expect of a box assortment. Remember friends by showing these cards means to sell the box and by selling 100 boxes you will earn $50.00, which is 100 per cent profit.

COLOR APPEAL—in this assortment is exceptionally good. Lots of real fine coloring which is most attractive in the different shapes and sizes of cards.

OUR DESIGNS—of "The Wisemen," "The Cathedral," "The Village," "Snowdrift" and "Christmas Shopping" are just a few of our outstanding numbers.

VERSES—these cards are brimming o'er with the Christmas Spirit of Joy and Gladness too "Thats the kind of wish that folks like us like to wish for folks like you"

LINED ENVELOPES—which are very flashy and add greatly to the attractiveness of this assortment. They really do appear out of place in a box assortment due to their extravagance.

FREE WITH EVERY 25 BOXES, A SAMPLE BOX FREE
Remember the value of each sample box is $1.00

No. of Boxes	Cost per Box	Sells for	Cost You	Profit
25	60c	$ 25.00	$15.00	$10.00
50	55c	50.00	27.50	22.50
100	50c	100.00	50.00	50.00

EACH BOX SELLS FOR $1.00. SAMPLE BOX 60c

TERMS: One half of the cost with order; balance in 15 days. We pay the carrying charge if order is paid in full.

THE CHURCH SUPPLY CO., INC.,
Blossburg, Pa.
Clip or Copy and Mail Now
Kindly enter our order for boxes of the Premier Asst.

Name.....

Address.....

Be Ready When Your Opportunities Arrive

Do you realize saving money will not give you financial independence, and yet it is the only way to attain it? The reason is, to be in position to take advantage of business opportunities you must have ready cash.

Keep a growing savings account with us!

State-Planters Bank and Trust Co.
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

The IDEAL CRUISE

to the

HOLY LAND MEDITERRANEAN
and
PASSION PLAY

DROP the curtain on Western learning. Cast your worries aside and join THE IDEAL CRUISE to Northern Africa, Southern Europe, the Holy Land and the Passion Play.

Let the spell of the Orient, the belled beauty of minarets and mosques seep into your soul.

Walk the same paths our Saviour did two thousand years ago. This is the greatest inspiration possible.

Now, for the first time, a world wide travel organization sponsors this personally conducted cruise. As the result of 53 years experience you will have an itinerary, sight-seeing and all details perfected far in advance. Yours will be a complete and lasting Satisfaction. Write Now For Full Information.

62 DAYS $625

Send the Coupon

Simmons Tours B 6
1328 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Gentlemen: Please send me your descriptive booklet on the Ideal Cruise. No obligation, of course.

Name .....

Address .....

Make big money selling Christmas Cards and Gift Dressings. Handsome, complete line, Free sample book. Big commissions. Individuals or church societies.

Social Greeting Card Co.,
Graphic Arts Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

FROM A SHUT-IN

I would appreciate subscriptions and renewals for the following magazines:

American Magazine	$2.50
Colliers, the National Weekly	$2.00
Cosmopolitan	$3.00
Delineator	$1.00
Good Housekeeping	$3.00
Modern Priscilla	$2.00
Pictorial Review	$1.00
Saturday Evening Post	$2.00
Ladies' Home Journal	$1.00
Nature Magazine	$3.00
McCalls Magazine	$1.00
Woman's Home Companion	$1.00
Popular Mechanics	$2.50
St. Nicholas for Boys and Girls	$4.00

EDWARD P. BROXTON
Keysville, Ga.

THE PERRY PICTURES

ONE CENT SIZE
3x3½. For 50 or more.
TWO CENT SIZE
5½x8. For 25 or more.
Send 50 cents for 25 on The Life of Christ or 25 Art Subjects or 25 for Children, 5½ x 8. Or 50 for Children, 3 x 3½.

LET your children make companions of world's most beautiful pictures. Culture, happiness and beauty will be added to their lives.

Use them in the Sunday School
Send 15 cents for Catalogue of 1600 Illustrations
The Perry Pictures Box S67, Malden, Mass

Your Church Festivals

Are you making them MEMORABLE to the children?

CHURCH PAGEANTS

will help you to create vivid moving memories full of deep spiritual lessons for old and young.

Three Short Pageants by ELIZABETH McFADDEN

For Christmas: "Why the Chimes Rang." Has been presented more than two thousand times.

For Easter: "The Boy Who Discovered Easter." "Has intrinsic beauty and a great human message."—Reverend Randolph Ray.

For All Seasons: "Knights of the Silver Shield." On loyalty in humble tasks. (Just Published).

Price: 35 cents each.

A small royalty for performance. Address:

SAMUEL FRENCH, INC.,
25 West 45th Street, New York City, or, 811 Seventh Street, Los Angeles.

THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

October 1, 1929

The sixty-seventh Annual Meeting of the Life and Contributing Members of the Evangelical Education Society will be held on Thursday, October 17, 1929, in the Board Room of the Platt Building, 130 South Twenty-second Street, Philadelphia, Penna., at 3:45 P. M. for the election of officers and the transaction of such other business as may be brought before it.

S. LORD GILBERSON,
General Secretary.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System

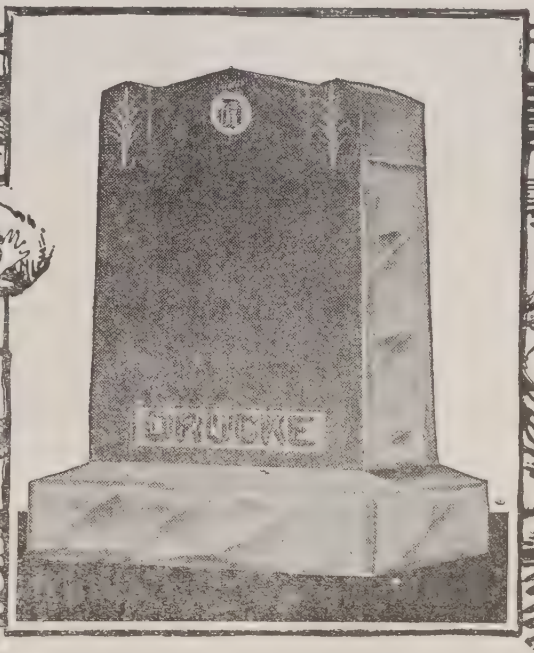
Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads



RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

"That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying,

What mean ye by these stones?

Then ye shall answer them, these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever." Joshua 4:6-7.

JUST as Joshua commanded the twelve men, one from each tribe of Israel, to take from the bed of the river Jordan, where the feet of the Priests stood firm, each man a stone and with these stones build a monument to commemorate the passing over Jordan—So, as our loved ones pass from our immediate presence over Jordan, should we select the most perfect, the most beautiful and the most lasting stone for the monuments we erect to commemorate their beautiful virtues and accomplishments.

Specify WINNSBORO GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability, combined with its adaptability to design make it the ideal monumental stone with which to perpetuate the memory of life's greatest virtues.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Write for free descriptive literature.

Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

B. H. Heyward Treas. & Gen. Mgr.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates in contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

BOARDING—TIDEWATER, Va.

WANTED, IN REFINED COUNTRY Home, in Tidewater, Virginia, a couple of paying guests, or one, for winter. Address "Toddsbury", Nuttall P. O., Gloucester County, Va

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BOOK WANTED.

WANTED, A COPY OF BISHOP WAINWRIGHT'S Collection of FAMILY PRAYERS Any one having a copy of this book for sale, please notify Southern Churchman, stating price.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold Thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and Veil from $15. Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church Vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

PERSONAL STATIONERY.

IN CABINETS, 200 SHEETS, SIZE 6x7 inches, 100 envelopes to match, with your name and address. Price $1.00. SPENCER A. STINE, 8 Fourth Street, S. E., Washington, D. C.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS BULBS; 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor, 12, $1.00; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. FRED B. JONES, Gloucester, Va.

BOOK WANTED.

WE WISH TO PROCURE A COPY OF the book, "Faith of Our Faithers", by Stearns. Any one having a copy of this book for sale please notify Southern Churchman, stating price.

SITUATION WANTED.

A CAPABLE YOUNG LADY OF REFINEment would like some occupation that will give her work in Richmond, Va. References given. Address "Episcopalian", care of Southern Churchman.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 15.)

Holy Communion, at which service, the Rt. Rev. A. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, was celebrant and speaker. In the place of the sermon, the Bishop read his report of the work among the colored brethren, and at one place caused all to stand as he paid a beautiful tribute to Bishop Guerry and the other faithful departed.

During the session of the Council, Archdeacon Baskervill also made his report of work done by him in the Diocese and elsewhere. It was a most thorough and painstaking report in every detail, and well received by the Council along with several recommendations made therein.

The papers assigned were ably and profitably discussed both by writers and followers, showing careful preparation. Among these papers may be mentioned "Why Every Member Canvass?" by Rev. W. H. Brown, Jr., and "Historical Aspects of the Book of Common Prayer", by Dr. C. W. Birnie.

Dr. R. S. Wilkinson, of State College, Orangeburg, and Professor J. E. Blanton, of Voorhees N. and I. School, Denmark, were present, and made splendid and helpful addresses. The Rev. W. B. Crittenden, field secretary for colored work, was expected and had a prominent place on the program, but was taken ill en route to the Council and forced to return home.

Of course, the women of the Auxiliary were present in some force, and held their business and public meeting with every show of enthusiasm for the work in which they are engaged. Among those who delivered instructive addresses were the president, Mrs. E. L. Baskervill, Mrs. M. E. Callen, nurse, and Mrs. S. Mitchell.

The evening services during the week and all the services of Sunday were well attended by the people of the community of all denominations, and altogether it was a most enjoyable and profitable meeting. Bishop Thomas preached Sunday morning.

This was the first colored Council presided over by Bishop Thomas, and to say that the Council was highly pleased with the Bishop would be expressing their feelings towards him very mildly.

The Council adjourned to meet next year in September at the Church of the Redeemer, Pineville.

C. A. H.

MINNESOTA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop.

Conferences at Frontenac.

A firm determination to reverse the downward trend of giving in this diocese to the Church's Program both without and within the diocese was evidenced at a conference of the clergy held under the auspices of the Diocesan Field Department at Frontenac Inn, Frontenac, September 19-20. Forty-four of the parochial and missionary clergy of the diocese were present at the conference, which was held under the leadership of the Rev. C. E. Snowden, Executive Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council.

After an opening address on "The Purpose of the Conference," by the Rt. Rev. F. A. McElvain, D. D., the Rev. Mr. Snowden spoke on "The Leadership of the Priest." "Our Lord was never on the defensive," he asserted, emphasizing the importance of an aggressive attitude on the part of the clergy in inspiring their people with the world vision of the Church's program.

This was followed by a conference on "The Evolution of the Kingdom of God", in which Mr. Snowden presented "The Existing Work of the Program", and the Rev. D. H. Atwill presented the Diocesan Program for 1930. Mr. Snowden's remarks aroused much interesting discussion of methods of personalizing the Program so that it might capture the imaginations and inspire the generosity of Church people. Mr. Atwill dwelt on the fact that two-thirds of the diocesan missionary budget was expended for rural work. He adduced several effective illustrations of the value and importance of this work and much gratifying evidence of recent growth in the Minnesota rural field.

The evening session continued the discussion of "The Evolution of the Kingdom of God." Mr. Snowden, addressing himself to the topic, "Life or Stagnation?" spoke of the new policy which the National Council is about to initiate in regard to the Advance Work of the Program. Mr. Atwill applied the question to the diocese and aroused a very interesting discussion of the necessity of organized city mission work in the Twin Cities, Hospital work at the Mayo Brothers' clinic in Rochester, and the Church's mission among the deaf.

The conference was continued the following morning after an early celebration of the Holy Communion in Christ Church, Frontenac. Mr. Snowden, speaking to the topic, "Strengthening the Stakes", presented the most effective means of an educational campaign in the parish, leading up to the Every Member Canvass. He stressed the fact that there was no adequate substitute for the Every Member Canvass carefully prepared for and conscientiously carried out. The Rev. A. E. Knickerbocker, Chairman of the Diocesan Field Department, spoke on the topic, "Lengthening the Ropes", and the Bishop, summing up the conference, expressed the gratitude of the clergy to Mr. Snowden and sounded the note of advance for the entire diocese.

This conference was preceded by a conference of the rural clergy, under the leadership of Archdeacon E. W. Couper, which resulted in certain definite findings for the strengthening of the rural work. It was followed, on the twenty-first and twenty-second, by an important conference of lay representatives from the various parishes, led by Mr. Snowden and Messrs. C. B. Lyon and H. S. Gregg, of Minneapolis.

E. H. E., Jr.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Annual Conferences.

Springfield has just concluded its Annual Conferences of the Clergy and Laymen. The clergy met at St. John's Church, Decatur, September 24, and the laymen September 25, in the same church. There were twenty-four clergy present with Bishop White, and about sixty laymen. The principal leader on both of the days was the Rev. Frederick G. Deis, of the National Field Department of the Church.

The clergy conference was opened at 7:30 with a celebration of the Holy Communion. Reports were made as to the financial outlook of the parishes and missions for the present year, and the prospects of their closing 1929 with a balance on the right side, including the payment to the diocese of the amount for the General Church.

In several splendid, inspirational addresses Dr. Deis made it clear that the way to get money for the Church was to make sure that the rank and file of the people of the parishes knew what the whole thing was about. If you can tie up the Church's work with intimate stories of things that the Church is doing for humanity and so make the average person in the parishes see the reality of the Church's work, the pocektbooks, as he said, would be turned inside out.

The Rev. Robert H. Atchison, rector

The Rev. Robert H. Atchison, rector of St. Paul's Church, Alton, who is the Chairman of the Diocesan Field Department, told of the efforts that his Department had made in arousing the parishes and missions to a deeper sense of their obligation towards Diocesan Missionary work and the program of the National Church. Seldom has the diocese ever been more alive in these matters than it is at the present time, and this has largely been due to the splendid leadership of its chairman.

Mr. Spencer, as Executive Secretary of the Diocese, presented in detail the figures covering the financial necessities of the diocese as proposed by the Finance Department of the Bishop and Council for the year 1930. These were carefully considered by the clergy and with one or two minor exceptions the proposed financial program for the next year was adopted.

The clergy were much interested in The One Day's Income Plan, which it was expressed was going to be put up to the laymen the next day to help the diocese raise its quota in full for New York this year.

The Laymen's Conference opened about 3:30 with an informal gathering in charge of the Rev. Robert H. Atchison, who told of the efforts that the Field Department were engaged in at this time in making sure that the parishes and missions were going to close the year in good shape, and urged the importance of everything being done to insure a real Every Member Canvass this fall for funds for 1930.

The Rev. Dr. Deis told interesting stories, bringing out the work that the Church is doing in justification of the money it is spending.

Mr. Dan G. Swannell, of Champaign, spoke on The One Day's Income and the work that a layman could do. The Rev. Herbert L. Miller was another leader who spoke for the One Day's Income Plan and urged that the parishes and missions do everything possible to raise their full quota this year. He also stressed the importance of the parishes and missions raising their quota for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo. The Diocese of Springfield has raised half of what is expected of it.

St. John's Church was most hospitable in providing for these two conferences, having provided breakfast and luncheon for the clergy on Tuesday, and a most excellent dinner, splendidly served on Wednesday.

Mr. Pascal E. Hatch, of Springfield, the Chairman of the Department of Finance, presided at the dinner. The Rev. Mr. Deis brought the greetings of New York Headquarters.

Mr. Swannell urged the men to renew their efforts in the work of the Church and to try to make their parishes and missions come up to the mark as set before them by the diocesan leaders. The Rev. Herbert L. Miller gave an interesting description of how a real Every Member Canvass should be put on. Mr. Spencer, the Diocesan Executive Secretary, told something of the financial outlook before the diocese.

The Bishop closed the meeting with a few words of appreciation of what had been accomplished by the laymen the past year, and urged them to go forward to the doing of even greater things in the days to come. He was particularly outspoken in his desire for another Laymen's Conference, and he sponsored almost entirely by the laymen. He said he longed for the time to come when more laymen of ability would give leadership to the work of the Church. He said he knew there were such laymen in the diocese and he asked them to come to the front.

The laymen were very much interested in the proposed One Day's Income Plan, and the effort is going over the diocese in good sharp, and it is expected that a splendid sum of money will be raised through this, which will be given to the work of the Church beyond the Diocese of Springfield.

F. H. S.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Richmond, Virginia, has accepted a call to become minister-in-charge of Christchurch Parish, Middlesex County, Virginia.

The Rev. A. C. Tucker, formerly minister-in-charge of Christchurch Parish, Virginia, is now minister-in-charge of Scott Parish, Gordonsville, Virginia.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, Texas, has accepted a call to become rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Virginia, the change to become effective November 15, 1929.

The Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., rector of Grace and Holy Trinity, Richmond, Virginia, owing to ill health, is resigning as rector November 15, 1929, and will become rector-emeritus of the parish.

The Rev. John W. Schmalstieg, formerly curate of the Pro-Cathedral of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, is now rector of Trinity Church, Athens, his address being Athens, Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Milton B. Williams, Ph. D., rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Chicago, Illinois, has accepted the appointment to the charge of Trinity Church, Marshall; Christ Church, Lexington, and St. Paul's Church, Carrollton; with charge also of missionary and extension work in the counties of Saline, Lafayette and Carroll. The Rev. Dr. Williams will take charge of the new field on Sunday, October 6. He will reside and have his office in Marshall.

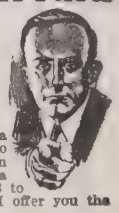
The Rev. Wm. Gerow Christian, rector of churches in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, has accepted work with the Rev. L. Valentine Lee at the Church of the Incarnation, Dallas, Texas, beginning November 1. Mr. Christian has been in charge of churches at South Hill, Palmer Springs and Baskerville, Virginia, since 1928.

The Rev. Thomas L. Ridout, rector of Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, for the past four years, will leave the thirteenth of October to become rector of St. Andrew's, Mount Holly, in the Diocese of New Jersey.

The Rev. Joseph T. Williams, rector of the Church of the Advent, Washington, D. C., has been elected rector of St. John's Church, Bethesda, Maryland, to succeed the Rev. Mr. Parker.

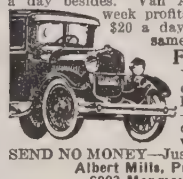
ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Thomas Simons Clarkson was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, in Trinity Church, Mount Airy, North Carolina, on Sunday morning, July 14. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. Daniel Allen. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Milton A. Barber.



Mr. Clarkson is a son of Justice Heriot Clarkson, of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and Mrs. Clarkson, daughter of the late beloved Civil War veteran and clergyman, the Rev. E. A. Osborne. He attended the Theolofical Seminary in Virginia, at Alexandria, and is a graduate of the University of North Carolina. He has been placed in charge of Trinity Church and Galloway Memorial, Elkin, by Bishop Penick.

Mr. Paul D. Newell was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. Edwin W. Saphore, D. D., in Trinity Cathedral, Little Rock, Arkansas, September 6, 1929. The Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., and the Rev. C. F. Collins presented the candidate, and the Rev. John Williamson preached the sermon.



The Rev. John Arthur Klein was advanced to the priesthood on Friday, September 6, 1929, in Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, by Bishop McElwaine. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, and the ordinand was presented by the Rev. H. C. Wrinch.

The Rev. Mr. Klein will work on the Rosebud Mission, Niobrara Deanery, in the Missionary District of South Dakota, with headquarters at Oak Creek.

Grocery Bills all Paid and $10 a Day besides!

Send me your name and I'll show you a quick, easy way to get plenty of money to pay all your grocery bills and $8 to $10 in a day besides. Van Allen reports $100 a week profits. Mrs. Hodges $18 to $20 a day. And right now I offer you the same chance.

Ford Tudor Sedan FREE

You don't need capital or experience. I give you my personal help. I show you how to make big money—full time or spare time. And I offer you a new Ford Tudor Sedan without cost—as an extra bonus. SEND NO MONEY—Just your name. Write today—SURE.

Albert Mills, Pres., American Products Co.
6803 Monmouth Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio

CLEARTYPE PRAYER BOOKS

LEATHER
DUROTEX
ENTOMAX
CLOTH

MOREHOUSE PUBLISHING CO.
MILWAUKEE

Dr. Torrey Lives Again

in Robert Harkness' true and intensely interesting character sketch—

REUBEN ARCHER TORREY: THE MAN AND HIS MESSAGE.

CONTENTS:

Part One: Called of God, a man of faith, of prayer, of conviction, a teacher, a personal worker, an evangelist. Part Two: His message; its theme, scope, simplicity, power presentation, effect, and challenge.

Bound in handsome Library cloth, gilt stamp, 127 pages, with Portrait, $1.00.

Mr. Harkness will be recognized as a noted Gospel song writer, Pianist and a Musical Associate of Dr. Torrey.

THE BIBLE INSTITUTE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION,
843 (SC)
North Wells Street, Chicago, Ill.

A STORY AND AN APPEAL

We give you greeting and ask that you lend an ear to our story. Some years ago a well known member of the United States Senate was called upon to aid a constituent. His reply came quickly, without hesitation: "Friend, I cannot make bricks without straw." Given the material wherewith a substance is formed, or the instruments necessary for the making, and much may be accomplished. Without the material required and with imperfect instruments the most skilled artisan is greatly hampered in his work. Without the means that would enable him to crown his labours with success he is unable to attain his goal and deliver a finished product.

So, with all things. The Southern Churchman would provide you with good reading, Church news from the dioceses, maintaning at the same time a rigid adherence to the principles of evangelical churchmanship. It stands for the faith of our fathers, undefiled, as handed down through generations from the apostles—a faith set forth clearly and unmistakably in the Church's Creed, as taught by Jesus Christ, Son of God and Redeemer of mankind.

There is already a wide circle of readers of this gospel messenger, but we have great need of many more. Some will prefer the articles on general Church matters, others the Home Department and there is a page for the children; we try to meet all these demands. To keep an adequate office staff of intelligent and capable workers who can give their best service and undivided thought it is necessary to procure a wider circulation and thereby a revenue which will insure a more efficient and better equipped business administration of the paper's office.

NEED MORE STRAW

The labourer is surely worthy of his hire. We have willing hearts and ready hands, but these human instruments are limited in their power. With the best will in the world and unselfish devotion to their tasks they need more straw wherewith to make the bricks. Give us some names of fellow churchmen and we will send them a sample copy of our paper; tell Church members about us, let us have the benefit of the publicity a word spoken here and there will bring your Church messenger.

We have a goodly list of subscribers, but it should be doubled and even trebled. We ask your earnest efforts for publicity in our behalf. We believe we are giving you a worth while church paper and are pledged to its continuance and an energetic effort to extend the field of our readers. There are yet wide areas in this broad land of ours where we would have our message read. We believe it would be a comfort to many and an assurance of faith in Him who has said: Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you."

To you, then, we come with the outstretched hand of good fellowship and ask your interest in our welfare. We are grateful for your confidence, your support; we ask your interest, your aid to enlarged acquaintance. Give us names where you think there will be found interest, speak to them yourself where opportunity offers—Our aim is high, our efforts untiring, our motto service. It is our wish to serve; help us to reach all who would be served.

And, now, having made known all these things to you may we be brought together to work for those things which are good, and in our small measure follow the steps of those to whom Christ said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel of good tidings." We would carry this message to all who are ready to hear. The harvest is ripe for the reapers and we rely upon your good will to help garner in the sheaves that lie ready for the reaper.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Virginia

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

1835 IN HOC SIGNO VINCIMUS NON FRUSTRA

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 12, 1929. No. 41.

RT. REV. JOHN GARDNER MURRAY, D. D.

August 31, 1857—October 3, 1929.

After this I looked, and behold a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither." Rev. 4:1.

TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

If you wish to really know the Bible, your best help is

SYNTHETIC BIBLE STUDIES

By

REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D. D., LL. D.,

President of the Moody Bible Institute.

No book of its kind in this generaton received so unqualified an endorsement from the denominational press when it first appeared, and its popularity continues. It actually teaches the content of each book of the Bible in its order.

☞Ask for descriptive list of other helpful writings by Dr. Gray. 340 pages, Cloth Covers, $2.25.

THE BIBLE INSTITUTE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION,

843-SC No. Wells St., Chicago.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Bishop Murray—Rev A. B. Kinsolving, D. D.	6
Constitutional Union—L. S. Bell	6
I Was Sick and Ye Visited Me—A. N. Hoath	7
Address by General A. T. Goodwyn	8
Favorite Scripture Verse	11
Meeting of the House of Bishops	9
Gifts to God—All Come From His Gifts—K. J. Hammond	11
Bishop Murray	11
Book Reviews	12
Letters to the Editor	12
Stratford Day	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.

Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.

An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".

Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

St. Paul's Boys' School

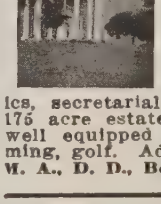
Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.



Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next session begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

Make big money selling Christmas Cards and Gift Dressings. Handsome, complete line, Free sample book. Big commissions. Individuals or church societies.

Social Greeting Card Co.,

Graphic Arts Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

October 1, 1929

The sixty-seventh Annual Meeting of the Life and Contributing Members of the Evangelical Education Society will be held on Thursday, October 17, 1929, in the Board Room of the Platt Building, 130 South Twenty-second Street, Philadelphia, Penna., at 3:45 P. M, for the election of officers and the transaction of such other business as may be brought before it.

S. LORD GILBERSON,
General Secretary.

PIPE ORGANS

Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.

Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.

HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

THE WATER TEST.

At the Anderson Quarries, owned by Fairfield County, South Carolina, and at the office at Rion, S. C., three water tests are made to grade stone. If the stone is flawless, of straight grade, no white or black streaks or splotches, no wave in the grain, it is graded as Winnsboro Granite, and sells at a higher price than ordinary granite. If any of these defects appear when water is thrown over the stone, it is not Winnsboro Granite, but is graded "Smith stock", and sold at a lower price.

Buyers of Winnsboro Granite should specify Winnsboro Granite in their purchase contracts, ask for quarry certificate, and also make the water test. Defects show up plainly when the stone is wet with water, if there are any defects in the block. Dry stone does not show up defects so readily. Therefore, when buying Winnsboro Granite, wet the stone and see for yourself that you get certificate from the quarry through your dealer, to the effect that the stone used in your monument is Winnsboro Granite. With that certificate and with the water test, you can be sure that you have the best monumental material the Winnsboro Granite Corporation in known to the world.

Write for free booklet showing attractive monumental designs. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

It costs a little more, but only 20 per cent of monument cost is for material, so that the higher price of Winnsboro Granite means very little in the increase of the price of the monument; but it means a great deal in the satisfaction of knowing that it is the best monument possible—the most permanent, the most beautiful, flawless.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

VIRGINIA DAIRY CO.

Richmond, Va.

"THE HOME OF BETTER MILK"

MILK, CREAM, BUTTER, BUTTERMILK, RICHELAC

Phones Boul 938-939 F. F. RENNIE, President.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

J. & R. Lamb

23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Woody's Art Glass Shop

Art Stained and Leaded Glass.

Church Windows a Specialty.

513 East Main Street,
Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH

PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHRISTMAS CARD AGENTS

Earn money for your church. Sell our box assortments of Christmas Cards. Big profits. Start taking orders early. Write today for illustrated folder giving full information.

THE COLONIAL BEAUTY LINE
395 Dwight St. - - Springfield, Mass.
915 Grand Avenue - - Kansas City, Mo.
228 Balboa Bldg. - - San Francisco, Calif.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture

THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.

T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

Gold, Silver and Brass

Church and Chancel Furniture

Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.

W & E SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

$50 TO $100 IN SPARE TIME

Write for Schwer's CHRISTMAS CARD & NOVELTIES PLAN. Popular and different from others. $50. to $100. easily made. No investment. Great for Home Effort. Write at once to CHARLEY C. SCHWER, DEPT. 194 WESTFIELD, MASS.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

No pure and simple life, true to itself, true to its Maker, was ever lived on this earth, that was not a voice on God's behalf, however still and small; and that did not, in its sincere and humble way, declare a hope and reveal a faith which might well be the evidence of things unseen.—A. Gordon.

"Love ever gives—forgives, outlives—
And ever stands. And, while it lives, it gives,
With open hands. For this is love's prerogative—
To give—and give—and give."

"God does not command us to succeed, but to work."

"A joy in the heart will be pretty sure to write its name on the face."

Our safety is in having lofty ideals and in constant labor to secure their realization. Let the getting of money be a man's ideal, and he will of necessity grow toward the dust.—Selected.

What is the Gospel of Jesus Christ for, if it is not a power to make men keep their hands clean, to make men honest, true, upright, and to keep them so.—Mark Guy Pearse.

I am glad to think
I am not bound to make the world go right;
But only to discover and to do
With cheerful heart the work that God appoints.
I will trust in Him.
That He can hold His own; and I will take
His will, above the work He sendeth me,
To be my chiefest good.

P. J. Bailey.

Let not thy praises be transient—a fit of muisc, and then the intrument hung by the wall till another gaudy day of some remarkable providence makes thee take it down. David took this up for a life-work: "As long as I live I will praise thee!"—Gurnall.

The shores of the ocean are the secret of its depths. A shoreless ocean would degenerate into a shallow pond. It is the restraint of the shore that gives majesty and power to the great blue sea. It is even so with life. A life without restrain is a shallow life. It wastes its resources by spreading out too far. We need the restraint of God's will in our lives to make them deep and strong.—Exchange.

One of the most concise arguments for immortality is the undying appetite of the soul for knowledge, love, progress. As we approach the turn of life it never occurs to us that it is time to fold our arms, close our eyes, and bid farewell to nature, poetry, art, friendship, busines. . . . . We build houses, begin books, undertake operations, just as if we were to live forever, which shows, I think, that the sense of immortality destroys all sense of death as we grow old.—J. F. Clarke.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 12, 1929. No. 41.

SOULS

Maybe we are seeing now one of the most tremendous and solemn moments in the history of the human race. We may be at the verge of fullfilment of the promise given us thousands of years ago by the Almighty and Everywhere and Always Present Ruler of the Universe. We may be standing at the beginning of a new life, of change and development unprecedented and conditions we cannot yet imagine.

More than nineteen hundred years ago the old promise of peace everywhere on earth and good will among all men was reaffirmed and proclaimed by legions of angels, amid glorious, heavenly light shining upon lonely and lowly shepherds watching and guarding their flocks on a plain in Palestine. The confident hope brought with the light and proclamation has lived through centuries of tumult and strife, of the shrieks of the persecuted and suffering, groans of the dying, the smoke and dust of battle, all from the crafty reasoning, the intellectual processes serving the greed and passions and ambitions of men. Amid it all the indefinable, ineffable, deathless, thing we call the soul has survived. Illumined and inspired, glorified and strengthened by the light that banished the darkness and the chanting of the legions in the skies, it has revealed more and more, little by little. Prime Minister MacDonald, of Great Britain, went straight to the fundamental truth in his short speech in New York. Not the skyscrapers, nor the prosperity, wealth or numbers of the American people make their greatness, he said. Their real power is in their soul.

So, a few days ago two men talked by a fireside in Virginia mountains—the same Virginia on the soil of which, at Yorktown, came climax and virtual end of the war of British and Americans, at Appomattox came the end of the war of our sections. One of these men represents a nation which, when the light and voices came over the plain in Palestine, was a confusion of remote, obscure, unconsidered, tribes of barbarians. The other represents a nation holding a land unknown and unsuspected in the country where the Annunciation was given. The two represent more than two hundred million people, composing the mightiest, richest, freest, most farspread powers the world ever has known. The two have risen from obscurity, like their nations. They have risen by force of character and strong, broad, active, vigorous, incisive minds. They did not meet to plan alliance of numbers, wealth and strength, for extension of dominance. They met to use and subordinate mind and thought to the impulse and aspiration of the soul, to plan for making the enormous and unparalleled potence of their empires obedient to the purpose for which the baby was born to the humble virgin mother in the stable of the poor inn at Bethlehem.

Surely there is profound meaning in the fact that in these two nations, their combined power excelling that of all other nations combined, striving now to combine that power for peace on earth and good will among men, the Cross is everywhere. Over log cabins and rude structures of green planks in the crudest settlements of the pioneers in America, gleaming high over stately, time hallowed cathedrals in the old country, it has typified the kindred soul, the spirit, hope and faith, of the peoples, drawn them together now for shared intent to use their power for blessing to mankind and the future and to do the will of God. There is beautiful and inspiring, yet humbling, thought in the fact of these two peoples, unconquered and unconquerable, victors so many times by land and sea, supreme and leaders, putting aside all lust for gain or vengeance to yield to the gentle teachings of the Nazarene who meekly submitted to scourge and derisive crown of thorns and crucifixion amid the scoffing of the rabble. The crucifixion was the Divine triumph of the soul over self and fear. The glory of it, coming across the long and troubled and changing centuries, the gleam of the light and the splendor of the music that aroused the shepherds to seek the stable, may be with us now. The time when the battle flags shall be furled and the war drums shall throb no longer may be here. It is entirely possible, with radio and telephone and cable, that our congress and legislative bodies of other countries may confer and debate freely together on world peace and establishment and maintenance of it. The parliament of the world, foretold by the poet, may become a daily, customary thing by means of which he did not dream and very soon.

It is a time for fervent prayer for full success for the peace conferences and for the cleansing and uplifting of the hearts of all engaged in them; for the victory of the souls of leaders and rulers and the peoples behind them. "Thy kingdom come"—the kingdom of peace and righteousness and good will among men—"Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven." These noble petitions should be uttered with special earnestness now from all hearts. Along with them should be prayer, also, that if the new test comes—universal and assured peace, when all will feel secure and prosperity and comfort and safety are everywhere—our souls shall continue to rule, to guide us to real brotherhood and lead all nations and peoples to escape the dangers of safety and ease and steadily to seek God's continuing mercy, with gratitude unfailing to serve Him faithfully and strive ceaselessly to deserve and attain place in the haven of the soul, where it shall be cleansed forever and know endless peace.

Alfred B. Williams.

BISHOP MURRAY

By the Reverend Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D.

THE Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland, and for the past four years Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, died suddenly beside the altar of St. James' Church, Atlantic City, on Thursday, October 3.

He had just presided over an executive session of the House of Bishops and was about to declare the adjournment when an attack of angina pectoris caused him to sink down in collapse. Before his devoted wife could be summoned from their hotel, death had supervened.

He died as he would have wished in full harness at his post of duty.

Bishop Murray was a man of very unusual personal traits and of masterful leadership. He had a fatherly spirit, and a keen human interest. He could call his clergy and hundreds of his laity by their first names. His diligence and energy, his tremendous capacity for work, were noted by all who knew him.

Born of Scotch parents in a small Western Maryland mining town, with limited early educational advantages, he was a shrewd and apt learner in the school of life. Starting life as a business man and in another communion, he was confirmed at twenty-nine and ordained at thirty-five, going steadily up by swift gradations until he was made the Presiding Bishop and head of the National Council.

As Bishop of Maryland, he has left a remarkable record of wise and telling accomplishment. No man in high position is at all times infallible in his judgments. Some of his ablest and sincerest friends could not follow him at times in what he deemed the proper and wisest course. But you were always conscious of dealing with a strong and earnest man.

He knew where his own gifts for service lay, and he put them to use with an unflagging energy and a profound sense of stewardship.

His missionary leadership and the devotion of the clergy and lay-people of Maryland brought him prominently forward at New Orleans in 1925 for the office of Presiding Bishop. In the difficult and arduous post he did all that a man could do to arouse the Church to a sense of its wider duty to the millions in our own land and abroad who are without a saving knowledge of our Divine Saviour.

Without doubt this double responsibility of diocese and the National Council has cut short his life. But he has left us all a high example of devotion to duty and readiness to spend and be spent in the Master's service.

But perhaps the thing for which those who knew him best will remember him is the fact that he had a great deal of simple, old-fashioned religion. He was an apostolic man. He had learned through experience the power of the Gospel of the Grace of God. There was fire and fervor in his religion. He was a man of child-like faith, a man of prayer, a man who had learned the power of love and knew how to bring and hold together men of different schools and parties in the Church. Then he was unaffected, democratic, a good mixer, and a kindly, broadminded and charitable man.

What a beautiful way for such a man to die—on duty, in God's sanctuary, having given the last syllable of strength to extend Christ's Empire over the hearts of men! Shall we not each try to pray and work and give more to the great cause of Missions, for which this servant of God toiled till he was stricken and fell upon the shield of faith and into the arms of Love?

CONSTITUTIONAL UNION

By Landon C. Bell, Columbus, Ohio

September 30, 1929.

L. M. Williams, President,
Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Va.

Dear Mr. Williams:

I thank you for your interesting letter. I have received quite a number of interesting letters with reference to the "Historic Tablets" article which appeared in the September 21 issue of the Churchman. With a single exception (and that was from New York), all the writers emphatically approved the position taken in the article.

You tell me of a correspondent who writes you that he agrees that the word "Federal" would be a misnomer to describe the armies which made war upon the Southern people, and the Southern States; but that he defends the use of the term "Union" as being the correct term to employ.

He declares the word "Federal" is a misnomer for the army of the Northern States, because he says, "the Southerners were more Federal than the Northerners". That is very true. It is also and equally, and for the same reasons, and upon the same facts, true that the Southerners were more Union than the Northerners, if the term Union is used to signify the Union under the Constitution—the Constitutional Union of the fathers.

It was the South and the Southerners who were satisfied with the Union—the Constitutional Union. It was the North and the East who were dissatisfied with the Union—the Constitutional Union. The well-known historian, Professor William E. Dodd, of the University of Chicago, may be here quoted:

"Who," asks Dr. Dodd, "were dissatisfied? the South?" And he answers: "No, the radicals of the North and East, who declared the Constitution 'a league with hell and a covenant with the devil', were the complainants; they warred upon the Supreme Court, upon the States, upon the existing order, ... and they deserved the punishment of traitors."

So, if the term "Federal" as applying to the Northern army is to be rejected, as it should be, and as your correspondent concedes it should be, because "the Southerners were more federal than the Northerners", so the term "Union" as applying to the Northern army should be likewise rejected, for the Southerners were more Union than the Northerners—for they supported the Constitutional Union, while the Northerners made war upon it.

Your correspondent, it seems to me, shows a strange lack of logical consistency in the position he takes. He really admits that the Northern soldiers did not fight for the true, the historic Union, the Constitutional Union, for he concedes that the North fought for

"an enforced union",

but still he says it fought for

"a union of all the states".

This correspondent is fair enough to concede that "if one goes into the whole history of the thing one might indeed accuse the North of being responsible for the breaking up of the Union by causing the Southern States to secede", and he says "the South had excellent reasons for disuniting", but he concludes "it is obviously impossible to enter upon lengthy and abstract discussions in road markers".

If it had been confessed that the use of the term "Union Army", was a mere convenience, there might be some point in defending its use. I do not think it could be justified, but it might be defended with some show of plausibility. But to defend its use as accurate historically cannot be done successfully.

It may at once be conceded that it is difficult to find a word or short phrase which will exactly and adequately designate and describe the invading military forces. I freely admit that difficulty. But to my way of thinking no term that could be employed could be more inaccurate, be more offensive, and less justified than "Union".

The position of your correspondent, having made the concessions above mentioned, in still defending the use of the term "Union Army", can, it seems to me, result from but one thing. He can see no reason for the preservation in history of the distinction between the Constitutional Union, the creature of the states acting upon the instrument formulated by the Convention of 1787, and the "Union" that resulted from a repudiation of that instrument by the people and the states of the North—the "Union" made by bayonets and swords, at the behest of those who repudiated the Constitution, but still desired to keep all the states under one government.

To treat those two things as one and the same is a monstrous outrage upon historical facts. To do that is to make of the term "the Union", a catch phrase meaning anything or nothing, according to the whim of the user.

No true use of the term "the Union", can disassociate it from the Constitution and the laws validly passed pursuant thereto. The Union was nothing but the Constitution and the laws.

If the term "Union Army" as used on the markers conveyed the idea, which your correspondent suggests, that is to say, that it was an army fighting not for the Constitutional Union of the fathers, but for a different and "enforced union", under which the Constitutional rights of Southern people, and the Southern States would be ignored, denied and trampled in the dust; if—I say—the use of the term carried that significance, if that is what is meant, if that is what those who read it would understand, I would have no objection to the term.

But, surely, no one will contend the term is understood in any such way.

The plain and simple implication of the term is that the invading armies were fighting for the Union under the Constitution, the Constitutional Union; but that is not the truth, they were fighting for no such thing. They were fighting for, as your correspondent puts it, "an enforced union", which being translated means:

They were fighting, in violation of the Constitution, to keep the Southern States and the Southern people under the government in control of the authorities directing the invasion; a government which would and did revolutionize the Constitution and the governmental institution.

Again the plain implication of the term is that the Southern soldiers fought against the Union as made by the Consitution of the United States. That implication is unjust, it is unhistorical. All authorities, of any sort of respectability, now agree that if the Southern States and the Southern people had been accorded their rights, as plainly written in the Constitution, there would have been no cause for war, and there would have been no war. It was the Southerners who were the ardent champions of the Constitutional Union. Yet the implications of the term used upon these markers is that they were the enemies not the friends of true Constitutional principles, and of the Constitutional Union.

If the implication of the term were that the invading army holding the Constitution of the United States to be a league with death and a covenant with hell, deserved to be destroyed, and that the Union under it was a thing to be despised, and that that army was intent upon destroying both, and that having done that, they then proposed to create by the sword and the bayonet

"an enforced union",

under such an organic instrument as the invaders might make, and in this "enforced union" glory as "a union of all the states", then I would not object to the use of the term.

If that is what would be understood when one reads the tablets or markers, I would not object to the term, for that would be a substantially accurate version of the matter.

But no one can contend that the average person interprets the term to mean any such thing.

Your correspondent thinks that neither you nor I are "familiar with the terminology of American history".

I freely confess I may not be. It can hardly be said that there is a standardized terminology everywhere recognized and used. I may not be familiar with all the terminology of American history, but I know, because I almost daily hear, some of it. I hear about the "Rebellion", and the "Rebellion of the Southern States", about the "Rebels and traitors", Lee and Davis and Jackson. I hear about that "arch pirate Semmes". I have become familiar with some of the terminology of "Civil War" history because these terms glibly and naturally fall from the tongues of those who are taught their history, where I presume "the terminology of American history" is known; and where Uncle Tom's Cabin is used and taught in the public schools.

While again conceding that it may be difficult to find a single term or phrase conveying adequately a correct idea of the invading army; yet it does seem to me that hardly any term could be worse, or less accurate in its implication than to call the invading army, the "Union Army". That certainly seems to me so objectionable that some thought and effort could be well employed in an endeavor to get a more accurate designation of the forces. "The Invading Army," "Grant's Army," or "McClellan's Army," "Butler's Forces", or the forces under this, that, or the other, officer, could be used, and while avoiding historical inaccuracy would be a sufficient identification for practical purposes.

I may know little about "the terminology of American history," but I feel I know something about some of the facts of that history. And the "terminology of American history" (as accepted by some), to the contrary notwithstanding, I am unwilling to concede that Robert E. Lee was a Rebel, that Jefferson Davis was a traitor, that Admiral Semmes was a pirate, or that the Northern armies invaded the South to guarantee to Southerners and the Southern States their rights under the Constitution of the United States, and their rights as members of the Constitutional Union.

Nor can I believe that the facts justify designating as the "Union Army" the armies which invaded the Southern States for the purpose of subduing them by force of arms, after they had been denied their rights as members of the Constitutional Union.

It is only at your earnest solicitation that I write this amplification respecting the matter, in view of the communication you have received. I have had my say, and while thanking you for the privilege of your columns, I hope I may not be further drawn into the discussion. I do feel, however, that the point you and I have thus raised is worthy of the attention of gentlemen who are familiar with "the terminology of American history", for the "terminology of American history" ought to have some relation —a speaking acquaintance at least—with the facts, and the truth of American history.

"I WAS SICK AND YE VISITED ME"

A MESSAGE FOR ST. LUKE'S DAY—

By Arnold N. Hoath

AS we approach the feast of St. Luke the Evangelist, the patron saint of physicians, it is natural and proper that our thoughts should be of the interest which the Church has always taken in the care of the sick. Living at a time when there was no general sympathy or concern for the physically afflicted St. Luke's humanitarian instincts rebelled against the callousness which regarded sickness as an unwelcome burden on the healthy. With him the work of ameliorating the bodily distresses, so common in an ignorant and unsanitary age, rose high above mere professional interest. Hence, no doubt, began his attraction to the teaching of Jesus with its emphasis upon the healing of the body. And all down the ages the Christian Church has rightly felt that there is no more distinctively Christian work than endeavoring to obey the commands of the Master whose instruction to His followers were that they should preach the Kingdom of God and heal the sick. Nor is there a more solemn parable than that which makes our future woe or blessedness depend upon the consideration which we have shown to the unfortunate and the needy.

Since so much of the ministry of Jesus was concerned with the sick and suffering, to relegate the consideration of the "shut-ins" to a relatively unimportant place in parish work is to fail to put the emphasis of Christian service where Jesus put it. We are not, however, to think that calling on the sick is an easy undertaking, requiring no preparation, and little expenditure of energy. It was not so with Jesus, nor is it so with any one who is a worthy follower of Him who "took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses". Familiar as Jesus was with the sight of suffering His sympathetic love, touched as it was "with a feeling of our infirmity" never lost its freshness and sincerity. Moreover, His ministry among the sick left Him weary and exhausted, for any service of this nature must drain one of energy and strength. Probably a clergyman has no more wearying work than his sick-room visitations, for if his calls are to have any permanent value he must identify himself with each sufferer in turn and yield up all his reserves of nerve-force and spiritual vigor. Here is work that will require careful preparation, for it would be iniquitous to undertake so holy and so important a task carelessly or hurriedly. No greater challenge is offered the intelligence, courage, strength and religious reality of the individual clergyman than the challenge which is presented to him in the name of Jesus by the presence of sickness within his parish.

If these visits are not undertaken prayerfully and thoughtfully, with a full realization of the problems involved and the motive and purpose of sick-room visitations, there is serious danger that they may be spiritually fruitless and physically harmful. Who has not had experience with the boisterous visitor whose idea of being cheerful is to be noisy and mirthful and whose excessive optimism and joviality does the patient as much good as a bull would do in a china shop. If the patient is too sick to be slapped upon the back the visitor slaps his own knees for his exuberant energy demands some outlet as he loudly declares that the sick one will soon be running foot races. Such a noisy display of the visitor's health and happiness so wearies and exhausts the patient that if the latter does not suffer a reaction afterwards he is fortunate. Not far behind the boisterous visitor in the amount of harm which he does, is he of pessimistic and melancholy endowments whose lugubrious countenance is matched by the dolefulness of his voice and the gloom of his conversation. Had Job's unhappy friends sought the presence and guidance of God in prayer before they set out on their well-intentioned ministry their visit would not have become a by-word for depressing and discouraging "comfort". Next comes the conceited visitors whose purpose appears to be to impress the sick man with the visitor's importance and whose discourse centres in the sayings and doing of "I". How pathetic that the "shut-in" longing for something to grip by which he may rise above his present miseries is so often "cheered" by frivolous talk of an egotistical and self-opinionated nature! There is as much sincerity in such a visit as there was in the character of Mr. Stiggins whose regard for Mrs. Weller so exasperated the honest and ingenuous Tony. Finally the clergyman who undertakes his sick visits merely from a compelling sense of duty will accomplish nothing save the easing of his conscience. Listless will be his discourse, and his principal concern will be for an opportunity to take his departure. Not so was the manner of Jesus who gave to each sufferer with whom He talked the concentrated and compassionate attention of His whole mind and spirit, and was in no hurry to withdraw until He had accomplished in full measure whatever He could do.

For the purpose of visiting the sick is not merely to bring a little happiness into an unfortunate life, although that ought to be one of its results, nor is its purpose to create a feeling of good-will towards the Church, although that also is unfailingly effected, but to seek, in the spirit of Jesus, for the healing of the soul. In all of our Lord's ministry among the sick the religious motive was paramount for His supreme solicitude was to bring the patient into right relationship with God. How sad a commentary upon the reputation which much of our sick-room visiting has earned is the frequent refusal of relatives to allow the clergy to see a patient who is critically ill, for fear that the sight of the clergyman will suggest to the sufferer the seriousness of his condition, and so frighten him into the hopelessness of despair! That there are a few ministers who justify these suspicions on the part of watchful relatives is undoubtedly true. These are men who have not studied their problem, nor prayed sufficiently for the touch of the Master. For, if a minister of God is unable to talk naturally of the Father, if he creates fears instead of allaying them, if he does not leave in the sickroom the quiet and serene courage of the peace of God, he had better take stock of his methods, his prayers and his faith. There is something tremendously wrong.

There is, however, a more common danger, than that of upsetting the patient the clergyman should minimize or forego altogether the religious opportunity with which he is confronted. How many hungry souls have failed to secure spiritual sustenance because both patient and minister were too timid to talk of God and eternal realities will never be known! There is one clergyman who never misses any opportunity for prayer and frank talk about God. Years ago he learned his lesson while visiting in a public ward of a hospital. It was his custom to nod to each patient as he passed him, but to stop only at the bedside of members of his own congregation. Always before leaving the bedside he had a simple and appropriate prayer. On one occasion as he was walking away after his prayer he overheard one of the other patients saying, "Doesn't he think I've got a soul, too?" Here was a man who was longing for just the guidance which the clergy are set aside to give, but he was being missed out because no one guessed at his craving.

As we approach another St. Luke's Day let us ask ourselves, "Are we obeying the command of Jesus, who said to His disciples, 'Heal the sick'?" Are we faithfully trying to obey Him?

ADDRESS BY GENERAL A. T. GOODWYN

Note: This address was delivered by the Commander-in-Chief of the United Confederate Veterans, at their Thirty-ninth Reunion, held at Charlotte, N. C., June 5, 1929. It will be carried in The Southern Churchman in successive divisions, this being the second.

OUR distinguished Comrade, Dr. Curry in his history of the Confederacy, gives these figures furnished by the Federal war records.

"The U. S. Army enrolled a total of 2,788,304. This total included: 720,000 European foreigners, and 150,000 Negroes. It also included 350,000 whites enrolled from the Confederate States.

"At the close of the war 999,704 were on Federal rolls.

"The maximum estimate of Confederates from first to last was 700,000.

"Secretary Stanton estimated the Confederate forces at the end of the war as 174,223.

"The reader may conclude these were very great odds. The experienced Confederate knew they were almost negligible when considering the odds in equipment and resources. At the battle of Chickamauga the odds were approximately six to four in numbers. The Confederates were armed with muzzle loading muskets to meet an enemy armed with revolving breech loading rifles. I speak from personal knowledge as my own company captured a number of prisoners so armed in this battle.

"President Davis' proclamation outlawing General B. F. Butler in the main for his order of insult to the patriotic women of New Orleans was enthusiastically commended by the army and people throughout the South. General Butler's order was not condemned by the authorities at Washington, and the voice of the best people in the North was suppressed by the despotic means of military rule. Here is the disgraceful order:

"Headquarters of the Gulf, New Orleans, May 15, 1862. Generals Order No. 28.

"As the officers and soldiers of the United States have been subject to repeated insults from the women (calling themselves ladies) of New Orleans, in return for the most scrupulous non-interference and courtesy on our part, it is ordered that hereafter when any female shall by word, gesture or movement, insult or show contempt for any officer or soldier of the United States, she shall be regarded and held liable to be treated as a woman of the town plying her avocation.

"By command of Major General Butler, Geo. C. Strong, A. A. G., Chief of Staff.

"This 'order' was received with resentful indignation by the Southern army and the people. In marching into battle you would often hear the cry 'remember Butler—'

"General Butler in his book tells of the contempt and indignation the people of the whole South felt for him, dwells upon it at great length, hoping thereby to exalt himself still further with the war groups, especially as he now found himself in great favor with the administration. He pretended to feel himself persecuted, and was posing in the role of a martyr hero.

"After issuing this shameful order General Butler returned North and was received by the war party with enthusiasm. In his book—page 67—he says: 'The glory and high honors of my reception by the Northern people cannot be more fully described than it was set forth in an extract from The Richmond (Va.) Examiner, as follows:

" 'After inflicting innumerable tortures upon an innocent and unarmed people; after outraging the sensibility of civilized humanity by his treatment of women and children; after placing bayonets in the hands of slaves; after peculation the most prodigious, and lies the most infamous, he returns, reeking with crime, to his own people, and they receive him with acclamations of joy in a manner that befit him and becomes themselves. Nothing is out of keeping; his whole career and its rewards are strictly artistic in conception and in execution. He was a thief. A sword that he had stolen from a woman—the niece of the brave Twiggs—was presented to him as a reward for valor. He had violated the laws of God and man. The lawmakers of the United States voted him thanks, and the preachers of the Yankee gospel of blood came to him and worshipped him. He had broken into the safes and strong boxes of merchants. The New York Chamber of Commerce gave him a dinner. He had insulted women. Things in female attire lavished harlot smiles upon him. He was a murderer, and a nation of assassins have deified him. He is at this time the representative of a people lost to all shame, to all humanity, all honor, all virtue, all manhood. Cowards by nature, thieves upon principles, and assassins at heart, it would be marvelous indeed, if the people of the North refused to render homage to Benjamin Butler—the beastliest, bloodiest poltroon and pickpocket the world ever saw.'

"That President Lincoln did not disapprove this order is shown by the following letter in his own hand writing published in Butler's book.

" 'Executive Mansion—Washington,
February 11, 1863.

" 'Whom It May Concern:

" 'Major General Butler, bearer of this, visits the Mississippi River and localities thereon at my request for observation. The military and naval commanders whom he may meet will please facilitate his passage from point to point and make him as comfortable as possible during his stay with them, also to impart to him such information as they may possess, and he may seek, not inconsistent with the military service.

" 'A. LINCOLN.'

"The following letter from Abraham Lincoln belongs to the Pierrpont Morgan collection in New York City. It was photographed with other articles from this collection in many newspapers. It is in the author's own handwriting:

" 'Executive Mansion,
" 'Washington, March 26, 1863.

" 'Private.

" 'Hon. Andrew Johnson,

" 'My Dear Sir:

" 'I am told you have at least thought of raising a negro military force. In my opinion the country now needs no specific thing so much as some men of your ability and position to go to this work. When I speak of your position I mean that of an eminent citizen of a slave state and himself a slave holder. The colored population is the great available and yet unavailable of, force for restoring the Union. The bare sight of 50,000 American drilled, black soldiers on the banks of the Mississippi would end the rebellion at once, and who doubts we could present this sight, if we but take hold in earnest. If you have been thinking of it, please do not dismiss the thought.

" 'A. LINCOLN.'

"Why black troops of the most backward race, with the crudest views of life and the least self-control? Why should the bare sight of such troops end the 'rebellion'? Why would the bare sight of 50,000 black troops do what it took millions of white troops to accomplish? The answers to these questions are clear and conclusive. Here we have the real Linclon, speaking for himself, not the mythical Lincoln of designing historians, vindicating Napoleon's definition of history as a fable agreed upon. When the essential postulate of this indefensible letter is fully comprehended it cannot conceivably be justified.

(To be continued.)

MEETING OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS

ONE hundred and five dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States gathered in Atlantic City, New Jersey, on the first of October for the first regular annual meeting of the House of Bishops.

Among those attending the meeting were our Missionary Bishops from Liberia, Brazil, Japan and the West Indies; Bishop Peter Trimble Rowe, of Alaska; Bishop Boyd Vincent, Bishop Beverley Dandridge Tucker, and the latter's son, Bishop Henry St. George Tucker of Virginia, who was formerly Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, and many other outstanding figures in the Church.

The Opening Service.

The day began with the Celebration of Holy Communion in St. James' Church at ten o'clock. The Presiding Bishop was the Celebrant, assisted by Bishop Matthews of New Jersey, who read the Epistle, and by Bishop Gailor as Gospeller. Also in the Sanctuary were the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, Chaplain to the Presiding Bishop, and the Rev. W. W. Blatchford, rector of the Church. The service was preceded by a procession of the Bishops, vested, from the nearby Y. W. C. A. Building. At the request of the Presiding Bishop the Epistle and Gospel used were those for St. Michael and All Angels' Day. On the Sunday preceding Bishop Murray celebrated Holy Communion in the same church, the occasion being the twentieth anniversary of his consecration. The Bishop was rector of St. Michael and All Angels Parish, Baltimore, when elevated to the episcopate and was consecrated on the patronal day of the parish, which has remained a gala day there ever sine, Bishop Murray never before having missed attendance as celebrant. Only a few near to him understood the significance of the use of Collect, Epistle and Gospel, not ordinarily repeated. Something of the Bishop's mood beyond his usual democracy was evidenced in a second innovation when, following communication of the House of Bishops in a Corporate Communion, the Bishop invited the entire lay congregation which filled the Church to participate in the Sacrament.

The business session immediately followed the celebration of Holy Communion, its scene, the Viking Room of Haddon Hall. Bishop Murray presided, and delivered a brief but gracious welcome, after which the House proceeded to business.

To Greet the Prayer Book.

The outstanding feature of the first session was the adoption by the House of a proposal made by the Presiding Bishop that the First Sunday in Advent, being December 1, be adopted as a day for the formal introduction of the revised Prayer Book. Bishop Murray read to the House a communication he had drafted, which, with the concurrence of the House, now becomes a formal call to the Church in the name of its Chief Pastor as follows:

My Dear Brethren of the Clergy and Laity:

The publication of the new Prayer Book marks an epoch in the history of the Church. It is the result of many years' work of the highest legislative body of the Church and the patient, pious labors of learned men. It carries on the great tradition of the Book of Common Prayer as probably the noblest expression of Christian worship in all the centuries.

It is fitting that such an achievement should be emphasized in some special manner.

I, therefore, with the approval of the House of Bishops, have fixed Sunday, the first day of December, the opening day of the coming Christian Year, as the date on which I suggest that all our congregations begin the use of this Revised Book of Common Prayer.

I earnestly request all communicants of the Episcopal Church, and all those who habitually attend its services, laying aside other things, to attend the forenoon service on this Advent Sunday of the first of December, in order that this whole Church may offer to Almighty God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, praise and thanksgiving for the completion of this new Book, together with prayer for His blessing upon us in its future use.

I ask the Bishops to distribute this letter, with an appeal of their own, to all rectors and other incumbents, requesting them meanwhile to inform their people of this appointed day and service.

Wherever approved by the Diocesan, I suggest the following Prayer for use upon the occasion:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we praise Thy Name for the direction of Thy Holy Spirit, to Thy servants, who through the years, have endeavored to perfect the worship of Thy Church. We yield unto Thee unfeigned thanks for the loyalty, devotion, and unity of spirit, which, by Thy mercy, have attended them in their task.

Grant, we beseech Thee, that, through the Book now enriched under Thy guidance, multitudes of Thy children may enter into the fellowship of Thy Son Jesus Christ and worship Thee in Spirit and in truth.

And finally we pray that all Thy people may so faithfully employ the words of this Book that our lives may show forth Thy praise, and that, day by day, lifting up our hearts, we may continually dwell with Thee in Heavenly places; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Faithfully and affectionately yours,

John Gardner Murray,
Presiding Bishop.

Two Resignations.

The House received and accepted the resignations of the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, and the Rt. Rev. LeRoy Harris, Bishop of Marquette. It was announced in connection with the Diocese of Southern Ohio that a Convention will be called in the near future to elect a Coadjutor. The following Bishops consecrated since the meeting of General Convention a year ago were presented to the House:

The Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop of South Carolina;

The Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, Bishop of Lexington;

The Rt. Rev. Thomas Jenkins, Missionary Bishop of Nevada.

The Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan Bishop of Long Island.

Announcement was made to the House of the death since its last meeting of the Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, prayers for whom were said at the celebration of Holy Communion.

Bishop Cook, of Delaware, presented to the House on behalf of the Rev. Dr. Charles N. Lathrop, Executive Secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service, a resolution calling the Church to a more vital interest in the cause of world peace. This resolution, which, among other things, urges special stress upon Armistice Day was as follows:

Whereas, the present outlook for permanent peace between nations gives greater hope than ever before in history; and

Whereas, this situation calls for the united support of all people of good will and places a responsibility especially on the followers of Him, who is called the Prince of Peace;

Resolved: That we, the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in session at Atlantic City, express to the President of the United States, our commendation of his great efforts to gain world peace and assure him of our devoted support in the measures he is taking for reduction of armaments and in his effort to carry into practice in the reduction of army and navy forces, the practical implication of the Paris Peace Pact;

Resolved: That we present our greetings to the Prime Minister of Great Britain and assure him and our President of our continued intercession that under God's guidance they may bring the English-speaking peoples they represent into complete accord and understanding in this issue and unite upon a method of procedure in which all nations may hopefully join to secure an enduring peace among the peoples of the world;

Resolved: That we commend to the attention of our people the observance of Armistice Day and suggest that on Sunday, the day preceding Armistice Day, the subject of world peace be remembered in our Churches, and that where possible our people cooperate with the citizens of their community in a community observance, considering on that day the program of peace;

Resolved Further: That we suggest to the Bishops of this Church that each authorize an appropriate Collect or other form of service or intercession for use at this time, and that the Presiding Bishop be requested to prepare and send out to all the Bishops, together with a copy of these resolutions such a Collect or form of intercession which may with his authorization be used for this purpose.

The Junior Brotherhood.

The House of Bishops gave cordial greeting to Mr. Douglas Turnbull, of St. David's Parish, Baltimore, Maryland, who brought a message from the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, adopted at their Convention held at Geneva, New York. This was the first entirely separate convention of the Juniors. One hundred boys attended. It happened that one hundred Bishops were in attendance in the room. Mr. Turnbull cleverly personalized his message by suggesting that each Bishop was being addressed by one particular boy.

Following the presentation of the message the Presiding Bishop, upon motion, named a Committee with Bishop Ferris as its Chairman to serve as a helpful link between the Bishops of the Church and the lads of the Brotherhood. The message from Geneva was as follows:

To the Bishops:

The Junior members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in National Convention assembled at Hobart College, Geneva, New York, desire to thank the Bishops, the Clergy and the Laity of the Church, for their hearty cooperation in the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States.

We believe, however, that we shall have failed in our duty if we adjourn this Convention without issuing a stirring challenge to every young man, clergyman and Bishop, not only to continue this cooperation, but to increase it so far as may be done.

To the young men of the Church we make the challenge to support and cooperate with their rectors in all the work of the Church, so that in increasing numbers these young men shall be given definite tasks to perform, such as serving at the altar, helping in the Church school services, calling on absentee Church school pupils, and the like, in order that they may grow in the work, worship and study of the Church and help other young men to do the same.

We ask the members of the Senior Brotherhood to set a strong, vigorous example, each in his own life and work in the Brotherhood, so that we may be helped by such example and leadership.

Of the clergy we ask for a growing place in the program of the Church, assuring them of our interest and hearty cooperation.

Of the Bishops, our Fathers in God, we beg for a larger sphere of usefulness in every diocese, especially through the organization and work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

We desire at this time heartily to thank the Presiding Bishop for his kindly, generous and sympathetic word of encouragement sent to this Convention in the name of the Church.

We respectfully petition the Bishops to lead us in our endeavor to form Brotherhood Chapters, so far as possible, in each parish and mission of the respective dioceses.

The National Junior Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew,

(Signed)

Thomas Compton Walsh, Jr., Secretary.
J. Osgood Hart, President.

The Church Army.

Cordial appreciation of the work of the Church Army was voiced by a number of the Bishops in a discussion concerning the possibility that evangelists of the Army be licensed as lay readers. Bishop Remington, of Eastern Oregon, Bishop Weller of Fond du Lac, Bishop Hall of Vermont, all testified to admirable work done in their jurisdictions by the Army. Bishops Remington and Weller urged the most liberal attitude in the matter of licenses, Bishop Weller declaring that the limitations in the Canons were unnecessary and in his judgment should be abolished by General Convention, so that Bishops might have the utmost liberty in encouraging laymen to preach the Gospel.

Interest in Evangelism.

The House of Bishops was informed by Bishop Darst of recent steps taken with respect to the Evangelistic Movement throughout the Church. The Bishop reported that "The Seventy" had been selected by a group of the National Commission on Evangelism, had been duly appointed by the Presiding Bishop, and had organized. He stressed the fact that these are merely centers for the development of evangelistic interest and do not take from the whole priesthood of the Church responsibility for the major business of their ministries.

Miscellaneous Matters.

On motion of Bishop Barnwell of Idaho the Presiding Bishop was requested to consider a central location for future meetings of the House of Bishops. Bishop Hulse reported progress in the preparation of the Book of Common Prayer in Spanish.

The House unanimously adopted a resolution congratulating the Rt. Rev. Arthur Seldon Lloyd, D. D., for many years a leader in the missionary life of the Church and at present Suffragan Bishop of New York, upon the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of his consecration to the Episcopate.

Advance Work Program.

The Advance Work Program as organized in accord with the action of General Convention was the topic of an evening session. Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council, reported the steps that have culminated in the preparation of a list of 167 foreign and domestic missionary projects, totalling $1,517,500, which presently will be presented to the Church. Dr. Franklin expressed great satisfaction with the fact that the program can be presented in items of work rather than quotas of money. He gave a history of the development of budget making, since regular apportionments were adopted at San Francisco in 1901. He told of the omnibus budget which included maintenance and advance work, of its failure as unreasonably large, of the division of the budget into separate maintenance and advance work sections, and the subsequent scant recognition which the latter section has been accorded. He urged that workers sent into the mission fields by the provisions of the maintenance budget be given tools with which to work, by loyalty to the items in the new advance work schedules. In answer to a question, Dr. Franklin said that four or five months would elapse before definite information would reach the Church. The plan was, he said, that an educational campaign would be conducted through 1930 with the culmination of the project in 1931. Steps, he said, toward realizing all of the details of the plan were now being taken. The discussion which followed produced references to many phases of the fiscal life of the Church. There was pro and con with respect to the "Pay-as-You-Go-Plan". Bishop Perry, of Vermont, made an earnest plea for the return in the Church of courage to face adventure for God in contrast with the policy founded, he said, upon a "mere eagerness for security". Bishop Garland suggested that business men of the Church had cooperated in the payment of the deficit five years ago, upon the understanding that steps would be taken to prevent a recurrence. Such steps, he felt, were represented by the "Pay-as-You-Go-Plan". Dr. Franklin, in a brief supplementary statement, in addition to answering occasional questions, expressed the belief that if the ideal were desired, all quotas should be abolished and that the whole responsibility of the Church to spread the Kingdom of God in the world be approached in a spirit of loyal consecration, and of faith.

Thursday, October 3.

On Thursday, October 3, the House met in executive session in St. James' Church. The Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D. of Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, was elected as Bishop of the Missionary District of Wyoming, and Dean Harry Bean, of St. Paul's Cathedral, in Los Angeles, of the Honolulu District.

The question of revoking the action of the day before in accepting the resignation of Bishop Boyd Vincent, of Southern Ohio, came under discussion. Doubt had been expressed as to the ability of the Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, aged coadjutor of Bishop Vincent, to carry on the work of the diocese, and this suggestion developed from the fact that the immediate purpose in Southern Ohio was to convene a convention for the election of a bishop coadjutor; and it was suggested that Bishop Vincent hold office and himself convene such a convention.

It was upon the constitutional questions involved that Bishop Murray rendered his last service to the Church. He had been sitting beside his Assessor, Bishop Burleson, but rose and stood before the altar and, with all of his usual clarity of voice and diction, rendered his decision that such rescinding was unconstitutional. With his last breath he cited Article and Section. But he could go no further with the explanation of his decision.

Suddenly he collapsed and fell to the floor before any one could reach him. It was a stroke of apoplexy.

The Bishop never regained consciousness from the time of the collapse to the time of his death, a very few minutes later, at 1:15 P. M.

An ambulance interne and a passing physician interrupted the prayers of the bishops for Bishop Murray's recovery to inform them that our presiding bishop was dead.

The Bishop's wife was the only member of the family in Atlantic City. She was rushed from her hotel two streets away to the church. Her husband had been pronounced dead before she arrived. The body, clad in the robe of the bishop's office, lay directly before the altar, head nearest the cross. Mrs. Murray protested her husband was not dead and pleaded with those about her to "get a doctor".

The ambulance was returned from the hospital and the interne made a new examination which brought a repetition of his previous pronouncement.

Dr. John Gardner Murray, Jr., son of the Bishop, a member of the staff of Johns Hopkins Hospital, was telephoned in Baltimore and arrangements made for the return of the body Thursday night.

After a prayer, the House of Bishops adjourned until 2:30 P. M.

Within two hours of the death of Bishop Murray, the House met in special session in the same church on call of Bishop William Andrew Leonard, of Ohio, senior member of the House of Bishops, and set November 13 in Washington as the date for the election of a new head to serve until the next General Convention. This takes place in two years.

The Canons of the Church provide that in case of the death of the presiding bishop that the senior bishop shall call a special meeting to be held within two months to elect a new head of the Church to hold over until the next general election.

The House of Bishops named a committee including the Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi; the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware, and the Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop of California, to prepare a memorial to the late Presiding Bishop.

The following committee was designated to attend the funeral in Baltimore: Bishops Freeman, Cook, Gailor, Tucker and Burleson.

Further business was dropped, and the tragic session came to a close.

Preliminary Meetings.

Preliminary to the meetings of the House of Bishops, both the Continental and Domestic Missionary Bishops, and the Bishops of Dioceses which are aided by the National Council, held sessions. The principal business was to prepare the budgets, which are suggested by the Department of Missions to the National Council for final action. For this purpose the groups met separately. Other sessions found all of the Bishops considering matters of common interest.

The probable disappearance of the missionary district as now constituted, seems evident in the adoption of a resolution by which it is proposed that "hereafter there be two groups of dioceses, known as Dioceses and Missionary Dioceses". This change involves important problems in the election of Bishops from the Missionary Districts which are to become dioceses and in connection with their representation in General Convention. A Committee from the Joint Conference, consisting of Bishops Burleson, Longley, Wise, Howden, and Casady, was appointed to consider the plan and to report at the next Annual Conference. In the meantime, the Council of Continental Domestic Missionary Bishops, which for a number of years has acted in accord in many matters affecting their work, determined by resolution to continue their organization.

An outstanding feature of the gathering was an earnest and optimistic address by the Presiding Bishop. He called attention to the fact that the people of the Church generally are giving more generously today to all causes than ever in our history. "The one cause for concern," he declared, "is the manner in which this money outpoured so generously is being spent". He cited the fact that an ever-increasing proportion in the aggregate is being spent for diocesan purposes, while the cause of general or the missionary work of the Church throughout the world suffers.

He made a plea that there be less selfish distribution, more loyalty to the will of God revealed in Christ that His message of redemption be borne gladly to all the world.

BISHOP MURRAY.

(The Baltimore Catholic Review Editorial.)

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Maryland and Primate of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, was a prelate who combined deep piety with a humility and gentleness which won him the esteem of men of all classes and creeds.

As a Churchman he loved his God and served Him faithfully. Modernism as is known, had no place in his own views; nor did it ever find place in his administrative office, either as head of his Church in this State, or as Primate of his Church in this country.

Bishop Murray believed in the Divinity of Christ. He believed in the Virgin Birth, in the Incarnation, in the rewarding of the good and the punishment of the evil. He considered the Ten Commandments as ever new. The way for men to be saved, he preached, is for them to do what God tells them to do and not what modern discoverers of so-called religions suggest that they do. He preached the doctrine that men cannot be dragooned into virtue by man-made laws. The State has its own proper sphere, distinct from and independent of the Church, and must not dare to encroach on the prerogatives and duties of the Church.

Bishop Murray was a good man. He was a kind man. Handsome physically, his countenance mirrored the gentleness of his heart. He was a citizen of whom Maryland and Baltimore had a right to be proud. He was an honor to the State and to the city.

Many years of goodly deeds and helpful service crowned his life. He was a friend of the rich and the poor; the friend of many who differed with his own religious teachings, but who gave him wholeheartedly that esteem and even personal affection to which his splendid manhood and sympathetic soul entitled him.

His death brings deep sorrow to the members of his Church, to his family and his host of friends. To them The Review extends its sympathy.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Mary Vincent, of Charlotte, North Carolina:

> "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Romans 8:32).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

GIFTS TO GOD---ALL COME FROM HIS GIFTS

By the Reverend Kensey J. Hammond, D. D.

THE question was once asked, "What advice would a kindly disposed man give a youth starting in life?" The answer was, "Never treat money affairs with levity." Indeed, the world usually asks seriously, "What is a man worth?" Money may be under-valued by the poor and proud as well as the spendthrift. A man who cannot swim floating with the current beyond his depth cares not if the river farther down be twice as deep. Money is over-valued by the poor, and the miser, though perhaps able to swim, he will close the outlet of the lake that the smallest possible stream may flow, and in his hydrophobia, stay, then, as far as possible from the current.

Widespread interest in this subject is natural. We are glad to believe the miser's interest is the sin of the minority. The universal interest is due to a worthier reason. Money represents power to provide more than support, more than food and raiment, even material aid to refinement, education, comfort, benevolence. Thousands highly value these things who do not love the dollar for its sake. God uses these things for His purposes, and gives His children more than "food and raiment", where He sees money would not ensnare. David is speaking in this connection of his own use of money, his provision for Solomon's lifework of temple building, so we are warranted in finding a lesson on money in our text.

(1) The obligation to use money, for God may be most easily recognized when it comes as a gift. Joseph's brethren, of course, received their gift returning from Egypt, when they found it in their sacks' mouth. Providential gifts help one more thankfully to cry "All things come of Thee, O Lord". This should include inheritance. We recognize a child's right to these, but the child should ask, "Who decided that my parents should be able to leave me an inheritance? What moves their conscience or heart to do so?"

Others cannot recall such good fortune. They can tell whence and how every cent of their present property was earned. These will say, "I have to thank my strong arm, skilled hand, trained eye, unwearied feet, common sense, or good judgment for all of it" (Gen. 3:17). True! yet every loaf of bread, or cent of dollars is a Divine Gift. Is it impossible that in any community one wage earner lies on a bed of suffering, while family expenses go on? In another home a blind man, under his limitations earns with trained touch only, his living. Yet another may be found always busy, but never successful. Eyes should not be shut to the testimony. How is it, there has been no sickness in some homes, or a prompt recovery after illness, and no loss of either five senses? Whence came good judgment in business matters? Eyes should be opened, and hearts also, to the truth that "All things come of Thee, O Lord."

The Bible says, "Riches certainly make themselves wings". Yet some seem able to clip these wings. They are not wealthy, and yet they have property. Neighbors once well off are not now. Careful investments, watchfulness, necessary purchases only, self-denial are responsible. Whence came financial ability? Whence came self-control? God gave the power to earn money, and can give wisdom to take care of it.

(2) God's providential gift of means needs careful consideration. Money kept by disobedient servants with eyes shut to plain duty can only bring condemnation, but the servant may do his whole duty by God and conscience, and yet prosper. In so many ways God can take money from His servants, that where He does not, it becomes surely a gift from the hands of Providence. One neighbor is making monthly payments reducing a physician's bill, another is reducing burial expenses by degrees, a third, with brother-in-law dying, willingly undertakes the care of widow and children. These cease their visits to the savings bank, while another or others make regular contributions, or meet their payments in building and loan association. Is the health of the family no providential gift? Or these sums providing for the future, are they not also a providence? Surely of what one keeps as well as what one earns or receives, it is true that "All things come of Thee, O Lord."

(3) Is wealth a proper subject for prayer? Being plainly a gift of God, can He be asked for it? We may remember a loving Heavenly Father desires above all things the happiness of His children, and their greatest usefulness, money being power, St. James says (James 4:3): "We should not ask for what we may consume upon our lusts." True prayer also is always submissive. If selfishness or appetite prompt this prayer, God can in mercy withhold the answer. Such prayer must be only from purest motive. Christ taught prayer for daily bread. Where a servant can serve Him more sincerely, more largely, with larger income, let him sincerely pray for it, but God knows best the effect of an increased income. It is wise to pray for the state of life most free from temptation. Here the servant is weakest. It is best to pray for equipment for larger service, leaving God to determine the equipment. A wise man claiming liberty of conscience here for all men said: "While in spirituals we should both ask and trust: in temporalities (beyond necessities), we should trust and not ask."

(4) By all means thanks should be given for God-sent wealth. When grace comes with it, it can be a blessing. The thanks may be with trembling when its dangers are known. Yet, it may be accepted and used with watchfulness, because He sent it. God tempts no man but (Psalms 11:4): "His eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men." Satan will gladly turn the trials into an enticement. He is an experienced gardener with this famous, "Root of all evil" (1 Tim. 6:9, 10). It was hard to find a man unwilling to take this risk. With offered frace welcomed and used, one may thankfully receive God-given wealth. For with grace used, the trial can be met, and faith and courage increased. The temporal blessings wealth brings become marks of a Father's love to those whom He can trust with things. Money represents power, and one pound gaining ten pounds means more opportunity for the consecrated servant. The devoted servant can even thank God for increased responsibility.

(5) The grateful servant will give to God of His (own). David's example, as well as prayer, can be followed in a direct offer of money to God's service. This is a real test of one's consecration. This is an effective acknowledgment of wealth as God's gift. Neglect may occur here under the pressure of personal luxuries, fancy necessities, or unbelieving fear of future want. So real calls from God in recognition of His gift of money may go unheard. Parish subscriptions, community charity calls may be met; and the personal gift, even where the heart is directly touched, may be neglected. "Let not the left hand know what its right hand doeth," but "let each hand do what it findeth with its might." Christ said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren," and money is one way, though not the only way. So the fulness of God's gift is realized.

While a portion is devoted directly to God's service, there can be a conscientious consecration of "All things" to Him. Thoughtfulness here need not be miserly. It can lead to daily prayer for promised grace in the use of wealth. A dear Christian mother said, "I pray much for my eldest because he is poor, much for the second, an invalid, most of all for the third, rapidly growing rich." Dr. Guthrie received a handsome sum for his ragged school, he promptly thanked the giver for his interest in the school, the giver replied, "You would not thank me for my real motive. I fear harm from my money in a selfish use of it." The sin of the rich man of the parable, Christ described as self-indulgence. Christ loved the young man in His presence as He looked on him, but the youth's wealth separated him from his Lord, notwithstanding his obedience to the second table of the law of his youth. Only by a consecrated use of wealth can one prove worthy of it, and say in a day of account, "Lord, Thy pound hath gained", when one makes his returns to the "Judge". Only thus can one thoroughly enjoy it now in the "blessedness of a giver" (Acts 20:35). "Money is character," said Lord Lytton. The epitaph of Attolus of Reims is worthwhile, "He exported his fortune to Heaven, and is gone hither to enjoy it." The testimony of St. Paul is to be desired, "Laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:17).

STRATFORD DAY.

Honoring the memory of General Robert E. Lee, who distinguished himself in the armies of the United States and of the Confederacy, memorial services, in which more than a third of the states of the union will join will be held on the day following the fifty-ninth anniversary of the great leader's death, October 12, which has been set aside by the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation, as "National Stratford Day".

Services will be held October 13 in many states. "Stratford Day" has been proclaimed in the schools of Mississippi by Superintendent of Education, Dr. W. F. Bond. Special services will be held there.

The center of National Stratford Day will be at Stratford Hall. State Directors from every organized State will be present with their delegations. Governor Byrd is expected and the governors of other states have been invited.

The program has not been announced, but it will include prayer, addresses, music, and possibly a pageant.

Stratford Hall is being purchased by the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation, and immediately after October 13, there will be conducted an intensive campaign to raise the balance needed to purchase the famous Lee home and its eleven hundred acres of land, to restore the manor house and gardens, and to provide for their preservation. The amount needed is $500,000.

"Stratford Hall is in no sense a sectional shrine," said Mrs. Charles D. Lanier, chairman of the Robert E. Lee Foundation, "for in it lived the great statesman of the revolutionary period, Richard Henry Lee; the Revolutionary General "Lighthorse Harry" Lee; two signers of the Declaration of Independence; two Continental Ambassadors to European Courts, and other great men, including General Robert E. Lee, to whose memory, upon the anniversary of his death, we will devote National Stratford Day."

Virginia is organized under the State Director, Mrs. Ambrose C. Ford, of Clifton Forge, and is taking a great interest in the Foundation's work.

Stratford Hall is in Westmoreland County, Virginia, in that gracious country known as the Northern Neck. It sits back from the road, and overlooks the blue Potomac, twelve miles wide. The massive house was built by Colonel Thomas Lee, first native-born governor of Virginia, with money given him by Queen Caroline. It passed to his children and came to Lighthorse Harry Lee through his cousin, Matilda, whom he married. She died, and later "Lighthorse" Harry Lee married beautiful Anne Carter. One of their children, born at Stratford, was Robert E. Lee. Misfortune drove "Lighthorse" Harry from Startford, and he died in poverty.

Sixteen States, one of them California, have been organized with State Directors and Committees appointed. In all of them the work of "Saving Stratford" is to begin in full force after October 13, which will be devoted to the memory of General Lee.

General Robert E. Lee descended from opulence and strength to age and suffering, died at Lexington, where he lived while President of Washington College, afterwards called Washington and Lee. One of the world's most famous sculptures, Valentine's recumbent statue of Lee, marks his grave. It is appropriate to the character of the man that upon his tomb is no word of praise, no explanation of his life, only the simple words: "Robert Edward Lee; Born January 19, 1807; Died October 12, 1870."

The National Stratford Day memorial services for General Lee have been delayed one day because it was desired they should be held on Sunday. This will mark the first widespread memorial services for General Lee and on the next day will begin the effort to secure funds needed to restore the home in which he was born and which he loved and longed to possess as his family's home.

John T. Goolrick.

Book Reviews

ADDRESSES DELIVERED AT THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF THE DIOCESAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE P. E. CHURCH IN THE DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA, held in St. John's; the Monumental and in St. Paul's Churches, Richmond, Virginia, May 14 and 15, 1929. Cloth. Pp. 122. On sale at the Book Department, the Diocesan Offices, 110 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Virginia. Price, $1.00.

The desire of the editor that a Northerner, ever a lover of Virginian Churchmanship, should have the pleasure as well as privilege of this review is not a slightly conferred honor.

Herein is history, bristling with points of interest; the alluring recital of cherished ideals long waiting for realization, brought at last to birth and fruitful living; the heroism that has always made Virginia conspicuous; the internal struggle which marked the invasion of the Oxford Movement into this conservative and tradition-loving diocese; the allurement, on the other hand of the elements that eventually gave existence to the Reformed Episcopal Church: the strife, meanwhile, which, our most unhappy Civil War centered in this favored spot of the nation, concerning which every loyal-hearted Northerner has the longing to forget; the new adjustment following the peace of 1865, more difficult than that which issued from the Revolution—all this is borne upon the mind and soul of the reader with an appeal which generates a fresh affection for this commonwealth.

One thinks with devout gratitude of the missionary character of the Virginia Seminary. What wonderful men went forth from its portals to far-flung regions of the earth, "to tell them of the Saviour's dying; of the life He died for them to win!" How tempting is the wish to list the conspicuous preachers and leaders of the age of Dudley, Penick and Brooks!

And the Church-at-large must not forget that Virginia set the example of missionary giving in the new era of the Nation-Wide Campaign. Surely, this expression of abounding consecration was not lost upon the other dioceses. For Virginia has always been able "to give a reason of the hope that is in us" with no uncertain sound. Weak faith always generates paltry gifts to God.

One element is so appealingly present in these messages that the reader must feel the force of their winsomeness. It is the spirit of downright sincerity and dedication. One loves to find in any testimony, not only the details of the witness, but the personality which lies behind the offering. And these men from the distinguished Bishops of the three dioceses represented, to the saintly Neve, convey to us a heart-warming love for old Virginia and themselves.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

THE LEADERSHIP OF JESUS CHRIST AND THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH LEAGUE.

Mr. Editor:

There was recently sent to all the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church who signed for the Retention of the Thirty-nine Articles, an appeal from Judge C. L. Marsilliot of Tennessee, Secretary of the League. We trust this appeal is in the hands of every Protestant Episcopalian in America. In fact, every Protestant Christian could read it with profit, for it is significant, and presents very forcibly certain weighty matters which must be settled, if the Christian Church is to go forward under Christ's leadership, in Christian progress and efficient work. Indeed, the most important question involved in this whole controversy, forced by the "Anglo-Catholic Party", is the Leadership of Jesus Christ, the only ackonwledged Spiritual Head of the Christian Protestant Church. And it is of intense significance and portent, not only to us, but the whole world, for 'tis very certain we shall get nowhere, nor make any real spiritual progress toward Truth in the Christian Church under a false leadership.

The question directly involved then, and which must be answered by every man and woman in the Christian Church, is the "Spiritual Primacy" of Jesus Christ! Is Christ the only Spiritual Head of His Church? (to whom only is given "all power and authority" on earth, according to Scripture), as Christian Protestantism teaches or does He divide His authority with the Pope at Rome?

We are told that this Anglo-Catholic Controversy involves such things as "The Romish doctrine of the Mass, Purgatory, Veneration of Images and Relics, Invocation of Saints, including worship of, and Prayers to the Virgin, and auricular confession". Where is the Living Christ, in all this maze of false doctrine, and rubbish and caporings of men's minds? Answer, Men and women of the Christian Church! For above all it involves the power and authority of Christ, your only acknowledged Head and Spiritual Primate. And He divides His authority with none: we want no other, nor need any other! We are informed that this Anglo-Catholic Party quite openly and unashamedly defies the authority of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and flouts its doctrine and ritual, and yet it remains in it! It would seem that common Christian courtesy and goodwill, would prompt all Christians to worship where they can do so with most ease to their own conscience, and with the least offense to others, recognizing the Divine Right of all men of a free conscience to choose. This they have not done! They have not recognized or respected the rights of others in the Church, in which they insist upon remaining, while defying and flouting its ritual and authority. It is quite evident, therefore to all, that there can be but one motive in their presence, and that is of forcing this Church, if possible, to its own Belief and Form of Worship. They have made the mistake common to all Papists, that of supposing that in order to be a true Catholic one must be also a Romanist, not recognizing that true catholicity of spirit, which unites Christians, members of the one "Church Universal" everywhere, in a divine fellowship, which follows and acknowledges one Spiritual Head, Jesus Christ. It is only under this Head and leadership, can His prayer for unity in the Church be answered.

Only this true Catholicism can live, and survive, and dominate! Is it not time we recognize this?

Shall we forget the unbroken unity of the Christian Apostolic Church, for near three hundred years after His Ascension? Was it not then that the Christian Church forsook its true Leadership and went after "strange gods"? Today the greatest disturber of world peace, is the Papacy, with its false claim of "Spiritual Primacy", which no intelligent mind, outside of Rome, accepts, and pursuing the myth of "temporal power" and political control, which has caused so much trouble in the world, and which is entirely opposed to Christ's own teachings. His claim brings only unrest, revolution and trouble to the world. Mexico is a fine example of how this disturber of Christian peace works to gain its end: that of self-glorification and the elevation of the Papacy—not Christ! and the establishment of a bigoted, intolerant politico, religious monarchy, which recognizes no right, civil or religious, but its own. Go forward! Church of God! Under your only true and acknowledged Head! "Come ye out from among them" (idolaters) "and be ye separate," said the Lord, "and I will receive you." We must not stop at defense of this Leadership, but go forward boldly acknowledging it, not blindly, but prayerfully, by light of Holy Spirit, our promised Guide into all Truth. As if we turn back we shall be entangled again in this "yoke of bondage", which "binds men's souls and consciences in purgatory, whom Christ hath delivered" once for all! The worst part of bondage is Spiritual bondage, of the soul and mind! It is hopeless. This is the bondage, which has kept the race bound to its sins, its sickness and diseases—spiritual and material. Follow the Holy Spirit, our only promised Guide, and Christ our "only Mediator" suffered "once for all". It would seem that these, and this Scripture, forever settles the question of the doctrines of "purgatory, invocation of saints, worship and prayers to the Virgin, and auricular confession". Our High Priest, who has "entered in" the Holy of Holies and no other can understand and heal the woes and diseases, and infirmities of humanity. The Healing Christ! The Best and only true Interpreter of God the Father, is Christ the Son, whose promise is: "I am with you always". Our indwelling Lord! "Father, we thank Thee, that we, Thy children, need no other Interpreter to show us Thee." It is not a question of Creed or Ritual then so much as a question of the Right of True Leadership. It would seem that the Divine Right which is bestowed upon you by Christ Himself to withdraw from all disturbers of Christian unity, peace and harmony, calls you now, gives you the right to "go apart" to separate yourselves from all who deny this Leadership, and "spiritual Primacy", and who "set up" idols of any sort in His Place! Please read 2 Cor., Chap. 6, vs. 14 to 18; 1 Tim., Chap 6, vs. 3-5; Col., Chap. 2, vs. 18, 19; 2 Tim., Chap. 4, vs. 3-4; Titus, Chap. 2, vs. 1. Why does the Protestant Episcopal Church allow any man within its communion to prepare for, and enter its ministry, or any teachers, men or women, who defy its authority and ritual, to teach and preach Romish doctrines instead? Has it not the right and power within itself to decide these things for itself? When true catholicity is established in the hearts of all men, that which recognizes all Christians as belonging to the true Church Universal, and when we have that perfect understanding of truth, which He alone reveals, then and then only, will the Mission of Christian Protestantism (with Christ its founder and Head) be fulfilled. For all men shall then "Know the Truth" and be "free" from all that binds. Until then, its sacred duty, bestowed by Christ Himself, is to stand guard, defend and protect His truth and the free conscience of His Church.

M. G. Bateman.

"THERE IS NO FEAR IN LOVE."

Mr. Editor:

I wish to thank you for publishing the Athanasian Creed, as I asked, and also for your copy of it on August 31.

The Southern Churchman is a wonderful paper. Although I do not subscribe, my mother has always been a subscriber, and I enjoy reading it after her.

I feel I must tell you that I love the Episcopal Church, and would indeed hate to see it follow in the footsteps of Rome. Yet, I am sure it is the only Church that will eventually bring Romanism and Protestantism to a better and complete understanding of the other; this must be done. It cannot be done with fear and suspicion of each other, but "Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." In this spirit I believe our bishops are right, for, after all is said and done, force does not bring union, Christ does not force any man against His will.

J. G. Holladay Mitchell.

Petersburg, Virginia.

Church Intelligence

Funeral Services for Bishop Murray.

The instinctive dignity and simplicity which were characteristic of the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray throughout his long varied and distinguished career, marked the funeral services in Baltimore and the interment of his body in that city on Monday, October 7. The scene was at St. Michael and All Angels Parish, of which the Rev. Charles P. McAllister is rector, and of which Bishop Murray likewise was rector when, in 1909, he was elected Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese. At the express wish of Mrs. Murray and her family all that might seem ostentatious was omitted from the plan. Eight bishops and two priests occupied the sanctuary. These were: Bishop Helfenstein of Maryland; Bishops Burleson, Reese, Cook, Freeman, St. George Tucker, Gailor and Fiske; and the Rev. Mr. McAllister, rector of the parish, and the Rev. C. Warfield Hobbs, Chaplain to the late Presiding Bishop, and a secretary of the National Council of the Church.

Bishop Helfenstein read the sentences and the Scripture Lesson; Bishop Fiske took the Psalter, and Bishop Reese the Prayers; Bishop Burleson, present as Assessor to the Senior Bishop, pronounced the Benediction.

Interment was made in the family lot in Druid Ridge Cemetery, Baltimore. Bishop Cook read the sentences and prayers, and Bishop Helfenstein made the committal.

The members of Bishop Murray's family were eager that so nearly as possible all who had sought to do with these last rites be personally very near Bishop Murray, and so far as possible to have received ordination or consecration at his hands. As a result of this wish the honorary pallbearers were surviving bishops who participated in Bishop Murray's consecration twenty years ago and Bishops of the Church who have been consecrated by him. In the first group were:

The Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, Bishop of West Virginia; the Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg; the Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, Bishop of Western Michigan; and the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, Bishop of Georgia.

The second group, made up of bishops consecrated by Bishop Murray during his tenure as Presiding Bishop, included the following:

The Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, Bishop of Arizona; the Rt. Rev. Frederick W. Creighton, Bishop of Mexico: the Rt. Rev. John T. Dallas, Bishop of New Hampshire; the Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop of Maryland; the Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, Bishop of Oklahoma; the Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop of South Carolina; the Rt. Rev. Norman Binsted, Bishop of North Tohoku, Japan; the Rt. Rev. Thomas Jenkins, Bishop of Nevada; the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, Bishop of Eau Claire, Wis.; the Rt. Rev. H. B. Almon Abbott, Bishop of Lexington.

Active pallbearers were the last eight men ordained by Bishop Murray as folcon-in-charge of Christ Church, West con-incharge of Christ Church, West River, Md.; the Rev. F. Eric I. Bloy, rector of All Saints' Church, Reisterstown, Md.; the Rev. Tolley Le Roy Caution, deacon assistant in St. James' First African Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Claude H. Layfield, assistant rector St. Paul's Church, Albany, N. Y.; the Rev. James McNeal Wheatley, rector St. George's Church, Dundalk, Md.; the Rev. David Henry Croll, priest-in-charge, St. Philip's Church, Annapolis, Md.; the Rev. J. Moulton Thomas, deacon-in-charge of St. Thomas' Church, Hancock, Md.; the Rev. Charles A. W. Brocklebank, deacon assistant, St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore.

The body of the Presiding Bishop remained in the Chapel of Remembrance of St. Michael and All Angels Church. Members of the family only were admitted with the exception that constantly from Friday evening until shortly before the funeral on Monday morning, clergymen of the Diocese of Maryland in pairs maintained a guard of honor.

Report of Committee on the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the House of Bishops, October 2, the Presiding Bishop appointed the following committee on the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew:

The Bishop of Western New York, the Bishop of Northern Indiana, the Bishop of Delaware, the Bishop of Lexington, the Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia. This committee reports as follows:

The appeal for cooperation with the young manhood of this Church in their efforts to deal with their problem, as presented by the representative of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew appearing before this House today, is one that we must answer in an affirmative and practical way.

The Church is lacking in effective national organization in its work among boys, but possesses in the Junior Brotherhood an excellent agency through which to work for larger and better results.

Therefore, be it Resolved:

(1) That the House of Bishops at this session assures the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of its continued interest in and appreciation of the work of the Brotherhood among men and the fostering care which has been bestowed upon the Junior Brotherhood.

(2) That it strongly commends to the leaders of the Church's work, the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, locally adapted, as a basis of organized work among boys.

(3) That in view of the program of evangelism now before the Church the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Senior and Junior, be given the opportunity to render the service implied in their very name, and that to this end the Bishops be and are hereby requested to consider the claims of the Brotherhood for organization, reorganization, or further development in their dioceses or jurisdictions.

(4) That this committee be continued in order to cooperate with the Brotherhood and Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the furtherance of work among boys.

Signed:

David L. Ferris,
Bishop of Western New York.
Campbell Gray,
Bishop of Northern Indiana.
Philip Cook,
Bishop of Delaware.
H. P. Almon Abbott,
Bishop of Lexington.
Arthur C. Thomson,
Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Va

Consecration of Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania.

The consecration of the Rev. Dr. Francis Marion Taitt, rector of St. Paul's Church, Chester, Pennsylvania, and Dean of the Convocation of Chester as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, took place October 4, in the Memorial Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, before a gathering of bishops, priests and laymen from many sections of the country.

The sudden death the day before in Atlantic City of the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church, made necessary one important change in the program for the consecration ceremony. Bishop Murray's place as consecrator was filled by the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of Pennsylvania, who was to have served as one of the co-consecrators. Bishop Manning, of New York, and Bishop N. S. Thomas were the co-consecrators.

The consecration ceremony started at 10:30 A. M., with a procession which formed in the quadrangle north of the church and moved in front of the parish house into the west door of the church. The procession was shortened because of the weather.

Order of the Procession.

The Choir of Saint Peter's Church, Philadelphia.
The Assistant Master of Ceremonies.
The Students of the Divinity School in Philadelphia.
The Ministers of Other Communions.
The Clergy of Other Dioceses.
The Clergy of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.
The Master of Ceremonies.
The Standing Committee of Pennsylvania.
The Bishop Coadjutor-elect and Attending Presbyters.
The Bishops.
The Officiating Bishops.
The Gospeller—The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, S. T. D., LL. D., L. H. D.
The Epistoller—The Rt. Rev. John Chamberlain Ward, D. D.
The Preacher—The Rt. Rev. Wilson Reiff Stearly, D. D.
The Litany—The Rt. Rev. George William Davenport, D. D.
The Presenting Bishops—The Rt. Rev. Philip Mercer Rhinelander, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., and the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D.
The Attending Presbyters—The Rev. Martin Aigner, D. D., and the Rev. Louis Cope Washburn, S. T. D.
The Registrar—The Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D. D.

The consecration service was preceded by a brief memorial service for Bishop Murray.

Immediately after the service, Bishop Taitt was the guest of honor at a luncheon and reception in the Bellevue-Stratford. The speakers included Bishop Hall, of Vermont; General William G. Price, Jr., senior warden of St. Paul's Church, Chester; George Wharton Pepper, Mayor Mackey of Philadelphia, and Mayor Samuel E. Turner, of Chester. Bishop Garland presided. An Episcopal ring, the gift of the clergy of the diocese, and a pectoral cross, the one worn so many years by Bishop Brent, the gift of the Convocation of Chester, were presented to Bishop Taitt.

R. R. W.

A Swift Glorious Ascension Tide.

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Church, and Bishop of Maryland, collapsed suddenly in the chancel of St. James' Church, Atlantic City, N. J., at 1:15 P. M., October 3, while presiding over the annual meeting of the House of Bishops. Subsequent examination indicated that Bishop Murray had died instantly from a heart attack, not wholly unexpected by physicians and others near to him. He had just delivered a decision of historic importance which, at the moment, seemed only to affect the life of the Diocese of Southern Ohio. Once rendered, however, it determined the channel through which much of the life of the National Church is to flow since upon that decision not the Venerable Bishop of Southern Ohio, but the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard, D. D., became the senior bishop, and thus has been vested with something of the authority of a Presiding Bishop until a successor to Bishop Murray can be elected.

The Presiding Bishop died as he would have willed it. He was in full possession of every faculty. He was presiding with vigor and skill over the House of Bishops, displaying all of that tremendous untiring and consecrated eagerness for service which has been a dominant note throughout his life. He stood in a chancel; he was within a few feet of an altar where a few hours before, he had celebrated the Holy Communion; thus surrounded by every factor that enriched his ministerial life, and lacking only the presence of one of his own family, he experienced a swift glorious Ascension tide.

There was uncertainty, then consternation, as the Bishop faltered. Many thought as he cited Article and Section of the Constitution that his hesitation and the droop forward of his head had only to do with a search for notes or the Constitution itself. Bishop Burleson seated beside the Bishop sensed the increasing collapse and took the Bishop in his arms. Others, perhaps first among them, Bishop Remington, sped into the choir, cushions were found and the Bishop made comfortable upon them. A search for a physician produced a visitor from the neighborhood, "I can do nothing," he said.

In the meantime the Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland, Bishop Helfenstein, at the first sign of the Bishop's illness, had sped to Haddon Hall to seek Mrs. Murray. Soon in the midst of a sympathetic group she was on the way to the church. Meantime the House of Bishops had recessed, not however, until the venerable Bishop of Vermont, his brethren kneeling around him, had read prayers first for the ill, and then for the departed.

Mrs. Murray asked that physicians, friends of the family in Atlantic City, be summoned to speak the final word. Dr. Fisher presently entered the church only to confirm the tragic news, now universally accepted.

Bishops Fulfill Constitutional Requirements: At 2:30 P. M. the House of Bishops reconvened after its recess. The Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota, Assessor to the late Presiding Bishop, called the meeting to order. He referred to his own and their sorrow and, while, as he explained, he had no status, having received his authority entirely from the Presiding Bishop and lacking that because of the death of the Presiding Bishop, nevertheless, did call the House to order and ask its pleasure. Bishop Hall, of Vermont, as well as Bishop Burleson explained the situation now confronting the House. According to the Constitution, upon the death of the Presiding Bishop, the responsibility for convening the House for the election of a successor devolved upon the senior bishop. With the acceptance of the resignation of the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent on the day preceding, seniority fell to the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard, Bishop of Ohio, and Bishop Leonard took the chair.

Bishop Leonard explained that by reason of his age and infirmities, it would not be possible for him to assume any of the active responsibilities devolving upon him. He therefore announced the appointment of Bishop Burleson to be his Assessor. To clarify any uncertainty as to his authority, the House adopted a motion calling upon the senior bishop to fulfill all of the functions normally falling to the Presiding Bishop pending the election of a successor to Bishop Murray. Bishop Hall explained in detail to the House the constitutional provisions as well as the Rules of Order of the House of Bishops, concerning such election. The constitution provides that the senior bishop shall within two months give notice of a meeting for the purpose of electing a Presiding Bishop with the proviso in the Rules of Order that the date of election shall not be less than forty-five days after the issuance of the call.

It became necessary, therefore, to fix a time and place for a meeting of the House of Bishops. Bishop Wise urged that Topeka, Kansas, be chosen and suggested the dates in November, when the Synod of the Province will meet there. Bishop Johnson of Colorado called attention to the fact that in Washington November 14 next, the new building erected for the College of Preachers there would be dedicated in the presence of a score or more of the bishops of the Church. The development in Washington of the College of Preachers, he declared, in his opinion, to be "the most interesting and important enterprise at this moment to be found in the American Church". He urged that the Bishop of Washington extend an invitation to the House of Bishops for the day preceding November 13. Bishop Freeman of Washington immediately accepted the suggestion and in a few cordial sentences offered Washington as the scene of the necessary gathering. The named date violated rule of order concerning a forty-five-day interval but, by unanimous consent, the rule was waived and the senior bishop formally announced his call for a session of the House of Bishops at Washington on November 13, next, to name a Presiding Bishop for the Church.

A Sailors' Day Message.

To have a share in a Christmas celebration at the Seamen's Church Institute is a blessed experience. A bountiful dinner; cheerful music; presents for every one; a Christmas party with a real atmosphere of home. The Chaplain asks for a show of hands: how many were at home the previous Christmas? There are pitifully few. How many were at sea? A vast number. It all shows how true it is that the life of the sailor is the life of a wanderer. It is the price that is exacted from him for engaging in his important calling. The Seamen's Church Institute of America provides a home for him in our great ports. It brings cheer and friendliness during days of loneliness. It saves him from drifting easily into unworthy amusements and illicit pleasures. It provides the atmosphere of religion without cant.

Most of us can recall instances when we have been strangers in a great city. A city may sometimes seem the loneliest place in the whole world. When every one seems to be busy with all kinds of activities and blest with friends and places to go, the lot of a stranger is not a pleasant one. It is something of this sort that our seamen face in every strange port, and it is not surprising if sometimes they are brought under the wrong influences.

The Institute offers all of the things which men crave. When the sailor enters the Seamen's Church Institute he finds friends. He has the opportunity of securing lodging and food at a reasonable price. There he receives his mail; there he can leave his money and his possessions. For him it combines all of the comforts of church, home, club and hotel. What other Institution in all of our organized Christianity touches the life of a man so effectively at so many different points? Sailors are no different from any of the rest of us. We may associate with the sea a certain romance, but the romance is largely in story books. The sailor endures privation; he sacrifices home comforts that the humblest laborer enjoys; he is the prey of exploiters and yet, his work is absolutely essential to the proper functioning of human society. We owe much to the workers on the ocean and we make a very inadequate return for our indebtedness. One way, however, of recording our gratitude is by supporting the Seamen's Church Institute. It is a magnificent institution. We should be proud of it; more than that we should give it our cordial support.

The fourth Sunday in October has been set aside by General Convention as Annual Sailors' Day. It is an opportunity for the clergy to proclaim the importance of this fine expression of Christian love and for the whole Church to rally to its support with sacrificial giving.

Faithfully yours,
W. Bertrand Stevens,
Bishop of Los Angeles.

A Prayer: Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we beseech Thee to bless the Seamen's Church Institute of America now engaged in ministering to the needs and welfare of all those Thy servants, who find their occupation on the great deep. Endow with strength and courage those who have been called to carry on this work: be to them a shield and defense when the power of evil worketh against them; comfort them in the hours of loneliness and despair; give them a strong faith in Thy ever abiding presence and so bestow upon them such a measure of Thy grace, that they may lead that innumerable host of Thy wandering children into the way of peace, and make clear to them the path that leadeth to their Father's house and eternal life.

Grant this, O Lord, for the love of Thy Son, Our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

House of Bishops Adopts Minutes.

The House of Bishops appointed a committee to draft a memorial in its name expressing its sense of that House in connection with the death of the Presiding Bishop. The committee included the Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi; the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware; the Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop of California.

The memorial follows:

Our revered and beloved Presiding Bishop, Dr. John Gardner Murray, was called to his eternal rest in the chancel of St. James' Church, Atlantic City, while presiding at the annual meeting of the House of Bishops. Just before the close of the morning session on October 3, the Bishop had delivered his clear, incisive decision upon an important and difficult problem when the call came; and in quietness and peace he fell quickly asleep in his Father's house in attendance upon his Father's business and surrounded by his brethren of the Father's Household.

Bishop Murray had been the Presiding Bishop of the National Church for four years. He brought to the duties of his office the devotion of consecration and gracious wisdom from constant communion with God. To the responsibilities of the administration of a Church whose activities circled the globe, he brought the experience of a business man whose early years were crowned with accumulated successes—years devoted to God as he looked forward through them to the offering of his trained and ripened life to the ministry of his Lord. The ministries of the lay reader, the missionary in rural districts, the rector of the two important parishes which claimed his years of maturer powers, are full and rich chapters in the history of Alabama, his chosen, and Maryland, his native diocese.

Twenty years as Bishop of Maryland have woven his life into the religious and social fabric of the diocese he lived in, while preparing him for the greater position of chief shepherd of our national fold. Into this task he has thrown his splendid powers unstintingly and to it has given unsparingly his life, so singularly prepared, both spiritually and temporally, the strong balanced, steady character of the Christian gentleman, the self-forgetting, untiring, painstaking devotion of the Church administrator; the lofty, consecrated, loving generosity and fellowship of the shepherd of shepherds and of the flock.

These are the dominant characteristics which have won the abiding confidence of his people, which have commanded the admiration and loyalty of his brother Bishops, which have entwined about him the love of all.

For the House of Bishops and by their appointment we would voice for them and for the whole Church of which he was the chosen executive head, our common sorrow that we shall see his face no more. We thank God for him as in loving trust and confidence we commend his spirit to our risen and ascended Lord, who is the resurrection and the life."

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Dr. W. D. Smith Leaves St. Mark's, Richmond, to Take up Work at Christ Church, Middlesex.

It has been announced that the Rev. William D. Smith, D. D., the rector of the new St. Mark's Church on the Boulevard, Richmond, Virginia, has resigned in order to take charge of Christchurch Parish, including Christchurch School, Middlesex County, Virginia, on November 1.

Just ten years ago Dr. Smith was called from Winchester, Va., to take charge of old St. Mark's Church, then on the corner of First and Clay Streets. The church, at that time reduced to a mere handful, could not remain where it was, and, under Dr. Smith's able leadership, the small congregation secured a valuable lot on the Boulevard, and, in the face of many and great difficulties, erected a strikingly handsome church. In four years the congregation was worshipping in a completed church building. Bishop William Cabell Brown said that he had never known so large and difficult a task to be done so well, in so short a time, as the rebuilding of St. Mark's Church.

Since then St. Mark's has grown into a large and most active church, one of the outstanding churches of the city, and at one time the church home of Bishop Brown and Governor Byrd.

Dr. Smith is a man of remarkable intellectual and business ability, and a rare clarity of mind which he has devoted wholeheartedly to the work of his Church and to the service of the diocese in the many difficult problems which he has been called upon to help solve. He has been a most diligent and faithful pastor to his people, and a preacher with few equals and no superior in Virginia, in the judgment of a very large circle of hearers, for his sermons have been broadcast over WRVA every Sunday night for the last year. He has been greatly beloved and admired by a multitude of friends. His going away from Richmond will be deeply regretted by his many friends.

A Parishioner.

The Seventh Annual Provincial Conference of Churchworkers among Colored People in the Third Province, met at St. Philip's Church, Richmond, Va., the Rev. J. L. Taylor, rector, October 1-3. Sixty-one delegates were present. The conference opened on Tuesday, at 8 P. M., the sermon being delivered by the Ven. James S. Russell, D. D., LL. D., principal of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville, Va., followed by addresses of welcome by the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, D. D. (representing the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.), the Rev. Wm. L. Ransome, A. M., D. D., the Hon. J. Thomas Hewen, and responded to by the Rev. E. C. Young, A. M., D. D., President of the Conference.

The Wednesday sessions began with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:00 A. M. Several papers touching upon various phases of church life and work were read, and much discussed on Wednesday and Thursday. Thursday began with the Corporate Communion of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Rev. G. F. Bragg, D. D., being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. C. R. Dawson. The Rev. Scott Wood, D. D., of Pittsburgh, delivered the morning sermon, after which the entire conference motored to the Virginia Industrial School for Boys at Hanover, Va. The closing session of the conference was Thursday night.

The entire staff of officers were re-elected for the ensuing year. The Rev. Messrs. E. C. Young, president; J. L. Taylor, vice-president; E. B. Trotman, secretary; E. S. Thomas, necrologist; and Theodore Richardson, treasurer.

One of the important actions of the conference was the unanimous endorsement of a memorial, which had been sent to the House of Bishops requesting that in amending the constitution, the three words "race," "color" or "racial-line" should not enter therein. There was also sent a request to the Provincial Synod of Washington that some experienced priest of our group be appointed to part-time service in the visitation of all the literary institutions in the Province and to act as adviser to the several Diocesans in the initiation of new work among our group.

Rev. T. L. Caution.
Rev. S. H. White.

KENTUCKY.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop

Evangelism.

Under the able Chairmanship of the Rev. John S. Douglas, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism has begun active work with a well filled week. On Monday, September 30, a Quiet Day was held for the clergy, beginning with the celebration of the Holy Communion, and after breakfast in the parish house, continuing with a series of meditations and prayer, conducted by Bishop Woodcock, throughout the day till 2:00 P. M., broken only by a silent luncheon. On Thursday evening, a similar service was conducted by the Bishop, for laymen, preceded by dinner, to which the men came direct from business. On Friday, a Quiet Day followed for women, beginning with the Holy Communion, the Bishop as celebrant, and also conducting the meditations, till the afternoon, a quiet luncheon again alone breaking the series. Gratifying attendance marked all the services, and the most helpful instructions and forceful flow of thought for which the Bishop of Kentucky is so widely and happily known.

Executive Secretary.

Mr. John D. Alexander, for several years Executive Secretary or the Diocese, having resigned that office, the Rev. Humphrey C. Dixon, late of St. Ignatius' Church, Antioch, has been appointed as successor, assuming his duties October 1. During the period of his faithful and efficient service, Mr. Alexander has become widely known and universally beloved throughout the diocese, and though now to be busied with more secular work, his interest and labors in the advancement of the Church are not to be wholly suspended, as he has consented to take temporary cnarge of Emmanuel Mission, under the direction of St. Andrew's Church, the Rev. J. S. Douglas, rector, and one of the most active and promising Missions in the Diocese.

L. L. R.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Mr. Charles J. Bell.

The death of Mr. Charles J. Bell, removed from the Diocese of Washington an outstanding figure in the life of the Church, and the community in almost every field of work for good.

Mr. Bell was seventy-one years old at the time of his passing away and had spent the last forty years of his life in Washington. The Community Chest, so recently adopted in Washington, owes much of its success, it is said, to the interest and aid of Mr. Bell. His home was the well-known "Twin Oaks", on Woodley Lane, and it was here his body was brought from New York. Funeral services were held October 3, in Bethlehem Chapel, at 3:00 P. M. The Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, dean of Washington Cathedral. officiated. Interment was in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Resolutions passed by the Washington Chamber of Commerce show his standing in the community and are as follows:

"In the upbuilding of this our Capital City, the personalities of certain individuals stand out in high relief as typifying far-sighted vision, unselfish motives and efficient civic service.

"Outstanding in this group was the personality of Charles J. Bell, who it has pleased divine Providence to take from us to his just reward, leaving behind him a record of accomplishment which will remain as the proud heritage of his fellow citizens in the National Capital.

The "board of directors of the Washington Chamber of Commerce desire to record in this formal resolution their deep sense of the loss which Washington has suffered through the death of their fellow member, who was one of the founders of the Washington Chamber of Commerce and its vice-president during its first and subsequent years, and to express thus collectively their appreciation of his services to the Chamber and to Washington.

"To the members of his family the board extends its deepest sympathy in a sorrow which is shared by every Washington citizen."

Preachers and Lecturers.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington; Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Canon of Washington Cathedral, and Hon. George Wharton Pepper, Chairman of the National Executive Committee of Washington Cathedral, were joint lecturers on Monday evening, October 7, on the Story of the Development of Washington Cathedral in Greenwich, Connecticut. The lectures were given at a meeting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, where the three lecturers were house guests. While in Greenwich, Bishop Freeman was the preacher on Sunday morning, October 6, in Christ Church.

The preachers at Washington Cathedral on that Sunday were the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Warden of the St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-the-Hudson, New York, at the morning service, and Dr. G. Freeland Peter, Canon of Washington Cathedral in the afternoon.

Pray for Rector's Son.

The entire Parish of Christ Church, Georgetown, and many friends in the diocese, have been much saddened recently by the critical illness of the young son of the rector of the church, the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, Pinkney Wroth, Jr., eight years of age, a fine sturdy boy, who is universally loved by all who know him, and his illness has been a shock to every one. Conscious, through all his suffering, he has been brave and plucky and has shown the fine "stuff" of which he is made. On Sunday, October 6, when this letter was written, it was thought that there was a slight change for the better and constant prayer has been offered for him, since the onset of his illness.

M. M. W.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

A Parochial Mission of many hopeful auguries has just been held (September 22-29), by tht Rev. Edmund P. Dandridge, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Nashville, in the beautiful little church of St. Barnabas, Tullahoma. A singularly capable and winning speaker, Dr. Dandridge's instruction and sermons were full of interest. He was in nowise disturbed by the fluctuating congregations—very good for the size of the place—and gave his best to a people whose heart and courage and patience will always be the stronger for his help.

Such warm cooperation with the smaller places on the part of our clergy with large parishes is a happy augury for the newly constituted Archdeaconry of Middle Tennessee, of which the Ven. James F. Plummer has been made Archdeacon, with residence at Tullahoma.

J. F. P.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

A Minute to the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D.

In the good Providence of God, the Diocese of Maryland has enjoyed a noble line of men in the sacred office of Bishop. But no one of them has given the diocese a more effective, loving or successful administration than the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, who suddenly entered into Eternal Rest on Thursday, Octoger 3, while presiding over a special meeting of the House of Bishops.

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

OCTOBER.

1. Tuesday.
6. Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
13. Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
18. Friday S. Luke.
20. Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
27. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
28. Monday, SS. Simon and Jude.
31. Thursday.

COLLECT FOR THE TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O Almighty and most merciful God, of Thy bountiful goodness keep us, we beseech Thee, from all things that may hurt us; that we, being ready both in body and soul may cheerfully accomplish those things which Thou commandest; through Jesus Christ, Our Lord.

COLLECT FOR ST. LUKE'S DAY.

Almighty God, Who calledst Luke the Physician, whose praise is in the Gospel, to be an Evangelist and Physician of the soul; May it please Thee that, by the wholesome medicines of the doctrine delivered by him, all the diseases of our souls may be healed; through the merits of Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

OUR GREAT REWARD.

The very glorious Lord,
  At whose step Carmel shivers,
Shall be our great Reward,
  Our place of streams and rivers;
He, where no candles are
  Shall be the Sun that shineth,
Our bright and morning Star,
  Our moon that not declineth.

O God, our Help, O God,
  Our painful furrow keeping,
May we so turn the sod,
  So cast the seed ere sleeping,
That we may have such reaping,
  Such laughter after weeping,
Have harvest-home and God!

A. Bunston:
"An Eternal Excellenceq."

For The Southern Churchman.

The Religion of the Strong.

Louis Deschamps.

It is sometimes argued that religion is primarily a refuge for victims of misfortune, a solace for the wretched and inefficient. Sophisticated modern may find too strong a suggestion of helplessness and submission in the subject of religion. Young people especially are skeptical of the possible "inferiority" tendency of personal piety. Brute psychology is taken for the rules of human conduct notwithstanding they do not account for spiritual qualities.

For all who look at religion condescendingly from the little sand hills of self-satisfaction; for all who are so engrossed in luxury and success that they are vaguely aware of religion as a mild, social custom of church attendance once a week; for all who spurn finer impulses because apparently inconsistent with their pride based upon worldly wisdom and self-preservation—for all these there are a few thoughts of helpful significance:

No individual's character, however strong by discipline of will or of experience, is a match for all the blows of life that often come quite unexpectedly and indiscriminately. A reserve strength is a practical necessity.

The difference between a wrecked life and a resourceful defiance of circumstance is a matter of religious experience in character building.

Religion does not mean submission to suffering in the sense in which it is taken by the superficial observer. It means an acceptance of the challenge of suffering, which is a very different thing.

Religion enables one to acquire the highest type of self-reliance, because self has been allied with spiritual forces of invincible power.

The great men and women of history were not scoffers at religion. The example of the personal piety and faith of a Washington or a Lee are worthy of consideration. Every great movement toward the betterment of mankind is closely related with the leadership of some man whose religion was the source of the power he displayed.

Religion is necessary for that most helpful consciousness of the universal nature of humanity, its cultural past and helpful traditions that give a romantic background to the little span of individual life. There can be no vital consciousness of the brotherhood of man without a corresponding consciousness of the fatherhood of God.

If the throes of the competitive struggle for success demands a philosophy of battle, religion is as necessary for the attack as for the retreat. Without religion strength may become cruelty and victory may degenerate into bigotry.

The relationship of religion to morals is like that of patriotism to the requirements of citizenship. The Ten Commandments are both the product of social wisdom and the dictates of divine law.

However great and prosperous, independent and self-sufficient an individual may become, the final fact of death remains beyond the power todeny. It is better to die with a religion than without one.

Men I Know—21 Types.

Those who know their own weaknesses better than any self-appointed detectives may point out.

Those who have tasted of success without being intoxicated.

Those who have money but know full well it is not the greatest possession.

Those who have faced hardship and come out of the fight stronger in spirit.

Those who have experienced disappointment without becoming soured.

Those who enjoy life's pleasures and yet work effectively and worship God sincerely.

Those who seek to really live before their children.

Those who render service without any thought of material reward or social recognition.

Those whose decisive policy is to worship God as often and not as little as possible.

Those who regard the Lord's Day as a golden opportunity for inspiration and not mere relaxation.

Those who read the Bible not primarily as a text book but as the Book of Life.

Those who practice the Art of Prayer as a basic thing and from which everything belonging to life's finest emanates.

Those who have sounded the depths of Christian giving and therefore experienced the joy of resulting from definite money investments in the Church's work.

Those who positively know the superiority of transformation over information.

Those who can and do readily adapt themselves to God's revealed Will as naturally as to the call of progressive business.

Those whose interests have a wide sweep, taking in other men's varied need, even to the point of touching their souls.

Those who have so proved themselves that Christ can absolutely depend on their loyalty to His eventual Salvation of the whole world.

Those who know, unhesitatingly, when to say "Yes" and when to utter "No".

Those who have enough sporting blood in their veins to "play the game", and not remain in life's grandstands as mere spectators—to participate in the things that demand the purchase price of faith, courage, intelligence and money.

Those who see to it that their personal stock-in-trade has Real Religion as a main asset.

Those whose deaths would create a distinct gap in the Church's ranks as well as in our own hearts.—Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D., in Parish Bulletin.

Willingness Begets Willingness.

Patricia is fifteen years old. Her mother has despaired of ever again getting a glimpse of the little "Patsy" of six years, running errands for every one, always ready to help, begging to wash the dishes and water the flowers.

"Really," she says, "sometimes I wonder what has become of my Patsy! She is such a different creature at fifteen! I must beg her to do the smallest service. That sweet spirit of willingness has given place to one of the greatest reluctance."

It happens that I have been so closely associated with Patricia "in the making", that every time her mother speaks of this failing which is too often, there flashes before me an incident in her childhood. To me, at the time, it was a danger signal, but I am sure it escaped her parents' notice. Often our close relationship with our children seems to rob us of proper prospective.

On this occasion her Daddy was washing his automobile. Patsy brought him polishing cloths, chamois skin—everything he requested—with the utmost eagerness, while she watched the car emerge from its bath, bright and shining. I heard not so much as a "please" or a "thank you" from her Daddy. He was too much absorbed in his task to think of either, or perhaps he felt them unnecessary. When he had finished, he settled to read the news and had scarcely done so when Patsy made a request of him.

"Daddy, will you please fasten a washline for me? I'm washing my clothes now."

"Now, Patsy, you know Daddy has just finished his work and wants to rest and read. You run along like a good girl and find something else to do. Daddy will fix a line for you some other time."

There was a long moment's hesitation.

I wondered what Patsy's little brain was turning over as she stood watching Daddy settle down to his reading again. She said nothing, however, turned in a moment and presently found some other play. She was Daddy's "good girl".

She probably helped Daddy the next time just as eagerly as before in spite of his refusal to help her. But, of course, there were other times in her climb to fifteen years when both Daddy and Mother must have failed in a similar manner—when a willing heart encountered an unwilling one in return.

At fifteen Patricia has new contacts, new interests, which in great part account for her lack of enthusiasm for home duties. She enjoys helping prepare for the school play more than washing the dishes for Mother, now. Some such change was inevitable. But there is something more than new interests accountable for what Mother calls Patricia's "slackness at home". Mother should remind herself that at every turn Patricia finds her teacher and enthusiastic school-mates showing a sympathetic and willing spirit, while for a good many years Mother and Daddy have failed to do this.—Pauline Thomas, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

For The Southern Churchman.

PSALMS 16:9.

E. C. M.

Where roll the sands of Araby
To meet the azure sea,
The little ships cast out their toll
From pearling-fishery.

From off the sands of Araby
There ebbs a fetor-breath,
As though it drew from hateful pit;
The vapor-wreath of death.

But now the rightful hour comes,
And tides of traffic rise:
Repelling heap, a treasure-house,
Unveils prize, after prize!

So, when I'm thrown on sands of time,
And power knows decay,
Shall I be one to yield a gem,
Or just a castaway?

I trust the King of Merchant Men,
Who barters life for me,
May find some tiny pearl of hope.
Of faith, or charity.

We Shall Know Then.

How good a thing it is to be able quietly to wait! The thoughts of God come up from eternity and to eternity they stretch. It may be that not until I enter the world of light shall I know all that God is doing to me and for me now. Then He will tell me why the way was so long and hard; why I had to part with much I loved, with all my love; why other men were rich and I was poor; why some seed never came to blade or ear or full corn in the ear. His thoughts are very deep, but His love is most tender in thought. I cannot follow Him, but His love shines and sings and comforts on every hand.—Dr. Joseph Parker.

We are often troubled because even faith cannot draw His features nor imagine how He appeared in the flesh when He went in and out among men. But we shall be satisfied. We shall see what attracted the twelve, gave Peter his boldness, drew forth John's love, excited the faith of sufferers, and encouraged the timid and brought sinners to His feet. We shall see Jesus, realize what He was and is, and ever shall be, the Son of Man.—J. A. Hodge.

For the Young Folks

SOME LITTLE THINGS TO LOVE.

Sometimes I wonder how people can live
Without the glad friendship that animals give.
Some little thing, no matter how small,
To love you is better than nothing at all.
Some little kitten, a stray, humble thing,
Or some little bird with a droop to its wing;
Some little something, no matter how small—
Isn't it better than nothing at all?

Feed the lame bird and then bind up its wing—
Soon it will perch on your finger and sing!
Tuck the starved kitten up under your chin—
Hear it purr, "Thank you" for letting it in!
So many tables and so many scraps;
So many timid paws begging for laps!
Some little something, no matter how small—
Isn't it better than nothing at all?
—Our Dumb Animals.

Penny Forget-Me-Nots.

Jackie Sanders looked with shame upon his dirty hands and feet, then straightway he went in search of his mother.

"O Jackie!" sighed the mother when she saw him, "I was hoping you were going to add another penny to the forget-me-not account today, you had stayed clean so long!"

"I'm sorry, mother," the little boy admitted, "but seems I just can't remember things, as I should."

"I think, perhaps," interrupted Father Sanders, "if we would change our penny account, it might work better."

"How, father?" asked Jackie interestedly.

"Well, suppose, instead of putting a penny in our forget-me-not box every time we went through the day remembering the things we were told to do and keeping our resolutions as we should, that we put in a penny every time we forget anything."

"I—I guess that might make a difference, father," answered Jackie; "but I'm afraid the forget-me-not penny bank would get all my pennies."

The forget-me-not bank was a little metal bank that Jackie's best-beloved Aunt Sara had given him, when he was a little boy, and, while he was still a little boy, the bank was about his most treasured possession.

Almost ever since he could remember he had been putting pennies into the little bank for the things he did that pleased his parents. For instance, if he went all day without crying, they gave him two pennies to put in the bank; if he went all day without fussing, one penny went in; and when he went all day without soiling his clothes, three pennies was the reward. And now father was suggesting that the old method be done away with and a new one installed; and since both his parents agreed to it, naturally he must.

Realizing that the pennies that would go into the bank under the new system would come from his own pocket, Jackie went to bed that night feeling very blue, and perhaps he had a right to, because the next morning, before he got away from the breakfast table, he realized that he had forgotten a very important thing, which he should have done. He had forgotten to wash his face. And before night came down again he had left off two other important things; consequently that night three pennies from his own savings went into the bank.

"I say, dad," he said presently, "what shall we do with the money we contribute to the forget-me-not bank?"

"I think, since it's all due to our carelessness," answered father, "that we should give the money to some charitable cause."

At first the little forget-me-not bank flourished. Every day it seemed to Jackie that it called on him for every penny he could beg or earn, but by and by he began to get up in the mornings thinking about the things he was going to do that day. He began to listen to the things that mother and father told him to do and then doing them, and after a while father noticed that the little bank was growing slim.

Twice flowers had been paid for out of it for the charity ward in a big hospital, once it had bought a chicken for the washerwoman's birthday, and three times it had been emptied for missions, all for good causes. But somehow, Jackie thought he'd rather do these things differently; so he kept remembering and thinking and doing until the little bank was completely emptied.

"I say," exclaimed father when he discovered the condition of the little bank, "I guess it's time we were going back to the old method. It seems that our little boy never forgets anything any more, and he's nice and clean when supper time comes and so polite I'm almost scared of himself."

Jackie slipped onto his father's knee and looked up into his face lovingly. "I just couldn't let auntie's gift be filled with my forget pennies, father," he said slowly. "You know that little bank was a forget-me-not bank, and I think I've learned a lesson by it."

"So do I," laughed the father pleasantly. "In fact, I'm most sure my little boy has learned a great lesson; so we'll lay aside the custom of banking our forgotten duties and keep it just for love's sake."

An that night Jackie felt as though he was the happiest little boy in the world, for no longer was the little bank a reminder of something he had left undone, though it was a long time before he ceased to save his pennies in the forget-me-not bank.—Alice Montgomery Barr, in Christian Advocate.

Boys Who Succeed.

Thirty years ago Mr. H——, a nursery man in New York State, left home for a day or two, says the "Springfield Republican". It was rainy weather and not a season for sales, but a customer arrived from a distance, tied up his horse and went into the kitchen of a farm-house, where two lads were cracking nuts.

"Is Mr. H—— at home?"

"No, sir," said the eldest, Joe, hammering a nut.

"When will he be back?"

"Dunno, sir. Mebbe not for a week."

The other boy, Jim, jumped up and followed the man out. "The men are not here, but I can show you the stock," he said, with such a bright, courteous manner that the stranger, who was a little irritated, stopped and followed him through the nursery, examining the trees and left his order.

"You have sold the largest bill that I have had this season, Jim," his father, greatly pleased, said to him on his return.

"I'm sure," said Joe, "I'm as willing to help as Jim, if I'd thought in time."

A few years afterward these two boys were left by their father's failure and death with $200 or $300 each. Joe bought an acre or two near home. He has worked hard, but is still a poor, discontented man. Jim bought an emigrant's ticket to Colorado, hired as a cattle driver for a couple of years and with his wages bought land at forty cents an acre, built himself a house and married. His herd of cattle are numbered by the thousands, his land has been cut up for town lots and he is ranked as one of the wealthiest men in the state.

"I might have done like Jim," his brother said lately, "if I'd thought in time. There's as good stuff in me as in him."

"There's as good stuff in that loaf of bread as in any I ever made," said his wife, "but nobody can eat it. There's not enough yeast in it." The retort, though disagreeable, was truth. The quick, wide-awake energy which acts as leaven in a character is partly natural. But it can be inculcated by parents and acquired by a boy if he chooses to keep his eyes open and act promptly and boldly in every emergency.—Exchange.

For The Southern Churchman.

Owl's Trouble.

Adele S. Bailey.

Sparrow was swinging high up in a tree, and Squirrel was cracking a nut with his sharp little teeth.

Squirrell called up to Sparrow: "Let's old Owl. He has been perched in that old Owl. He has been preched in that tree all day long, and glum as glum can be."

Sparrow was willing, so they went over and called upon Mr. Owl.

"What's the trouble?" Sparrow asked. "Heard bad news; had bad luck?"

"I have been thinking," Owl replied, looking very wise. "Yes, thinking the whole day long."

Sparrow looked at Squirrel; both seemed surprised, however neither volunteered a remark. Owl continued:

"I have been thinking how the sun scorches my back and hurts my eyes; I have been watching that cloud in the distance, and thinking about the rain that is coming soon. Then, too, winter will soon be here—food will be scarce—to make a long story short, I have been thinking about what a terrible place this world is; the people in this forest, too, are bad—killers, thieves. I—"

But Sparrow and Squirrel echoed together: "Enough, no wonder you look glum! Better get in reverse gear! Think about something pleasant for a time."

Then they hurried away, for they, too, were beginning to feel glum and miserable.

"Let's get home quick," said Sparrow, "before we, too, turn into black clouds." And so they left poor old Mr. Owl with his gloomy thoughts.

Safe at home again, with Sparrow on his favorite branch overlooking the water, and Squirrel peering out of his hole, they discussed the Owl's predicament.

"He thinks too much," said Squirrel.

"No," Sparrow replied, "it is all right to think; but one should be careful what he thinks."

"Why," said Squirrel, "I never thought about that before."

Then Sparrow composed a new song—"Happy Thoughts Make Happy People".

How Fred Found Fuzzy-Wuzzy.

"I wish we had a dog, a little fuzzy dog to play with," said Freddy wistfully. "Hero takes care of the yard all right, but I just want one to play with. Couldn't we have one, mother?"

"Some day, perhaps," said mother doubtfully. "I don't know just where we could get one like that, but we will try to hear of one, and in the meantime, Hero is a good friend to us all."

Freddy knew that, and he loved old Hero dearly, but he held on to his idea of a small dog for a playmate.

Daddy came in one day and asked if we would all like to go with him for a long drive in the new car. He had to go to the next town on business, and we might go for pleasure, if we liked. Of course we did, and in we piled.

After a while we stopped at a garage for more gas, and as we were sitting in the car looking about us at the new sights, suddenly a little dog jumped up on the running board and looked into the car in the funniest way as if he were hunting for something. Freddy called out: "O Mother, look! Here is my dog, looking for me!"

"Why, he isn't yours, Freddy," said mother. "He belongs to somebody here, and he has lost his people. I wonder if he lives here?"

"No ma'am," said the man who was

Traffic cop gets summons

Even he can't get away with it

"DON'T try to put anything over on Nature," is the way a cop would express it. "Sooner or later she'll get you. Give you a ticket and lay you up in a place where you'd rather not be. Even cops can't get away with it. Like everyone else, if they don't pay attention to the warnings they get a summons that lands them in the doctor's office.

"What the doctor advises is Nujol. Says Nujol will regulate you just like you regulate traffic. Keep things from getting in a jam. And the doctor is right. Just ask the healthiest men on the Force. If they need Nujol—with all the exercise they get—what about the fellows that roll by in their cars?

"Just take a tip from me. You may have the best intentions in the world. But everybody gets tied up at times. Nature can't always take care of things without help.

"Our Medical Chief tells me that Nujol isn't a medicine. It contains absolutely nothing in the way of medicine or drugs. It's simply a pure natural substance (perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York), that keeps things functioning at all times as Nature intends them to. Normally. Regularly. It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them), but aids in their removal."

Nature's law O. K.

Start Nujol today. It won't cost you much—not more than the price of some smokes. Worth a try, isn't it?

You'll find Nujol at all drugstores. Sold only in sealed packages. Get some on your way home today.

BOYS GIRLS EARN XMAS MONEY
Write for 50 Sets St. Nicholas Christmas Seals. Sell for 10c. a set. When sold send us $3.00 and keep $2.00. No Work—Just Fun. St. Nicholas Seal Co., Dept 513-S.C., Brooklyn, N. Y.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer

J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

pouring gasoline into the machine. "He came here in a big car all the way from Michigan going to Florida a few weeks ago. He jumped out of the car to run about a little, while it was standing still, and when they were ready to go on they forgot him. We thought maybe they would come back for him, but they never did."

By this time Freddy was calling and talking to the dog, and he suddenly jumped into the car and right into Freddy's lap. He rubbed his head against him and seemed so friendly that Freddy begged: "Please let us keep him, mother! If his own people didn't care enough for him to come and get him, couldn't we take him home; and if they ever wanted him, they could get him."

Daddy thought a minute. The little brown, curly-haired dog appealed to him, too, I guess. At last he said that he would leave his name and address with the man, so that, if the dog's owner ever did come looking for him, he would not think he had been stolen. And the man said that would be all right, and he did not think they would, anyway. So Fuzzy-Wuzzy, as Fred calls him, stayed with us just as contentedly as if he had known us all his life, and I guess he will stay as long as he lives.

And you never saw such friends as he and Freddy are!—J. L. Glover.

MY DADDY.

There's a man I know,
Who's great and fine,
Whose heart is true I trow,
He loves me and I love him
And he's my daddy.

He has his trials, pains and tears,
His sorrows great and small;
But his heart's the same thro' all the years,
His courage does not fail
And he's my daddy.

He's always smiling, bringing cheer,
He doesn't fuss and frown,
He makes you happy when he's near,
He's the best old pal to have aroun'
And he's my daddy.

But best of all of him to say,
He's a faithful man of God,
He gives his strength and soul each day
In labors great and good
And he's my daddy.

—Agnes Walker Cree.

A Friendly Bunny.

About Easter time we moved to our new home in the suburbs, beyond which were old fields and woods. The children took with them their pet mother bunny, giving it a wire chicken coop for a home.

Just after sunrise the next morning, one of the children looked out the window and cried excitedly, "Oh, run and see a strange little bunny feeding 'Molly!' "

Behind the curtains we witnessed an interesting bit of life from nature. During the night little wild flowers had sprung up over the grass. The wild rabbit carried these in his teeth and pushed them through the wire to the tame bunny who ate them greedily. After numerous trips, some sudden noise startled him and he scampered away, and we never saw him again.—Our Dumb Animals.

St. Paul teaches that our faith in Christ as our righteousness is to be followed by our faith in Him as our life from the dead.—Andrew Murray.

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System
Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS BULBS; 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor, 12, $1.00; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. FRED B. JONES, Gloucester, Va.

BOOK WANTED.

WE WISH TO PROCURE A COPY OF the book, "Faith of Our Fore-Fathers", by Stearns. Any one having a copy of this book for sale please notify Southern Churchman, stating price.

SITUATION WANTED.

YOUNG LADY WANTS POSITION AS companion to a lady, or gentleman. Am free to travel. Can give good reference. Address M-2", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

CAPEHART: Entered into life eternal at Southall, near Kittrell, Vance counconty, N. C., September 3, 1929, THOMAS TUCKER CAPEHART, son of the late Captain Thomas Capehart, C. S. A., and Amelia Epps Tucker. 2 Timothy chapter 4, verse 7.

"I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

DR. THOMAS WILSON WHITE.

DR. THOMAS WILSON WHITE, for 13 years a specialist in pediatrics in Detroit, Michigan, died n Harper Hosptal, at 6:30 P. M., Wednesday, October 2, 1929, following an operation. He had been ill two months.

Dr. White, who was 45 years old, and lived at 7834 Van Dyke place, was a member of the American and Wayne County Medical Associations, and the Detroit Pediatric and Central States Pedriatic Societies. He was chief of the pedriatic staff of Providence Hospital, and also was a member of the staffs at Woman's and Harper Hospitals.

He was born in Abingdon, Va., February 19, 1884, and was married in 1909 to Lucy C. Skelton, of Richmond, Va. He attended the Abingdon Male Academy and the Virginia Military Institute, being graduated in 1903. He received his doctor's degree from the University of Louisville in 1910.

Dr. White served in the reserve corps during the World War, and was a major in the Florida National Guard, by appointment as commander of cadets, in 1904 and 1905. He was a member of the Detroit Country Club, the University Club and Indian Village Club.

Before coming to Detroit in December, 1916, he was a resident physician at the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital, and at the Willard Parker Hospital, New York.

TESTIMONIAL TO DR. KLIPSTEIN.

Adopted by the Vestry of St. Paul's Church in Memory of Dr. George Taylor Klipstein, at a Special Meeting of the Vestry on Sunday, September 15, 1929.

GEORGE TAYLOR KLIPSTEIN, M. D., passed into eternal life in Los Angeles, Calif., on Thursday, September 5, 1929 aged 74. St. Paul's Church thus loses from its earthly membership a life-long, most devoted member. He had been a vestryman since Easter, 1901, and a warden since April 20, 1926.

His colleagues of his honored profession in our city and hospital will testify to his medical and surgical talents, attainments and achievements; and a host of patients in Alexandria and all the surrounding countryside are mourning because, as one of them writes, "He was not only our physician, but a dear friend who has been with us in all our troubles and sorrows".

In St. Paul's we have known him affectionately as always and unfailingly deeply interested in the best welfare, material and spiritual, of our work. He was a constant, regular and devout attendant at our services. The Sunday School, the Chapel of the Good Shepherd and other organizations were near to his heart, and received generous aid in times of special need. He was good to those in affliction, and was frequently obedient to the Scriptural injunction "to deal thy bread to the hungry and that thou bring the poor to thy house". He was a daily and reverent student of the Holy Bible; and family and personal prayer beautified his domestic life. That Jesus Christ crucified and risen, is the only Saviour of mankind, was his whole-hearted convction; and he lived and died in the comfort of that inspiring faith.

Our sympathy is heartily extended to every member of his family in their bereavement and ours.

For the Rector and Vestry,
JAMES S. SMYTH,
Registrar.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 15.)

The Standing Committee of the Diocese, which has always borne an intimate relation with the Bishop, placed on record its deep and sincere appreciation of the unselfish and unswerving service which Bishop Murray has given to the diocese during the twenty years of his episcopate, and greatly mourn the loss of his fatherly care and guidance.

Well-grounded in his faith and well-rounded in his character, John Gardner Murray filled the various offices of his ministry with signal success. As Deacon, as Priest, as Bishop of Maryland, and as Presiding Bishop of tht Episcopal Church, he adorned the doctrine of Christ and advanced the cause of His Church. He was ever ready for every task and fully equal thereto; and he has left the memory of a strong and valiant manhood to be cherished by all who knew him.

The sudden call to "Come up higher" found him at his post of duty, ready for the summons. Full of years, full of good works, and full of honors, Bishop Murray's record here on earth is one for which many thousands, in Maryland and elsewhere, will devoutly thank God and take renewed courage.

Arthur Chilton Powell, President.
Benjamin B. Lovett, Secretary.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Department of Religious Education.

On Friday, September 27, the Diocesan Department of Religious Education met in the parish house of St. John's Church, Roanoke, with ten of the fifteen members and associate members present. The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Chairman of the Department, presided.

Especially interesting were the addresses of three representatives of the Provincial Commission on Religious Education who attended as guests; the Rev. Doctors Edwin R. Carter of Petersburg, Virginia, and Robert Nelson Meade, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and the Rev. Frederick E. Seymour, of Ardmore, Pennsylvania.

These gentlemen described the plans and ideals of the Commission and the several ways in which it can cooperate with the Departments of Religious Education in the various dioceses of the Province. Mr. Seymour spoke particularly from the standpoint of the education and Church training of children. Dr. Meade took up the problem of work among youth and college students. Dr. Carter discussed possibilities in the way of providing regular religious instruction for adults.

The Department adopted a resolution requesting the Executive Board to employ, as soon as the financial situation is such as to make it possible, an Executive Secretary for Religious Education who will devote part or full-time to work for the Department in the Diocese.

The questions of summer conferences and work among young people were important topics in the meeting. Several present stressed the value of local training institutes for Sunday-school teachers and cooperation with other denominations, especially in the smaller towns, in the conduct of such institutes.

An interesting point was brought out by Dr. Meade in discussing Church Preparatory Schools. Speaking of the very proper and natural effort to furnish educational facilities of this kind at the lowest reasonable cost, he said it is the feeling of the Provincial Commission that the best way to meet this problem is not to attempt to operate "cheap schools", but to have schools that conform to the highest standards in every respect and then to secure considerable endowments, etc., that will provide scholarships of various kinds for students who deserve and need such aid.

T. A. S.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Cornerstones Laid.

The Rev. Dr. Francis M. Taitt of the Diocese Saturday afternoon, September 28, at four o'clock, officiated at the laying of the cornerstone of the new St. Giles' Church, Stonehurst, and the next day, Sunday afternoon, at the same hour Bishop Garland, laid the cornerstone of the new Church of the Holy Sacrament, Highland Park, which parish immediately adjoins that of St. Giles to the west.

For more than twenty-five years Dr. Taitt has been Dean of the Convocation of Chester, which includes all the Episcopal Churches and missions in Delaware and the greater portion of Chester Counties. In officiating at St. Giles it was his last official act as Dean of the Convocation before his Consecration as Bishop Coadjutor on Friday, October 4. The new St. Giles Church is being built in Locust Street between Hampden and Richfield Roads, about one square west of Sixty-ninth Street. For a number of years St. Giles has been located at Sixty-ninth and Chestnut Streets. Due to the rapid development of the neighborhood into a business district, it was decided to move the church further south, and plans have been completed for an outstanding group of church buildings of early Colonial design to comprise a church, parish house and rectory. The Rev. Walter C. Pugh is minister-in-charge of St. Giles.

The new Holy Sacrament Church in Highland Park is to take the place of the old parish building, in which the congregation has been worshipping for many years. The new church will be built alongside of and connected with the parish house. The Rev. George W. Barnes is minister-in-charge of Holy Sacrament.

The New Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt Rev. Francis M. Taitt, will make his home in Chester in the same parish house he has lived as rector of St. Paul's Church, the property having been given to him for his continued use by the vestry and congregation. They have announced their intention of providing another house for whomever they may call to succeed Dr. Taitt as rector. The new Bishop Coadjutor will have his offices in the Church House of the Diocese, at 202 South Nineteenth Street, where Bishop Garland has his offices.

R. R. W.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

Fall Convocations.

For several years past the clergy of the Scranton and Reading Convocations have given the time of the sessions to the Field Department. The Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, of St. Paul's Church, Albany, N. Y., and formerly a member of the Field Department of the National Council, presented the National Church Program and how it can be worked out in the parish. The Archdeacon presented the Diocesan program. Much enthusiasm was engendered and the diocese is looking forward to a good campaign.

Endowment Fund Started.

Mrs. E. B. Jermyn, Jr., has just presented to the vestry of the Church of the Epiphany, Glenburn, a check for one thousand dollars as the beginning of an endowment fund for the parish in memory of the late rector, the Rev. S. Ezra Neikirk.

General Theological Seminary.

The Seminary hopes to receive $25,000 from the diocese towards the fund they are now raising for endowment and repairs. The Bishop appointed a committee to secure this amount. Dean Howard W. Diller, of Trinity Church, Pottsville, was elected as the chairman of the committee and the Rev. J. Lyon Hatfield, of St. Mark's, Dunmore, as the secretary. There are twenty-two General men in the diocese.

The committee planned to have a joint session of the two convocations when they meet next January and then launch the campaign.

H. P. W.

WEST TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Clergy Conference and meeting of the Executive Committee of North Texas were held at the Macie Hotel in Sweetwater September 17. An early administration of Holy Communion and an evening service, including Baptism and Confirmation, were in St. Stephen's Mission, Bishop Seaman presiding.

Dean Chalmers, of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, and member of the National Council, was the chief speaker at the Executive Committee meeting, and the preacher at the evening service.

Every clergyman of the district was present and made an address on some phase of the Church's Program, or the Every Member Canvass as discussed during the spring meeting of Diocsan Executives at Racine. Two of the lay members of the Executive Committee came to the meeting and Thomas R. Smith made an address on the Budget Quota.

The Rev. J. Hodge Alves reviewed Dr. Block's book, "Our Common Life".

Mrs. A. B. Hanson, Director of the Little Helpers and Birthday Thank Offering, and Miss Ruth Rix, Educational Secretary of the District Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, both member of the District Department of Religious Education, were present in the interest of their respective duties.

Financial reports were received from the District Departments of Publicity, Missions, Religious Education, Christian Social Service and the Field Department.

A budget of $6,000 was adopted for 1930, including National Council quotas, both budget and advance work, and District budget quotas. The latter included $500 for student work at Lubbock, and a like amount for student work at Canyon, both places having State Colleges.

Plans were adopted for the completion of the Every Member Canvass by December 15.

Mr. Will Stith and Rev. W. P. Gerhart, both of Abilene, were authorized and requested to hasten to a completion the erection of a monument in Callahan County near Abilene, commemorating the first services of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this part of Texas, in 1878, by the late Bishop Alexander C. Garrett, first Bishop of the Missionary District of Northern Texas, afterwards first Bishop of the iocese of Dalwards first Bishop of the Diocese of Dal-Texas for he most part was created in 1910.

L. G. H. W.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Cornerstone.

Bishop Page laid the cornerstone of the new St. Peter's Church, Detroit, Sunday morning, September 29. At the Easter service in the old church last spring, two members of the congregation agreed to provide the funds for the erection of the new church, when the parish had erased the indebtedness on the present building. Their anonymous gift was announced a short time later, and the construction of the building is to be started next week. The undercroft of the church was finished some time ago. The parish has been using the church basement as a social hall. It is hoped to have the new church, which will cost about $225,000, completed for dedication by Easter 1930. The ceremony on the twenty-ninth was attended by a large congregation.

Dedication.

On Sunday afternoon, September 22, Bishop Page dedicated the new All Saints' Mission, Seven Mile Road and Holmur Avenue, Detroit. All Saints' is a parochial mission of old St. John's Church, Woodward Avenue, Detroit, of which the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, D. D., has been rector for a number of years. The new mission is in one of the finest residential sections of Detroit. The land was acquired some years ago and a mission congregation established. The Rev. Berton S. Levering, formerly rector of St. Luke's Parish, Ysilanti, has been called as vicar of All Saints. The present building is the first unit of a group which has been planned, and it is felt that the establishment of All Saints' will prove to be a most successful venture, not only for the mission itself, but also for the community.

McE.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Frank Warfield Crowder, D. D., the rector of St. James' Church, New York City, resumed his duties on Sunday morning, October 6. Dr. and Mrs. Crowder have just returned from a three monthhs' trip in European countries where they visited many of the Cathedral cities.

ORDINATIONS.

Dr. Theodore O. Wedel was ordained by Bishop McElwain on September 24, 1929, in the Oratory of Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minnesota. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. F. L. Palmer, and the candidate presented by the Rev. V. E. Pinkham.

The Rev. Dr. Wedel is professor of English- at Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, and will continue his work in that institution for the present. He is alsa locum tenens at St. John's Parish, Mankato, Minnesota.

Robert Morgan Redenbaugh, of Long Beach, California, who for the past year has been a member of the clergy staff of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, New York City, was ordained to the Diaconate in that church by the Rt. Rev. Harry S. Longley, D. D., Coadjutor Bihop of Iowa, on Sunday, on Sunday, October 6.

The rector, the Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington preented Mr. Redenbaugh to Bishop Longley, who came to New York especially for this service. Dr. Darlington delivered the sermon.

Mr. Redenbaugh will graduate in June from Union Theological Seminary.

In connection with his duties at the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, Mr. Redenbaugh is at present officiating as the Acting Director of the Church School.

NO PACT.

They have no pact to sign—our peaceful dead.
Pacts are for trembling hands and heads grown gray.
Ten million graves record what youth has said,
And cannot now un-say.

They have no pact to sign—our quiet dead
Whose eyes in that eternal peace are drowned.
Age doubts and wakes, and asks if night be fled;
But youth sleeps sound.

They have no pact to sign—our faithful dead.
Theirs is a deeper pledge, unseen, unheard,
Sealed in the dark, unwritten, sealed with red;
And they will keep their word.

They have no pact to sign—our happy dead.
But if, God if WE should sign in vain,
With dreadful eyes, out of each narrow bed,
Our dead will rise again.

—Alfred Noyes.

"I was sick and ye visited me."

"He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth life for my sake shall find it.'

HOME FOR INCURABLES

Founded by Miss Mary Greenhow (herself an invalid).

Incorporated March 1, 1894, and started in an humble eight-room house, 1315 Ross Street.

It was then and is now the only institution of the kind in Virginia.

Outgrowing the first quarters almost at once, showing the dire need for such a home, plans were set afoot for enlargement.

The present Home was built in 1898, the first payment on it being made by a gift of $5,000.00 from Major Lewis Ginter and one for $1,000.00 from Mr. Jno. Pope.

Two wings have been added in recent years until now we have 61 patients, 12 of them bedridden and 34 confined to wheel chairs.

A Board of Managers of forty-two women and an Advisory Board of six men give unstintingly of their time and thought to the management.

A staff of five consulting physicians, who give liberally of their services, an interne and ten nurses and four orderlies care for the patients.

A superintendent, housekeeper, night watchman and nine servants have charge of the house.

Miss Greenhow considered that no small part of the success was due to the unfailing kindness of the Richmond press.

There are two auxiliary boards, the Mary Thomas, and the Sarah Allen, both making valuable contributions.

Church services by different denominations are supplied for each Sunday afternoon, and many entertainments are given by organizations and individuals. There is a well-equipped workroom in which splendid work is done by the patients, providing means for them to earn, in many cases, tidy sums for their personal needs and pleasures.

Some of the rooms are endowed and some cared for by interested friends. Many checks are received in honor of a loved one's anniversary; a sacred trust are those sent in memory of those gone before.

A distressing feature of the work with which the Board is constantly confronted is the long waiting list, always exceeding the number of the patients being cared for.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Please help us rescue the perishing by sending your check to Mrs. William Reed Williams, President, Home for Incurables, West Broad Street, Richmond, Va., for such an amount as you can spare now and remember us in your will after you have left this world for the Heavenly City, where earthly money does not pass current.

Yours in the faith that saves,

HOME FOR INCURABLES

Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ☧ FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 19, 1929. No. 42.

DO WE WANT A NEW GOSPEL?

By Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada

So many people think we do. The talk of the hour, in newspaper and journals, is an adapted Gospel. We must adapt the Bible, they say, to the spirit of the age. The times have changed. Everything is different. The watchword of the day in the circles of theological modernism is: "A new Gospel for a new age."

Of course, the times have changes, but one of the ablest thinkers of modern days, a university professor of eminence, pointed out not long ago that men who think and speak in this way completely mistake the difference between the absolute and the accidental. The truths of the Bible are absolute. They have no more to do with the developments of man through the ages than have the axioms of mathematics and geometry. The changes of the centuries make no difference in them. Five thousand years from now two and two will still make four; a straight line will lie evenly between two points; water will freeze at 32 degrees Fahrenheit and boil at 212 degrees Fahrenheit; children will still laugh and be merry; boys still romp and be mischievous; men and women still smile and weep, eat and drink, grow and die.

And so it is with the absolute truths of the Bible. God, the Almighty, Creator and Father; Christ, the Son of God, Saviour and Redeemer; man, created in the image of God, sinful, suffering, sorrowing, dying, needing salvation and comfort, able to cry to God, and crying to Him by the mystic power of faith—these will ever constitute the underlying elements of the immutable Gospel. And that is why the Bible and the Gospel of Christ will go on and on from age to age, ever old and ever new. Because men know a little more, have a little more, travel a little more, does not alter the fact that they are what they are. They are and they always will be sinners guilty, souls immortal, sons prodigal. What, after all, are such secondary things as the invention of railways, telephones, telegraphy, airplanes, submarines, radios, compared with those everlasting facts that concern the whole human race; of life and death, of sin and sorrow, of the hunger and thirst of the human soul for the divine; and the marvelous satisfaction of the Word of God, which, like bread, nourishes my soul, and, like water quenches the thirst of my spirit? Almost the last public word of that famous British labor leader, Mr. Keir Hardie, were these: "My friends and comrades, I often feel very sick at heart with politics, and all that pertains thereto. If I were thirty years a younger man, with the experience I have gained during the past thirty-five years, I would, methinks, abandon house and home, and wife and child, if need be, to go forth among the people to proclaim afresh and anew the full message of the Gospel of Jesus of Nazareth. We are all of us, somehow or another, off the track." And then he went on to say that what is wanted is a fresh inspiration, a fresh vision of the Gospel of Christ, the salvation of the individual and collective soul. Yes, the times have changed; fashions have changed; customs have changed; but not the heart and soul of man. The world is still a world of need and want, of souls that struggle and hearts that need, and lost sons longing for home. Still this weary world, underneath all the glamour and dazzle without, within is wistful for its God and Saviour. The word is not changed. The Gospel is not changed. It is still the power of God unto salvation. Christ absolutely necessary; Christ exclusively sufficient; Christ instantaneously accessible; Christ eternally satisfying. O, believe it; O, receive it; or, better, receive Him, believe Him. (John 1:12; 3:16; 3:36; 5:25; 6:37; 7:37; 8:12.)

BELIEVE ON THE LORD JESUS CHRIST AND THOU SHALT BE SAVED AND THY HOUSE.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

DIVINITY SCHOOL

of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean.

Mediterranean 57 DAYS ~ $495

An all-expense cruise.

Other tours Europe 37 days $295. Bermuda 13 days $106.

Book of over 200 tours sent free on request.

ALLEN TOURS, INC.,
154 Boylston Street,
Boston, Mass.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Not Merely a Matter of Dollars and Cents—Lewis B. Franklin	6
We believe That Thou Shalt Come —Kenneth Mackenzie	7
Athleting for Christ—C. C. McIntire	7
Are They Loyal Churchmen?—J. J. Clopton	8
Lines by Dr. Matheson	8
Favorite Scripture Verse	8
Gifts to God Could Interest Jesus Christ Personally—K. J. Hammond	9
"Stonewall"—Alfred B. Williams	10
Book Review	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	16
Children's Department	23
Personal Notes

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next session begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

SAINT MARY'S SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina.

Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Have your daughter receive her education in a Church School.

Saint Mary's offers four years' High School and two years' College work all fully accredited by the Southern Association. Also Courses in Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics and Business.

20-acre campus. Gym and Field Sports. Tennis. Indoor Tiled Swimming Pool. Horseback Riding.

For Catalogue and View Book address A. W. TUCKER, Business Manager.

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.

Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.

An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".

Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

THE PERRY PICTURES

ONE CENT SIZE
3x3½. For 50 or more.
TWO CENT SIZE
5½x8. For 25 or more.
Send 50 cents for 25 on The Life of Christ or 25 Art Subjects or 25 for Children, 5½ x 8. Or 50 for Children, 3 x 3½.

LET your children make companions of world's most beautiful pictures. Culture, happiness and beauty will be added to their lives.

Use them in the Sunday School
Send 15 cents for Catalogue of 1600 Illustrations
The Perry Pictures Box 867, Malden, Mass.

CASSOCKS
Surplices, Stoles, Eucharistic Vestments, Choir Cassocks, Cottas, Ties and Collars, Altar Linens, Materials, Tailoring.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
174 Madison Ave.
(Bet. 33d & 34th Sts.)
New York.

THE USES OF BULLETIN BOARDS.

A bulletin board is a vital part of church and Sabbath-school equipment today. Strangers passing before a church door may be led to come to one of these services just by the title of a sermon, or a Bible text, or a thought-provoking sentence. Men and women who have not been in church for years may be led in by a text that they learned when they were children, and that first step may be the bginning of a complete change in their lives.

There are many styles of bulletin boards and a wide range of prices. Some are artistically wrought of copper and brass, others are made of oak and stained to match the church or Sabbath-school building; most modern boards are electrically lighted and are protected from the weather by miniature cornices and eaves and glass fronts. Some are fitted with standards to be mounted on the lawn; others can be attached to the building itself. The letters are of different sizes and can be quickly and easily changed, and words may be emphasized by using colored letters.

Churches of moderate means, or without special funds available for advertising, may build their own cabinets or bring old style bulletin boards up to date. One concern manufacturing bulletin boards sells the sign panels and letters separately, so that a church does not need to buy a whole bulletin board if it does not wish to.

Information will gladly be given to pastors if they will just address their requests to Church Equipment Service, care of The Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.

$59 DE LUXE ELECTRIC CHURCH BULLETIN
With 780 Steel Letters
72X44
Advertise your church; build attendance; increase collections. Over 20,000 in use. Day or night. Economical; effective. Free catalogue shows many styles and sizes.
H. E. WINTERS SPECIALTY CO.
810 Pershing Ave. Davenport, Iowa
Wired, ready for use

M. P. MOLLER PIPE ORGAN
Guaranteed the Highest Grade.

Endorsed by the most eminent organists.
Built in the world's largest factory.
Every organ a special creation for a particular use.
Moller organs leads all makes for every use.
The Moller "Artiste" reproducing residence organ has no equal in its particular field.
Booklets and specifications upon request.

M. P. MOLLER,
Factory and General Offices,
Hagerstown, Md.

J. & R. Lamb
25-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street,
Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

VIRGINIA DAIRY CO.
Richmond, Va.
"THE HOME OF BETTER MILK"
MILK, CREAM, BUTTER, BUTTERMILK, RICHELAC
Phones Boul 938-939 F. F. RENNIE, President.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD
Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria
Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

DEAGAN TOWER CHIMES

A hymnal program in the morning, old favorites at sundown, curfew at night—the sweet, lingering, eagerly-awaited voice from the belfry that brings new prestige and influence to the Church.

Automatically Played by Hand-Recorded Reproducing Rolls

Press a button and the Chimes begin to play. Or, set the dial of a clock today and tomorrow at the desired hour a program of Chimes music fills the air! The Voice of the Church—the Memorial Sublime.
Price, $4375 and up. Full details on request.
J. C. DEAGAN, Inc., 112 Deagan Building, Chicago

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:

The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"God knows His servants by their souls and not by their salaries."

"Rules are useful until principles are understood."

"Those who live with us have the greatest power to lift us."

A man may have to pay for sympathy, he may have to cry for bread, and he may have to beg for love, but a man can command respect.

If we see to it that we have living grace while we are alive and well, God will see to it that we have dying grace when we need it."

We witness the Gospel in the Acts taking its flight from Jerusalem and starting out from the uttermost parts of the earth. The eagle, having been released from its shell, cannot be confined to its nest or to its native crag, but commits its wings to the boundless blue and flies in the face of the sun. Christianity was no local cult or racial religion to be tethered on its mountain top in Jerusalem.—Selected.

When I am driving on a street
Where little folks I'm apt to meet,
Who dash across the street in play,
I hope I'll drive in just the way
That I would drive if mine were there
Upon that crowded thoroughfare.
—Exchange.

God's judgment is not simply something we need fear and cringe before as before a tyrant's lash, but it is truth and goodness and is our best friend when we stand before it in penitence and faith.

Heaven doth with us as we with torches do;
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touched
But to fine issues.

It is stated that La Salle, the most popular confessor of the Middle Ages, has left it on record, that of the tens of thousands who confessed to him their sins, no one ever confessed to a love of money.

God's niche for us will always require that we fully extend ourselves to fill it.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

Zeal is not a certain mark of piety. To the hypocritical scribes and Pharisees, the Master said: "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte." And what stirring missionaries are the Mormons!

Rembrandt's counsel to his pupil Hoogstraten when the latter teased him with questions might well be borne in mind by such as are troubled with doubts. "Try," he said, "to put well in practice what you already know. In so doing you will, in good time, discover the hidden things which you now inquire about."

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.,

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock	$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned	$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....	$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 19, 1929. No. 42.

FARM RELIEF

Farmers, dirt and theoretical, politicians, practical and idealistic, individuals blest with ordinary, common horse sense and Superior Persons afflicted with intellects, have been busy through weary years with plans to make the farmers prosperous and happy, regardless of weather, methods, management, trade conditions and the laws of supply and demand. The Rev. Dr. Warren H. Wilson, of the Division of Church Extension, Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church (Northern), proclaims that he has found the solution. It is to teach all farmers the doctrine of evolution. Dr. Wilson does not say which special theory of evolution he would have installed and instilled. Six were in sight at last count, each more or less contradictory of all the others. Two of the six seem to concede that there was, or may have been, some kind of directing intelligence in creation. As the doctor is a clergyman of a denomination officially recognizing the existence of God and, presumably, draws a salary for his officiations—office, New York City—we may suppose that he adheres to one of these two, or, perhaps, slightly to each. He announced his elucidation at the recent Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia. His announcement did not disturb the monotony of dreary, daily dribbling of drivel exuded into newspapers from that august assemblage, appearing to many of the uncultured, unintelligent and unenlightened as a kind of solemn convocation of cloistered cranks; but it suggests observations and suppositions.

The vehemently expressed conclusion of the enthusiastic and learned doctor is that the United States Government, with agents of the department of agriculture, should sow in the farmer breast the seeds of evolution and develop them to ripening and fruitage. He was derisive and sneery at waste of time and effort, under prevailing systems in teaching such inconsequential and unimportant trivialities as culling poultry, breeding cattle and selecting seed. The agents, Dr. Wilson scornfully asserted, were shamefully derelict in teaching the farmer "to make money instead of teaching him to think"—think on evolution and learn to adopt and love one of the six varieties, or, maybe, a mixture of all of them. What might become of the farmer and his family while he learned to think on evolution and disregarded the sordid detail of making money and food evidently does not appeal to Dr. Wilson as a matter worthy of his consideration. Perhaps he is of that school of progressive thinkers which holds the family to be a musty, frayed, outworn tradition and relic of the much derided Victorian era.

The farmer's personal experience may tell him that the most useful or beautiful plants deprived of discipline, direction and care, relapse to weeds within a few years; the most valuable animals neglected through three or four generations go wild and become valueless. Yet he is to be taught to think to the extent of deciding that the process of evolution, of natural selection and survival of the fittest, will develop perfection inevitably. If the farmer's children, supposing him to cling to old notions so far as to care at all about them, are emancipated from the ancient iniquity of limitations on their freedom and intrusion on their inclinations with restraints, control, admonition and occasional punishment; he may look confidently to see them rise to the glorious intellectual liberty and dignity and noble and untrammelled moral standards of the Hottentots and the Australian Bushmen. These peoples have been in course of evolution, natural selection and survival of the fittest, unhampered by knowledge of or belief in God, making their own gods to suit their own tastes and preferences, through untold centuries. We may suppose, logically, that they have attained conditions ideal in the view of the Rev. Dr. Wilson, of the Board of National Missions, Northern Presbyterian Church, and to be envied and emulated by American farmers, under guidance of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Wilson's proclamation, enunciation, denunciation and exhortation give a curious, somewhat interesting and delightfully ridiculous illustration of the chaos of confusion, and contradictions in which our liberal, advanced and progressive free thinkers feebly wander and from which they emerge quite frequently with scintillant suggestion, to be displayed under startling headlines in the nastier and more anxious newspapers. One element emits moans and shrieks of horror and protest against reading of the Bible or any touch on religion in our schools. Dr. Wilson and his element seem to demand that irreligious and distrust of the Bible be drilled into the American farmer by the government, that acceptance of ape ancestry be made as obligatory on the American citizen as fidelity to the Constitution. Very recently some of these learned leaders of liberal thought have burst into print with pronouncement that relations of the sexes as established in civilized countries—not including Russia—are altogether wrong and retrogressive and must be revolutionized, especially by abolition of the institution of marriage, fettering natural selection and right of choice and change. Yet others inform us that the moral code founded on the Ten Commandments is tyrannical invasion of individual rights of determination, repugnant to modern intelligence and requirements. Another representation of the heavy thinkers and profound philosophers discovers and voices that the love of man and woman, allegiance and devotion of husband and wife, are exploded superstitions and delusions. Competing uplifters deride belief in anything we cannot detect and examine with our physical senses, omitting, however, to indicate how or when we may see, smell, taste, touch or hear the attraction of gravitation or the magnetic current. So the advanced advance and essay to turn us in our tracks and conduct us back to barbarism, heathenism and universal anarchy.

To the vast, excited and rhetorical indignation of the Rev. Dr. Wilson of the Board of National Missions, Northern Presbyterian Church, the United States Department of Agriculture has failed to implant in the American farmer such thoughts and perceptions as these, denying him, in Dr. Wilson's words, "the intellectual awakening that the universities have had". Also, again quoting Dr. Wilson, the department has given the farmer "exhortation to profit" —which, as a matter of cold fact, the average farmer would welcome rather gleefully—but has "given no large thoughts, such as stir the imaginations of teachers". Unfortunately, Dr. Wilson omitted to indicate the large thoughts, stirring the imaginations of teachers, he would have the department of agriculture inculcate in the farmer. He does not confide to us whether they include rejection of intelligence and purpose in creation, substitution of lust for love, on the principle of natural selection, destruction of all conjugal and family ties and obligations, contemptuous condemnation of the Holy Scriptures, or acceptance of them in spots. We are not told whether he is one of the sleek, safely and comfortably cared for students arriving by superficial analysis of Hebrew periods and language variations and Greek roots at conclusions that the saints, heroes and martyrs who strove, suffered and died for their Christian faith were forgers and liars, putting into the record inventions and interpolations. Apparently his idea of the supreme function of government is to cure the ills of the farmer by obliteration of his love for and hope in the religion by which the builders of this country who made its power and beauty and glory have lived and died. His gorgeous conception is to help the farmer by teaching him evolution, throwing aside Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, St. Paul and the Old Testament and luxuriating in Freud, Schopenhauer, Kant, Voltaire and Paine, thus illuminating himself with the "intellectual awakening". In the estimation of Dr. Wilson, the farmer who makes two blades grow where one grew, who feeds millions of hungry people, adds billions to the national wealth and supports hundreds of churches and many missions to all parts of the earth wastes his time and talents. He is a poor and deplorable figure compared with Dr. Wilson and the various brands of fancy theologians and professors who produce ceaseless cateracts of words, assiduously cultivating their vanity while suppositiously cultivating their suppositious minds, devising for the newspapers many varieties of fallacies, heresies and lunacies. Food crops, self-support, self-respect, care for families, are trivial matters compared with learning to think heavily and comprehending and adopting evolution, says this exponent of one kind of theology.

By government agencies and activities the farmer is to have his faith in the Bible unsettled, to have taken from him in trouble and affliction, the consolation of looking forward to the time, after the ending of life's labors, of rest for the weary and heavy laden and the wiping away of tears from all eyes. He is to absorb some larger thought, "such as stir the imaginations of teachers", than universal peace and good will among men and the bearing of one another's burdens. He is to be forbidden to take to his heart the words of David—farmer boy, tending his father's sheep—"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want;" and "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Belief in evolution is to be the stay and blessing of the farmer, in the view of the Rev. Dr. Wilson.

Earthly courts inflict the death penalty for murder of human bodies. For spiritual murder they have no jurisdiction. That is elsewhere. Let us hope, humbly, that in the Eternal and Omnipotent Court before which all of us must go, there will be mercy at last for those who, seeking cheap, side show, publicity and sensation, deliberately attempt the degradation and desolation of human hopes, the wholesale assassination of human souls.

Alfred B. Williams.

NOT MERELY A MATTER OF DOLLARS AND CENTS

By Lewis B. Franklin

Vice-President, National Council Ex-officio Chairman, Department of Finance.

It is five o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, October the ninth. The National Council has recessed until the following morning to allow the Department of Finance time to determine upon the budget of the Missionary Society for the year 1930.

In a room on the top floor of a nearby hotel four laymen and one bishop meet to do this work. Tonight they are without the leadership of their beloved Presiding Bishop, gone to his reward. In spite of their sorrow, there is important work to be done; they must carry on.

The task with which they are confronted is to bring down total askings of $4,395,855 presented to them by bishops, missionaries and other leaders as their minimum needs, to the limit of $4,224,670 set by General Convention. A simple task, if it were merely a matter of figures. Cancel this, reduce that, and the balance is struck.

One by one the possible reductions are considered, each bringing to that little group of earnest men a picture of the work that lies behind that dollar sign and that row of digits. Here appears a group of splendid young Churchmen, lifted out of the religious environment of home and parish and transported into the maelstrom of a modern university. Some are thinking of the ministry, some are lukewarm in their trust in God, all need sympathetic guidance. On the other side of a river stands a young, enthusiastic clergyman, yearning to give himself to help these boys. The bridge over the river which divides them can only be built of dollars. The dollars are not available, the bridge is not built.

From an almost inaccessible corner of Utah appears another vision. Nine thousand Navajo Indians, practically without religion save for their pagan rites, some with bodies racked with the pain of sickness, stretch out their pleading hands to a priest of the Church, who after surveying the field is studying to be a doctor of medicine in order that he and his wife may leave home and friends and minister to these forgotten children of God. It will take $3,600 a year to give this missionary a small salary and some simple medical supplies and equipment. It is a new item. There is no leeway. Out it goes.

Another picture!

Scores of thousands of poor, illiterate Mexicans living on our Southern borders, alienated from the Church of their birth, groping in the darkness. A Spanish-speaking priest could bring the message of salvation to large numbers of these people. For house rent, salary, rent of chapels and travel, $4,880 a year is needed. With sorrowing hearts, this bright opportunity is rejected. From the far-off Philippines, from Japan and elsewhere, other pictures appear, each brilliant with the light of opportunity, each doomed to fade away under the blight of necessity. "There was no room for them" in the budget.

Eight hours of hard work, except for the brief respite of the dinner hour, brings the painful task to an end. At one o'clock in the morning the budget is ready for the National Council, but at what a sacrifice!

To the mind of every man appears then a dreadful specter of the day in February next on which this same group must meet again, meet to balance this budget, built with such travail of soul, such destruction of glorious visions, with the expected income under the "Pay-As-You-Go Plan". "What further destruction must be wrought?" "What work for the Master, now being done, must stop?"

Surely the people of our Church, if they but know, will see to it that in the Every-Member Canvass, soon to be held, every parish and mission will do its share. Nay, more! Surely there will be generous men and women who in every diocese will say voluntarily to their bishop, "Call on me for any deficiency there may be in the parish pledges, in order that none of the work in this already reduced budget may be stopped".

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

XVIII.

Poets and philosophers, from Plato to Edward Bellamy, have longed for and apprehended the golden age in which right should triumph over wrong and joy should replace sorrow. Scripturally, that wonderful epoch is faithfully depicted in outline and detail. The devout believer absorbs its thrilling prospect, accepts its challenge to faith. A time when war shall be no more; when the pangs of humanity shall cease; when the days of childhood shall be unmitigated by the ills and pains of physical growth; when poverty shall not stalk through the land; when the will of God shall be truly "done on earth as in heaven".

God Cannot Be Frustrated.

He formed this earth for His pleasure (Rev. 4:11), and pronounced it "good" (Gen. 1:10, 12, 18, 25). In His creation of man His joy was increased; for He then, gazing upon His handiwork, declared it to be "very good" (Gen. 1:31). No one can affirm that God is pleased with the subsequent history of the human race or of the earth on which that race has written its annals of heartlessness, injustice, brutality, lust and crime. The evident work of the Son of God is A Restoration of All Things.

The term has a simple etymological significance. To restore a thing is not to destroy it, but to bring it back to its former condition. We note this in view of the popular impression that that which awaits us is but the terrific cataclysm in which the earth shall pass through the fires of extinction. We shall be able in course of time to clarify to thinking minds the real Scriptural intention. The flame of our Lord's approach (2 Thess. 1:7-10) is that of judgment upon the sins of men, not of the destruction of things material. His mission, inaugurated in the land of His birth, was outlined by Isaiah in Isa. 61:1-3. He refers to it in His address at Nazareth (Luke 4:16-21) and that which He did then in His benign ministry was a portraiture of the world-wide restoration which He is to effect when the forces of evil which He had to combat and which finally put Him on the Cross, shall no longer resist His loving purpose. Wherever He went He did "preach good tidings", "bind up the broken-hearted", gave liberation to those enslaved by the shackles of sin and proclaimed the acceptable year of the Lord. See also 2 Cor. 6:2.

The New Earth

will not be formed at His coming again. There is a place for that for which we may patiently wait. It were well for us to hold a well-balanced concept of all these eschatological nuances. We remind ourselves again of the ancient saying, "Distinguish the periods and the Scriptures will harmonize". That is our part, if we reverently and obediently trace what is written; and as being written how it is to be understood. A restored earth then is our present goal in this series of studies. Changes there may be in the surface of the globe (such as the older of us recognize as we visit former haunts where we find the hills lowered and the valleys lifted and the horizon not as we used to behold it), but essentially this old earth renewed and beautified by the presence and administration of the Creator of it (Jno. 1:1-3; Col. 1:16; Heb. 1:1-3). In His humility He sought to confer blessings upon the poor, the afflicted, the depraved, as the earnest of that glad day when the entire face of the earth shall shine with the glory of His benevolent aim to make universal what was then essentially and limitedly local.

The Purging of the Present Order is not outlined for us. We have discerned the judgment of the nations, the removal of the refused company whom He condemns to the fire prepared for "the devils and his angels" (Matt. 25:41). There will be other forms of "house-cleaning", we may also imagine. And in that regime our part will be to unite with Him in preparing the world for the great day. We need not be hesitant as to our participation of this ordering of things. Here we have been hindered by hostile forces; our appeals have fallen on dull or dead souls; humiliation has been rendered us for our best intended motives; our culture has been along the "via dolorosa". But now expectant ears will listen to our message and hungry hearts receive our revelation of His power. And there will be need of this ministry. For our Lord beheld in the dim future the growing rejection of "the faith" as we have noted in a previous section (Luke 18:8). If Satan has had great wrath and worked his final attack upon "the truth as the truth is in Jesus" (Eph. 4:21), so that infidelity shall have run rank and rampant, we may be certified that then our ministry will meet thirsty souls as water from the spring.

Our Lord's Forty Days on the Earth

have a significance for us in the connection. As He was, so shall we be in our resurrected or translation bodies. A few indications of this will be sufficient to enlighten our minds. He could eat the food of earth (Luke 24:30, 41-43; Jno. 21:12), yet was not essentially dependent upon it. In this connection we may discourse upon the statement He made to His own the night of His betrayal, "I shall not drink of this fruit of the vine until I drink it new with you in the kingdom of my Father" (Matt. 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18). We may be sure that the Synoptics would not so uniformly declare this intention were there no vital ground for its prediction and fulfilment. Turning to Isa. 25:6, we discover a "feast of fat things and wine on the lees, well refined". As this section of the prophecy deals with the coming of the Jehovah of verse 9, there is ground for uniting the Gospel revelation with that of the prophet. It will be a day of our joining with Him in the consummated celebration of the Holy Communion through the glorious realization of the fulfilment of His own words and the anticipation of the Apostle, "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show forth the Lord's death until He come" (1 Cor. 11:26). We pause to observe that though He may have eaten bread, probably did, there is no mention of His drinking wine. Then we may affirm that our bodies being like His (Col. 3:4; Phil. 3:21; 1 Jno. 3:2) we shall be superior to the laws of nature, still operative to those who are in the flesh, for we shall have dealings with men, women and children who are on the mortal plane, as we are now. So that our thoughts and aims, subservient to His sweet will, may carry us with the swiftness of desire anywhere we may be disposed to go; and we shall be able, as He was, to make ourselves visible or invisible; the earth cannot hold us down by its gravitation. Men are now thinking of devices which shall liberate the human body from the density of weight; and we may be sure there will be such with us as we enter into His glory. So we do not exaggerate nor tread the precincts of wild fancy if we conjecture our exalted part on the earth in that wonderful dispensation.

To Sit at Meat and Hold Converse with appreciative human beings, to tell of our own struggles in the culture of the divine life, to instruct the eager souls who would know the truth, to pour out upon them the bright beams of love with which our glorified faces shall shine; this will be our estate, if we rightly divine the Word of truth regarding our coming exaltation with Him. Let us not be chary of anticipating this prospect. We know we are not worthy; and He knows it too. But worthiness is not the test. Do we believe that the Scriptures unfolding His sufferings and glory (Luke 24:25, 26, 44-46) are to be taken as He meant they should be by those to whom He addressed His post-resurrection addresses? In our zeal to shy from fanaticism, we are all too apt to forsake the realm of honest faith. If we accept the challenge of present-day thinking that "religion is a great adventure", why not throw our confidence into the manifestly clear unfolding of His design and make of it all we are able without disturbing the balance of the rounded whole of the prophetical vision?

"We Shall Reign on the Earth"

as we have noted (Rev. 5:9, 10) is the qualification of the redeemed. And this royal prerogative must embrace anything and everything that is normal to our glorified Lord; for the Word of God so places us. Humble we may be; but distrustful of our coming estate with Him in glory? God forbid. Let us cast ourselves with eager zest into the evident plan which He most longingly anticipates for us.

So then, we discern a restored earth, yet bound by the laws of nature, but undoubtedly wonderfully equipped with the marvel of His provision for its maintenance and beatification; the present order of achievement in invention, utility and enjoyment enhanced by His wisdom and power; we with Him entering into the experiences of the people of the earth with deep appreciation of the value of life and spiritual assets.

The term millennium, with which we are familiar, gets its meaning from the word "chilia", the Gk. for thousand in Rev. 20:2, 3, 5, 6, meaning nine hundred and ninety and nine and one numerically; and not the same word for thousand in other places, "muriados", a myriad. So that there is a distinct limit to the glorious age; but it will be a long time, as we may well estimate, if we look back upon the space of time in history already written, within that period.

ARE THEY LOYAL CHURCHMEN?

By the Reverend J. J. Clopton

ALMOST unfortunate condition exists today within our beloved Church. The efficiency of solidarity of purpose is greatly reduced by necessary controversy. In spite of the fact that comprehensiveness is a large note in the Church's life, a comparatively small minority are aggressively at war with some of the fundamental beliefs of this Church. Already without legislative consent, they reject the legal name of the Church, services, nomenclature, pulpit and open propaganda, are using practices and terms which are not found in the authorized standards of this Church. Evangelism is sacrificed to ritualism and the clear passage of an open sea cluttered by the barnacles of theological puerility.

When the spiritual renaissance of the Church occurred at the Reformation, retrospect was darkness — prospect light and vision. In the intellectual rebirth of the times, spiritual freedom walked with even steps. The glory of the Anglican Reformation was its profoundly spiritual note. Had no Continental Reformation occurred, the Anglican Church would have redeemed herself. The publication of Wycliffe's Bible in the mother tongue, and the preaching of Wycliffe's "Preachers" in the fourteenth century, were penetrating beams amidst the dense spiritual darkness. They were as distinctly signs of a new day, as are the beams of morning's sun.

Erasmus' Greek New Testament opened a glorious vista; and the various translations of the Holy Scriptures into English, beginning with Tindale's New Testament, as well as translations of parts of the ancient Liturgies—all pointed to a larger spiritual day.

When the second Prayer Book of Edward VI appeared, it marked a completed spiritual revolution. The best of the past was preserved in stately, reverent, English—freed from the prisonhouse of an unknown tongue.

Definite statements of the faith, in addition to the Liturgy, are found in the Articles of the Church. Now, it is historically true that the Church of England at that time set its zeal on Catholic and Primitive Principles, which both the Liturgy and the Articles so clearly set forth. These standards are evangelical-protestant, and affirmative. The unscientific and uncritical age gave way to a larger knowledge, and so to Scriptural interpretation. Erasmus, Luther, Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, were to the spiritual world what Bacon was to the natural. Under the inspiration of this new spiritual knowledge, which was due to unlocking the Word of God, myths were discredited. Purgatory, Transubstantiation, Maryolatry, Worship of the Saints, were shown as irreconcilable with "The Faith once delivered to the saints". To seek to bring these beliefs into the Church is to repudiate her teaching. It is to return to beggarly elements. Paul was a protestant against Judaism. Why label these myths as part of the primitive faith, when they were unknown in those days. "Why seek the living among the dead?"

The Faith of the Church is comprehensive, but if that faith is to be interpreted by her standards, myths must be rejected.

Words have meaning, nomenclature is a key to interpretation. The English Church at the Reformation purged itself of Romish errors and of Romish nomenclature. Transubstantiation was denounced by name.

A few days since appeared in the Living Church the following news note:

"Orange, N. J.—The Feast of Corpus Christi was observed with due solemnity at All Saints, Orange, in connection with the annual conference of the New York and New Jersey Province of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament on May 30. Solemn High Mass was sung by the Provincial Superior, the Rev. W. M. Mitcham, the Rev. Paul F. Hoffman being deacon, and the Rev. Alexander N. Keedwell being sub-deacon," etc.

"The outdoor procession of the Blessed Sacraments was most impressive. Some forty priests, dozens of acolytes, blue-veiled girls, and white veiled "flower girls", preceded the canopy, under which the Rev. Lawson Carter Rich carried the monstrance, supported by his deacons, the Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., and the Rev. John Whiting Crowell—the whole congregation following.

A "station" was made at a specially erected altar on the spacious lawns of the church, where prayers were said and hymns sung. On the return to the church, solemn Benediction was given."

Article 25: "Of the Sacraments", in part reads, "The Sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should duly use them."

Article 28: "Of the Lord's Supper," in part reads, "The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance; reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped."

Is there any jury who, if it were trying the case of these brethren as to their loyalty to the Protestant Episcopal Church, if they decided on the evidence contained in the Prayer Book, would not bring in a verdict of guilty? Where are the loyal Churchmen of New Jersey? Where is its Bishop? Every priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church at his ordination, and every Bishop of this Church, at his Consecration, promised to drive from the Church what these brethren are bringing in. In the former case, the Bishop asks the priest and he promises: "Will you be ready, with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word?" and in the Consecration of every Bishop, he promises to do the same. The Presiding Bishop, "Are you ready, with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away from the Church, all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's Word; and both privately and openly to call upon and encourage others to the same?" Answer: "I am ready, the Lord being my helper."

In the service above noted at Orange, the writer is free with words unknown in the Liturgy, Articles and Canons of the Church, Bishops, Priests and Deacons, but no sub-deacon. There is no "Festival of Corpus Christi" in the Prayer Book Calendar. The word "Monstrance" cannot be found in the Communion Office, nor anywhere in the Prayer Book. Articles and Canons of this Church. The word, "station" is distinctly a Romish term. Is not this Service borrowed from the Romish Calendar? Could any Bishop of the Anglican Communion authorize such a service without violating the Consecration Vow? Could any priest of this Church be party to such a Service and still be loyal to Ordination Vow? Men are slaves who sit quietly and tolerate such things in the Church. The controversy involves the preservation of our spiritual heritage.

The Laity are charged with a great responsibility. The question resolves itself into loyalty or lawlessness. No man will ever know how much the Church has failed to attract multitudes because of these unscriptural, unlawful, reactionary, additions to our truly catholic and reverent services. To a decadent Church Christ declared, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword on earth." Loyalty today demands that there shall be neither addition or subtraction in the Church's order and standards. Loyalty demands tolerance in unessentials, defense in essentials. Loyalty moves within clearly defined termini. Our deluded Anglo-Catholic brethren have declared that Protestant and Catholic can not live in the same spiritual home. True, if Romish and Catholic are made equal terms. But Catholic does not mean Romish superstitions, and a true Catholic is an equally true Protestant.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by

Miss Sally Williams Strother, of Culpeper, Virginia:

"But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Corinthians 2:9.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

LINES BY DR. MATHESON.

"Make me a captive, Lord,
And then shall I be free:
Force me to surrender up my sword,
And I shall conqueror be.
I sink in life's alarms,
When by myself I stand:
Imprison me within Thine arms,
And strong shall be my hand."

Above lines were quoted to me by a courageous, suffering friend, as I sat by his bedside in a hospital recently in Montreal. How slow we are to learn that it is the beaten man who wins the victory. Witness Jacob in his mysterious wrestling, and St. Paul with his thorn in the flesh.

"When I am weak, then am I strong."

G. O. T.

GIFTS TO GOD COULD INTEREST JESUS CHRIST PERSONALLY

By the Reverend Kensey J. Hammond, D. D.

THE gifts of the wealthy, reporters consider headliners. Five thousand dollars for sixty-five Carnegie libraries in New York City and more for libraries elsewhere. Six hundred thousand dollars from Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt for Vanderbilt Hall at Yale. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the St. Bartholomew Parish House, New York. Easter offerings at St. James, Philadelphia, twenty-nine thousand dollars. Two hundred thousand dollars from Mr. Shelton from Montreal, for missions. Three hundred and fifty dollars the children Lenten offerings from Holy Trinity, Vicksburg, Miss., with its quiet, modest efforts in self-denial, and pennies from many homes. Does the Lord see all of these? Why not, when once willingly, He "sat over against the Jewish treasury, and saw how the people cast money into the treasury"?

On the busy Tuesday of Holy Week, Christ left the temple porches, where His enemies tried to outdo Him in argument. He passed through the beautiful gates of the Temple to a point where He had the Court of Women in full view. Here He sat (nowhere else was it lawful), and watched the multitude. In the area of the court with room for 15,000 worshippers, were arranged chests for various offerings. The givers gave these offerings as they passed. "Many that were rich cast in much." A law of that day allowed no gift over a certain proportion over the giver's property; yet, in the time of Pompey the treasury with all its expenses paid, had nearly one million dollars in money, and vessels valued at over ten million dollars. "There came a poor widow, and she threw in two mites which made a farthing." (Three-fourths of an American cent.) A mite was the smallest lawful contribution.

(1) This story suggests the general duty of generosity that belongs to all worshippers. The Jewish chests were in the Temple. Our offerings are made at the time of worship. We worship with our hearts, consecrating them, with our bodies in homage, with our prayers in Christ's Name, with our "alms and obligations", the result of our energies. "Ye shall not appear before the Lord empty-handed", Jehovah commanded the Jewish Church. In that crowd, under Christ's eyes, were regular worshippers contributing systematically to the Temple's support. The Christian today must recognize this duty to parish and church at large. In the temple crowd that day were probably occasional worshippers using their opportunity. Impulsive giving that interferes not with just obligations, gives the heart opportunity for expressing love for Christ. Some good schemes would suffer seriously but for the response their appeals draw from warm hearts. Thank offerings, enable the soul to show gratitude in a way it refers to verbal thanks. Christians today, as Jesus of old times, may open their pocketbooks where their hearts open, above the least amount conscience requires for systematic giving.

(2) This story also suggests Christ valued the gift in its relation to the givers' abilities. He noted two extremes, "abundance," "all one's living." Between these two extremes all gifts lie. "The size of one's offering depends not on what you take out of your pocket, but upon what you leave in it." Remember our Lord is not giving a command here, simply criticising facts. The man with an income of forty thousand a year may give four thousand. He with four hundred may give forty. The latter is giving more than the former, though each is tithing. Had the widow done wrong we are sure Christ would have said so. In giving no command, Christ leaves the whole matter in the region of heart action. He does not condemn large gifts "out of abundance". They come from the heart or would not be given. They do not reach the point of personal self-denial, as did the widow's. The Lord was impelled to notice; and in God's Kingdom, the size of the gift, is in proportion to one's means. Baron Hirsch, Austrian Jew, in 1890, sent ten thousand dollars a month to New York for Russian brethren, and ten million dollars that year to the Argentine Republic for the same charity. But a poor Jewish woman in a New York tenement, feeding a starving neighbor day after day, would outdo him in generosity. Does this exclude the rich from receiving the Lord's commendation of the widow, by no means. If he desires such commendation let him give to the point of actual self-denial. Let him give not of that which costs nothing in giving. The civilized nations of two continents in 1901 opened their eyes at the gifts of one rich man out of his abundance. Did all Christians put themselves in this position to their Lord, what a sermon the world would have. The kingdom for which we pray would come.

Ought any one give at this rate? Would it not cripple the poor man and scatter the rich man's means? Remember our Lord's words are a criticism, not a command. The story seems to illustrate giving from income, not capital. Surely God gives a Christian common sense, as well as a heart to be touched in his pocket-book chord. He expected both to be consecrated and used to the greatest advantage of the kingdom. Do not lose sight of the principles in bewildering details of varied circumstances. This principle makes giving a matter of love to God, and its gifts will be felt in self-denial. This giver is not ashamed for the Master's eyes to see him.

(3) The story contains a third lesson: all gifts pass under the eye of the Lord. On this last day of Christ's public life, with the cross and Gethsemane before Him, is it not wonderful that Christ should give time and thought purposely to the generosity of temple worshippers, even indeed "a certain poor widow". But "the eyes of the Lord are in every place", and "all things are naked and open before Him." Amid thoughts of judgment on Calvary on sin, the overthrow of that temple, and destruction of the Holy City, amid words of tearful warning, this criticism of varied givers brings a lesson for today. The Lord sits over against the modern treasury. He is able to hear excuses, and weigh dollars given where dozens should be; and dimes offered where dollars should be. The offerings fall upon the contribution plate, and also into Divine scales, which the Lord is able to use.

For those who need not be ashamed of their gifts, our Lord's criticism brings encouragement. Our Lord selected one of the absolutely helpless classes in the East. A certain widow, alone, possibly without friends as well as husband, poor casting in two mites, she might have kept one. Ah! the All-Seeing Eye! Imagine her blushes had He spoken to her what He said behind her back. No harm to know the Master's eye is on the modest, generous steward of gifts; no weakening of confidence in the Lord's love, that the Lord will accept and bless and use the gift, when the heart's prayer goes with the purses' tribute; no trifling pleasure in the Day the Judge declares in all just judgment, "she hath done what she could."

(4) All gifts, therefore, must pass fairly under the giver's eyes. "The right hand must not know what the left hand doeth," but conscience should take note of both hands, and the chilly heart will not neglect lawful claims. Honest debts for Church's privileges, charity's cause, missionary appeals, all due to the kingdom in which we live of the very King whom we profess to love! Let conscience's knock open the heart's door. Let it sit by your side at your desk, as you decide what share of your surplus means you will never miss; or give, so as to know you have given. Make conscience your bookkeeper. Send it to the Lord's school to be educated, with His Word for a textbook. Conscience will show you the Master seated over against His treasury. Conscience will determine whether your gift can pass His approving eye.

A young man picked up a sovereign lying in the road. Then he kept his eyes ground-ward, and in the course of a long life did pick up many coins. But when he died, an old man, he looked back on life's pathway, as an earthen road on which to walk and pick up money! With all its imperfections, this old earth deserves better, as did that Jewish widow. The Pittsburgh Iron Manufacturer, and the Salvation Army Recruit, in "self-denial week", know that there is a Heaven above earth's roadway, and a lovely landscape beside it (Prov. 11:25).

Such givers in any ability, escape the peril of covetousness. The collector of curios in India put on his shelf a Chinese God, marked Heathen Idol, and beside it a gold piece labelled Christian Idol. The conscientious hearty giver escapes that most insidious temptation, "covetousness".

> "In thy thriving still mis-doubt some evil
> Less gaining, gain on thee, and make thee dim
> To all things else."

The cup of ointment and cold water are being offered to the Lord today. Some who can give the ointment are offering the water. Some you would expect to offer the water are giving, Mary-like, the ointment! Some who really can offer only the cup of cold water are doing that heartily "in the nameo f a disciple". In high infallible criticism, the Master accepts all true gifts. In His unerring judgment, does He say "He-She hath done what each one should." "Freely we have received from Him," Christians, of all men, should "give freely". Let us be sure we do our share while giving as in the Lord's sight, of our means. We can rejoice in approving consciences. We may rise even to the benefit of self-denial in giving. We may find our hearts enlarged with that charity which is "kind, seeketh not her own, and never faileth", possible. God's grace can preserve from temptation and guide one's conduct to find spiritual as well as temporal benefit. One will see more clearly the extent of God's mercies, and enjoy the spirit of contentment, rather than the insatiable spirit which is the great curse of wealth. Treasure laid up in Heaven, drawing the heart thither, is a worthwhile mercy. Any real experience of this is the strongest encouragement to seek a larger experience. St. Paul's view of liberality and grace puts it on the happiest basis for the true Christian of small or large means. Poverty does not preserve from avarice. Wealth does not necessarily hinder liberality. No one who has sincerely "abounded in this grace," would wish himself excluded from its benefits. Sympathies are widened, Christian fellowship lengthened, the kingdom's coming aided, the honor of cooperating with God enjoyed. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth. There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty". "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

"STONEWALL"

By Alfred B. Williams

VIRGINIANS, SOUTHERNERS, in these later times people of the whole country, get heart warming thrill from the familiar story of how "Stonewall" was made immortal as the war name of a great general and his brigade. The commander of a broken section of Confederate lines at First Manassas shouted to his men to rally behind Jackson's Virginians, standing "like a stone wall". The illustration was an inspiration born on the fierce blaze and wrath and excitement of battle when the air was filled with the humming and whining of missiles speeding unseen to wound and maim and kill. The name, "Stonewall", coined from it, lives in the memory of the world as meaning steadfast, unyielding courage and loyalty and the strength given by them to face any danger dauntlessly and unwavering, to repel any attack, however powerful or menacing or insidious.

Most of the men of that brigade were Virginia mountaineers, quiet, modest, home-bred, of English, Scotch, Irish, Scotch Irish stock. Few of them had acquired more than rudiments of learning. Intellectual intricacies and philosophical meanderings disturbed none of them. A few plain, clear, large and massive principles possessed their souls and hearts and directed their conduct—fear of God and of nothing and nobody else, strict fidelity to the duty of the time and conditions, to be true to country, cause and flag, to stand staunch and steady in face of any foe until struck down.

Those principles and the character founded on them and created by them made the Stonewall Brigade, won for it deathless honor and won at Manassas. Surviving in the survivors and their descendants, they have won for the South, under the beneficent guidance and help of the Almighty, unforeseen and unimagined blessings from defeat and disaster. Those same principles, living and potent among the men and women of the country, North, South, East, West, make the stone wall protecting our Christianity and our civilization, defying and repelling all onsets of foes, open or disguised, making an unyielding barrier behind which the bewildered, the frightened and the wavering may rally and reform ranks and regain courage, faith and purpose. The steady, unbroken, unwavering line of American people—the unpretentious, unostentatious, quiet, modest, home bred people with living souls and stalwart hearts—is the indestructible wall making Church and country safe.

Every day the newspapers tell us of horrors and hideous crime, suicides, betrayals of trust, scandals. Many of the newspapers go as far as their pocket interests let them dare venture to saturate the public mind with filth and with distrust and hate of religion. Sins and delinquences of professed Christians and Christian teachers are paraded prominently—the parading an unintended confession that such downfalls are so unusual as to startle. Persons who have taken the vows and assumed the responsibilities of the Christian ministry find easy access to the first pages and lurid headlines for which their pygmy natures pant by proclaiming their own treasons and heresies, trying to insult and defy God, deriding the Holy Scriptures, desecrating the Holy Name of the Saviour. Callow and shallow, cheap, small, sensational writers in and out of editorial columns eagerly seek notoriety by blasphemies. Mental midgets with gargantuan resources of garrulity announce themselves as leaders of advanced and liberal thought, presenting crazy theories and propositions which, if accepted, would reduce us to the level of the most degraded savages and put us in abject slavery to ferocity or cunning. Organized atheism flaunts and vaunts itself and strives ceaselessly, by open denunciation or masquerading pretenses for destruction of religion and government. Men and women, taking obscenity as glittering brilliancy, the instincts of the decadent for the artistic temperament and depravity as genius, flood us with salacious books with discussions of sex and plays, presenting the most disgusting sensualities. Very recently United States senators spoke and voted for unrestricted admission to this country of books containing the vilest and lowest indecencies of French, German and Spanish degenerates—such things as, we are glad to say, very few Americans are so debased as to bring themselves to put into words. It is pleasant to note, incidentally, that most of the senators from this "Bible Belt" of the South, opposed the abolition of port censorship. Thin, coarse minds, ambitious for classification as cultured, defended and upheld these books as "classics", although no orator explained what constitutes a "classic", or by what authority it is defined. Generations of us have enjoyed the substance of the Arabian Nights stories, but the cultured senators insisted that our public should be enlightened and elevated with the unexpurgated editions, with all their original oriental rastiness, to cater to mental appetites like the physical longings of a bluebottle fly to luxuriate in the reek of the sewer.

All this shame and crime and threat against piety and decency and stability is thrust before us daily. It tempts the sturdiest and most optimistic of us to occasional doubts and fears. But the stone wall stands true and steady. It is everywhere among the people—the clean strain, uncontaminated people, of the same kind, of the same dauntless heart and soul and faith as those who stood staunchly that hot summer day at Manassas. They are the people who do not get into the newspapers nor "make news". They do not rush to suicide or murder under the teachings of Freud or Nietzsche, nor to gross, habitual, flaunting immoralities, such as the Spanish and French "classics" delight to describe and glorify. These people who make the impregnable and imperishable wall know and care nothing for fantastic, grotesque, pedantic, complicated, contradictory philosophies with which the profoundly learned and diligently self-advertising exponents of science and scientific deductions and of "advanced" and "liberal" ideas work themselves into print and regale the various elements that make our scum. These people who make the wall now are governed and held standing and holding their ground by the same few, straight, clear principles that governed the quiet men at Manassas.

Tens of thousands of preachers of all denominations, rigidly faithful to vows, obligations and responsibilities, are busy every day of every year with their work of comforting, helping, arousing souls, alleviating sorrows, carrying consolation and happiness and peace to death beds, preaching the simple, cleansing, inspiring truths of the Scriptures. Hundreds of thousands of clean living, clean thinking women have at their knees each night and morning children being taught to pray and believe. From hundreds of thousands of our American homes fervent prayer ascends daily. Tens of millions of men and women go about accustomed tasks carrying in their hearts reverent love for and faith in God and His Holy Son, seeking faithfully to be true to duty and to serve as they may their Creator and their fellow men. These are the innumerable, living rocks on which the everlasting house is founded, on which the church of Christ is builded, against which the gates of Hell may not prevail. As devotion to God and cause and flag and duty held steadfast the men of the Stonewall Brigade, so hold the life and strength of Christianity, cherished in the hearts of the people of whom we hear little, of whom we think too little—the quiet, modest, unassuming people, steadily doing their work and duty. Amid all the clamor and noise of the heathen and the infidel, the pretentious, the shallow and the vain; amid the exaltations of treacheries and desertions and the outpourings of putrescense and folly, ostentatious indecencies, sordid and passionate crime, violence and outrage, the wall of stone stands, steady and invincible, assuring safety and victory.

Book Reviews

BEHOLD THE MAN: By Frederick Rittelmeyer, Ph. D. Translated from the German by Erich Hofacker and George Bennett Hatfield. The Macmillan Company, New York.

In Rittelmeyer's "Behold the Man", we have a somewhat unusual volume in these days of modernistic views regarding the Christian religion. Some critics might find fault with the author's mention, after twenty years of preparation, of the study of Nietzsche, Buddha, and then only St. Francis, Meister Eckhart and Tolstoi. When there is a whole company of outstanding Christian leaders, like the reformers, Calvin, Luther and Knox, as well as more orthodox Churchmen from whom to choose. However, he has succeeded in giving us a rare and reverent picture of the human side of our Lord, blessedly humane though always radiating the divine from within.

The Christ's life is presented as an "epic succession of deed, conflict and conquest", through which scenes of action the perfect man passes unscathed by human frailties and strong in the unquenchable consciousness of certain victory. The soul of this man is given voice in His crusade against the miseries of man in all their varied forms. Singly alone He shows Himself able to meet every weapon of "intelligence, spirit, ability or executive power" that is turned against Him. He has no fears or doubts, knows not retreat and uses no duplicity. The keenness of His insight is shown in His detection of every form of human distress without the aid of words. He did not turn His back upon the outcast and the sinner, but consorted with them, for "they that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick."

His life was one of purpose and to that end He suffered the experience of human agony. To Him the spiritual blindness of His people brought intense anguish, but through this heavy cloud, His tender love shines undaunted, more bent to do the will of the Father. And in the final scene of the Crucifixion "the triumphant song of a great heart which set out hopefully to win the world dies away and is silenced in agony."

His earthly career was brief and filled with sadness. He invented nothing new, made no new discovery, He neither founded anything, nor did He destroy—nothing of the external world placed a mark upon Him, yet the whole of it has come to bear His impress. Where, in the world's history is found such another man?

Of the man Jesus' personal appearance we have no record. Yet we find He had intellectual penetration and sagacity without a parallel and a mental daring combined with delicacy of thought. He was "possessed of a constitutional vitality which lights up His qualities as sunshine sets a many-colored window ablaze." "There is no suggestion of moral lapses," nor of personal defeat or awareness of evil desires. He is all self-sacrificing, but without self-pity or self-praise, and He tolerated no half measures. He demanded definite decision and when He found men going against His cause preferred to go down with it rather than compromise. The depth of His sorrow was as the breadth of His love. He stands, a solitary figure on the heights, unique in the glory of Man and Commission as one. "Can this be invention or distortion?" If so, "Why has no such portrait been drawn elsewhere?"

And how did He deliver His Message? He has given to the world of God's creation a new life and a new beauty —the whole range of creation seems to reflect the glory of Jesus. And His spirit was free, above all petty things —revenge and ill-will had no lodgment with Him. We are admonished not to waste life in longings for the future but rather to be faithful to the present duty, fulfilling present obligations and leaving the future to the direction of God's will. For whatsoever God wills that shall be done. His will is all powerful and complete surrender to that will brings peace. No evil may stand unrevealed in the presence of God, and whatsoever is from without cannot defile a man, but only that which is from within. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father." "Ye shall be as God." Too often men forget what Jesus was in trying to find out what He thought. In the year 1920, the sayings of Jesus would be clothed in different language, but the verity of His words then would be the same today. World views change, but not a Truth, and Jesus lived the Truth. He preached to the end, that it has wrought "endless good to countless men"—and history bears witness to this fact.

It is told of Vanini that on being led to his execution he picked up a bit of straw, saying, "Had I no other evidence of the existence of God this blade of straw would be enough for me." Jesus is not a creature of folklore, nor yet a creature of the imagination. He is a world figure the like of which has not been produced before or since His time. If there be any who doubt let them "come and see". No ideal Christ could have given us what the living Jesus did. He was a man not afraid of struggle. "We hear His call to combat ringing ever and ever more clearly in His words even to this day. He challenges us to the fight but with the armour of a perfect trust. And the secret of His sway over mankind defies any well-thought-out theory of analysis. Through Him and through Him alone we learn that service—the giving of self—is the way to peace and its own great reward.

"We have all gone astray and lost our way in things material—the scholar in his investigations, the politician in his campaigns, the merchant in his business. The task to which this present age should respond now is to turn its gaze toward Jesus from the pit which it has dug. . . . Our experience of Jesus may be incomplete, but that experience is the one from which our truth, our joy, our exaltation, and our edification must be extracted. . . . Is it not still true that the object lesson of His life and death is able, as can be said of no other life, ... to awaken men and make them over into new beings?"

We no longer attempt to separate the divine from the human in Jesus, but accept the goal He has set for us. He belongs to us and we are His and we strive to be worthy contestants for the goal He has set.

For "Jesus still captivates the human race with the splendor of the divine that radiates from Him. . . . Still He waits with a welcome all His own for those who seek God." "This man once did live here! This man once did walk on our earth! There is thought with substance enough to grip us our whole life long."

J. McC. Irwin.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

"COLOR-LINE."

Mr. Editor:

At the late meeting of the House of Bishops, in Atlantic City, the following Memorial was laid before that body, expressing the general attitude of the colored clergy, and laity, with respect to Church extension among the colored race. It says:

"The great and vexing problem of the ingathering of the Colored People within her realm has given the Church, in the years gone by, deep searchings of heart: she has endeavored to deal with this problem righteously and effectively, and the increase of these people and their advancement in learning and culture, has made the problem more intricate and, consequently, more difficult of solution.

"As presbyters of the Church, of that race, who have exercised our ministry for a period of more than a third of a century, we most earnestly and heartily appeal to you, under no consideration to consent to the Amendment of Constitution of General Convention whereby the words 'color', 'race' or 'racial lines' may enter therein.

"We are far from being unmindful of the actual situation of affairs which call forth some accommodation of our present ecclesiastical system to the well-being of both races in the one brotherhood. But the children of the Church now in 'ecclesiastical exile' can be brought into vital and organic touch with the full life of the Church without such class or racial legislation.

We respectfully submit that all that is necessary, in the line of legislation, is some sort of addition to Section I of Article VI of the Constitution as follows:

" 'And it (The House of Bishops) may still further establish Inter-Diocesan Missionary Districts, running through two or more contiguous dioceses, upon the request of the diocesans concerned, embracing only such congregations as are not in union with any Diocesan Convention. Such districts shall, in every respect, sustain the same status as other Missionary Districts.'

"There is no color-line in this; and yet, under its operation, identically the same thing would be accomplished as is desired by those who would have 'race' or 'racial lines' constitutionally recognized.

"With the growth of the Church among the Colored People, the great bulk of race in the Church would voluntarily select union with the Missionary District, rather than with the Diocesan Convention; for it would be evidently to their interest in self-development. At the same time, there would be those who would elect to remain with the diocese. Thus, the principle of representation in every ecclesiastical group would find actual interpretation.

In this age when men everywhere are seeking closer fellowship, it would prove disastrous for the Church to disfigure her Constitution by the introduction of race or color."

George F. Bragg.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 12, 1929.

REJOICING IN THE CHURCHMAN.

The Southern Churchman has special pleasure in publishing the extract below from a letter to the editor, written by Captain S. A. Ashe, of Raleigh, N. C., probably the oldest living ex-editor in the United States. He was long editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, a gallant Confederate officer and a political leader in his State in the trying days of Reconstruction. He writes:

"Your articles—as well as others—in The Churchman are of great interest and highly appreciated in my home. . . . . And all were glad when The Southern Churchman got into its present hands and have rejoiced."

CONVENTION OF 1868.

Mr. Editor:

Because of the very interesting article about the 1868 Convention (Southern Churchman, September 20), I beg to make a little comment.

Trinity Chapel is about three miles from Trinity Church. The opening service of the Convention was in Trinity Church. The article seemed to make it in the Chapel.

It speaks of Bishop Lee's sermon. The church was crowded, I stood directly under the pulpit. 'Twas a stirring one about sacerdotalism. No wonder there were objections to its publication: I had forgotten that. You might publish (some most pertinent) parts of it some day.

I recall vigorous remarks about it amongst people going out after service.

Have repeatedly wanted Mr. Shipler, my rector, to look it up. He's too busy. It shows that high-churchism is no new thing.

Do look it up some day. You'll enjoy reading it.

Frank S. Moore.

Chatham, New Jersey.

Church Intelligence

Looking Toward Church Unity.

Eleven representatives of the Unity Commissions of the Protestant Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian (U. S. A.) Churches, met in New York, October 4, to arrange a plan of procedure for the consideration of the proposal of the last General Convention.

At the last General Convention a Commission was appointed as a result of a resolution offered by Bishop Brent, to consider with similar Commissions from the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches on the subject of "Christian Morality Looking Towards Church Unity". The Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D., was elected Chairman, and the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, D. D., Secretary.

Bishop Parsons called a preliminary meeting in New York on Friday, October 4. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Presbyterian Church in the United States, were obliged to wait for the Conference and Assembly before appointing Commissions. Representatives from the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and our own met according to call of the Chairman of our Commission.

Bishop Parsons presided. Others present were Archdeacon Humphries, Dr. G. F. Dudley, General Clement and W. L. Balthis, Protestant Episcopal; Dr. John H. Race, Dr. Robert Bagnell and Dr. James R. Joy, Methodist Episcopal; and Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, Dr. W. P. Merrill and Dr. J. A. Vance, Presbyterian.

Bishop Parsons explained that the object of the late Bishop Brent in initiating the conversations, was to study the attitude of the several churches on vital moral and social questions in order to learn whether there are valid grounds of division. He suggested inquiries as to:

1. How far moral and social questions caused existing divisions;
2. What is the authority of the Church in such matters; and
3. What is its proper function.

After general discussion it was decided that each Commission should present to the full meeting of the Joint Commission at Atlantic City, N. J., June 3 and 4, 1930, information regarding the position of its body on the following points:

1. The relation of Church and State.
2. What is the authority of the Church on social and moral questions, and by what discipline is it enforced.
3. What is the official declaration, or attitude, of each Church on:
   (a) The family, marriage and divorce.
   (b) International relations.
   (c) Racial relations.
   (d) Economic and industrial relations.
   (e) Relation of Church to sumptuary legislation and law observance.
   (f) Lord's Day observance.

Bishop Parsons, Bishop Welch and Dr. Stevenson were designated as members of the Executive Committee.

At the suggestion of the Rev. Dr. Merrill, of New York, the following telegram was authorized sent to President Hoover:

"A group of Churchmen, representing the Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal communions, gathered to discuss moral questions in their bearing on church unity, beg to assure you of their earnest prayers and hearty support in your efforts to realize in governmental policy and action the high moral ideals which lie at the basis of our national life.

(Signed)
Bishop E. L. Parsons, California.
Joseph A. Vance, Michigan.
James R. Joy, New York.

National Council Meeting, October 8-10, 1929.

The first meeting this fall of the National Council and its Departments was held at the Church Missions House, New York City.

The Council adopted the following Minute on the death of the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop and President of the National Council:

The National Council is bereaved of its great President.

The Right Reverend John Gardner Murray, Doctor of Divinity, is dead.

We who were greatly privileged to serve with him upon the National Council have suffered the loss of a revered father-in-God, a gallant leader, a dear friend.

No formal words of resolution can express the high estimate we place upon the services he rendered, nor measure the heavy loss which we as a National Council have now sustained.

We desire, nevertheless, to record our high praise and hearty thanks to Almighty God for the gift of this great leader in His Kingdom.

He was eminently distinguished for stalwartness of faith and for simplicity and soberness of life. He was wise in counsel, lofty in vision, sound in judgment, skillful in administration, and wholly consecrated to the cause of Christ and His Church.

Definite in his own convictions, he was ever tolerant of the convictions of others. He had the strength of meekness, the greatness of simplicity, and the beauty of holiness.

To his wife and family we convey our tender and affectionate sympathy, assuring them of our prayers on their behalf that the God of all consolation may sustain and comfort them. And May God grant to him continual growth in His love and service.

Resolved: That the Secretary of the Council be instructed to spread this minute upon our records and to send a copy of the same to Mrs. Murray, suitably engrossed.

Frederick F. Reese.
George Craig Stewart.
Burton Mansfield.

The Vice-President, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, stated to the Council that there was an apparent conflict between the Constitution and the Canons, as to the succession of the presiding officer of the National Council, and submitted legal advice that he had secured.

The Council was advised that any election of a President would be effective only until after the election of a Presiding Bishop by the House of Bishops, and since that election is to be held November 13, prior to the next stated meeting of the National Council, it was deemed advisable, and so voted, that the Council should defer election of its own presiding officer. Dr. Franklin presided over the meeting.

The Council heard and received a report submitted by Bishop Tucker, of the Diocese of Virginia, representing the Committee of General Convention and the Committee of National Council appointed to study the question of an Advanced Work Program for the triennium. The plan, while still tentative, proposes that the Church take up and execute one hundred and sixty-seven definite missionary projects, in domestic and foreign fields, totalling $1,517,500, and that an educational plan for the Advance Work Program shall be conducted during 1930, with culmination of the project in 1931.

A budget of $4,224,670, as fixed by General Convention, was approved by the National Council. Many rearrangements were made in budget items, due to changes occurring since General Convention, but because of the limitations in the size of the budget fixed by the General Convention, many important extensions of existing work earnestly recommended by the Bishops, as the outgrowth of successful missionary endeavor, had to be omitted.

At the request of Bishop Campbell, of Liberia, the National Council considered various problems connected with his field, in the light of his three years' experience, and recommended:

Such changes in the staff as circumstances in the judgment of the Bishop may require.

The appointment, as soon as they can be secured, of additional American clergy to assist the Bishop in supervising work in a country where travel is slow and difficult, and supervision peculiarly necessary.

The development, if possible, of a plan for annual conferences in order that the spiritual and intellectual life of the clergy may be fostered.

The provision of proper equipment as soon as possible for the schools, the development of industrial and agricultural features where practicable, the close supervision of all educational work and the closing of schools not efficiently conducted.

The vigorous development of work already begun in the interior of the country, and its extension to other areas as soon as possible, provided that satisfactory conditions can be arranged.

A plan for achieving self-support of all present coastal congregations by 1936, by the gradual reduction of appropriations from the Church in the United States.

Plans for concentration rather than further expansion of coastal work.

In conclusion, the National Council called the attention to the fact that the year 1936 marks the centennial of the establishment of the Liberian Missions. It is hoped that the development of the Church's life in Liberia during the next seven years along the lines of spiritual growth and self-support will be such as to convince the Church in the United States that it will be justified not only in continuing present work, but in entering upon a new era of progressive endeavor such as would worthily signalize so notable an anniversary.

A letter, which had just recently been received by Bishop Murray, from the President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of California, Mrs. H. M. Sherman, was read to the Council, saying in part:

"Because of the great sorrow experienced by the whole Church at the untimely death of Mrs. Louis Monteagle, and of the deep affection felt for her, I am sure that many will want to learn that a fitting memorial in our diocese is being planned for her.

"The great portal of the south transept of our Cathedral will be built in her memory. This was the thought of Bishop Parsons, and seems the only appropriate one, since to most of us she represented so truly the door of the Church. Mr. Monteagle is pleased at this choice, having impressed on the committee that the erection of Grace Cathedral was perhaps the dearest wish of Mrs. Monteagle's heart, and their sons are giving the rose window which fills the upper part of the transept. . . .

"Although this memorial is not in any sense national, it seemed only right that it be given national publicity, since Mrs. Monteagle's name was beloved throughout the Church, and the committee felt that you would wish to know of it."

The Council adopted the following minute on the death of Mrs. Louis F. Monteagle:

The life of Lydia Paige Monteagle, which closed suddenly on the twenty-sixth of June, 1929, has been a source of strength and inspiration to the Church in America. Her service for over thirty years as President of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of California, and for six years as member of the Executive Board, has given her a place of leadership among the women of the Church. Her untiring zeal, her unfailing devotion, and her generous benefactions will be held in grateful and lasting and living remembrance.

The members of the National Council feel deeply their sense of loss through her death, and extend to their colleague, Mr. Louis F. Monteagle, their profound and affectionate sympathy.

The Council learned with regret of the death of the Rev. Dr. Lester Bradner of Providence, R. I., a member of the former General Board of Religious Education, and of the Department of Religious Education; and was informed also of the death of the Rev. Dr. Edward J. Owen, rector of St. John's Church, Sharon, Penn., an associate secretary of the Field Department. Memorials to each of these were adopted.

The Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York City, was welcomed as a new member of the Council, elected in the place of Bishop Abbott. The Rev. Angus Dun of Cambridge, Mass., is a new member of the Department of Religious Education.

Two new general secretaries of the Field Department are the Rev. Robert P. Frazier of South Dakota, and the Rev. David R. Covell, executive secretary of the Diocese of Los Angeles.

Miss Elizabeth Baker of South Dakota was, at the request of the Woman's Auxiliary, appointed a general United Thank Offering field worker.

At the service of Holy Communion, by which the National Council always begins its sessions, mention was made of not only the Presiding Bishop, but of others whose life, service and benefactions were held in grateful remembrance. Among those so mentioned were:

Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D.
Mrs. Mary V. Williams.
Rev. Thomas W. Kumes.
Mr. John C. Davies.
Miss Sarah W. Fosdick.
Mrs. Annie S. Miller.
Miss Ada Risher.
Mrs. Susan C. Rogers.
Miss Josephine M. Kendig.
Rev. Henry W. Nelson, D. D.
Miss Louise C. Irish.
Miss Rosa A. Vonder Leith.
Miss Ellen S. Bates.
Miss Isabel M. Spackman.
Miss Olivia Egelston.
Miss Josephine Powers.
Miss Caroline L. Chaplin.
Miss Lucretia M. Lewis.
Mrs. J. Ogden Hoffman.
Mr. William W. Skiddy.
Mrs. Louis F. Monteagle.

Armistice Week.

The Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council has issued a call to our churches to honor the millions who suffered and died in the late war by utilizing Armistice Week, November 10-16, to interpret the Kellogg Pact as expressing the Christian ideal for world brotherhood and peace, and as making possible the realization of the hopes of our honored dead for a warless world.

It is suggested that in the services commemorating the Armistice, stress be placed on the constructive, moral factors essential to world justice and peace. The way should be made plain by which individual men and women both as loyal citizens and as earnest Christians may and should have each a share in the great achievement.

The entire program for Armistice Week should express faith in God, loyalty to Christ, love of country and goodwill toward our fellow men of all nations and races.

The Challenge of the Peace Pact: The General Treaty for the Renunciation of War was approved (85-1) by the United States Senate on January 15, 1929, and became effective for forty-six nations on July 24, 1929. Practically all the nations will soon have accepted its epoch-making obligations.

What the Pact will really mean in the life of the world depends on the mind and will of the peoples. If they take it seriously as meaning fully what it declares and implies, the Pact will inaugurate a New Era in human history, an era free from the wrongs and tragedies, disasters and costs of war and war preparations, an era glorious with the scientific and social progress, economic prosperity and general welfare only possible in a warless world.

The Obligations of the Peace Pact: In adhering to the Kellogg Peace Pact the nations undertake a number of important obligations.

(1) The nations "condemn recourse to war for the solution of their international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy."

(2) They promise never to seek the solution of their controversies, whatever their nature or origin may be, "except by pacific means."

(3) They declare that "all changes in their relations with one another should be the result of a peaceful and orderly process."

(4) They state that "any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty."

(5) Implicit in the Pact is the obligation to avoid policies "provocative" of war and to adopt policies in keeping with the spirit and intent of the Pact.

(6) Also implicit in the Pact is the general policy of reducing armaments from a war scale to dimensions suited only for police service.

A Stupendous Undertaking: The Pact calls for nothing less than a complete reversal of age-old habits of mind and action on the part of all the nations. They must change their war-minds to peace-minds. They must substitute a world-peace-system for the war-systems of the past. They must develop confidence in each other's good faith in place of deep-seated suspicions, fears and hatreds.

These changes require the re-education, not only of statesmen and social leaders in every land, but of the millions whose ideas and desires ultimately determine national policies.

And these changes must take place among the major nations simultaneously. For no nation or group of nations will or can carry out the obligations of the Pact alone.

The Responsibility of the Churches: The Churches are in principle committed to world peace. They constitute the greatest available force for creating the informed public opinion now needed for achieving this stupendous program. Without world peace, moreover, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on Earth, for which they pray daily, is impossible. Active support by the churches in this and in every land is essential to the success of the Pact and the actual establishment of world justice and peace.

The voice of the American people should be clearly uttered during the coming winter in support of President Hoover's peace making program.

A Prayer for Peace: O Blessed Jesus, Saviour of all mankind, at whose birth the night was filled with Heavenly radiance; lighten the thick darkness of the world, and the gloom of our miseries and fears; have compassion upon the peoples of the earth stumbling in confusion, and guide our feet into the way of peace; who art with the Father and the Holy Ghost One God, World without end. Amen.

The Sewanee Summer Training School of 1929.

"Better than ever before," is the verdict of those who for many years past have attended the Sewanee Summer Training School for Workers, held in the month of August each year on the Campus of the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tennessee.

Outstanding leaders and faculty assured the smooth running and effective curriculum of the two divisions, while the co-operation of the Vice-Chancellor of the University and his staff, coupled with the ideal weather which was the endowment of the good Lord Himself, made those weeks upon the mountain joyous and helpful in every way.

The Adult Division, under the directorship of the Bishop Coadjutor of North Carolina and the Rev. Moultrie Guerry, Chaplain of the University of the South, attracted some two hundred and fifty people—noticeable amongst this number were some forty young people who, having received their training in previous years at the Young People's Division, this year felt the urge to spend four full weeks in the Training School and to absorb the more mature ideals and thoughts of the Adult Division as well as the inspiration and enthusiasm of the younger group with which they were so well accustomed. This splendid group of girls and boys added greatly to the Adult Conference, and augurs well for the further development of the service that the Church in the Province of Sewanee may be expected to continue to give to the world.

The Young People's Division, under the joint leadership of the Bishop of Florida and the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, Georgia, was attended by some two hundred and twenty-five young people with their leaders and faculty. In every way this group excelled all previous records.

One cannot speak of Sewanee this year without at least a few words in regard to the Book Store, so ably handled by Miss Ruth L. Bettner and Miss Amy Cornell. More pretentious than in any of the nineteen years of the life of the school, this Book Store carried a large number of selected books of current interest and made a contribution of real worth to the growth and value of the school.

An altogether new feature of the 1929 school was the Department of Advanced Leadership under the direction of the Bishop of Alabama. This department took the place of the School of the Prophets of other years and was responsible for bringing to Sewanee a number of prominent men and women, such as Dr. John W. Wood, Miss Grace Lindley and the Rev. John W. Irwin, of the National Council as well as the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell and the Very Rev. William Hamilton Nes. This department is responsible for the presentation of courses of broad scope designed to interest especially the clergy and advanced workers in the Church. Unfortunately, the contribution of this department was not well known and failed to bring as large a number to the mountain as had been hoped for, but it is believed that from now on a larger clientelle is assured.

Mrs. W. P. C.

North Tokyo.

St. Barnabas' Mission to Lepers, at Kusatsu, Japan, was wonderfully blessed last year. Bishop McKim writes that the congregation there is the largest in the district of North Tokyo, numbering 450 baptized persons and 332 communicants, with 71 baptisms and 40 confirmations duing the year. The addition of Miss Mary McGill to the staff of workers has relieved the "Shepherdess", Miss Cornwall-Legh, of much of the responsibility which has been wholly hers for the last fifteen years. Two generous gifts of $5,000 each from Churchwomen in New York City, together with another of $5,000 from a lady in Buffalo, have made it possible to buy one of the best buildings in Kusatsu, which will accommodate fifty leper patients. A Japanese man of wealth in Tokyo, who is not a Christian, has given the large sum of 80,000 yen, together with a promise of an additional 10,000 yen for the next three years, towards the creation and maintaining of a leper hospital there. This munificent interest is largely due to the influence of Mrs. Sekiya, the wife of the Vice-Minister of the Imperial Household Department, and of Dr. Toyama, the leading expert in skin diseases in Japan, and also professor in the Imperial University, both devout communicants of the Church.

The Vice-Minister of the Imperial Household is a person of high importance, who directs the comings and goings of the Emperor. His wife's interest in the Church has been mentioned by Bishop Binsted, who says that at any service she is almost always the first to come and the last to go, bringing friends or some of the young peers of the realm. She has a weekly service for women in the chapel in her home, to which different pastors of the city are invited.

Bishop McKim, writing further of North Tokyo, says that three new stations were opened during the year, and two new churches consecrated: The stations are at Kiryu, which has the Rev. H. L. Andrews as resident priest in charge, and Isezaki, for which he is also responsible. Both of these stations are in Gumma Prefecture, which is one of the largest silk-growing centers in Japan. The third new station is Sano, a city of more than 20,000 people, which is under the charge of the Rev. Dr. R. W. Andrews, who lives at Tochigi, one hour distant by rail.

The new churches are All Saints' Church, Urawa, a handsome building of re-enforced concrete, planned by Mr. Bergamini, and the other, an attractive and well-built structure at Tochigi. "The Rev. Dr. R. W. Andrews, priest-in-charge, is entitled to great praise for the really dignified and well-equipped structure built under his supervision, in which the people of Tochigi take great pride."

The spiritual growth of the District is encouraging. The religious work in the Church institutions is being carried on with more vigor and earnestness, and the reaction on the part of all connected with them is shown by a large number of baptisms and confirmations.

NEW YORK.

The Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
The Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan Bishop.
The Rt. Rev. Herbert Shusman, D. D., Suffragan Bishop.

Kane House.

The Board of Managers of the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society have issued invitations to an open house and service of dedication, to be conducted by the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, for Kane House, the new convalescent building at Sarah Schermerhorn Home at Milford, Connecticut, to occur on Saturday, October 19, at three o'clock.

Kane House is the newest unit of the Schermerhorn institution, having been completed only this summer. It has been made possible through a gift from the estate of the late Mrs. John Innis Kane, which provided $100,000 for the erection of the building and an endowment of $250,000 for maintenance. The arrangement and equipment of the institution has been executed to conform to the best standards of scientific convalescent care.

Although Sarah Schermerhorn House has been operated as a fresh air home since 1904, when Miss Sarah Schermerhorn left a sum of money for the erection of the main building, it has provided year-round privileges only since 1921. In the latter year, however, Mrs. Kane made a gift of $15,000 to equip the house as a winter convalescent institution for women and children, and contributed to its annual maintenance. Now, with this most recent gift from her estate, the capacity of Schermerhorn institution is increased by sixty children. The summer census will thus be raised to more than two hundred and fifty mothers and children, since Kane House will be used in the summer for fresh air parties.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop

Meeting of the Executive Board.

The Executive Board of the Diocese held its regular monthly meeting in the Parish House of St. John's Church, Roanoke, on Thursday, October 10. The Board received, and acknowledged with appreciation a telegram of greeting from the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, which was in session at the same time in Staunton, Virginia. Bishop Jett described the recent session of the House of Bishops at Atlantic City, and spoke in a touching way of the tragic ending with the sudden death of Bishop Murray on October 3.

The Rev. Alfred Berkeley, Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, reported on an important meeting of his Department, which was held September 27. Naturally at this time the interest of the Executive Board is largely centered on the preparations being made for the coming Every Member Canvass in the Diocese; this work being under the care of the Field Department, led by its Chairman, Mr. C. Edwin Michael of Roanoke. Cooperating closely with the Field Department, the Publicity Department is preparing special literature in the form of three miniature editions of the Southwestern Episcopalian. These will be mailed direct from Staunton to all families in the Diocese, October 20, November 1 and November 10. Also the regular November issue of the Southwestern Episcopalian, which will come off the press about November 20, will be devoted largely to the same general subject.

The Field Department is trying out a new plan which it is felt will be especially valuable in giving information to the Diocese on the work of the Executive Board and the way in which the Executive Board expends the funds contributed to the Field Department in the Every Member Canvass. This is being done by having a representative of the Executive Board meet personally all of the vestries in the Diocese. Thirty-two points have been selected for these meetings, and the effort is being made to reach the vestries at the smaller points by asking them to join in at the meetings at these thirty-two central churches. Mr. Michael was able to report to the Executive Board that ten of these conferences have already been held, as follows: Col. W. M. Brodie, of Blacksburg, was with the vestry at Pearisburg, on October 9. Mr. C. Francis Cocke, of Roanoke, was at Covington on the ninth. Mr. H. Minor Davis, of Lynchburg, was at Bluefield on the seventh and Norton on the eighth. Mr. Charles P. Macgill, of Pulaski, met with the vestry of Christ Church, Roanoke, on the second of October, with a committee of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon on the seventh, in the afternoon, and on the evening of the same day he was at Marion. Mr. C. Edwin Michael spoke to the vestry of St. John's Church, Roanoke, on October 7, and the vestry of St. Paul's Church, Salem, on the ninth. Mr. Thos. A. Scott, of Roanoke, was at Martinsville on the evening of October 2.

At a number of these meetings members of the congregations have been present, along with the vestries, and in many instances a great deal of interest has been manifested.

Before closing its session the Executive Board adopted several important resolutions bearing on the initial steps necessary in connection with the Diocesan Mission School to be established in Wise County.

St. John's, Endicott, Loses Nurse.

The many people who are interested in St. John's-in-the-Mountains at Endicott, Franklin County, are much distressed at the fact that Miss Annie Barlow, who since October, 1927, has served there most efficiently as a community nurse is returning on October 19 to her home in England on account of illness in her family. Miss Barlow, who has previously had experience in similar work in England, has been eminently successful in adjusting her life and work to conditions in a Virginia Mountain Mission. Responding to calls at all times, day or night, good weather or bad, she rendered a wonderful service during her two years' mission and the people of the community in general. Miss Barlow's work has been made possible through the generosity of a friend from outside the diocese who for several years has taken the greatest interest in St. John's, and has contributed in many ways to the comfort of the missionaries there and the success of their work.

The Rev. Alfred C. Bussingham, rector of St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, conducted a very interesting mission at St. John's-in-the-Mountains, during the week beginning September 9. There were evening services each day from Sunday to Friday, inclusive, and morning services on Thursday and Friday. Good congregations attended the services, and much interest was manifested. Mrs. Bussingham contributed much to the services by her playing on the cello. Mr. Bussingham baptized three persons, a mother and two grandmothers. These, and probably others, are expected to be confirmed at the next visitation of the Bishop.

Among visitors at St. John's-in-the-Mountains during the past summer have been Miss Maud Brough, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and Mrs. E. D. Brough, of Roswell, New Mexico. Miss White and Miss Williams, who are nurses from England at work in Kentucky; Miss Mary Wilkinson, of Baltimore, and the Rev. Sidney L. Vail, of New Orleans.

One of the interesting activities at St. John's is the weaving that is being done under the direction of Miss Maude Beheler, who took a special course in this work at Berea College, Kentucky. The girls and older women of the community are now making luncheon sets, bed spreads, rugs bags and various other articles in Colonial design. These are being sold in several sections of the United States. Seven young people of the community are away at high school, their expenses being paid from funds to be realized through the sale of weaving. Orders for the product of this industry are most earnestly solicited by Miss Ora Harrison, Missionary-in-charge, St. John's-in-the-Mountains, Endicott, Virginia.

T. A. S.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop.

New Bishop Coadjutor to be Elected.

A bishop coadjutor of the Episcopal Diocese of Western New York will be elected at a meeting, called principally for that purpose, which will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, on October 27. The post was left vacant when the world-renowned Buffalo Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, died in Lausanne in March, and former Bishop Coadjutor David L. Ferris of Rochester succeeded automatically to that office.

There has been no campaigning for the vacancy among Episcopal clergy, and laymen of the diocese, in accordance with the desire of the Church that all delegates to the electoral meeting enter the session with an open mind and the aim to select the best possible man for this important post.

Every clergyman in the diocese and three laymen from each parish will compose the electoral body, comprising an assembly of approximately two hundred and fifty persons. Their choice will not be limited to a clergyman of the diocese. A nation-wide selection is possible, although not probable. Bishop Ferris held the position of bishop coadjutor for about eight years.

Parishes are reminded that inasmuch as the Convention May last adjourned sine die, lay delegates must be chosen afresh, the certificates for the same to be sent in advance to the Secretary, the Rev. G. Sherman Burrows, D. D., 252 Summer Street, Buffalo.

The diocese will be glad to know that under authorization of the Executive Council, Bishop Ferris has arranged with Bishop Overs to continue to assist him in the Visitations until such time as the Bishop Coadjutor shall have been Consecrated and entered into residence.

Bishop Overs will continue to keep Office Hours at the Dioecsan House on Mondays, or he may be addressed at his residence, 295 Hallock Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

From a Money Drive to a Missionary Effort.

Diocesan Headquarters is hard at work, making preparations for the Every Member Canvass to be conducted December 1-15.

The Field Department, of which the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., is chairman, has sent out circulars to every clergyman in the diocese offering practical suggestions for arousing missionary interest.

The Department stresses the importance of proper parish representatives for the Diocesan Days in the several communities. The purpose of these days is to have the parish leaders and canvassers to catch the inspiration and to receive instruction.

To this end the bishop is sending a letter to every vestryman in the diocese, urging him to make every effort to be present.

The schedule for the meetings in the various towns follows:

October 28—Richmond, Grace and Holy Trinity, 3 P. M. and 8 P. M.

October 29—Leesburg, St. James, 3 P. M. and 7:30 P. M.

October 30—Warrenton, St. James, 3 P. M. and 7:30 P. M.

October 31—Charlottesville, Christ Church, 5 P. M. and 7:30 P. M.

November 1—Harrisonburg, Emmanuel, 3 P. M. and 7:30 P. M.

November 12—Alexandria, Christ Church, 3 P. M. and 7:30 P. M.

November 14—Warsaw, St. John's, 11 A. M. and 2:30 P. M.

November 13—Fredericksburg, St. George's, 3 P. M.

November 15 — Gloucester, Ware Church, 11 A. M. and 2:30 P. M.

It is most earnestly desired that the movement be lifted from a money drive to a missionary effort. The bishop has composed the following prayer for constant use during this season:

O Lord, without whom our labor is but lost and with whom Thy little ones go forth as the mighty; Bless, we pray Thee, the work to which Thou hast called us, Thy servants in the Diocese of Virginia. Endue us with power from on high. Awaken in our hearts such a deep sense of our privilege to maintain and set forward Thy work, that by our faith, zeal and labor Thy blessed Name may be glorified and the bounds of Thy kingdom be enlarged; through Jesus Christ our only Saviour and Redeemer. Amen.

Beautiful Church Partly Burned.

St. James' Church, Leesburg, Loudoun County, was partly destroyed by fire of unknown origin, discovered between the ceiling and roof the morning of Saturday, October 5. It is one of the most beautiful church buildings in the South, the walls constructed of massive blocks of stone with brown stone trimmings and high pitched slate roof.

The Rev. G. Peyton Craighill is the rector and has a parish wonderfully strong for so small a community, with three hundred communicants. He has been there ten years.

The building was begun in 1895 and completed in 1897. It represents money value of about $125,000 and the loss is estimated at $25,000 to $40,000, much of it on the handsome pipe organ, which is supposed to be entirely ruined. Part of the loss, however, is covered by insurance. The fire was very stubborn and, from its situation and the height of the building difficult to reach, but the local fire company and citizens handled it with remarkable efficiency. An ancient historic Bible, old church records and other priceless relics were saved from injury. The vestry has begun with plans for rebuilding and restoration and services are being conducted regularly in the Leesburg high-school auditorium.

From Fairfax to Bedford.

The Rev. William T. Marshall has accepted a call from St. John's Church, Bedford, and will move there the latter part of November from his home in Fairfax, where he has been six years rector of Zion Church, Fairfax, the Church of the Holy Comforter, Vienna, and the Church of the Good Shepherd, Burke. He has conducted missions, also, at Buckley Chapel, Lagacio and Ivakota Farm School for Girls, Clifton. He has been ceaselessly and usefully active in social welfare work, is treasurer of Fairfax County Red Cross and President of the Parent-Teacher Association and a leader in the full-time health unit, recently established. He is a direct descendant of Chief Justice Marshall.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Generous Will.

The will of Isabel C. Freeman, recently filed for probate, names bequests for Diocesan Institutions as follows: To the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation, $50,000; to the vestry of the parish of the Epiphany, $25,000, and to the Epiphany Church Home, $10,000. Miss Freeman and her sister, Mrs. Margaret E. Buckingham, have been active members of Epiphany Parish for a number of years, and have taken a keen interest in church matters in the diocese, especially activities of the Washington Cathedral.

Convention Journal Issued.

The Journal of the Thirty-fourth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Washington for the year 1929, has recently been issued, containing minutes of the convention, the Bishop's Diary, official lists of parishes and clergy, parochial reports, and other things of interest. The Rev. H. Allen Griffith is Secretary of the Diocese, and has issued the Journal. The report of the Church's Program for the year 1928, giving the Budget Quota for each parish, with the amount paid and the percentage paid, shows Christ Church, Georgetown, to have the largest percentage in the diocese, with a record of 127 per cent. Christ Church has always been recognized as an outstanding missionary parish of the diocese and for the last few years has oversubscribed its quota by a large amount.

The Rev. G. M. Williams, of Brooklyn, N. Y., will conduct a quiet day with Meditations at 10, 12 and 2 o'clock on Friday, October 18, at St. Paul's Church. The day will end with Evensong at 3:30 P. M. The several Chapters of the Daughters of the King in the diocese are expected to take part in this quiet day. A light luncheon will be served at one o'clock.

Outdoor Services have been discontinued at Washington Cathedral until next summer, and Sunday afternoon services will be held at four o'clock in Bethlehem Chaptel. The Bishop of the diocese is usually the preacher at these services during the winter and the full Cathedral Choir of Men and Boys, under the direction of Edgar Priest, organist, will render the music. These services are broadcast by radio.

M. M. W.

ARIZONA.

Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Bishop.

On Sunday, October 6, in St. John's Church, Bisbee, Arizona, special mention was made of the death of our Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., and the prayers of the congregation were asked for the bereaved family. One of the parishioners, who was confirmed and also married by Bishop Murray, placed beautiful flowers on the altar as a tribute to his memory.

At 6:30 in the evening of the same day, a group of young people met and took initial steps to organize as a Young People's Fellowship in our National Federation of Young People. Four well equipped Counselors were chosen, and enthusiasm was manifested in the plan of organization. At 7:30 P. M., a group of the young people, previously trained for the purpose, assisted the rector in the Evening Service, one playing the organ, others constituting the choir, one read the Psalter and another the Lessons, two took the offering, and two gave out books.

Different members of the congregation have donated new Prayer Books, so that we are assured of a sufficient supply of these new books just as soon as they are ready for delivery. We hope also to have new Hymnals to go with them, some of which have already been donated.

W. E. C.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor.

Twenty Years of City Mission Work.

Twenty years of active work, nearly twelve thousand services held, fifty miles of stick candy, tons of magazines and books distributed, thousands of Bibles, New Testaments and Prayer Books given free, over twenty city and county and private institutions visited, many thousands of miles traveled in greater Cincinnati mark the story of the Cincinnati City Mission of the Episcopal Church, which was organized October 8, 1909.

Previous to that date the work, which is described as ministering to the sick and poor in the benevolent and reformatory institutions of the city and county, was carried on, largely by the staff of St. Paul's Cathedral under Bishop, then Dean, Matthews' direction, and for twenty-five years the building at 223 West Seventh Street, now the Diocesan Headquarters, has been the fountain head of these streams of mercy and charity. Prior to that period the Rev. Dr. Gray did such work practically single handed and was on the staff of Christ Church.

From 1909 to the present, the expenditures on the work have risen from $1,500 to $4,500 a year, in round numbers, and only one worker, Deaconess Drant, whose fine record covered a dozen years, was supported entirely out of this amount. She has retired and is in feeble health in Deaconess Hospital.

The small amount of money expended as compared to the work done is due to the fact that the workers give a portion of their time and are supported in other ways. The Superintendent, the Rev. Canon Reade, who is completing twenty years of service, is rector of St. Stephen's Church, Winton Place, and receives also several honoraria which help pay expenses. His field, after general supervision is attended to, includes specially, work at the Tuberculosis Sanatorium, Children's Hospital, Longview Hospital and the Widows' Home.

The Rev. George H. Hills has for nearly fifteen years worked in the General Hospital and is rector of Grace Church, Avondale. The Rev. Carl Stridsberg, rector at Wyoming, gives attention to Hillcrest School and other institutions. The Rev. James P. Attridge, rector at Hartwell, visits the County Home and also at St. Edmund's School for Boys. The Rev. J. D. Herron, D. D., rector at Madisonville, has services and visits at the Home of Incurables. So these devoted clergy, assisted by lay workers and occasionally other clergy, cover a vast field. The Sisters at Bethany Home visit the Maple Knoll Home for the Friendless, purely as volunteers. Other institutions are also visited less regularly.

The work has never been denominational and marks neither creed nor color. It has sought to serve all and not to make converts to the Episcopal Church in particular. It has had the hearty cooperation of the officers of the various institutions on account of its common sense cooperation with all forms of welfare, and the Kiwanis Club has, at its suggestion, done a remarkable work for tubercular children.

The reputation of the Cincinnati City Mission is widespread and under the direction of Dr. W. S. Keller, head of the Social Service Department of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, it has been a field of work and training for theological students from all parts of the country.

Connected with this work for years, was the Rev. John F. Plummer, Superintendent of the Chicago City Mission, the Very Rev. Dean Benjamin D. Dagwell, of the Denver Cathedral, was a worker on the staff; the Rev. Robert Williams, rector of Princeton, N. J., was a most successful city missioner; the Rev. Frank E. Cooley, rector of St. Paul's, Newport, Ky., was a valued member of the staff for a long period.

Thanks to the summer training school the future of such City Mission work is assured and young men will be found ready to give themselves to it. They will doubtless have the advantage of more modern methods and better facilities and the foundation of sound training and doubtless the funds for its extension will also be forthcoming.

Bishop Vincent, who twenty years ago, appointed Canon Reade as Superintendent, has always been a strong supporter of the Mission and Bishop Reese has also shown his decided interest in it by word and deed. As Shakespeare's character, Portia, says of mercy, the City

(Continued on page 23.)

Family Department

OCTOBER.

1. Tuesday.
6. Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
13. Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
18. Friday S. Luke.
20. Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
27. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
28. Monday, SS. Simon and Jude.
31. Thursday.

COLLECT FOR TWENTY-FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Grant, we beseech Thee, merciful Lord, to Thy faithful people pardon and peace, that they may be cleansed from all their sins, and serve Thee with a quiet mind; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For The Southern Churchman.

THE DAY'S INVENTORY.

Bernice Watson Patterson.

Take the long day's inventory just before you go to bed,
When the lights are dimmed and shaded, and the last goodnight's been said,
Sitting in your comfy armchair near the reddened ember's glow.

Have you lived as you intended when the day began to grow?
Have you helped some one whose journey o'er life's path seemed hard and slow?
Put your shoulder down and lifted, lifted long and lifted sure,
Till the look you got in answer seemed to fill your heart, and more?

Have you left some word unspoken that would ease another's load?
Have you just by word or action helped another on the road?
Just a smile, a sudden handclasp, just a word it might have been
Which brought forth the inspiration that has helped some one to win.

Take the long day's inventory just before you go to sleep;
Plan to live tomorrow better; strive to make it more complete;
Then that day will be the best one, and with peace your soul will fill;
For you'll have the joy of knowing you have done the Master's will.

What New Things Did Jesus Teach?

"What is this?" the unfriendly Jews asked after hearing Jesus. "A new teaching!" they exclaimed. Jesus, then, was Himself a teacher of new theology in His day. He did not keep to the old paths of the scribes and Pharisees, but boldly struck out into new paths. He revised and rewrote the religious creeds of His time and started this process of ever bringing religion up to date down through the centuries.

It is true that there is a changeless element in the changing forms of religion. The fundamental principles of religion do not change, but only our understanding and application of them. The new astronomy interprets the same heavens as the old, but in a truer and grander way, and the new science of medicine is only the- old science corrected and made to fit the facts more closely. It is the same gospel we preach, but its interpretation and application are ever new. What new things did Jesus teach?

Jesus used and revered the Old Testament, and yet He revised it and brought it up to date. He recast all its teachings in His own forms of thought and life. Much of it did not suit Him at all and He sloughed off these obsolete and incongruous materials and selected what fit into His own teaching. Deeper and more radical still, he did not hesitate to cut into its text and teaching and criticize it. Jesus boldly corrected Moses. Six times He does this in the Sermon on the Mount, quoting the Mosaic legislation and then declaring, "But I say unto you" something different; sometimes deepening and spiritualizing the old law and sometimes flatly contradicting it (Matt. 5:22, 28, 34, 39, 44). Christ contradicts Moses! There it stands plainly written in the record. The old was too narrow for him and he broadened it; it was too external and he turned it inward; or it belonged to a lower ethical level and He lifted it to a higher plane.

Thus Jesus put Himself above the Scriptures and made them subservient to Himself. As He was Lord of the Sabbath, so was He also Lord of the Scriptures. He modernized the Old Testament into the New, or extracted the essence and seed of the Old and developed it into the substance and flower of the New. He spiritualized the Old Testament at a stroke when, with one magnificent utterance and gesture, He swept off the mountain top of Zion the temple with all its Old Testament ordinances and pageantry. He released the worship of the Father from a local habitation and cult into the freedom of the spirit and let it out into universality; no matter about the time and place. He took off its swaddling bands and started it out on its own feet; He unloosed it from the rocky crag of Judea that it might spread its wings and soar around the world.

Jesus taught and illustrated the vital fact that religious truth is a growing thing that must ever absorb new sustenance and produce finer fruits. His parables and teachings in which He likened the gospel to seed embodied this truth. The seed absorbs out of the soil and shower and sunshine the elements that enter into its growth and blossom and fruit. As the soil and climate change, so in some degree does the fruit change also. The size and texture and flavor of the fruit vary with the habitat and may vary widely when the seed is transplanted to a different country or continent. The plant is also subject to cultivation and may be greatly improved in a more congenial environment.

The analogy of the gospel to seed implies that it will be subject to like changes. This fact is abundantly illustrated in the history of Christianity, which has produced many types, Greek, Roman, Catholic and Protestant. The first century had its peculiar type, and so has the twentieth and so will the twenty-fifth. Some are suspicious and fearful of these varying types and would like to repress them and cut and conform them all to their own pattern as hedges are trimmed, but they are as inevitable and necessary and good as are varieties of trees and flowers and fruits.

Christianity will necessarily continue to be shaped and colored by its soil and whole habitat, as in foreign missionary lands and churches, and thus it will be progressively adapted to each successive age and country. The world could not live today on the coarse grasses of the early geological ages, and our Christian faith could not survive on the low ethics of the early books of the Old Testament, or on many of the religious ideas of the first Christian century, or on the superstitions of the Middle Ages, or on the science of the fifteenth century. In such a soil and climate the gospel seeds we are now sowing would wither and die. All this is implied in the truth Jesus taught so luminously illustrated that religious truth and Christian faith are growing forms of life.

More remarkable still, Jesus left His own work and teaching unfinished and provided for its future continuance and growth. "Jesus began both to do and to teach": he only began, he did not complete. And he definitely announced, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Here Jesus stands as the Son of God "above the heads of his reporters", above all the ages and speaks to all coming time. This is a clear disclosure of endless visits of truth yet to come. But the disciples were not ready for and could not bear it then and some cannot bear this growing new truth yet. This recognizes the principle that the revelation of truth is necessarily a gradual process and must not be crowded on growing minds too fast. Too much light may blind the eyes; too much fuel may smother the fire. All that Jesus said was only a hint of what He might have said and of what He is now saying as He reveals Himself in all the growing truth of the world.

"A new teaching!" must we still exclaim as we see the infinitude of truth unfolding in our day and see how it all converges on the expansion and illumination of the supreme spiritual realities which Jesus disclosed, and which are the light of the world. He kept the old in its essential truth and then enlarged it as He unfolded it into new and richer flower and fruit.—Presbyterian Banner.

"Old Hundred" at Corinth.

"The discussion of the old-time hymns by J. M. Lowe in The Star was of unusual interest to me because of a Southern incident in the Fall of 1862," said James Thomas, known as Chevalier Thomas'. "I was lugging a gun along with Pap Price's musketeers in Mississippi. We were trying to join Van Dorn so as to attack Rosecrans at Corinth. All over the country troops were being rushed by the scene of the impending difficulty. We were on the march to Iuka, a place just south of Corinth.

"One day a queer-looking man rode slowly by the camp. He was on a mule, and his stirrups were so high that his knees seemed to come to his breast He wore an immense Tuscany hat, bent down in front to shade the eyes and tilted up behind. The rest of the rider's apparel was in harmony with that outlaw's hat.

"All sorts of sarcastic allusions were hurled at the rider as he slowly passed down the long line. But he neither turned to the right nor to the left; never quickened his pace, but looked stolidly ahead.

"A couple of days later we camped in Iuka and our commander said that Bishop Kavanaugh was in town, and would talk to those who cared to hear him. Fully five thousand soldiers assembled at the meeting place. When the 'scare-crow' of the road was introduced to us as Bishop Kavanaugh, a man noted all through the South for his devotion, you can imagine how some of us felt, and as we faced him we knew he knew.

"Bishop Kavanaugh began by lining the first verse of Old Hundred:

'Before Jehovah's awful throne,
Ye nations, bow with sacred joy;
Know that the Lord is God alone;
He can create, and He destroy'.

"What power the old hymn had in the earnest tones of that man! How it resounded through the forest like a declaration from the Almighty Himself! I have heard eminent pulpit orators, but never have I been so thrilled as I was then.

"A Missouri soldier led, and 3,000 lusty voices joined in;

"His sovereign power, without aid,
Made us of clay, and formed us men;
And when like wandering sheep we strayed,
He brought us to His fold again!'

"I have forgotten many things since then—the charge, the hand-to-hand fights with clubbed muskets over the breastworks, but never will I forget that song.

"And then the Bishop talked to us. He told us to be good soldiers; to do our duty to our God and our country, and to let Him cast up the result.

"'I bring you today a battle hymn,' he said; 'the battle hymn of Christ. It is great enough to fight for; it is grand enough to die for. Take it with you on the march, sleep with it in the camp; let it swell aloft on the red field of battle! It is a beckoning hand to the striving, a radiant halo for the victor, a garland for the dying! God bless you, my men! May He keep you true to the hymn, and whate er the adventure of the conflict'—

"Bomb! Bomb!

"'May He bring you safe into His beautiful home at last.'

"Bomb! Bomb!

"Rosecrans' cannons were thundering in the distance, and our guns were rushing to the front, but not a man of the soldier congregation stirred until the final word: 'Amen.'

"Fall in, company."

"Officers galloped about, delivering commands to their companies; the battle line was formed; the artillery barked savagely, and the beautiful autumn day went down in a canopy of smoke and flame—

'Wide as the world is Thy command,
Vast as eternity Thy love:
Firm as a rock Thy truth must stand
When rolling years shall cease to move.'

"Far into the night you could hear the soldiers singing the hymn as they worked with the dead and wounded. Under the trees, over the meadows, across plain and valley, tenderly, lovingly, as a hope for the living and a benediction for the dead, the solemn cadence filled earth and sky, rising to the very stars."—Kansas City Star.

Of no mortal man but of Abraham alone does Almighty God ever speak and say, He was My Friend. God employs many gracious, beautiful, and endearing names in speaking of the prophets, and psalmists, and other saints in Israel; but it is of Abraham alone that God testifies to Israel and says, Thou are the seed of Abraham, My Friend. . . Jew and Musselman and Christian, all unite in calling Abraham what they call no other man—the Friend of God.—Alexander Whyte.

For the Young Folks

For The Southern Churchman.

THY CROSS UPON MY BROW.
(Baptism.)

Mary Pickens Opie.

Invisible yet a living flame,
Radiant wondrous cross upon my brow
Which more to me doth mean
Than all the riches of the earth
Or pomp of worldly queen.

For this, the cross upon my brow
Is my Captain's sign—
The Captain who in life or death
Will not my soul resign.

The Captain of my dearest hope
Of rapture, heavenly gain,
Of highest joys, when will be
Forgotten every pain!

The Captain who would lead me on
Through earthly cloud or sun
To realms of everlasting joy,
And Life's great victory won!

Oh, Captain, let me wear that cross,
Thy sign upon my brow,
That radiant may become my life—
Not only then—but now!

And when at last my march is done,
My earthly life laid down,
Oh, may Thy cross upon my brow
Be then my wondrous crown!

For The Southern Churchman.

Gloomy Shadows.

Adele S. Bailey.

Sunbeams had transformed the clear water of Willow Pond into a glistening mirror. Squirrel was storing up nuts in a nearby tree. Sparrow was chirping gaily upon a branch of the same tree. He was watching the Sunbeams dancing upon the water.

Then suddenly along came a big black cloud; it cast a shadow over the clear, sparkling water, causing it to look dark and gloomy. The Sunbeams disappeared; Sparrow ceased to chirp; and Squirrel came out of his hole to see what was the matter. Where were the Sunbeams? What made Willow Pond look all black and gloomy? Squirrel looked about. He saw Black Cloud.

"What are you doing here?" he asked.

Black Cloud did not answer Squirrel's question; instead he asked: "What makes this pond so black and gloomy?" And before Squirrel could reply he continued: "Oh, I shall not stay here! No, indeed!" And without another word, Black Cloud hurried away.

Immediately the sun shone again; the Sunbeams danced and sparkled, transforming Willow Pond once more into a shining mirror.

Sparrow called down to Squirrel:

"Say, what was the matter with that cloud? Did you hear him grumbling about the pond being so gloomy?"

"I certainly did," Squirrel laughed.

"But didn't he know?" chirped Sparrow.

"Know what made the pond so dark and gloomy? Of course not! If he had known, he would not have asked."

"He must be dumb!" Sparrow exclaimed.

"No doubt, but he is like a lot of other folks I know—always complaining and grumbling about this and that; Cloud will wander from one place to another, never contented, always wondering why the world is so dark and gloomy—"

"When, after all, he alone is to blame," Sparrow interrupted.

Then Squirrel returned to his work of storing up nuts for the winter, and Sparrow began to sing:

"Gloomy People Cast Gloomy Shadows" until Squirrel poked his head out of the hole in the tree and called out: "Stop that dirge!"

The Great Stone Face.

You had only to lift your eyes, and there it was plainly to be seen, though miles away, with sunshine brightening all its features.

What was the Great Stone Face?

It seemed as if an enormous giant had sculptured his own likeness on a mountain side. There was the broad arch of the forehead, a hundred feet in height; the nose, with its long bridge; and the vast lips, which, if they could have spoken would have rolled in thunder from one of valley to the other. True it was that if you came too near, you lost the outline of the face and could see only a heap of ponderous rocks, but when you restored your steps, the wondrous features could be seen again, and the people who lived below it believed that their valley was so fertile because the Great Stone Face looked down upon it lighting up the clouds, and giving tenderness to the sunshine.

Now, there was a little boy named Ernest who lived in the valley, and his mother had told him a story that her mother had told to her; a story so very old that even the Indians did not know who had first told it, unless it had been murmured by the mountain streams, and whispered by the wind among the treetops. This was the story—that some time a child should be born who would become the greatest and noblest person of his time, and his face, in manhood, should be the exact likeness of the Great Stone Face. But though the people had watched and waited until they were weary, no man greater and nobler than his neighbors had they yet beheld.

"Oh, mother, dear mother!" cried Ernest, "I do hope I shall live to see him."

"Perhaps you may," said his mother, doubtfully.

And Ernest never forgot the story. It was always in his mind whenever he looked upon the Great Stone Face. He grew up in the log cottage, and was dutiful to his mother, and helped her with his little hands, and more with his loving heart. From a lad he became a quiet youth, sunbrowned from work in the fields, and well learned, though he never had any teacher except that Great Stone Face which smiled down upon him at night when his work was done.

About this time there went rumor through the valley that the great man who was to bear a resemblance to the Great Stone Face, had appeared at last. His name was Gathergold, and he was a very rich merchant and he owned a whole fleet of ships. All the countries of the world had added to his wealth. The cold regions of the North had sent him furs; hot Africa had gathered the ivory tusks of her great elephants out of the forests; the East had brought him spices and teas and diamonds, and pearls.

He ordered a wonderful palace of marble so dazzingly white that it seemed as if it would melt in the sunshine. When the mansion was done, the upholsterers came with magnificent furniture, and then a whole troop of black and white servants who said that Mr. Gathergold would arrive at sunset.

"Here he comes," cried the people who were waiting to see him. "Here comes the great Mr. Gathergold!"

A carriage, drawn by four horses, dashed round the turn of the road. Within it sat a little old man with a skin as yellow as his own gold.

"The very image of the Great Stone Face!" shouted the people, but Ernest, who had been watching, too, turned sadly and looked up the valley, where, in the gathering mist, he could see the wonderful Face, and the lips seemed to say:

"He will come! Fear not, Ernest; the man will come."

The years went on, and Ernest was a young man, still good, and true and kind. Poor Mr. Gathergold died and was buried, and the oddest part of the matter was that his wealth all disappeared before he died, leaving nothing of him but a skeleton covered with a wrinkled yellow skin; and every one decided that he had never borne the slightest resemblance to the Great Stone Face.

Then a war-worn veteran, who had won great honors on the battlefield and was named Old Blood-and-Thunder, decided to come back to the valley where he had been born. His neighbors resolved to welcome him with a salute of cannon and a public dinner, for they were all quite sure Old Blood-and-Thunder would bear the likeness of the Great Stone Face.

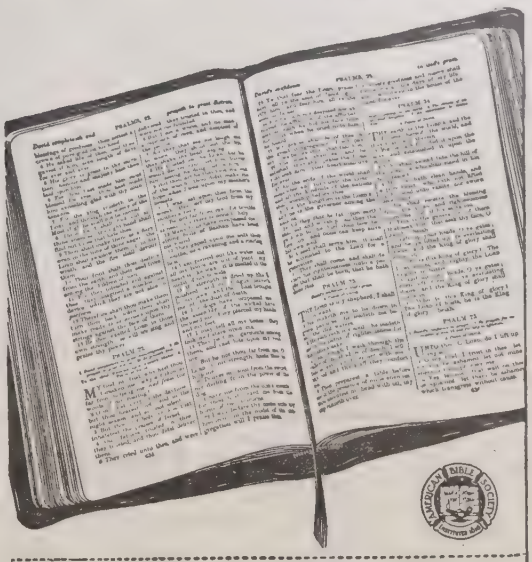
On the day of his arrival, Ernest and all the others left their work and went out to meet Old Blood-and-Thunder.

"'Tis the same face, to a hair!" cried one man.

"Wonderfully like," cried another.

Then Ernest saw him. There he was, over the shoulders of the crowd, with glittering epaulets and an embroidered collar and there, too, through the vista of the forest appeared the Great Stone Face.

"This is not he," thought Ernest.



Many years passed. Ernest was now an older man. He still labored for his bread, but he had done so much for his neighbors that it seemed as if he had been talking with the angels and had got a portion of this wisdom unawares.

The people in the Valley had found out—after awhile—that Old Blood-and-Tunder's face had not the gentleness of the Great Stone Face, and now they said again that its likeness was to appear upon the broad shoulders of a great statesman.

Old Stony Phiz, he was called, and while his friends were doing their best to make him President, he set out on a visit to the valley where he had been born.

Ernest and all the others went out to meet him. A cavalcade came prancing along the road, with a clattering of hoofs. There was a band of music, and while the people were throwing up their hats and shouting, an open barouche came by, drawn by four block horses. Inside with his massive head uncovered sat the great statesman, Old Stony Phiz, himself.

Words of Praise for a Plan that distributes the Word of God

"I prefer American Bible Society bonds before many others, first and foremost because they are an investment for eternity."

✣

"My wife and I are pleased that our gift will ultimately aid a great missionary agency. We like your promptness in remittance."

✣

"The satisfaction that I can help to aid the Gospel message and that the work will continue perhaps long after I have gone gives me pleasure."

✣

"One attractive feature of your annuity bond agreement is that it pays a good substantial income to the Annuitant as long as he lives; and pays it promptly."

✣

"The thing most gratifying to me is the knowledge that after I am gone my money will still be at work. That is, it means permanency of Gospel Proclamation."

✣

"I am now past seventy-one, and have money invested in other ways that give me trouble and anxiety; but the income from your annuity bond agreement comes as regularly as the seasons."

as high as 9%

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY
The Bible House
Astor Place, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I would like to learn about the plan which assures as high as 9% according to age. Please send me without obligation on my part your booklet No. 29S entitled "Bibles and Bonds."

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

Safe Investment

If you invested $10,000--

in our 6 per cent Certificates, par value $50.00, your money would have the protection of First Mortgages, on property worth double the amount of the mortgage, our resources of 400 times the amount of your investment and our reputation of 37 years without loss of a dollar to an investor.

You may buy 6 per cent Certificates in any amount from $50 to $10,000.

May we send our folder "Safe Investments"?

JEFFERSON COUNTY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION
BIRMINGHAM ALABAMA

Jackson Building-Birmingham, Ala.

"Confess it," cried some one to Ernest. "The Great Stone Face has met its equal."

But Ernest turned away disappointed. The eyes and brow of the great man had none of the nobleness of the Face on the mountain side.

And Ernest grew to be an old man, but a strange thing happened. He was no longer an obscure husbandman. Men from the cities began coming to see him to learn from him the things that he had learned from the Great Stone Face, things not put down in books, and he was suddenly become famous.

One day a great poet came to the valley and stopped at Ernest's cottage to ask shelter for the night.

It was Ernest's custom each evening to talk to the assemblage of neighbors in a small nook among the hills near his cottage. To this spot he and the Poet went at Sunset. All about was the pleasant foliage of many creeping plants, while Ernest's friends sat in the grove at his feet and in another direction could be seen the Great Stone Face with heavy mists about it, like the white leaves around the brow of Ernest.

At that moment Ernest's face, as he began to speak, grew wonderfully grand, and the Poet threw his arms aloft and shouted:

"Behold! Behold! Ernest is himself the likeness of the Great Stone Face."

Then all the people looked and saw that what the poet said was true. The prophecy was fulfilled.—Nathaniel Hawthorne (abridged).

The Right to be Happy.

Happiness does not merely happen. It is not that some people are lucky or others have the proper temperament. Happiness is not attained by much striving either. We pursue happiness too much and therefore never get it, for it is a by-product of goodness. It is heaven's gift to those that try most to do right. Seek first the kingdom and all these things shall be added unto you. Who are the happy people you know; the rich, the proud, the satisfied, the powerful, that are padded with comforts and surfeited with success? That cow chewing her cud in the meadow is placid enough, a stoical beast, incapable of much anguish. But one who has the capacity for the finer qualities of joy must have facilities also for tragedies and sorrows. The Master of life says this: Happy are the poor in spirit; happy are they that mourn; happy are the hungry; happy are the meek; happy are the peacemakers; happy are the pure in heart; happy are the persecuted. If He was right, our great privilege is to pursue, not the phantom of happiness, but the everlasting glory of virtue, justice, kindness, love. For true happiness follows, not precedes, character. Happiness is a kind of angel song in the heart, the echo and overtone of the melodies of the kingdom of God.—Mark Wayne Williams.

For The Southern Churchman.

WOOD CREATURES.

Maude F. Mumma.

Little creatures of the Wood,
For some purpose, kind and good;
God hath put you there to dwell,
For He doeth all things well.

Little creatures of the Wood,
We'll be gentle, as we should;
God hath given both a share,
Of His bounty and His care.

He has made the birds and bees,
Are we not much more than these;
As He notes the sparrow's fall,
Hath He not enough for all?

Give Freely to His Work

YET HAVE AN INCOME FOR YOUR NEEDS

How you long to give freely to God's Work, yet, because your means are limited, you hesitate.

Now, however, through the Annuity Plan of the Moody Bible Institute, you may give in abundance that His Work may be carried on by such earnest students as those pictured below.

There were students in the Winter Term of the Moody Bible Institute, 1929, representing 33 nationalities. For such as these will your gift be used. And all the rest of your life, you receive 4 per cent to 10 per cent, and more, according to your age, on your investment.

Write for further information. No obligation to you.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO,
Bureau of Annuities,
Dept. H103,
153 Institute Place,
Chicago Ave. Station Chicago, Illinois

BOYS GIRLS EARN XMAS MONEY
Write for 50 Sets St. Nicholas Christmas Seals. Sell for 10c. a set. When sold send us $3.00 and keep $2.00. No Work—Just Fun. St. Nicholas Seal Co., Dept 513-S.C., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Life looks rosy for him

Health worth more than fortune

THE baby to be envied is the one who is born with an inheritance of perfect health, to begin with. And who's lucky enough to have a mother who knows how to build up this fortune.

"Perhaps I'm old-fashioned," she'll say to the doctor who pronounces her child physically 100% at a baby show, "but this health certificate means more to me than all the stock certificates in the world. If my baby grows up strong and well, I'm willing to leave it to him to make a career and fortune for himself.

"Already I'm teaching him the value of regular habits. Regular sleep, regular meals, regular functions. He's never once been off schedule, not even when he was cutting teeth or traveling to the country. I make sure of that by giving him Nujol regularly."

Nujol works so easily and naturally that it won't upset a baby under any conditions. It keeps everything functioning properly. It not only prevents any excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming but aids in their removal. It is safe and sure. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York.

Heir to millions

Just try Nujol for your baby. Give it to him regularly for the next three months. See if it doesn't make things much easier for both of you. Certainly it could do no harm — for Nujol contains no drugs or medicine. Your druggist carries it. Be sure you get the genuine. Sold only in sealed packages.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

THE REUNION OF CHRISTENDOM

A SURVEY OF THE PRESENT POSITION
edited by Sir James Marchant, K. B. E., LL. D. $3.00

WHAT are the real obstacles, internal and external, to a united Christian Church? Until these are defined and their significance fully appreciated, there can be no hope of reunion . . . Each Church must be allowed to state its own case . . . Here each Church speaks on the problem of reunion with perfect liberty, frankness, and authority. It is the first standard work on the subject.

HIS Eminence, Cardinal Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster, states the position of the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church. The Most Reverend Archbishop Germanos, Metropolitan of Thyateira, speaks for the Eastern Orthodox Church.

THE Right Reverend F. T. Woods, Lord Bishop of Winchester, now visiting in the U. S. as a spokesman of the Christianity of Great Britain, represents the Church of England. The Right Reverend William T. Manning, Bishop of New York, affirms the position of the Protestant Episcopal Church. And the Right Reverend Vedenayakan Azariah, Lord Bishop of Dornakal, writes for the Anglican Church in India.

THE other Protestant Churches are represented by Otto Dibelius (Germany); Archbishop Söderblom (Sweden); Alfred E. Garvie (Free Churches of England); J. Scott Lidgett (Wesleyan Methodist Church); Alexander Martin (Scotland); T. Albert Moore (Canada); and William Adams Brown (United States).

DR. W. E. ORCHARD sums up these variant positions in a final chapter,
"A VISION OF THE REUNITED CHURCH"

HENRY HOLT & CO., Inc.
One Park Avenue New York

CLEARTYPE
PRAYER BOOKS

LEATHER
DUROTEX
ENTOMAX
CLOTH

MOREHOUSE PUBLISHING CO.
MILWAUKEE

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
GOTTSCHALK'S
METAL SPONGE
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
"The Modern Dish Cloth"
—WRITE FOR FULL INFORMATION—
METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
DEPT. G LEHIGH AND MASCHER STREETS PHILA.

FOR SECOND HAND THEOLOGICAL BOOKS

We have a classified stock of over 100,000 Theological Books covering all subjects such as Commentaries, Homiletics, Church History, Philosophy, Psychology, etc., etc. Write for catalogue and send us your list of "Wants."

Please mention this paper.

SCHULTE'S BOOK STORE 80 AND 82 FOURTH AVE NEW YORK CITY

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System
Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS BULBS; 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor, 12, $1.00; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. FRED B. JONES, Gloucester, Va.

BOOK WANTED.

WE WISH TO PROCURE A COPY OF the book, "Faith of Our Fore-Fathers", by Stearns. Any one having a copy of this book for sale please notify Southern Churchman, stating price.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold Thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and Veil from $15. Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church Vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE.
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

MONEY FOR CHRISTMAS

Look in the old trunk and send me all the old envelopes up to 1876. Do not remove the stamps. Will pay highest prices. —George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

MAGAZINE ORDERS.

I AM A WHEEL-CHAIR INVALID, AND have no one to look to for financial help, and I want to ask you to remember me with your magazine subscriptions and renewals, so that I can buy medicine and other things I need. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Keysville, Ga.

BOARDING—WASHINGTON.

MISS ELLIE BOULDIN, APARTMENT 208, Park Road Court, Washington, D. C., would give lodging and breakfast to transient friends for $1.25.

SITUATION WANTED

COMPANION NURSE.

WANTED FOR THE WINTER POSITION as companion-nurse to a lady or child. References exchanged. Address, J. M. M., 202 S. Penn St., Wheeling, West Virginia.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED, A CAPABLE, REFINED woman to live in home and take charge of small children. Write Mrs. Edward P. Russell, 1491 Vinton Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

Deaths

HENRY MOTTET.

HENRY MOTTET, priest and doctor, has passed on, and it is difficult to believe that the place that knew him for seventy-one years shall know him no more. While a member of the Sunday School and of the first boy choir in this country under the ministry of the rector, the Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, he began his preparation for Holy Orders.

Graduating at the College of the City of New York with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1869, he entered the General Theological Seminary and having completed the course was made a deacon on June 29, 1872, and was priested on May 31, 1874. In 1902, Hobart College conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology. Upon the demise of the Rev. Doctor Muhlenberg, who founded the Church of the Holy Communion, the Rev. Francis B. Lawrence became the rector and the Rev. Mr. Mottet was appointed to the curacy. Mr. Lawrence died in 1879 and thereafter Mr. Mottet succeeded to the rectorship which office he filled with marked distinction, making full proof of his ministry until, on June 20, 1929, in the eighty-fifth year of his age, and having served the parish for fifty years, lacking one week, his eyes closed for their last sleep.

It is an interesting fact that the official Journal of the Diocese of New York first mentions him as "Acting Pastor" and then for a time as "Pastor" and gives no such title to any other clergyman among the hundreds of names on the diocesan list. How unusually appropriate that title was as applied to our deceased brother is known best to those who had the privilege of being in close and intimate contact with his work. He was indeed a good shepherd in whom was wondrously combined "A teacher's knowledge and a Saviour's love." It is no exaggeration to say of him that he changed the life and altered the career of thousands of men and women, inspiriting the discouraged, counseling the perplexed, energizing the "faint and overborne" as by a transference out of apparently inexhaustible store of dynamic power that sent them forward with the will to achieve. He embodied an idea which transmuted conditions into challenges to meet opportunities. His was a mighty soul—a rich mind, keen and alert—a great heart, catholic in his affections, tender, gentle, and considerate in dealings with the manifold complex problems which persons in all walks of life submitted to him for adjustment, and withal possessed with a titanic will which could brook no opposition in matters of right as God gave him to see the right. Parishes scattered throughout this nation are today presided over by clergymen who have come under the vitalizing power of this man of God whose spiritual gifts, coupled with outstanding executive ability, made him to be universally respected, often almost reverenced and always beloved.

Henry Mottet was a man of vision and at times there were those who called such an optimist as he, visionary. But he was not that. He thought years ahead of most men, and walked with a sure step where ordinary men faltered. The spirit of the saint Muhlenberg, founder not alone of the Church of the Holy Communion, but also of such other monumental institutions as the great St. Luke's Hospital, and the Society of St. Johnland which maintains homes for aged men, women and children, had a continued expression in his successor. He was loyal to traditions that adorned the annals of his great predecessor and he gave himself without reserve and without stint to the furtherance of the benign charities which he established. Despite a changing social environment, he devoted himself to the supreme task of holding in perpetuity the historic Church of the Holy Communion upon its consecrated ground. It was his vision and he was characteristically true to the vision. With that objective, therefore, as the crowning work of his great life he struck out for an endowment of one million dollars. There were not many who believed he could possibly accomplish so vast an undertaking, but within a few months of the close of his life the completion of the fund was celebrated with a memorable service in the presence of a congregation which filled the ancient edifice.

Henry Mottet was loyal to his high calling as a champion of the Faith. He believed in his God and he believed in men. Diligence and steadfastness in duty's daily round and perseverance in good works of every sort and nature marked the length of his days. The "homo sum humani nihil a me alienum puto" of Terrence, and the German, "I must, therefore, I can", were the oft reiterated slogans of this surpassing servant of the Christ.

The Church thanks God and takes courage for the inspiring example of Christian Manhood in its best estate which Henry Mottet has afforded. Ours are cherished memories of what his blessed life has meant to the Christian pilgrimage and to our social fellowship. His contribution to life is a spirit of which his works are a rich and yet only a partial expression. And while our hearts are bowed in grief at his passing so that a sincere sympathy is extended to her who lived most in the sunshine of his presence, yet we look up in the sure trust and confidence that He is not dead, but sleepeth. "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth and underneath are the everlasting arms!"

Committee appointed by the Bishop of New York:

The Reverend Homer Francis Taylor, Chairman, rector St. Paul's Church, Bronx.
The Reverend George F. Nelson, D. D., Canon, Cathedral of St. John the Divine.
The Reverend Robert S. W. Wood, rector St. Mary's Church, Tuxedo Park.
The Reverend John F. Steen, D. D., rector-emeritus Ascension Memorial Church.
The Reverend Henry Lubeck, D. D., Canon Cathedral Saints Peter and Paul, Washington.
The Reverend George F. Clover, D. D., Canon Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

RESOLUTION.

Edward J. Owen.

Memorial resolution on the death of the REV. EDWARD J. OWEN, D. D., passed by the vestry of John's Church, Sharon, Pa., September 16, 1929.

Whereas Almighty God in His inscrutable wisdom having called to Himself the beloved rector of this parish, the Rev. Dr. Edward J. Owen, the vestry desire to record our profound sorrow, and to give expression to our overwhelming sense of loss at the passing of Dr. Owen.

For nineteen years he has been the tireless leader of this parish, holding high the ideals of the Church, modestly serving his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, preaching always the gospel of infinite love and mercy of God. He, long ago, established himself firmly in the hearts of the people of this parish whose affection for him is very deep, and was constantly manifested by them in the ready response made to every request and the joy they found in following his leadership. Under Dr. Owen's leadership the parish has rapidly risen from obscurity to one of great prominence and influence throughout the diocese, and for his works Dr. Owen was widely known in the Church of the nation. Always active in all social and civic movements for the good of his community, always carrying himself with modest dignity, and always ready to serve in every cause which he conceived to be for the good of the community he endeared himself to all the people regardless of creed or race. The unfortunate found in him a sympathetic and helpful friend whatever the cause of their misfortune. He possessed a rare insight into human nature which enabeld him to serve his fellow men with gentleness, helpfulness, and intelligence. He died in the prime of life, in the midst of his work, and at the height of the affection and esteem which had been his during his entire ministry in the parish.

He served the Diocese of Erie with the same wisdom and devotion which he showed in his work in the parish. In every department of the work of the diocese his influence and leadership were constructive forces. His whole ministry, in his parish, and outside of it, was inspire by the vision of the world-wide mission of Christ's Church. He believed profoundly that as we are loyal to the Master's Commission to carry His Gospel to all the world we shall grow in strength and wisdom for every local and personal task committed to us. His leadership was being widely recognized throughout the Church.

His spirit is with God his Father. His example remains as an inspiration to service of all who come under his influence, and his good works will live beyond this generation to the glory of God and to the service of mankind.

It is directed that these resolutions be spread upon the Minute Book of the parish, and an appropriate engrossed copy be given to his widow, with sincere assurances of the profound sympathy and affection of the entire parish.

A. W. Krouse,
Senior Warden.
George Murchie,
Junior Warden.
Frank B. Mallett,
Secretary.

The leaves have no vacation
In summer time at all
They have to stay up on the trees
And cannot play till fall.

They have to shade the birds' nests
Well from the summer sun,
They have to keep the branches
Prettily dressed, each one.

But oh, when comes the autumn
The leaves keep holiday!
Dressed in their khaki outing clothes,
They romp the livelong day.

—Selected.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 15.)

Mission Work "blesseth him that gives and him that takes".

C. G. R.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, S. T. D., Bishop.

A blue ribbon for apple pie means money for the church at Henryetta, Oklahoma, where the women of the guild devoted all prizes on household arts at the county fair to the little mission. Quite a tidy sum was realized this fall.

Oklahoma will be the subject of a series of articles in the Spirit of Missions soon from the pen of a member of the publicity department who recently toured the state. The Rev. Richard M. Trexlease led a successful conference of the clergy and laymen which met at King Hall, Norman, this fall and discussed the Church Program.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

On June 16 there were ordained in the Cathedral three Deacons. The Rev. Woolsey E. Couch came to us from the ministry of the Disciples Church; he has attended the Virginia Theological Seminary and now, after his ordination, has been placed in charge of the Church of Our Saviour in Atlanta. Already he has entered upon his new ministry with active interest and the bishop is quite confident that youngest parish in the diocese will have its great possibilities developed by him.

The Rev. Mr. Riley, while yet a layman, has been in active charge of St. Andrew's, Fort Valley. In spite of many set-backs to the work of the church there by reason of the financial depression of that section of the State, Mr. Riley has done good work, and will continue in charge of that mission.

Mr. William S. Turner, who has made an unusually fine record along many lines of activities at the University in Sewanee, returns to that Seminary to complete his senior year.

The clergy roll of the diocese has thus received three admirable additions.

One June 20 the bishop admitted Mr. Edwin McClellan Johnston a Postulant. As he is the oldest son of the late, much-loved Dean, this event will be of special interest to the whole diocese, and many who admired his father will be happy to know that the son is preparing to follow in his steps.

Another specially important event is the resignation of Mr. Howard Williams as Treasurer of the Appleton Church Home. For many years that office has been held in the Williams family. Mr. Luther Williams was long the Treasurer, devoted to the Home, and ready to render it his experienced service. Upon his resignation, Mr. Howard Williams was good enough to accept the position, and though the work of the Treasurer has happily grown greater, he has done it without compensation, other than the warm appreciation of all who know what the work really is. The Board was most reluctant to accept his resignation and did so with many thanks. Mr. W. C. Turpin, of Christ Church, Macon, accepted his unanimous election to the position, and the Board knows that the management of its funds will be in the best hands. Mr. Williams has since the meeting of the Board agreed to hold the office for the rest of this year, and after that date Mr. Turpin will take up its duties.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Charles E. Barnes, formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, Newark, New York, is now rector of the Church of Our Saviour (Brookland Parish), Washington, D. C.

The Rev. Ralph M. Davis, formerly rector of St. James' Church, Mosinee, Wisconsin, has been added to the clerical staff of Grace Church, Lockport, New York, with special charge of Christ Church.

The Rev. Francis A. Ransom, formerly rector of St. James' Church, Rochester, New York, has accepted an invitation to be head of the Central Maine Mission, with headquarters at Brownsville Junction, Maine.

The Rev. Paul Musselman has resigned the rectorship of All Saints (Irondequoit), Rochester, New York, to become rector of St. John's, Downington, Pennsylvania.

The Rev. J. K. Tibbitts has relinquished charge of the Chapel at Lackawanna, New York, and the Chaplaincy of the Buffalo Church Home, with the intention of spending a year abroad in travel and study.

The Rev. R. R. Lytle, Jr., for the past five years Superintendent of the Rochester Church Extension Society, in the Diocese of Western New York, has resigned to become rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, Delaware, of which he will assume charge the first of November.

The Rev. John M. Borton has resigned the rectorship of Grace Church, Buffalo, New York, and on the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity began his ministry at St. Mark's Church, Newark, New Jersey. The closing days of his ministry at Grace Church were saddened for Mrs. Borton and himself by the death of their young daughter, a most attractive and beautiful two year old, under distressing circumstances which brought sorrow to their wide circle of friends.

The Rev. John C. Leffler, for the past two years on the Staff of St. Paul's Church, Rochester, New York, on September 1, took charge of St. John's Church, Ross, California, the rectorship of which he had accepted.

The Rev. Herbert Parrish, D. D., should be addressed at P. O. Box 333, New Brunswick, New Jersey.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Edward James Owen, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Sharon, Pennsylvania, died suddenly of acute heart trouble in the early morning of August 28. The funeral service was held in St. John's Church, August 30. From the time the service began to the return of the automobiles from the cemetery, all places of business in Sharon were closed.

The land is good which knows the Lord,
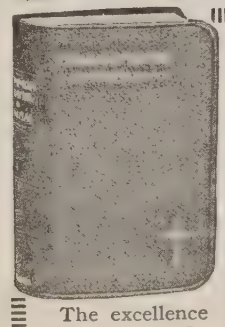
Where songs are guided by His word,
Where Justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls in act and plan;
Where breathing in his native air
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer;
Thus may our country good and great,
Be God's delight, man's best estate!

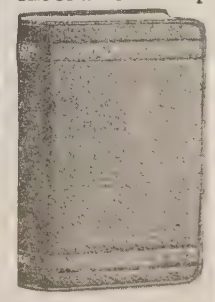


—Alexander Blackburn.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

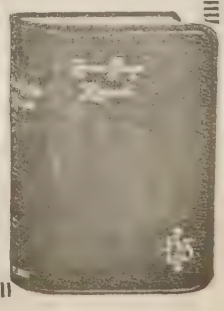
We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley



700 E. Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

NELSON NEW PRAYER BOOKS



and Hymnals are available in 3 sizes and 150 styles—each one of which is the perfected product of one of the finest book designers in the country.

Four of these styles are illustrated herewith. Note the finely balanced, restrained designs—beautiful and appropriate.

The TYPE and PAPER used in Nelson New Prayer Books and Hymnals are of the finest quality.

The excellence of the BINDINGS is due to the work of our own bindery.

Your bookseller can show you a wide variety of styles. Order from him, or send to us for a complete list if he cannot supply you.

Ask for Nelson Prayer Books and Get the Best

Also, a magnificent edition of ALTAR SERVICES, with Red Rubrics conforming to the New Prayer Book. In handsome and durable bindings.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS—NEW YORK

The Annual

Every Member Canvass

At a meeting, held April 24, 1929, the following resolutions, proposed by the Field Department, were adopted by the National Council:

I.

WHEREAS: We regard the Annual Every Member Canvass as an indispensable factor in the successful promotion of our Church's Program, and regard any substitute for such canvass as perilous to our work, therefore be it

RESOLVED: That it is the judgment of the Field Department that every parish and mission throughout the Church should make a thorough-going Annual Every Member Canvass, and that such Canvass should be preceded by a thorough educational preparation.

II.

RESOLVED: That the motives of the Annual Every Member Canvass are primary, and must be kept clear, namely, to bring information to our entire membership, deepen the spiritual life, and to cultivate the spirit of Christian Stewardship, and to produce adequate financial support for the parish, the Diocese and the General Church Program.

EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

December 1-15, 1929

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

281 Fourth Avenue CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE New York, N. Y.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 26, 1929. No. 43.

ALL SAINTS

For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy Name, O Jesus, be forever blest,
Alleluia!

Thou wast their Rock, their Fortress, and their Might:
Thou, Lord, their Captain in the well-fought fight;
Thou, in the darkness drear, the one true Light.
Alleluia!

Oh, may Thy soldiers, faithful, true, and bold,
Fight as the saints who nobly fought of old,
And win, with them, the victor's crown of gold.
Alleluia!

O blest communion, fellowship divine!
We feebly struggle, they in glory shine;
Yet all are one in Thee, for all are Thine.
Alleluia!

And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant triumph-song,
And hearts are brave again, and arms are strong.
Alleluia!

The golden evening brightens in the west;
Soon, soon to faithful warriors cometh rest;
Sweet is the calm of Paradise the blest.
Alleluia!

But lo! there breaks a yet more glorious day;
The saints triumphant rise in bright array;
The King of glory passes on His way.
Alleluia!

From earth's wide bounds, from ocean's farthest coast,
Through gates of pearl streams in the countless host,
Singing to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
Alleluia!

Written by Bishop W. W. How in 1864.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

General Relief Committee, Inc.

New York.

Dear Friend:

We have been appealed to for funds to aid in feeding the 20,000,000 people who are suffering from famine in China, where large numbers of women and children are dying daily. Happily, we have been able to assist in saving thousands of lives.

Continually we receive urgent appeals for further aid. But we can no longer continue to send almost weekly appeals for money to our contributors. We are, therefore, proposing to copy the old War Chest Plan.

We ask you to send us $10.00 to cover the coming year, and if possible, to repeat that donation in 1930.

If you will do this we will not send you any more appeals. You will not be bothered and we shall be able to devote to charity money that would otherwise be spent on printing and postage.

Yours cordially,

E. A. Nash, Secretary.

Chat Phenix National Bank and Trust Co.,

707 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y., Treasurer.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Gifts to God Promote Christian Living—Rev. K. J. Hammond, D. D.	6
Favorite Scripture Verse	6
Are Christian Missions in Foreign Lands a Failure?—Archdeacon Juan McCarthy.	7
Conversation of General T. J. Jackson With His Adjutant, Major Robert E. Dabney—S. B. Dabney	9
A Bill of Rights—De Courcy W. Thom	10
Address of General A. T. Goodwyn	11
Memorial Services at Stratford Hall	11
Book Reviews	12
Letters to the Editor	12
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	16
Children's Department	18
Personal Notes	22

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.

Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.

An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".

Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1828. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistree.

St. Paul's Boys' School

Rogers Avenue, Mt. Washington, Md.

Boarding and Day Pupils—Fifth grade to college.

WALTER B. LAWRENCE, M A., Headmaster.

Faculty all College Graduates.

REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D., President Board of Trustees.

Enrollment limited to Fifty Boarding Pupils. Tuition $450. Choir Scholarships. Next sesison begins September 11, 1929.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

A. & F. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W & E SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

Church Furniture
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL

The Law.	The Gospel.
1. Reveals what God demanded of every man (Ex. 20:1-7).	1. Reveals what God has done for every man (1 Cor. 15:3, 4).
2. Demanded perfect obedience or death (Ezek. 18:4; Jas. 2:10).	2. Gives life that we may obey (John 3:36; 14:23).
3. Commanded us to love God (Matt. 22:37).	3. Tells us that God loves us (1 John 3:16).
4. Commanded us to love our neighbor as ourselves (Matt. 22:39).	4. Fills us with the love of Christ for our neighbor (2 Cor. 5: 14; 1 John 3:16).
5. Reveals sin (Rom. 3:20).	5. Reveals the Saviour (John 3: 16).
6. Works wrath (Rom. 4:15).	6. Shows mercy (Eph. 2:4).
7. Pronounced a curse (Gal. 3:10).	7. Announces blessing (Gal. 3: 14).
8. Brought into bondage (Heb. 2:15; Gal. 4:1-3).	8. Sets believers free (Gal. 5:1; Rom. 8:1).
9. Says do and live (Gal. 3:12).	9. Says live and do (Rom. 8:2-4).
10. Extorted unwilling service of a bondslave (Rom. 7:1-3).	10. Wins willing service of a free man (Gal. 5:1; 1 John 4:19).
11. Shut man out of God's presence (Ex. 19:12, 13, 23, 24).	11. Opens the way to come boldly into Gods presence (Heb.' 4: 15, 16).
12. Made progress impossible (Ezek. 33:13).	12. Makes growth in grace possible (Rom. 5:10; 2 Peter 3:18).
13. Made nothing perfect (Heb. 7:19).	13. Made every believer perfect (Heb. 10:14; 7:19).
14. Could only condemn, not justify (Acts 13:39).	14. Justifies freely every believer Rom. 3:24; 5:1).
15. Had a shadow of good things to come (Heb. 10:1).	15. Is the very image of the good things (Heb. 10:1).
16. Is the strength of sin (1 Cor. 15:56).	16. Is the power of God (Rom. 1:16).
17. Demanded holiness (Deut. 6:24, 25; Lev. 20:26).	17. Produces holiness (Rom. 6: 14-22).
18. Called forth all the energy of the flesh (Rom. 8:3).	18. Puts to death all the energy of the flesh (Rom. 8:13).
19. Puioshed every transgression and disobedience (Heb. 2:2).	19. Pardons every transgression and disobedience (1 John 1:7, 9).
20. Under the law believers were "children", under age (Gal. 4:1-3).	20. Under the Gospel, believers are "sons', of full age (Gal. 4:4-7).
21. "Is done away" (2 Cor. 3: 11).	21. "Remaineth" (2 Cor. 3:11).

Outline from the classroom of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania.
W. W. Rugh, Associate Dean, 1418 N. 16th St., Philadelphia, Penn.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

St. Paul never used the word "success," and never sought the thing. He was ambitious in all things to please Christ. That is the best success.—Dr. R. E. Speer.

Our opportunity is balanced by our obligation.

It is better even to stumble along in the right road than to step firm in the wrong one.

Every one is on holy ground who ponders a great idea.—Rev. Karl Reiland.

Train up a child in the way it should go, and go that way yourself.—Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned.

Let us remember that we are living in the sublime interval between the Ascension and Christ's Second Coming to judge the world. Now is our time for work. Let us make the great mission motive clear in every heart.

Whatever men say in their blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so Kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.
Alice Cary.

The doubt that is an interrogation may be a blessing, but if it is a determination, it is a curse.

The works of God's machines are all hidden.

"Christians must be custodians of moral health and the natural enemies of moral disease. They are not to live in isolation, but to be well-mixed with the community life, sweetening art and literature and politics, and all the common relations of men."—Capt. B. Frank Mountford.

So near art Thou! Lord, I await
The moving of my heart
That I may toil till life is late
And take my utmost part.
For I have need of Thee to find
The courage of the daring kind.
—Selected.

Where there is thirst for power to help the needy, there is the Christlike spirit.—Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins.

There are two reasons why so few people find real happiness in religion. One is that they try to serve two masters and get into trouble as soon as they start it. The other is that their trust is small.—Rev. Charles E. Jefferson.

"In a certain home where family prayers were faithfully observed, the father asked God upon the mornings of the school days, that his daughter might have for her studies "insight and a retentive memory". This daughter, who in later life became well known in the world of letters, said: "The thought of that sentence in my father's prayers was an inspiration through all my school life. I believe that the possession of a good working memory and the development of whatever literary talent I now possess are due to my father's prayers."

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock	$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned	$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....	$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 26, 1929. No. 43.

UNKNOWN

According to popular phrase, those who think too much of themselves are conceited and selfish. When we analyze and consider the real meaning of the words, we realize that we can not think of and about ourselves too much or too closely and that the more we think of ourselves the more strongly and clearly we will be led to humility and charity, the virtues that create and nourish each other. There we begin with the vast complications of our spiritual and mental lives—so intimately associated with our physical and mental lives, yet so widely apart from them. The more earnestly and honestly we scan ourselves and our own weaknesses and sins, many of them, perhaps, unsuspected even by our fellows supposed to know our innermost impulses and motives, the more we tend to humility and to kindly judgment and compassion for others, the more fervently we must adore the God sinless and omnipotent and yet so merciful and forgiving. The more tolerant of the faults and frailties of others we are, the more loyally we try to assimilate the invitation to the Holy Communion, exhorting us to approach the Sacred Table in love and charity with our neighbors, and absorb the tremendous meaning of the little word "as" in the Lord's Prayer—forgive us our trespasses in the same way we forgive those trespassing against us—the more humble and penitent and forbearing our hearts must be.

This is but the beginning of results of faithful thinking of ourselves. The more of it we do, the more we must be impressed with the paucity and scarcity and narrow limits of what we know and the illimitable vastness of what we do not know, can not know from our physical senses, or our reason or from books; of what we can not control nor direct by such powers as we possess. Ten miles above us is atmosphere in which we can not breathe or live. Ten miles beneath us are conditions of which we may but surmise and guess. Above us or beneath us may be changes and activities which at any moment, and without warning, may wreck great cities or blight countries; and our much-boasted science can not predict such event nor teach us to avert or resist. We know nothing of the real beginning. Genesis tells of the foundation and construction of this world in which we live, but behind that are enormous mystery and darkness and silence—the origin, the establishment of what we call the laws of nature, like the attraction in the heavier body for the less. There the boldest and most unrestrained of the speculative scientists and philosophers are baffled and forced to halt, knowing no more than the crudest Tennessee mountaineer. The future, the eternity before us, is equally hidden, the most ecstatic faith and hope catching of it, but the faintest glimpses, such as sometimes may illuminate and glorify the face of a saint at the moment of the departure from this life that we call death. In our daily lives are continual influences beyond our knowledge, beyond our control. A hurricane may come from the unexplored regions of the atmosphere, from tropics or arctics, an earthquake from underground, devastating storm or drought, none of which we can foresee or explain or prevent. At this moment something may be said or done at the opposite side of the globe among strangers and in countries strange to us, which presently will bring us disaster or blessing. What we do or say or think now may come from something done, said or thought five hundred years ago, may live for good or ill five hundred years hence. We do not know whence come the thoughts, evil or good, disturbing, degrading and dangerous or comforting and ennobling, to yield mischief and destruction or usefulness and helpfulness. The shapes we vision with closed eyes or looking into black darkness are mysteries, appearing and vanishing regardless of our wills, things we surely do not see, but surely discern. As we sleep parts of our memories, active and clear, call before us vividly those who have died, while other parts are dormant and lose the fact that those we meet so familiarly can not be met in this life. During our waking hours our memories retain from the past the trivial and unimportant while much of the important and valuable goes from us; and we can not understand nor define how nor why.

The beginning from which we and the universe come, the future toward which we are going, the Power under which we exist and by which we are made defy and defeat human intellect, reason, imagination. A Being, Creator and Ruler of the innumerable and immeasurably enormous solar systems and yet noting the fall of a sparrow on this small planet and hearkening mercifully to each of the Myriad earnest prayers, ascending silently from hearts or uttered by tongues in all the languages of humanity, sent into the unseen and unknown, is beyond our power of comprehension, but very real and ever present to the faith and hope born of the spirit mysteriously living within us.

The impulses, powers, life, apart from the physical and material make the real life destined to endure after the physical has decayed. Beyond the narrow limits of what can be seen, heard, felt, weighed and measured by our restricted senses and minds, we know nothing but what has been revealed and promised to us. With all our yearning and groping and searching we may not see one hour into the future, can gather no hint of the ultimate purposes of our creation. We can not determine our fates or conditions here. All our plans may come to naught when every nerve is strained. It is among the mysteries that often the righteous are stricken while the wicked thrive. We can not know causes or designs or govern events here. We can govern ourselves, guide our own souls. We can not determine our destinies in this world of which we know. We can determine what they shall be in the world of which we know so dimly, yet so surely. We are given kinship with the Omnipresent, Omnipotent Power we may not see or hear, but with whom the spirit living within us, invisible and not to be placed nor described, may commune, gathering strength and guidance and peace. With that kinship is the responsibility, for each of us, of choosing between the material and immaterial, mortal and immortal, flesh and spirit. It is not for us to comprehend the invisible influences encompassing us continually. It is for us to understand the responsibility with which we are entrusted and be true to it, to know what our duty is and do it faithfully. We can teach ourselves that our journey here from childhood to departure is but a sojourn on the way from creation to consummation, from beginnings unrevealed to us to life and reward to be revealed gloriously and happily to those who faithfully and humbly seek them. So we may go right onward amid the hosts of the invisible influences and the crowding mysteries, with brave and trusting and loving hearts to fulfilment of the Eternal will, to know, at last, the mercy and the truth of the Eternal promises.

Alfred B. Williams.

GIFTS TO GOD PROMOTE CHRISTIAN LIVING

By the Reverend Kensey J. Hammond, D. D.

ADD to your faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, then patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity," wrote St. Peter. The word "add" means "lead a chorus". A devoted student of nature says, "The Apostle's idea is for perfect harmony in Christian virtue as in music." Nature reveals harmony in color as well as sound. In Christian character, grace should harmonize for beauty as music gratifies the ear.

With beauty there will be completeness. A missing note in music means discord. So St. Paul wrote the Corinthians, "as ye abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also." What grace? St. Paul had just mentioned "the riches of their liberality" of the churches of Macedonia. They gave willingly after giving their ownselves to the Lord. So St. Paul urges the Corinthians to liberality for a larger reason than the receiver's benefit, though he includes that. He urges it by "forwardness of giving" by others less able. He also proves the sincerity of their love, and that they may "abound unto every good work."

(1) The receiver's benefit is naturally uppermost in the mind of the giver. Multitudes are helped in one way or another. Even the unworthy seek a share, as seen in hospitals, public funds added to private, special agencies very active, all bearing witness to Christian character. In part, it springs from simple humanity. Much of it is also given in the name of Christ. The highest inspiration consecrates each gift. Similarly God ordained that the agencies of His Church should reach all men. He claims the "silver and gold and the cattle upon a thousand hills." At His bidding the kingdom was organized, and the machinery of the church put in motion, and the gospel message urged upon mankind.

Yet, this high motive, including "for Christ's sake," is not the only motive. It should always be present, but one cannot afford to miss the secondary motive for one's own sake. Why ever forget the personal helpfulness of giving to God. One may say, "I cannot afford it, but honestly, one cannot afford not to give. Generosity for the sake of the giver is worthy of thought. One should know how helpful is impulsive giving, how more helpful habitual, how most helpful systematic giving becomes. A fair trial can grow voluntarily into a life habit. This habit is helped by the gratification of a warm-hearted person, realizing the relief given in need; in a sight also for the happiness of others; in a mutual rejoicing in the joy the giver has originated. With this comes also a growth in Christian charity, and Church fellowship in the heart with Him "who went about doing good". So the giver has been worthily "good to himself."

(2) The day of voluntary consecration publicly in God's House of a human life should in completeness include one's property. The consecration of property or income emphasizes the consecration of life. The life consecration is made good in a way impossible for one who withholds his property. A spiritual benefit is realized at this entrance on the Christian life.

The question may arise in consecration of property: What ought a man and his family to do? Live on it, of course. The consecration involves earnest active service for Christ. The property must be used so that this service be most perfect. Property is also a talent from God, for which we give account in the last day, as much as for time, health, or influence. Such use will include innocent pleasure and gratification of God implanted taste, where sin has not corrupted them. Being God's steward there will not be wastefulness. This will not prevent contributions to the Church. The only question will be: what is the right proportion between personal and family expenses, and the Lord's work? Nor will such use hinder obedience to the command "owe no man anything." It will prevent incurring obligations that cut off the Lord's share from the man's expenditures. The giver will understand now David's word, "All things come of Thee, and of Thine Own have we given Thee."

Such consecration of income will note its variations. Property is not too secular a thing to be religiously careful about it. Such consecrated use dignifies one's income above indifferent carelessness and avaricious carefulness. The giver will recognize this as the gift of God, and also recognize the gift of strength to labor either with mind or body. A due knowledge of one's income will allow adequate generosity. The giver will escape the sin of selfishness while making intelligent offerings. He will not trespass on family necessities, or be guilty of sinful parsimony. He will find money in his Lord's treasury "who is able to make all graces abound," including this one of liberality.

(3) There is an old, wise saying, "That I gave that I have. That I spent, that I had. That I save, that I lost." A true view of one's income prevents setting affection on things below. A due use for God aids in setting the "affection on things above". One reaps as he sows. The larger the sowing now, the more will desire and affection rest upon treasures stored up. Faith must "cast his bread upon the waters." God's Book declares the bread must be found "after many days." The direct benefit is stronger faith, as well as uplifted affection. If income increases, the personal feeling will not be covetousness, but stewardship.

"Do good with what you have, or it will do no good to you." The helpfulness of this "grace" may lead to a desire to "abound in" this exercise. God's grace can make the grace of liberality possible. God's grace can preserve from temptation, and guide one's conduct to find spiritual as well as temporal benefit. One will see more clearly the extent of God's mercies, and enjoy the spirit of contentment from the insatiable spirit which is the greatest curse of wealth. Treasure laid up in Heaven, drawing the heart thither, is a worth-while mercy. Any real experience of this is the strongest encouragement to seek a larger experience. St. Paul's view of liberality and grace puts it on the happiest basis for the true Christian of small or large means. Poverty does not preserve from avarice. Wealth does not necessarily hinder liberality. No one who has sincerely "abounded in this grace" would wish himself excluded from it's benefits. Sympathies are widened, Christian fellowship lengthened, the king's coming aided, the honor of cooperation with God enjoyed. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth. There is that with holdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by

Miss Annie R. Frayser, of Fort Harrison, Montana:

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoe mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee"—Isaiah 26:3.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

ARE CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN FOREIGN LANDS A FAILURE?

Archdeacon Juan McCarthy of Cuba

QUITE frequently we hear it said, that Christian missions in foreign nations are a failure. Persons who have never given a cent to foreign missions in their lives, but who have spent a lot of money in traveling from one country to another, but who never for the life of them ever visit a foreign mission Church, or chapel, when they do go abroad, but who generally occupy themselves in gambling or drinking in the lands they visit; yet these are the individuals who return to the States, and make scathing denunciations against foreign missions.

I remember some years ago, a gentleman from Chicago came along to the Province of the Oriente, when I was laboring in that Province. In conversation with a very dear friend of mine, he made the remark, that he did not believe in foreign missions, as he was fully persuaded that they were barren in results. My good friend, who was a wealthy man, had formerly sustained the same antipathy to foreign missions, until he had visited them, and had seen the work that was being done, after which he became one of my loyal supporters. This friend, who was an Englishman, said to the recent objector to missions: "I will challenge you to accompany Mr. McCarthy, on one of his ordinary trips that he is making every week. And I will bet you a thousand dollars, if you like, that after you have seen the work done by the missionary, you will change your views about foreign missions." The objector refused to make the bet, but he accepted my offer to accompany me on one of my customary trips.

At that time I was in the habit of leaving home on Monday morning, and not returning to my home until Saturday following, as I had to visit very many mission stations, which, by God's grace, we had organized on every side throughout the vast missionary district assigned to my special care. In this district there were several clergy who were under my direction, and I had to visit them regularly, to give the Holy Communion, and to baptize. These trips meant that the missionary was compelled to "rough it" every moment of the time he was away from home: sleeping at times on the floor, with the saddle blanket for a mattress, and the saddle for a pillow; or, if not, in a hammock slung up in the kitchen. The hammock was not so bad, but what was exasperating was the fact that one could feel the vivacious fleas promenading all over his body, which did not make the tired missionary feel happier, as he was engaged in exterminating them, when he could catch them; or in crushing the thousands of mosquitoes, that took delight in fattening themselves at the expense of the poor victim. But this was not all; right above one's head the hens were roosting, and one can be quite sure that they did not fail to remind the fatigued minister of their higher position. While below, the goats, too, seemed to be anxious to reveal their desire to greet the parson; by mirthfully digging their horns into the swinging hammock, the which made the minister yell out quite vociferously, and so drive the goats away. As a rule, it was impossible to sleep at all until about four in the morning, when he was so tired out from his flea hunting exploits, and from using up his vitality in slaughtering mosquitoes, that at last, he fell into a profound slumber, which lasted until the roosters began to make an infernal noise, and the man of the house came into the kitchen to make the coffee. Of course, it will be understood by the reader, that the missionary could not take off his clothes all the time he was away from home, as he very rarely had a private room in which he could sleep, while making these visits.

But our objecting friend was not aware of what was in prospect for him. We started out on our trip on Monday morning, having to make about thirty miles on some old horses, that were poor specimens. The bones were almost protruding through their flesh. The roads were simply awful. In climbing the hills, out of compassion, we had to get off the old nags, and walk up the hills, otherwise we would never have reached our destination. Reaching our first Mission station, we visited all the houses roundabout on foot, thus allowing the horses to rest up. In this way we would visit about thirty houses, leaving literature, praying with the family, or inviting the inmates to the service that evening. After awhile we were invited to partake of a Cuban meal, in a very poor farmhouse. The poor people in our honor had killed a hen, and gave us some "arroz con pollo", that was placed in the middle of the table, with only one enormous machete on the table, to serve as a knife for all who sat down to eat. My friend, who was a born aristocrat, was greatly disturbed at having to handle his portion of the hen with his fingers, but he soon gained courage, when he saw that the rest did likewise. Then some corn and beans were brought on to the table floating in grease. This certainly was not an appetizer, but one had to take at least a little of this dish, otherwise the poor people would think we were putting on superior airs. But it really did cost a tremendous effort to swallow that stuff.

The hour for service came. Our objector was surprised to see at least one hundred and fifty persons crowd into that dirty mud-shack, found right away in the heart of an immense forest, very many miles out of the reach of civilization. How those people did sing their praises to God! It was most cheering and encouraging to see how those simple country people praised God. Many of them had walked on foot from eight to ten miles, to reach the Mission. They had forded streams, at times with the water up to their breasts, carrying a bundle of clothes upon their heads. Yet, these people gladly do that to gather with their brethren of like faith. And they, so different from our American brethren, are not content with twenty minute sermons. After the minister has preached a forty-minute sermon, they will sing hymns, wanting to learn some new hymns. Then they ask the parson to speak to them again, and in this way, it is a rare thing to terminate the service until half past eleven at night. Then those poor people have to trudge back to their homes, many miles away, ankle deep in mud, wading through streams, climbing hills, but yet it is all done in the spirit of the Master, cheerfully, and gladly; and from over hills one hears the pilgrims singing praises to God, the night breezes bring the echo of the music of the hymns to one's ears. Of course, one is physically worn out, but nevertheless, as one lays down to pass a miserable night on the floor, or in the hammock, one's heart is overflowing with joy to know that we are doing the very work that Jesus engaged in; and that the Heavenly Father is blessing the efforts of His unworthy servants.

My objecting friend accompanied me for three days; then he got sick with the food, and the want of sleep. He looked an awful sight when he bade me good-bye. He looked as though he had smallpox, from the mosquito bites. Before he went away, he said to me, with genuine sadness: "Mr. McCarthy, my eyes have been opened to see how I have wronged the missionaries. I had always thought that they were a lot of drones, who were getting fat upon the wealth of others. I beg you to forgive me. I have done you all a great injustice, and from now on, you can count on be as being one of the greatest propagandists for foreign missions in the United States. And as a mark of my appreciation, I want to leave you one hundred dollars to be used in any way you think best in your work." This man proved as good as his word. He stood by our missionaries for years, until God took him to Himself.

What Are the Tasks Ordinarily Required of the Average Clergyman in Foreign Missions?

These are very numerous: People in the U. S. A. have no idea of the number of things expected of the ordinary missionary. He is expected to be a walking Encyclopedia. It is expected of him that he shall be an expert in Jurisprudence, a Commission Agent, an Employment Agent, a Doctor, a Herbalist, an Arranger of Marriages, a Dissolver of Marriages, a Scrivener, a seeker of the lost to discover lost relations, etc., and a great deal more. Just how to give the reader an idea of the many ways in which a rector is expected to serve his parishioners, I will give such an one a list of some of the functions of the genuine missionary. 1. They have to baptize. 2. They have to marry the people. 3. They have to bury the dead. 4. They have to prepare the candidates for Confirmation. 5. They have to help them to get their passports. 6. They have to get them into the hospitals when they are sick. 7. They have to get the folks out of all kinds of judicial scrapes. 8. Get their children inscribed in the Civil Register. 9. Visit the sick in the hospitals. 10. Visit the prisoners in jail. 11. Get some of them out of jail when possible. 12. Keep in touch with people needing servants. 13. Keep in touch with the people who seek for work. 14. Give letters of recommendation. 15. Arrange family troubles. 16. Give legal advice. 17. Give medical advice. 18. Give massage, compresses, and fomentations to the sick. 19. Find husbands who deserted wives. 20. Find the wives who have deserted their husbands. 21. Arrange Church entertainments. 22. Write out, and compose poems, hymns, religious dramas, and recitations, for the children for the entertainments. 23. Train the children how to play well their parts in the entertainments. 24. Train the choir. 25. Build the Church House with one's own hands, although ignorant of the first rudiments of bricklayer's skill. 26. Build a large platform, with scenery for the entertainments, without understanding the rudiments of carpenter's profession. 27. Build the sanctuary for the Church, to the best of one's poor ability. 28. Make the altar rails for the sanctuary. 29. Collect clothes and distribute same to the poor of the parish. 30. Give Bible studies. 31. Study the lives of great missionaries with our young people. 32. Train Sunday-school teachers, and help them with their lessons. 33. Attend to a central church, with three different congregations in different languages, every Sunday, which included three sermons at least in English, and Spanish, instructions in the Sunday schools, English and Spanish; with Holy Communion services as usual. 34. Attend to about fifteen other missions, several of which were two hundred miles away, and the writer was the only clergyman to visit them, besides attending to his central church every Sunday. 35. Ride over 1,000 miles every month to these divers mission stations by train, on horseback, in sugar cane wagons, or walking on foot, but very rarely in automobile, owing to the abominable condition of the roads. This is a bigger task than one would imagine, since trains rarely run as regularly as they do in the U. S. A., and frequently are five to ten hours late. And when one has to wait at dirty stations for that length of time, one can understand why travelling is so disagreeable under such circumstances. Then one has to make such horrid combinations, and has to lose so many precious hours in doing so. Frequently one has to ride on top of the sugar cane in the sugar wagons. This is very dangerous, as should the sugar cane slip down, then the rider's life is in danger. 37. Then the minister has to write more or less one hundred and fifty to two hundred letters a month, to his friends, and divers missions, on divers subjects. 38. Make about two hundred to three hundred visits every month, in his central parish, or in his mission districts. 39. He has to give aid to the poor when possible, to do which necessitates investigation. 40. And also give calisthenic lessons to the young people of the church in the large Church House that he and his boys built with their own hands.

These are a few of the duties of the luxury-loving rector. I wonder how many of our readers ever thought of the long chain of duties that were to be done by their indolent missionaries? Yet, you will see men who have left fine churches in the United States, where they were receiving thirty per cent more stipend, than they receive in Cuba, who gladly make the sacrifice, so as to cooperate with the Church of Christ in sending the Good News of Salvation to the end of the earth.

Why Are Not Foreign Missions as Successful As They Should Be?

I will speak frankly, brethren! The reason is because the Communicants of the Episcopal Church in the United States and slackers, and are backing down on their obligations. They are not toeing the mark as loyal Churchmen, and Churchwomen should do. They are profoundly interested in building up beautiful churches and cathedrals in the United States, but when this is accomplished, they think they have done their duty. We are real glad to have them build those wonderful sanctuaries. But should they forget their Christian obligations to those in Macedonia, who are pitifully clamoring for assistance day after day, while the millions pass unheedingly by, taking no notice at all of the foreign appeal for immediate help?

We see them sing that fine hymn:

When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the cross of Christ, my God.
All the vain things that charm me most,
I sacrifice them to His blood.

Were the whole realm of nature, mine,
That were an offering far too small.
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

And as they sing these words, it seems as if they really meant what they sang; but when the moment comes to pass the plate for the offering, it is discovered that the value they place upon their soul, their lives, and their all, is indeed insignificantly small, if one can judge by the offering they give. Think of it. The Episcopal Church, which is supposed to be the richest Church in the U. S. A., not being able to meet its very small assessment of $4,350,000, for the year 1929, for missions, home and foreign! It is simply scandalous. Such a wealthy Church not being able to meet such a miserable assessment as three dollars and fifty cents per capita for every communicant, to carry on its mission work at home and abroad! Let us take the foreign work, not counting the Philippines, nor Porto Rico, nor Alaska, Panama, Honolulu, but embracing all the other foreign missions throughout the world. We are accustomed to sing with genuine sentiment, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains to India's Coral Strand," but have you ever thought what the Episcopal Church is giving to foreign mission generally? Our Church was expected to give to foreign missions (not counting the special effort made for the Japanese hospital in Tokyo, which is extraordinary), about $1,500,000. That looks like a big sum. But when it is divided among 1,200,000 members who are communicants of our Church, it just means that each member is expected to give two and a half cents a week for foreign missions, but owing to the colossal poverty reigning in the U. S. A., our poor people, feeling the terrible crisis so much, are altogether unable to meet their obligations to God, of paying to His Church for foreign missions, the enormous amount of less than three cents a week. Certainly, the poor Americans need the world's sympathy! I am sure that if their adverse conditions were fully comprehended by the Allied nations, that they would augment their annual payments towards the debt reduction, so as to help America again recuperate some of the wealth it lost during the great conflict!

Of course, these same people, who cannot subscribe three cents a week for foreign missions, can easily expend thirty times that amount on joy rides, on cigars, on theatres, etc., every day in the week. None of these things are bad in themselves. But while we are seeking our own pleasure, shall we be unmindful of the needs of those whom we have promised to evangelize? Shall we make the teachings of the ancient Greek Aristoippus, the founder of Hedonism, the principle to govern our lives? Shall we live only for ourselves, forgetting the urgent needs of our brother, as did Cain of old? You and I are our brothers' keeper. If we are unwilling to take on our share of the responsibility of our Church to evangelize the world, then we should be branded as slackers, and as cowards, who are hindering the progress of the Gospel in foreign lands. How can our Mission Board do the great work expected of it by our Church, if it is being hampered all the time by lack of means? Think of it! That the insignificant amount which was allowed foreign missions annually, has had to be reduced by three per cent, because the impoverished Episcopalians are unable to pay their enormous assessment of less than three cents a week for foreign missions! What will the world think of the boasted generosity of Episcopalians, when they read such a statement as this!

Of course, missions must be a failure as long as God has to depend upon persons who are lovers of pleasure more than of God; who have the appearance of godliness, but who are lacking the power of same. They are lacking the power of God, in their lives, simply because they are robbing God of His share of the wealth which they arrogantly claim as their own. It would be well for such to study Malachi 3:8-12, then will they understand what a great obligation they have towards God. How can the people in foreign lands hear the Gospel, unless we send missionaries to preach to them? See Romans 10:13-15. As long as we are slackers in God's work, and fail to support our faithful Mission Board, and our self-sacrificing foreign missionaries in their efforts to take the Gospel to the people, why, of course, foreign missions must necessarily be a failure. But the cause of the failure, must be laid upon the shoulders of the Episcopalians in the U. S. A., who fail to sustain the hands of their missionaries in foreign lands.

Can these missionaries be expected to carry out the Great Commission of the Lord in the mud-shacks, and borrowed buildings, such as we have been using for a very large number of years in the past? Do not Americans know that Cubans are accustomed to worship in beautiful churches and cathedrals? How, then, can we expect to make any impression upon a refined people by inviting them to dingy and often dirty hired or loaned buildings, to worship God? Would Americans go to such buildings? No, they would not. Yet they expect the Cubans, who have just as much self-respect as Americans have, to go to such obscure and cheap places to worship God. If you want your Church to be a success in Cuba, or elsewhere, in Latin-American lands, it is very important that good churches be built in all the large cities. We are simply throwing away our money by sending our missionaries to foreign Latin nations to do missonary work, when we do not give them decent churches in which to invite the people. To do otherwise, is to give Latins the impression that Episcopalians are a lot of cheap-skates, and so they adjudge that the teachings of our Church are also of an inferior kind, and cannot be worth much. And since our Church has no literature at all in Spanish to put into the hands of the people, so that they can study what are our doctrines, the result is, that our Church work in nearly all these countries is nearly at a standstill. And it must necessarily remain so, so long as the people of the United States do not awaken to feel their responsibility of undertaking the evangelization in a proper way, of the countries adjacent to the borders of our great Republic.

Let us stand on our dignity, and show a little pride in our missionary efforts in foreign countries. The Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists have built fine churches throughout the Island of Cuba. But the Episcopalians with the parsimonious allowance given to our Bishop, have been unable for years to make any advance move, with the money coming from our Mission Board. But if we really feel that the American Church cannot afford so much as three cents for each communicant weekly, for foreign missions, then I would recommend that we get out of Cuba as quickly as possible, so as not to be a tremendous burden on our brethren in the North.

CONVERSATION OF GENERAL T. J. JACKSON WITH HIS ADJUTANT, MAJOR ROBERT L. DABNEY, WITH REGARD TO THE FIRST BATTLE OF MANASSAS

By Samuel B. Dabney

THIS battle was fought by raw troops, with the exception, I believe, of artillery in the Northern Army.

The High Commanders, on both sides, were professional soldiers, graduates of West Point, as was Jackson. The President of the Confederacy, though 'long in civil life, was also a graduate of that institution, and reached the scene, immediately after the battle. The difference in point of view among the professionals and, perhaps, with the President, who had been a professional, is an interesting episode.

When the flank of the army was turned, Jackson, commanding a brigade, without orders marched to the sound of the guns, seized the position on which the battle was fought, gave the routed men of Evans, Bee and Bartow (the last two killed on this day) a chance to rally, and so committed his commanders, Johnston and Beauregard, to the battle as he had pitched it, and gave them an opportunity to bring up their forces. Rarely has a mere Brigadier dared to so go ahead on his own responsibility; believing in discipline and exacting strict obedience himself, yet, at a great crisis, when there were no orders, he had the courage and quick decision to act. One of his characteristics was this power of determination, and beyond almost any commander, he had that rarest of intellectual qualities, "mens aequa in arduis". The confusions and uproar of the battlefield seemed to make more precise and rapid his mental processes, and more absolute the finality of his orders.

His raw infantry, for the greater part of the battle he kept lying upon the ground, and though their losses were severe, held them; thrusting them forward as the crisis demanded. Throughout he kept on horseback, and, though painfully wounded, from time to time, rode his recumbent ranks, in a storm of missiles, steadying the men by his unconquerable demeanor, and encouraging words, and so showing his ability to get the best out of raw soldiers.

At the last crisis he thrust three regiments forward in a fierce bayonet charge, and pierced the centre of the enemy. At the end of the battle both armies had almost dissolved into mobs, but the enemy was on the run, the Confederates held the field. In the meantime fresh forces were pouring into Manassas. Immediately after the battle, when his wound was being dressed, he said, that with ten thousand fresh men, Washington could be seized; and the ten thousand were at hand. The next day, and thereafter, he observed that reticence, so characteristic of him, and which discipline imposed, not to criticise his superiors, and except on the occasion to be stated, under a sudden impulse, he seems not to have done so.

Generals Johnston and Beauregard seem to have been appalled by the condition of their troops, but they did not realize, as Jackson did, the situation of the enemy. If they had seized Arlington Heights and commanded Washington with some of their artillery and marched the bulk of their army for the fords of the Potomac east of the mountains, as General Lee did in 1862, and occupied Frederick, Md., and thence marched on Washington or Baltimore, it is now clear that the enemy would have evacuated Washington, Baltimore and Eastern Maryland would probably have flamed into revolt, and the frontier of the war been thrust to the Susquehanna River.

The fresh troops were ample to lead, and order could have been restored in the victorious army. Before the battle Johnston's men had made a hard march from the Valley, after victory within the next day or two, assuredly the army could have gone forward. But the Confederate commanders, accustomed to regulars, did not realize the condition of the enemy, or the value of their own soldiers against an enemy so demoralized. General McClellan, who took command at Washington, within a few days, stated that the only reason the "rebels" did not take the city, seemed to be that they did not care to. The Englishman Russell and others, as well as General McClellan, have left vivid accounts of the mob into which McDowell's army sank. Jackson, professional as he was, considered that volunteers were the best material for soldiers, and in 1862, his men, battle trained and better disciplined, broke Sykes' regulars, at Gaines Mill, and this over great obstacles.

Colonel Henderson, of the English army, was author of the great biography of Jackson, which helped to prepare the British for the world war, and was a source of inspiration to their higher command. It is largely founded upon Dabney's Life, to which he gives full credit.

As a subordinate, Jackson could not criticise, but he could suggest, and Colonel Henderson has given us an account of his suggestions.

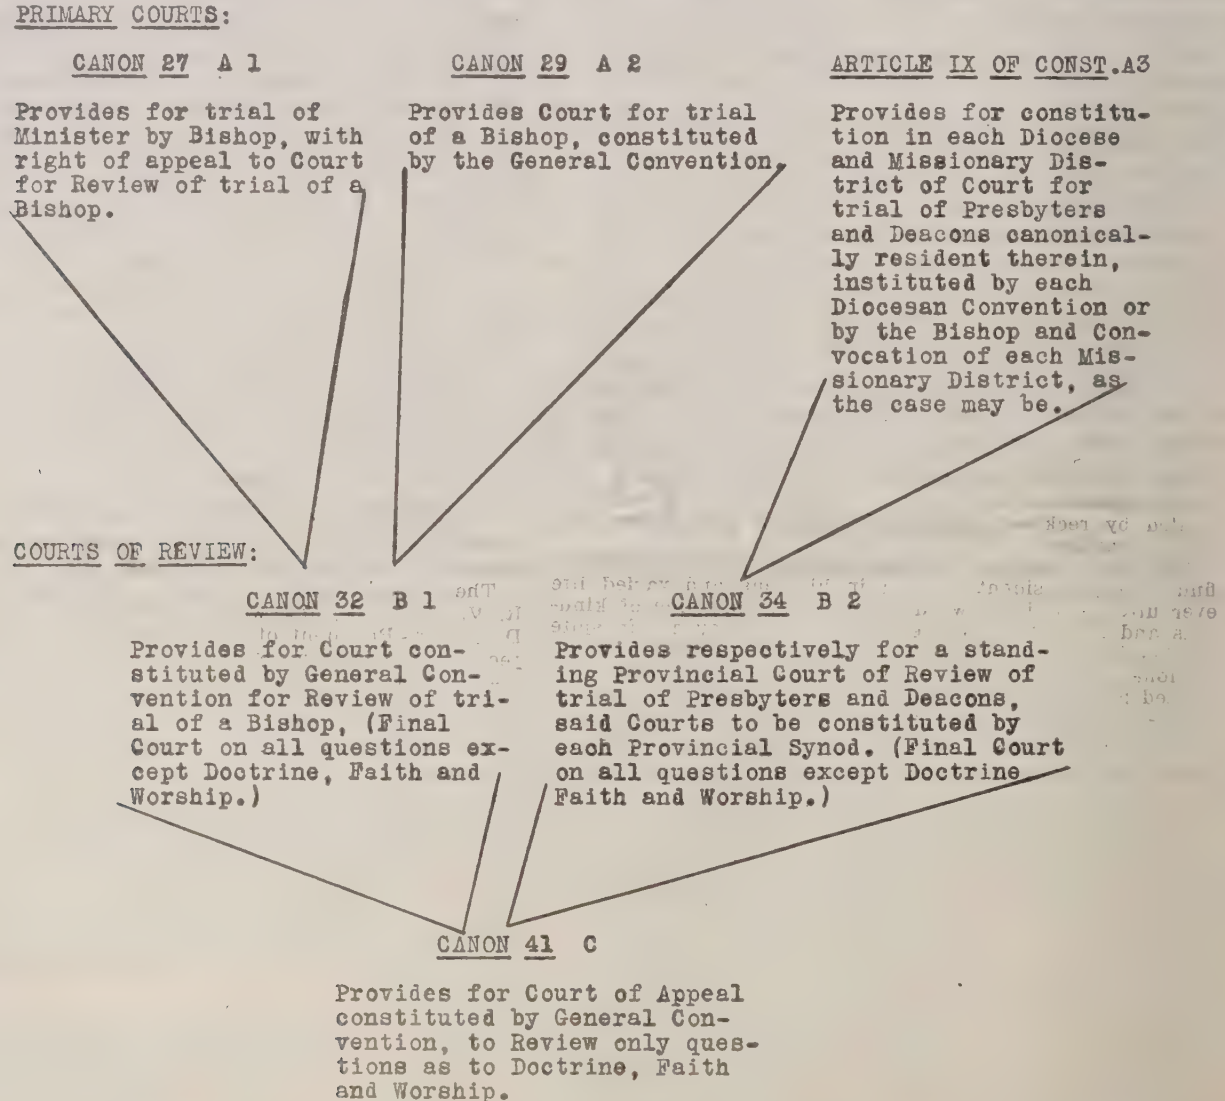
The seizure of the line of the Susequehanna, and threatening Philadelphia, and perhaps penetrating across the neck to Lake Erie, attacking through Northwestern Virginia, now West Virginia; or the one of these plans, were constantly being revolved in his mind, and in some form, until his death. Of course, such Napoleonic schemes implied that the Confederacy should rapidly avail of its interior position, and strip many points of troops and make a great concentration in Virginia. The risk and magnitude of these conceptions and the inevitable political resistance were too great for the Confederate Government. These views after Manassas, and before he went to the Valley, he laid before General G. W. Smith, commanding the division to which his brigade belonged, pressing them hard upon him as a medium for their communication to higher authorities. General Smith stated to him that they, in whole or part, had already been submitted, apparently by Generals Beauregard, Johnston and himself, and rejected. (Henderson, Vol. 1, p. 174, communicated by General Smith.)

Rarely, I think, have two men of such monumental industry and hard trained minds worked together, as General Jackson and my father. Both were impatient of laziness and lack of precision, both highstrung and intense. My father's conscientious accuracy of memory exceeded that, I think, of any man I ever knew. Therefore, I am certain that what is now stated is correct. At one time it could not be published, involving a criticism of superiors, but after so great a lapse of time that reason for withholding it, no longer exists.

My father said that after the battle of Port Republic, which closed the Valley Campaign, probably the next day, the General and he (his adjutant), were seated at the same table writing, and that Jackson laid down his pen and seemed to relax. My heart did likewise, and on an impulse said: "Was it not a mistake, that we did not follow up the victory of Manassas?" That Jackson frowned across the table at him, and he thought that he was about to receive a rebuke, for asking a question which involved a criticism of military superiors. But the sternness of Jackson's face was merely the reflex of the intensity of his feeling. He momentarily lost control, and exclaimed (I believe striking the table violently): "A deplorable mistake, do you know that we had ten thousand men (by the next day) who had never drawn a trigger?" He then sharply recovered himself and said nothing more.

A BILL OF RIGHTS

By DeCourcy W. Thom



THIS bill will show, according to my promise, exactly how the six Courts I have suggested to prevent infraction of the Constitution (including the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion), the Canons and the Rubrics of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America would function.

But first, let me remind that each person baptized into the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America becomes thereby a member of that Church, obligated to obey its principles as set forth in the Constitution (of which the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion are a part), the Canons and the Rubrics which it has adopted and to oppose any infraction of them. The total of such membership is 1,877,813. Of that number, our 144 Bishops form only seventy-seven ten-thousandths of one per cent; and our 6,093 Presbyters and Deacons jointly form only thirty-two one-thousandths of one per cent; but our laity forms the completing ninety-nine and two-thirds per cent, numbering 1,871,576 persons.

But each one of those 144 Bishops (at this writing there are two vacancies), in addition to his baptismal obligation, also has vowed when consecrated as a Bishop as follows: "In the name of God, Amen. I, N., chosen Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in N., do promise conformity and obedience to the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. So help me God, through Jesus Christ."

To the Bishop or Bishops thus pledged and officiating, respectively at "the ordering of Deacons and Priests" (Presbyters) that is, at the making of a Layman into a Deacon, and at the making of a Deacon into a Priest (Presbytery), each such candidate has promised to "reverently obey his Bishop", which Bishop as shown above has vowed to conform to the Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of our Church denomination, whose Constitution (including the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion), Canons and Rubrics, have defined what it holds to be Orthodox and so has permitted to be put into our Liturgy. Clearly, therefore, every loyal and informed member of our denomination must try to enforce the requirements of its Constitution, Canons and Rubrics. But those clear and basic definitions of Orthodoxy are being violated near and far. In which of our inclusive total of 115 Dioceses and Missionary Districts are they not violated?

Surely we must find some way to enforce the basic principles of our Church denomination, or else consent to have it destroyed. For some reason our Bishops, as a class, are not controlling the clerics who are openly violating the principles of our Church denomination. Therefore, I propose that the following Courts be constituted so as to strengthen the Bishops' hands. Those Courts are indicated briefly, and described and set in sequences on the accompanying graph:

They are of three classes, that is, to say: (1) Primary Courts, three in number, and designated on my graph, respectively as A 1, A 2 and A 3. (2) Courts of Review, two in number, designated on my graph respectively as B 1 and B 2. (3) An Appellate Court, designated in my graph as C. Of these, Courts A 2, B 1 and C are to be constituted by the General Convention of our Church. Court A 1 is to consist as at present of the local Bishop under Canon 27, except that right of appeal by a Minister convicted is added, as I state. The Bishop is here to be the Court, if he choose, because it is merely desired to strengthen the situation. Court A 3 is to be constituted by the Diocesan Convention, or by the Convocation of a Missionary District as the case may be. Court B 2 is to be constituted by the Synod in each Province. These various Courts would function as follows: If a Bishop does not choose to try a Minister, as provided in A 1, that Bishop shall have the said Minister tried promptly under the provisions of the Court described in A 3. The convicted person would have the right of appeal to the Provincial Court, indicated under B 2, which Court would be final on all questions except those of Doctrine, Faith or Worship, in which casee appeal would lie to the Court, described under C. If a Minister is tried and convicted by a Bishop as indicated by A 1, such Minister would have the right of appeal to the Court as indicated by B 1. The decision of that Court would be final on all questions, except those of Doctrine, Faith or Worship—concerning which an appeal would lie to the Court, indicated under head C. So much as to the trial of a Priest (Presbyter) or Deacon.

But if a Bishop is tried, it would be under Court A 2. Such Bishop, if convicted, would have the right of appeal to Court B 1. The decision of Court B 1 would be final on all questions, except Doctrine, Faith or Worship, concerning which there is provided the right of appeal by the convicted Bishop to Court C. These Courts are to be duly set to work by any ten adult baptized members of the Parish affected, or by twenty per cent of the total adult baptized membership of said Parish, if that percentage be less than the number ten.

Courts A 2, A 3, B 2 and C, would be composed of one Bishop representing the 144 Bishops; one Priest (Presbyter) or Deacon representing the inclusive number of 6,093 Priests (Presbyters) and Deacons, and one Layman representing each entire 250,000 Lay-members of our Church. As our Laity numbers 1,871,576, such representation would give to the Laity seven members. Each of the five Courts I have just named would thus have nine members. Surely a Lay representation of only seven on each of those Courts would show very general repression for each member of our Church, is as much an owner of it as is any other member, whether clerical or lay, and the Laity numbers, as I have written, more than ninety-nine and two-thirds per cent of our total Church membership.

I trust that this article, including the graph, has made my proposition about these six Courts perfectly clear. If not, I will be glad to answer any inquiries on the subject.

ADDRESS BY GENERAL A. T. GOODWYN

Note: This address was delivered by the Commander-in-Chief of the United Confederate Veterans, at their thirty-ninth Reunion, held at Charlotte, N. C., June 5, 1929. It is being carried in the Southern Churchman in successive divisions, this being the third.

"In 1864 Louisiana had been reduced to a military province by the consent and influence of President Lincoln, who was the pioneer author of 'Re-destruction of the South', plausibly termed Reconstruction. I quote from Rhodes History:

" 'Executive Mansion, March 13, 1864.

" 'Hon. Michael Hahn:

" 'My Dear Sir.—I congratulate you upon having fixed your name in history as the first Free State Governor of Louisiana. Now you are about to have a convention which, among other things, will probably define the elective franchise, I barely suggest for your private consideration whether some of the colored people may not be let in as, for instance, the very intelligent and especially those who have fought gallantly in our ranks. They would probably help in some trying time to come, to keep the jewel of liberty within the family of freedom. But this is only a suggestion, not to the public, but to you alone.

Yours truly,

'A. LINCOLN.'

"Here you have President Lincoln suggesting a plan for so-called reconstruction which was subsequently adopted by his partisan lieutenants. It was a vindictive policy to destroy the social institutions of the South, States reduced to military provinces—the most respectable white people disfranchised—all negroes enfranchised, and led and controlled by reckless groups of foreigners and a few nondescript natives.

"In my reading and research in history I have failed to find where President Lincoln in his long and varied life ever uttered a single word or wrote a single line of kindness and sympathy for the people of the South. In spite of this fact—in spite of an indefensible economic war of sectional greed—his assassination was most deplorable and excited horror and sympathy in all sections of the country. Had he lived we have no reason to believe we would have been, in any degree, relieved from the inflicted persecutions and humiliations of his party politicians in control of public affairs—deluded as they were by ignorance, hate and vindictiveness. These politicians used this terrible tragedy as fuel to flames of war passions to the slander and traducement of the South as long as they could politically deceive the masses. With these conditions in view we know President Lincoln's death was most unfortunate for the South. Time has changed conditions. Thoughtful people both North and South are beginning to see that the cause of the war was economic and political. The spirit with which it was waged was wanton and cruel; that after the South had been crushed by the man power and the money power of the world—its treatment by the dominant power was infamous.

"Dr. Curry writes:

" 'Early in the struggle the North realized that the South could not be defeated in a single-handed contest, and so seductive bounties, with prospect of future pensions, were held out to promote the enlistment of the overcrowded populations of Europe. With this preponderant avoirdupois, equipped and supported without a day's failure of subsistence, four years of gigantic struggle, with a thousand battles unsurpassed by Napoleonic wars, were needed to subjugate the handful of badly armed, poorly clad, poorly fed Southern soldiers.'

"Comrades—According to official statistics furnished by the Federal Secretary of War, more than 720,000 foreigners came over and were enrolled against the South. General Butler estimated that 150,000 negroes were enlisted in their armies.

"Here we have by their official records an army of 870,000 foreigners and negroes. The maximum estimate of the Confederate Army was 700,000 from first to last. These official records show the combined odds of foreigners and negroes alone were more than 170,000 in number.

"The Confederate soldiers were native to the soil and with rare exception were of Revolutionary ancestors. Without considering the cost in blood and treasure, they faced these mighty odds for four years in defense of the sacred principles of local self-government bequeathed to them by the teachings and examples of Washington, Jefferson and their heroic comrades against the mighty odds of King George in his intolerable aggressive war of greed and injustice. The Confederate soldier knew he was historically, constitutionally and morally right, and to the end was inspired with hope by the consciousness that he is thrice armed who has his cause just.

(To be continued.)

MEMORIAL SERVICES AT STRATFORD HALL.

Fredericksburg, Va.—Thousands of people attended Memorial Exercises Sunday, October 13, at Stratford Hall, ancestral home of the Lees in Westmoreland County, Virginia, when, under auspices of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation, the Fifty-ninth Anniversary of the death of General Robert E. Lee was commemorated.

The ceremonies were held at the Mansion, where lived Richard Henry Lee, "Lighthorse Harry" Lee, the other famous Lees of the Revolutionary period, and later General Robert E. Lee, most famous of them all.

The ceremonies Sunday began with prayer by the Rev. R. V. Lancaster, and were presided over by Mrs. Charles D. Lanier, President of the Foundation. Many prominent people followed with short addresses. A letter from General Lee, interceding for a boy being tried as a spy, was donated by E. T. Stuart, of Philadelphia, through Mrs. Pope Yeatman, of Pennsylvania.

Among those present from various states were: Governor Bibb Graves, Alabama; Senator Allen Barclay and Mrs. Barclay, Kentucky; Mrs. Orton B. Brown (daughter of General John B. Gordon of the Confederate Army), New Hampshire; Senator Guy D. Goff and Mrs. Goff, West Virginia; Senator Carter Glass; Hon. S. Otis Bland and Mrs. Bland, Virginia; Mrs. Pope Yeatman, Pennsylvania; Senator Harry B. Hawes and Mrs. Hawes, Missouri; State Directors, representing their states were: Mrs. Emerson Root Newell, Connecticut; Mrs. Horace Van De Venter, Tennessee; Mrs. Thomas Floyd Smith, Kentucky; Mrs. Ambrose C. Ford, Clifton Forge, Va.; Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, Georgia; Mrs. Andrew Jackson Geer, South Carolina; Mrs. Josephine E. Washington, District of Columbia; Mrs. Egbert Jones, Mississippi; Mrs. Rufus N. Garrett, Arkansas; Mrs. Robert Spilman, West Virginia; Mrs. Pope Yeatman, for Pennsylvania; Mrs. G. B. Fariss, for Missouri.

Monday was proclaimed "Stratford Day" in Virginia schools by Harris Hart, Superintendent of Education in Virginia, and teachers were asked to read something about Stratford Hall and its great men, especially emphasizing the life and work of General Robert E. Lee.

Executives of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation were in session at Stratford Hall until Tuesday night, when they held a final session in Fredericksburg and attended tea given by the U. D. C., with a lecture, illustrated with historic scenes, given by Dr. S. L. Scott. Monday afternoon they took a trip up the Potomac on the Coleman DuPont's yacht.

Directors of the Memorial Foundation have commenced an intensive campaign to raise the $500,000 needed to complete payment for and restoration of Stratford Hall. The Mansion will be fully restored, as will the old outbuildings, and the gardens, once the most beautiful and elaborate in the whole South. Around these, and the house and enclosures, there was formerly a full mile of brick wall, seven feet high. When it is dedicated as a National Shrine, officials of the Foundation say it will be the most beautiful place of its kind in the country.

Already the financial campaign is meeting with great success and it is hoped it will be finished by next fall.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

"TRUTH."

Mr. Editor:

Let me, an old Confederate, thank you for "Historic Tablets" (Landon Covington Bell) in today's (September 21) paper. His book, the "Old Free State", deserves careful attention, especially of this generation, who need much the truth of U. S. A. and C. S. A. history since 1861-65.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again:
Th' eternal years of God are hers:
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among his worshippers."

God bless The Southern Churchman!

Berkeley Minor, Sr.,

Charlottesville, Virginia.

TREASURES.

Mr. Editor:

I have been counting up my treasures. In a country walk today I lost an antique pin with a lock of my father's hair. It was a lovely thing and I valued it, but a greater treasure remains. When my father died at the age of thirty, his aged father wrote: "In the daylight of his faith we have witnessed a death more like translation." Always have I heard of my father's faith, and he died before I was born. Recently my husband died. I gave my ruby ring (his gift) to his young god-daughter. And yet I have my ruby!

The ruby I prize most is his faith. That faith impressed all who knew him. A sister-in-law said: "I think E's faith is the loveliest thing I ever knew." How it comforts me in my loneliness to remember how his faith was a light on his path through all his beautiful youth, and how it sustained him through later years of invalidism.

Knowing as I did how he walked with child-like trust with Him he loved with all his heart, I am saved forever from any doubt that He loves His own and That He loves them unto the end.

Faith is a living thing, a glorious thing! I have many more saints, more than I can mention in a brief paragraph.

G. W. H.

Book Reviews

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH: By Canon B. H. Streeter. Cloth. Pp. 323. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City. Price, $2.50.

These Hewett Foundation Lectures delivered in Cambridge, Mass., and the Union Theological Seminary in New York, present the latest critical results of the study of this absorbing theme. What was the Primitive Church? How was it governed? By what processes did the various postulates of modern ecclesiasticism come into form and vital expression?

The Canon sifts the traditional and suppositious elements for the better explanation of the changes which became effective during the earlier years of the life of the Church. The different characteristics of the various congregations are treated with a winsome clarity and interest. The Church in Asia, Syria, Rome and Alexandria, which played a so-important part in the development of the administration of the body of believers all are discussed with fidelity to fact and cordial appreciation of differing schools of thought and practice.

A general and subject index with an appendix enrich the field of investigation. The object is to make this volume a sequel to the former contribution by the same author, "The Four Gospels", advancing now into the realm of Church order and authority. A truly commendable volume, without bias, frankly open and clearly expository of conditions marking the life and labors of the primitive Church.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Church Intelligence

Conference on Evangelism.

The Diocese of Springfield issued a cordial invitation to all who might find it convenient to be present at the Mississippi Valley Conference on Evangelism, meeting in Springfield, Illinois, October 22-23.

It was a call to clergy and people to revive within themselves and others a consciousness of the reality of Christ's presence.

The program began with a celebration of the Holy Communion in St. Paul's Church, on Tuesday, at 7:30 A. M., and concluded with an Open Forum Wednesday afternoon.

Participating in the services and addresses were: the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado; the Rt. Rev. John Charles White, D. D., Bishop of Springfield; the Rt. Rev. Joseph M. Francis, D. D., Bishop of Indianapolis; the Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Bishop of Quincy; Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, Field Worker of the National Commission on Evangelism, Washington, D. C.; the Rev. Edward Haughton; the Rev. John S. Bunting; the Rev. Jerry Wallace; the Rev. Stephen E. Keeler; the Rev. Robert H. Atchison; the Rev. George St. G. Tyner.

A Children's Crusade.

There is a new movement abroad in the Church—one that has come quietly but steadily forward in the last two years. At last there is to be a great, concerted program for childhood in the Church. It is being sponsored by the Province of the Midwest. All the thirteen dioceses in this Province, covering the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana Illinois and Wisconsin, are sharing in this program.

Briefly, the objectives are:

1. To win more children to Christ and the Church.

2. To improve the skill and spiritual power of our Church School teachers, particularly to add men to the teaching staff.

3. To awaken the Church in this Province to the importance of her work with the children.

4. To quicken the spiritual lives of parents in the home.

5. To hasten the spiritual growth of children.

The Rev. C. C. Jatho, recently appointed rector of St. John's, Royal Oak, Michigan, has prepared the material for the Fall Mission, and the Lenten Services and, as a member of the Committee, has had a very active share in all the plans. The Superintendent of Religious Education in the Diocese of Michigan, Ernest E. Piper, conceived the idea, and is chairman of the Provincial Committee.

The program consists of two main emphases: first, a week's mission for children, which it is hoped will be held this fall in every parish and mission in the Province between October 13 and November 24; second, a series of Lenten week-day services for children.

The Fall Mission is called "Knights of the Way". It is a challenge to the children to follow Christ as their Hero, Friend and Leader. While the Mission and Lenten Services are primarily to deepen the spiritual lives of the children the program aims to stimulate every phase of the work for children. First, in the Church School, a special prayer card has been printed for the use of the teachers. At the next teachers' meeting the program, "Adventuring with Christ", should be set forth and their support secured. Second, the parents of children in the primary and junior departments of the Church School should be enlisted. A Parents' Prayer Card has been printed. Bishop Page has generously contributed his splendid Book of Prayers for family use to the cause. The Rev. E. Chauncey, of Columbus, Ohio, has written a valuable article on the function of a Christian home. Third, the program aims to challenge the children to a more loyal following of the Master. A special card has been printed for distribution to the children containing worship suggestions.

This program is meeting with a far greater response than anticipated. Every mail finds letters coming to Mr. Piper's office, from all over the country, asking for the material. The American Church Army working in Illinois, has sent in word that they intend to use "Adventuring with Christ".

Putting this program on in a parish means work of the hardest sort for our priests. The booklet, "Knights of the Way", is complete. Every detail of the service, the questions and answers, the instruction and the stories is complete. There will be no need to go outside for any material. But nevertheless this Mission for children will demand the energy, inspiration, and spirit of the clergy, and the active cooperation of their parishes. The committee furnished the skeleton, the clergy and people must furnish its life. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these' comes the command down the ages. The Holy Spirit is at work. Nothing can stop this advancing tide of life which is waxing strong in the Fifth Province for the children Jesus loves.

Material for the Program may be secured from Diocesan Headquarters, 63 East Hancock Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

McE.

Proportionate Giving.

This is both a Scriptural and practical method of Church support. Just what is proportionate giving? Proportionate to ability. Proportionate to interest in the Church. Proportionate to the benefits received from the Church's influence, past as well as present. Proportionate to the support of worldly and secular causes. Proportionate to the love of Christ.—The Crozier (Neb.).

A Layman to Laymen on Personal Evangelism.

The National Commission on Evangelism is to be highly congratulated on its choice of Larkin W. Glazebrook, M. D., as a field worker. Dr. Glazebrook recently completed a two weeks' visit to our small diocese, Upper South Carolina. During that time he visited fourteen parishes, missions and colleges, and addressed twenty-four meetings, speaking to a total of about 6,000 souls. His success in deeply interesting men, women and young people in the subject of Personal Evangelism was most marked. The task of really interesting men in this vital subject is difficult and when the Church finds a layman who can do it, as Dr. Glazebrook can, and does, I feel that the fact should be made known to the Church as widely as possible. I understand that visits, such as Dr. Glazebrook made to this diocese are possible for all dioceses. I do not know how the Commission on Evangelism wishes contact made with Dr. Glazebrook, but the simplest way is to get in touch with him directly at 2022 P Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Malcolm S. Taylor.

Memorial Sunday For Bishop Murray.

To the Brethren of the Clergy:

Moved by a wide appeal, I am asking that in each congregation of the Church, so far as possible, Sunday, November 3, in the Octave of All Saints, be observed in commemoration of our widely-loved and deeply-mourned Presiding Bishop.

Enclosed you will find suggestions for such commemoration. No doubt each clergyman will wish to arrange his own form of service, but I venture to hope that in every case the brief address enclosed will be made a part of the commemoration. It is, in effect, Bishop Murray's last message.

Let us remember before God the Leader whom we so revered.

Faithfully yours,
Hugh L. Burleson,
Assessor to Bishop Murray.

Brothers in the Kingdom of Christ:

Today we remember and honor a beloved leader, who was in a moment translated from this pathway of shadows into the clear shining of the eternal light.

On October third, at the altar of St. James' Church, Atlantic City, the Presiding Bishop celebrated his last Eucharist. Three hours later, in the same chancel, while presiding over a council of his brethren gathered to choose others for the Apostolic Office, John Gardner Murray, who walked with God, "was not; for God took him."

Utter simplicity, gallant purpose, complete consecration to his high task, marked this man who first held by choice of his brethren the highest office in the Church. He wrought bravely and well, and his sudden going from us brings the consciousness of overwhelming loss. Yet, it is not to sadness that we call you, but to high resolve and loyal service in the cause to which his very life was given. It is his own last message which we feel bound to transmit.

Set to lead and inspire the Church, he longed to make men understand how great is their privilege and obligation as sworn followers of Jesus Christ. His soul was often oppressed by the burdens which he carried: the Church responded slowly, when called to move forward; willingness to spend and be spent in the advancement of the Kingdom of God was too often lacking; frequently he encountered criticism where he looked for cooperation, and apathy where he counted upon aid.

But his brave soul did not falter. Rather, it burned within him. On the morning of his death, as he stood waiting to go to the altar where he would consecrate for the last time the Sacrifice of his Lord's Body and Blood, he uttered these words to one standing beside him, who now passes them on as the last message of Bishop Murray to the Church which he loved and served:

> We must not only carry on, we must carry through! How can we make our criticisms of the Church's methods and machinery an excuse for evading our share in her enterprise? If there be failure, it is not in the machinery, but in the power which should set it in motion. What is the National Council but the hands of the Church? We—its.. Bishops, Clergy, and Lay People—are the Church's heart. If the hand grope, and the feet stumble, it is because the heart is weak. The fault is in us—IN US! How can we make the Church understand?"

So he spoke when going forth. Just before his own heart broke he was longing to make the Church understand.

How can we truly honor him unless we espouse the cause for which he gave his life? Shall his voice from the threshold of eternity, sound vainly in our ears? "Carry on and carry through!" That call should ring through the Church and evoke a great response. Thus his death may accomplish that for which he spent his life—a loving and loyal consecration of the Church's full resources to her whole task.

O man greatly beloved! you found joy in service, and did not shrink from sacrifice! Rest with God, who counts nothing great nor small apart from the doing of His will. Rest in joy, for we who are still in the midst of the conflict will "carry on and carry through." Rest in peace, in the City of our God, even upon His holy hill, where all is calm and unshaken, and

"Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light."

Young Business Man Becomes Volunteer Secretary.

Coleman Jennings, a young business man of Washington, D. C., is coming into the college work of the Church as a volunteer secretary associated with Mr. Glenn, under the Department of Religious Education, starting November 1.

He graduated from Harvard Law School. While an under-graduate he was captain of the soccer team and member of an American Olympic tennis team. He served in the army during the war. In Washington he has been assistant manager of the Washington branch of the National City Company. He has given much time to social service and philanthropic work, such as that of the Associated Charities and the Boys' Work of the Y. M. C. A. He started the first Toc H group in America and is its guiding light. He is a member of St. John's Church, Washington, and has taken an active share in the building of the Cathedral.

Finding that his interests lay more and more outside his business, he resigned a year ago to give his full time to Christian work. Last year was spent in Edinburgh, studying theology, and now he comes to the National Council to begin his work as a volunteer secretary, for work in the colleges. He may be reached either at the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, or at 2221 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Evangelism.

Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, Field Worker of the National Commission on Evangelism, writes under date of October 14: "Am just back from a trip to West Virginia and am off again Wednesday. Then November 1, I leave for Arizona and nine other Pacific Coast dioceses, which will require about five or six months. . . . In my twenty months I have traveled 30,000 or more miles, been in touch with 1,200 or more clergy, spoken in about 250 churches and talked to many thousand people. It has been hard work, but—oh!—so worth-while. I know we are getting "somewhere" with our call for Evangelism as Christ taught it.

"I find our men most responsive and ready to help.

"Thousands of people are praying a little prayer each morning, which I am asking them to pray and get others to do so before they leave their rooms: 'O God, give me an opportunity today and make me equal to it'."

Elsewhere in these columns is recorded the appreciation of one who has recently been a participant in a mission conducted by this consecrated worker for the Kingdom of God.

Resolution.

At its October meeting, the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary passed the following resolution, and asked that it should be printed in the Church papers:

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has called into the Greater Fellowship of the life beyond our beloved Presiding Bishop, the Most Reverend John Gardner Murray, who was also our co-worker and our personal friend,

Be it Resolved that we, the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, record our gratitude in having as our leader one who held so high the torch of Christian service, and that we express our deep sorrow in the loss which we share with his family and pray God that "in His boundless compassion He will give to them that faith which sees in death but the gate to life eternal, so that, with quietude and fearlessness they may continue their course on earth until by His call they are united to their loved one gone before."

Mystical Element in the Christian Faith.

Mysticism in religious life was the theme of an all-day session of the New York Conference on the Mystical Element in the Christian Faith, held October 21, at the Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street, New York City.

Participating in the conference, under the auspices of the Confraternity of the Mystical Life, were distinguished visiting clergy and local leaders, among them the Very Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson, Dean of the Cathedral of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pa.; the Rev. Burton S. Easton, S. T. D., of General Theological Seminary; the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., formerly Bishop of Wyoming, and the Rev. H. Adye Prichard, D. D., Rector of Saint Mark's Church, Mount Kisco.

This conference was held at the Church of the Heavenly Rest at the invitation of the rector, the Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington, who was the celebrant at the opening service of Holy Communion at 10 A. M., and delivered the address of welcome.

Morning sessions opened at 10:45, when other speakers were the Rev. Harrison Rockwell, Vicar of All Saints' Church, New York, on "Mysticism and the Ministry of Healing"; the Very Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson, on "Ecclectic Mysticism", and the Rev. Randolph Ray, D. D., rector Church of the Transfiguration, New York, on "Mysticism in the Daily Life".

Speakers for the afternoon session, opening at 2:15 P. M., were the Rev. Burton E. Easton, S. T. D., on "New Testament Mysticism"; Monel Sayre, Esq., Executive Vice-President Church Pension Fund, on "Mysticism to a Business Man"; the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, D. D., rector Church of the Ascension, on "Mysticism and Faith"; the Rev. H. Adye Prichard, D. D., on "Mysticism and Intellectualism", and the Rev. George A. Trowbridge, rector All Angels' Church, New York, on "Mysticism as Personal Religion."

In the evening at 7:45, there was a service and sermons by the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., on "Mysticism and Church Unity"; and the Rev. Herbert Parrish, D. D., Chaplain-General, Confraternity of the Mystical Life and Special Lecturer at Trinity College, Hartford, on "The Triumph of Mysticism."

Dean Beal Declines Election.

Two missionary bishops were elected at the special meeting of the House of Bishops in Atlantic City in October. The Very Rev. Harry Beal, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, was elected Bishop of Honolulu. Word has been received that Dean Beal has declined his election. Another election will, therefore, be held at the meeting of the House of Bishops in Washington in November.

Dean Beal was born in Oneida, N. Y., in 1885; he was graduated from the Cambridge Theological School, and was ordained in 1911. He served in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New York for some years until he went to Cuba, where he was dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral in Havana, 1923-26, since when he has been in Los Angeles.

Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., one of the general secretaries of National Field Department, was elected Bishop of Wyoming. Dr. Schmuck was born in Peoria, Ill., in 1882. He was graduated from Seabury Divinity School, which has also given him his doctor's degree, and was ordained in 1905. He served in Minnesota until he became rector of St. Mark's, Denver, in 1923, and since 1925 he has worked in the Field Department. He is the third of that department's secretaries to become bishop, the others being Bishop Barnwell and Bishop Larned.

Safe.

October 21.—A cable received today from Shanghai says that a telegram received there reports that all the members of our mission at Wuhu are safe. A report in the New York Times of October 19, mentioned Wuhu as a center of severe looting at the time, but said there was no anti-foreignism in evidence.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop

Woman's Auxiliary.

The tenth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia convened in Trinity Church, Staunton, Virginia, October 8, 9, 10. The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., rector.

The meeting opened on Tuesday afternoon, with the Quiet Hour Service, conducted by the rector.

The evening service was given over to the addresses made by several diocesan missionary women, as follows: Miss Ella Pier, of the Bear Mountain Mission in Amherst County, where the Indians of that community are taught to better themselves physically, spiritually and mentally.

Miss Caryetta Davis told of the work that is being done in Franklin County.

Mrs. William Wilkins gave a splendid report of the work being done in Wythe County.

Deaconess Williams, of the Associated Missions, who had been working in the mission fields in Southwest Virginia for the past twenty years, delighted the audience with the experiences and thrills she enjoys throughout the many missions she visits.

The Wednesday's program began with Holy Communion with eighty communicants.

The business session began promptly in the parish house. All the officers were present, and sixty-five delegates. The president, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving of Roanoke, in the chair.

The address of welcome was given by Mrs. Warner, of Staunton, and the response by Mrs. R. A. Ralph, of Lynchburg.

The reports given by each delegate showed faithful and efficient service rendered.

Announcement was made of several resignations, some due to ill health. The Secretary, Miss Julia Leech, resigned her position to take effect the first of the year. Miss Thomas Spindle, of Salem, was elected to fill the position. The president, announced the formation of three branches of the auxiliary during the year. She urged the delegates to cooperate with Bishop Jett in his work to establish the Wise School and to aid him in successfully financing the project, and also urged the women to cooperate in the Every Member Canvass to be instituted this fall, and to help educate the women of the Southwestern Diocese in each individual parish to the work of the Church.

Bishop Jett, in his address, said he had just returned from the conference of Bishops at Atlantic City. He said: "While our diocese has fallen down, it is still holding a high place in comparison with others. We do not overlook the goodness. Let us be one hundred per cent." The Bishop dwelt mostly upon the establishing of an industrial school with the Woman's Auxiliary behind this movement.

The Bishop has accepted the Wise County Supervisors' offer and of the $25,000 needed—$15,000 has already been raised. It is the plan to use this new school for the education of high-school students, as other mission schools in the diocese do mostly grammar-grade work.

The Secretary, Miss Leach, reported forty-seven branches and many gaining the Standard, one hundred per cent.

The Budget for 1930 is $3,000. Dr. Rogers, Superintendent of the Boys' Home, Covington, was present and made an appeal for the boys.

The officers and delegates were met by the chairman of the hostess auxiliary, Mrs. Holiday, and the hospitality through the conference cannot be excelled at any time.

Wednesday afternoon the entire delegation enjoyed a motor ride to the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, a mission of Trinity Church, located on the highway. At the same time enjoying a delightful afternoon tea at "Folly", the county estate of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Cochran.

The missionary address, made by Mrs. Wylie, wife of Archdeacon of Santo Domingo, related a thrilling story of the pioneer work she and her husband have been doing for the past twelve years. Having secured enough money for the building of a church, she has undertaken now the work of securing funds to furnish the building. The Corporate Gift Fund secured from the woman's auxiliary at its Washington meeting built the church—$25,000.

Luncheon was served by the hostess branch each day in the parish house. A full program for 1930 has been arranged. The officers are as follows:

Diocesan Officers: Honorary President, Mrs. R. C. Jett, Roanoke, Va.; President, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, Roanoke, Va.; First Vice-President, Miss Helen Otey, Wytheville, Va.; Second Vice-President, Mrs. T. D. Lewis, Amherst, Va.; Secretary, Mrs. Thomas Spindle, Salem, Va.; Treasurer, Mrs.

Gordon H. Baker, Roanoke, Va.; U. T. O. Custodian, Mrs. W. E. Mingea, Abingdon, Va.; Educational Secretary of James River Convocation, Mrs. Landon Lowry, Bedford, Va.; Educational Secretary of New River Convocation, Mrs. K. A. Grandstaff, Bristol, Va.; Supply Secretary, Mrs. Franklin Hanger, Staunton, Va.; Church Periodical Club, Mrs. L. G. Bell, Lynchburg, Va.; Correspondent Southwestern Episcopalian, Mrs. John L. Sneed, Pulaski, Va.; Superintendent of Press Work, Mrs. J. Custis Peter, Radford, Va.

Pulaski, Va., will be the place of meeting for 1930.

The report of the Supply Work by Mrs. Hanger, of Staunton, was very interesting and each delegate visited the Supply Room.

Miss Gadsden, of Lexington, custodian of the water fund, used for installing running water in the homes of all missionaries in the field, reported much had been done along this line this year.

The United Thank Offering Custodian, Mrs. Mingea, of Abingdon, reported $2,500 paid.

The Treasurer, Mrs. Baker, of Roanoke, reported $4,333 had been received.

Mrs. J. C. Peter.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Interdenominational Bible Conference.

The Richmond Bible Conference Association will hold an Interdenominational Bible Conference under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, October 27-November 1.

All sessions will be in the Broad Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Richmond, Virginia, Dr. Fred R. Chenault, pastor. There will be two services daily at 3:30 P. M. and 8:00 P. M.

The missioners are Dr. J. E. Conant and the Rev. Lee W. Ames, both of the extension staff of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

Dr. Conant will lecture on various ages of life: "The Outline of the Ages," "The Age of Innocence," "The Age of Government," "The Age of Grace," etc. The subject of Mr. Ames' lectures will be "The Book of Romans."

Everybody is welcome, and is invited to come and bring a Bible, a notebook and a friend.

The first service will be Sunday afternoon, October 27 at 3:30, when Dr. Conant will deliver his address on "The Outline of the Ages."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

S. S. Institute.

The Washington Sunday School Institute held its thirty-second annual convention on Wednesday, October 16, at Epiphany Parish Hall, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at ten A. M. in the church.

The program included a public meeting at 11 A. M., with an address by the Rev. Granville M. Williams, S. S., J. E., on the topic, "The Moral Training of the Child." Midday prayer at noon, business sessions at 12:10 P. M., and 3:30 P. M., luncheon and exhibit of the work of the Sunday School of Christ Church, Washington Parish, at 1:15 P. M., two general conferences led by the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., at 2:30 and 4:00 P. M., and an evening meeting at eight o'clock in the church, with an address by the Rev. Samuel S. Drury, D. D., on the topic, "The Peril of Sunday Schools."

A Sunday School Institute in Washington seemed strange and certainly very different without the presence of Commander C. T. Jewell, who for so many years had given of himself for this work and who entered into Life Eternal during the past summer. This sense of loss felt by the entire institute was expressed and, perhaps, made easier by resolutions offered with a few loving words by Canon Wm. L. Devries, who had been associated with Commander Jewell for many years in the affairs of the Institute. The words of the resolutions will appear later in this column.

Outstanding in the program of the day was the second general conference held at four o'clock in the afternoon, when Dr. Johnston, of St. John's Church, gave a practical demonstration of "Teaching the Incarnation". His complete mastery of his subject and knowledge of the psychology of teaching methods for children, particularly of the adolescent age, made this part of the program truly practical and was an inspiration to those who heard him and who are engaged in the same kind of work.

The Institute was presided over by the Rev. Franklin J. Bohanan, D. D., rector of Rock Creek Parish, and chairman of the Institute.

Epiphany Chapel Loses Rector.

The Rev. Mr. Lier, who has served as vicar of Epiphany Chapel for several years, has resigned to do work in New York. The chapel people regret his leaving, and wish him God-speed in his new field. He leaves behind him a record of work well done at the chapel. The Rev. C. Harold Douglas, assistant of Epiphany Parish, has taken over the work until a new vicar is appointed.

U. T. O.

The annual presentation of the United Thank Offering of the Diocese of Washington was made at St. Stephen's Church on Sunday evening, October 20, when the preacher of the occasion was the Rev. Freeland Peter, D. D., Canon of Washington Cathedral.

The Cathedral.

By the laying of the cornerstone of the north transept of the Washington Cathedral on Saturday afternoon, October 19, Bishop Freeman launched an enormous building program, calling for the completion of the north and south transepts of the Cathedral by 1932. The Bishop used a silver trowel, in service since the first building constructed on the Cathedral grounds—the National Cathedral School for Girls—and in a short address, said:

"This day marks a new and epoochal advance in the building of this Cathedral, the foundation stone of which was laid on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, September 29, 1907. The next step in the construction of this monumental building is the erection of the North and South Transepts and the crossing which unites them with choir and nave, the first stone of which we have laid today.

"The present building program marks the greatest step we have thus far taken, for in volume and extent it contemplates the carrying forward of the Cathedral to a point where it may be used for worship, and where space may be had to accommodate a congregation of approximately 4,000 people. The estimated cost of this new construction, together with adequate endowment, is $3,000,000.

The importance of the present undertaking cannot be overstated, and the urgency of carrying it to completion before January, 1932, is made more evident when we seek to invision the great national service which it is proposed to hold here on February 22 of that year, in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. It is hoped that this service will be of national and international significance. Appropriate, indeed, does such a service appear when we recall that in the plans of this Capital City, as conceived by Washington and designed by L'Enfant, a majestic shrine was to stand as the embodiment of the Nation's faith in God. Thus on this significant anniversary will be fulfilled, at least in part, the dream of him whom we affectionately remember as the 'Father of his Country'."

Members of the Washington Cathedral clergy staff and other Washington clergymen formed a procession, marching in vestments from the completed crypt to the scene of the new construction.

A special office was arranged for the stone laying and collects and prayers were read by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington.

A feature of the ceremony was the reading by Bishop Freeman of a poem about Washington Cathedral, written by Rev. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor of the Foundry Methodist Church.

Tea for those from out of town and other friends were served in the Bishop's Garden, after the service.

M. M. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop.

Quiet Day—C. S. L.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick S. Fleming, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., conducted the annual Quiet Day for the Church Service League of the Diocese of Maryland on Thursday, October 10, in the Pro-Cathedral, Baltimore.

It began at ten o'clock with prayer and meditation. At noon they had intercession and prayer, after which they adjourned for luncheon, which was served in the Parish House at one o'clock. At 2:30 Evening Prayer was said, with address by Dr. Fleming. There were eighty-two present for the luncheon, but many more for the services.

Thirtieth Anniversary of the Rev. Geo. J. G. Kromer.

Sunday, October 13, was a red letter day in the Chapel of the Guardian Angel, Baltimore. The Rev. George J. G. Kromer celebrated his thirtieth anniversary as priest-in-charge.

Mr. Kromer came to this diocese in 1899 from the Diocese of New Jersey to take charge of this Mission Chapel, under the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, which had been started in 1897 under the rectorship of the Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith.

On Mr. Kromer's first Sunday, thirty years ago, he had twenty-five present at his eight o'clock service, nineteen at the eleven o'clock service, and fourteen in the Sunday School. Last Sunday there were twenty-eight at the eight o'clock communion, one hundred and sixty at the eleven o'clock service, one hundred and eighty-one in the Church School, three baptisms with fifteen persons present, and two hundred at the evening service. When Mr. Kromer began, the congregation gave about seventy-five cents per Sunday and last Sunday the

(Continued on Page 22.)

Family Department

OCTOBER.

1. Tuesday.
6. Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
13. Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
18. Friday S. Luke.
20. Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
27. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
28. Monday, SS. Simon and Jude.
31. Thursday.

COLLECT FOR THE TWENTY-SECOND SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Lord, we beseech Thee, to keep Thy household, the Church, in continual godliness; that through Thy protection it may be free from all adversities and devoutedly given to serve Thee in good works, to the glory of Thy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. SIMON AND ST. JUDE'S DAY.

O Almighty God, Who hast built Thy Church upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the head cornerstone; Grant us so to be joined together in unity of spirit by their doctrine, that we may be made an holy temple acceptable unto Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ALL SAINTS' DAY. November.

O Almighty God, Who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship in the mystical body of Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord; Grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

GOD OF THE LIVING.

Unveiled the whole creation lies.
All souls are Thine; we must not say
That those are dead who pass away;
From this our world of flesh set free,
We know them living unto Thee,
Released from earthly toil and strife,
With Thee is hidden still their life;
Thine are their thoughts, their words, their powers,
All Thine, and yet most truly ours;
For well we know, where'er they be,
Our dead are living unto Thee.

Not split like water on the ground,
Not wrapt in dreamless sleep profound,
Not wandering in unknown despair
Beyond Thy voice, Thine arm, Thy care
Not left to lie like fallen tree;
Not dead, but living unto Thee.
O Breather into man of breath!
O Holder of the keys of death!
O Giver of the life within!
Save us from death, the death of sin,
That body, soul, and spirit be Forever living unto Thee!"

—John Ellerton.

The Shattered Window.

In a certain old town was a great cathedral having a wondrous stained glass window. From miles around the people pilgrimaged to gaze upon the splendor of this masterpiece of art.

One day there came a storm, and the tempest forced in the window and shattered it into a hundred pieces.

Great was the grief of the people at the catastrophe which bereft the town of its proudest work of art. They gathered the fragments in a box and carried them to the cellar.

One day there came a stranger and craved permission to see the window. They told him of its fate. He asked what they had done with the fragments, and they showed him the broken morsels of glass.

"Would you mind giving these to me?" asked the stranger.

"Take them along," was the reply, "they are no longer of any use to us."

The visitor carefully lifted the box and carried it away in his arms. Weeks passed and then one day there came an invitation to the custodian of the cathedral. It was from a famous artist, noted for his skill in glass-craft. It summoned them to his study to inspect a stained glass window the work of his genius.

Ushering them into his studio he stood them before a great veil of canvas. At a touch of his hand upon a cord the canvas dropped, and before their gaze shone a stained glass window, surpassing in beauty all their eyes had ever beheld.

As they gazed upon its wondrous pattern and cunning workmanship, the artist said: "This window I have wrought from the fragments of your shattered one, and it is now ready to be replaced."

Reader, do you say that your plans have been crushed? Thank God and take heart! Have you not learned that the best place for many of your plans is the trash pile? That often you must fling them there before your blinded eyes can see God's better plan for your life?

And how is it with your life? Has sin blighted it? Have mistakes of early years seemingly wrecked it? Does there seem naught for you but to walk its weary tread-mill until its days of drudgery shall end?

Then know this. Jesus Christ is a matchless life-mender. He will take that shattered life and fashion a more beautiful one from its fragments than yourself could ever have wrought from the whole.—A Call to Prayer.

The Wonderful Ministry of a Mission Hospital.

High tribute to the work of medical missionaries in Miraj, India, is paid by Miss Mabel E. Emerson, a secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational), following her recent visit there. Miss Emerson's letter, dated February 20, 1929, says in part:

"How I wish that some of the critics of foreign missions at home could be dropped down in Miraj for two days and see the wonderful ministry of the great hospital there, probably the best known hospital in all Southern Asia. It is under the Presbyterian Board and was started in 1892 by Dr. William J. Wanless, now Sir William, for he was knighted a little over a year ago by King George in recognition of his years of service in India. From the tiny hospital, hardly more than a dispensary in those early days, it has grown to be a 225-bed hospital, with nurses' training school and a medical school."

Miss Emerson describes a visit to Kodoli with Dr. Charles E. Vail, who succeeded Dr. Wanless in charge of the hospital. For three hours, from four o'clock Dr. Vail saw patients just as fast as he could, in the dispensary, and then went to the hospital where he performed three cataract operations and several other operations. At 11:30 the medical party started back to Miraj, which they reached at 2:45 A. M. Dr. Vail had a day of major surgery ahead of him and began work at 7:30 A. M., performing first a delicate stomach operation that required two hours and a quarter. Concluding her letter, Miss Emerson writes:

"The doctor went on operating all that day until after eight o'clock in the evening with the break at one o'clock for luncheon and family prayers. I shall never forget prayers, as he prayed that all in the hospital might be filled with love for the needy to whom they minister. That is the secret of his own strength—his love for people and his love for his work.—Selected.

A Fearless Faith.

Isaiah 12:1—God Is My Salvation.

He shouts defiance to the world, not that he does not know the possibility of defeat, but because he enjoys the certainty of victory.

There is an intellectual side to such a faith. "God" is my salvation. He does not say "Everything will come all right—no use troubling'." This is mental disaster. Despair follows such a conclusion. "God" is my salvation. This is the eternal, spiritual, personal presence of the Bible revealed in Jesus Christ whose will is declared in the gospel. In this God men have trusted through the centuries and not in vain. In poverty, pain and meekness, humanity has learned to find peace in him.

There have been substitutes. The age of reason is often the age of Unreason, as William Morris discovered when he forsook his radical associates in England for their disorderly thinking. Science may build an Eden but man still waits to be remade. Civilization in spite of its advance has not cured our crime statistics. We do not say that these have failed. They have played their part as they were intended to do, but they are the creations not the creator. The heart of man needs God.

There is a practical side to their faith. "I will trust and not be afraid." There is something to be afraid of, if you look deep enough into life. He who knows the country knows what a fire and flood can be. Life has its sin, uncertainty, failure, and death. Faith says, "I will trust and not be afraid." Trust is the practical aspect of faith. There are mock substitutes. Forget your troubles, we are told; down them or dance them bye—but they return, and there is panic in the soul. What shall we do if the great fear comes upon us at last? There is no other alternative in life. It is faith or fear.

Such faith has a spiritual side. "My strength and my song." Science says that all matter is energy. Light and heat are electricity in motion. One finds power in the world. God is Power, and Jesus is the Power of God unto salvacation. This is the secret of the new life.

Song is joy—the joy of love makes us sing.

Now God is Love and Jesus is the love of God incarnate. His spirit will make the desert bloom like the rose. But for himself or herself—"I will trust Him."—Dr. Robert MacGowan, in Presbyterian Banner.

A Living Thief.

The late eloquent Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer used to tell how once he asked a man to join the church. "No," said the man, adding: "The dying thief never joined the church, yet he went to heaven." "Will you aid the church, then, by making a contribution to missions?" add the doctor. "No," answered the man, "the dying thief never gave to missions, and yet he went to heaven." "Oh, yes," retorted Dr. Lorimer, "but there is this difference between him and you. He was a dying thief while you are a living one."—Evangelical Visitor.

AT HIS PASSING.

Sleep for thy woork is done,
  Thy work is done;
Blest is reward well won
  At set of sun.

Rest is the toiler's share,
  The toiler's share
Of all that life may dare
  For man to spare.

Silence is earth's release,
  Is earth's release
Ffrom the loud drum's increase
  To heavenly peace.

Sleep amid fragrant flowers,
  'Mid fragrant flowers;
Spring with her hallowed showers
  Will build new bowers.

And through the vales of time,
  The vales of time
Thy memory will climb
  To heights sublime.

—Robert MacGowan.

For The Southern Churchman.

What We Owe Humanity.

Louis Deschamps.

A justifiable pride in the human heritage of the past, the lives of great men and women, the victories of idealists, the beauty of cultured traditions of wisdom and philosophy.

A pledge of loyalty to oppose the modern curse of a blind, sardonic pessimism, a pagan philosophy that condemns human nature.

A cherished sense of kinship with all mankind past and present; reverence of sacred traditions; and a real appreciation of the achievements of those gone before; recognizing the similarity of all human experience.

A habit of thought that means a universal attitude toward life breaking the narrow ties of selfish interest, extending the vision beyond the little spotlight of individnual fortune.

A personal Faith that answers the age-old questions of life and death, so that the invisible may be seen, the unknown believed and the finer sentiments cherished with that implicit faith required of mortal man in the presence of Infinity.

A profound and sincere love of Humanity, tolerance for its weaknesses, sympathy for its failures, confidence in its inherent worth and appreciation of the dramatic beauty of its history.

A sense for the romance, the poetry of our human epic with its heroism, cultural beauty and morale of universal brotherhood, relieving the sordidness that inevitably marks a selfish life.

Prayer.

(From the Morning Service, Knox's Liturgy.)

Almighty God, who has redeemed us to Thyself with the precious blood of Thy dear Son; grant that we may live no longer unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us and rose again.

Direct us always by Thy grace, O Merciful God, and lead us continually by Thy Spirit.

Give us good and holy thoughts, pure gentle and peaceable disposition, an entire resignation to Thy will, a perfect love to Thee, and a sincere charity towards all mankind.

Wean our hearts from the vanity of this world, and give us grace to have them always lifted up to heaven where our treasures is; so that watching and praying without ceasing, and living in temperature, righteousness, and purity, we may pass our days in peace, waiting for the glorious return of our Saviour; and that when He shall came to judge the world, we may appear before Thee without conclusion, and without fear.

Almighty God, our Father and Preserver, who of Thy goodness hast watched over us during the past night, and brought us to this day, strengthen and guard us by Thy Spirit, we beseech Thee, that we may spend it wholly in Thy service, seeking Thy glory, and the salvation of our fellowmen. And even as Thou sheddest the beams of the sun upon the earth to give light unto our bodies, so do Thou illuminate our souls with the brightest of Thy Spirit, to guide us in the paths of holy obedience.

For The Southern Churchman.

Like a Planet Among the Stars.

Barbara Schmunck.

Mother was disturbed; she showed it. "Dorothy," she said, "we are going to have the new clergyman to dinner, and I am afraid that Dad will talk nothing but business. He always does."

"Leave that to me. I'll pivot the conversation on school. Church and school, preacher and teacher, are somewhat akin, are they not? So that is settled. Let's not worry about it. It may turn out better than you think."

The Rev. Dr. Sumner came. He was a tall, smooth-faced man, of medium build, with eyes that sparkled with humor. There was, in fact, no air of the pious about him, no ear-marks of his calling, except the clerical vest, even his coat had the cut of the "everyday" man. Father was won over to him at once. There was no attempt at religious discussion, but my plans for centering the conservation on education went astray. Dad did the talking, and he talked business. Dr. Sumner was a close listener, and from his telling replies, it was evident that he knew something of business conditions. Finally father said:

"I suppose one must make up his mind to accept the fact that the world is made up of all kinds of people. You, no doubt find it so even in your business, for there is a business end to your profession, too, is there not?"

Mother looked distressed, but the clergyman showed no sign of being disturbed.

"Yes," he returned, "we, too, must accept the fact that the world is made up of all kinds of people, but how and then, we come upon somebody who is really exception, who stands out like a plant among the stars."

Father was very attentive. No religious discussion could have called forth the interest expressed in, "Do tell us of one?"

Dr. Sumner was quiet for a moment. Then he said:

"I am thinking of a fine old lady, a Mrs. Nelson, who had lost her husband and her only son. She lived quite alone in the big house on her country estate, but she surrounded herself with a host of young people whom she invited from time to time, as house guests. Among them were a young doctor John and his wife, who came from their beautiful town house to spend the summer. He was a tall, well-built fellow, fond of athletics, a favorite on the cricket team. Mrs. Johns was likewise a picture of health, with very expressive brown eyes.

"I had long known Mrs. Nelson to be an exceptional person, a person who was always thinking of others in a way nobody else ever did—sent her butler and his wife to their home in England, because they needed rest and change—sent a check large enough to cover a six months' commutation ticket for the girl who was going to the city by trolley to earn the living for a deaf mother—offered to help pay off the mortgage on the young bricklayer's home, after he had made a miscalculation on one of his contracts—sent to the rectory many a thing with the explanation, 'I was buying one for myself, and thought you might like one, too.'

"If like attracts like, it may throw some light on the doctor's story," continued the minister. "There came a time when we knew the John's were looking forward to that happiness in home life for which love is always doing its utmost in preparation."

"One morning, I recognized the doctor's handwriting among my letters. There was an enclosure with the letter which read: 'Please accept the enclosed (check) as a thank-offering from my little girl to her newly acquired fellowmen.'

"What a wonderful thought!" the three of us exclaimed at once.

"Repeat that, please," said father. "No wonder you call him exceptional, and you and I are not thinking of the check."

" 'Please accept the enclosed as a thank-offering from my little girl to her newly acquired fellowmen.' "

"How beautiful!" we again said together.

Dr. Summer went on:

"I took a part of that check to a brave, little woman in a hospital, herself a mother, and I told her the story.

" 'His little daughter's newly acquired fellowmen,' she said, 'What a wonderful thought! When I get well, I shall try to do for others in my little way, what the doctor has done for me in his big way.'

"And I believe she would have done so, but she did not have the opportunity. A few weeks later we buried her."

Such was the clergyman's story. It give us something to think about. We realized what he meant when he said, "We must accept the fact that the world is made up of all kinds of people, but now and then, we do come upon somebody who is really exceptional, who stands out like a planet among the stars."

"Mother," I called from my room after the lights were out, "aren't you glad that father did not give me a chance to talk church and school? Aren't you glad that Dad did talk nothing but business?"

"Indeed I am!" she called back heartily.

Victory is conditioned on endurance. Many vainly imagine they are going to reign with Christ who have never been willing to suffer with Him. Can we endure coldness, criticism, neglect ridicule, censure, misunderstanding, opposition, persecution, and, if need be, death for Hs sake who hath loved us? Then surely we shall reign with Him forever.—M. W. Knapp.

For the Young Folks

GROWTH.

He grew in wisdom! Who can weigh
The meaning which those words convey,
Or trace the deep mysterious line
Between the human and divine?

We only know the daily growth
Was that of mind and body both,
Until the perfect childhood passed
Into the perfect man at last.

Yet one recorded scene alone
A glory o'er those years hath thrown,
Revealing to His mother's soul
A realm beyond her love's control.

Teaching both her, who weekly heard
And treasured every sacred Word,
And all His Church from age to age,
Who read them in the Gospel page.

That far above all earthly claim
Was that great work for which He came,
And far above all earthly tie,
The Sonship of His deity.

And if to those who love Him most
His presence for a while be lost,
And on life's crowded road they find
That they have left their Lord behind,

Let them each erring step retrace,
And seek Him through His means of grace
Who, in His Father's house of prayer,
Still doth His work of mercy there.

—Anna H. Drury.

Saying "Boo" to the Indians.

At the top of the hill stood the big fort built of huge logs, and from the top of the wall cannons pointed in all directions, and up the hill hurrying, hurrying came the settlers from their log cabins, for word had come that the Indians were on the warpath. Prudence, one hand fast in her mother's the other in her brother Joseph's, skipped along over the ground in double-quick time, and behind them, his brows knitted sternly, strode her father with a great gun over his shoulder.

On each side of the path trees with moving, fluttering shadows towered high above little Prudence's head. Her eyes, bright with excitement, watched them fearfully; at any moment a fierce Indian's face might appear. At any moment!

However, no Indian's face appeared, and the fort was reached in safety. "Not an Indian got us, not a one," carolled the little girl triumphantly as the bars were locked fast.

Inside the fort was a bedlam of voices exclaiming, wondering if the Indians were really on the warpath or if this would prove a false alarm like the last time. Prudence's father and mother joined the throng of excited settlers, leaving "Pru" in the care of her brother Joseph. Every few moments the gate of the fort would be thrown open to allow new families to enter, then shut quickly and barred securely. Very thrilling it proved to little "Pru", so much so that Joseph just couldn't drag her away from the entrance.

Nearly all the families "Pru" knew and she'd squeal out their names as they rushed in. Hopping up and down holding fast to Joseph's hand, she'd greet them wildly: "Hurray, hurray!" Really the little girl seemed to enjoy the excitement; her eyes danced with a sort of an impish glee.

But quite suddenly her eyes stopped dancing—just as the great gate opened to a big rush of settlers, too. There must have been a score at least this time. But Prudence didn't scream out her wild little greeting. No, she gave a quick dive out of Joseph's hand, a dive through the crowd—out of the fort itself. And Joseph, reaching frantically for the little gray dress, missed it and tore wildly after her.

And in all the excitement not a soul saw them go, and quickly, very quickly the gate was slammed shut as before.

Down the path toward home ran Prudence. Tears rained down her cheeks. "My kitty, my poor little kitty," she was sobbing. Fast, oh, very fast ran "Pru." But Joseph, twelve years old, ran faster. His hand came down on her shoulder; the next minute she was struggling in his arms.

"The Indians shan't get my kitty; they shan't, they shan't," raged "Pru", kicking and fighting like a little wild thing. "Lemme go—lemme go!" And hurling herself loose, off she darted

Poor Joseph! He didn't want to make "Pru" scream and attract any lurking Indians. Expecting every moment to hear an arrow whiz by his head, he raced along beside her till they reached their home. And there, curled up on the settee lying close against the sampler Prudence had been working when the warning came, lay Pussy Snowball, her white tail with its coal black tip curled gracefully about her. Purring, actually purring, comfortable and happy as you please.

"Dear, darling, darling pussy," cried Prudence, hugging the soft ball to her. "You've got to come to the big old fort straight this minute."

But Joseph, who had been peering fearfully out of one of the windows (oiled paper, they were in those days instead of glass), turned and pulled the little girl to the floor.

"Hush, 'Pru', hush," he whispered fiercely, "not a sound; the Indians are watching down by the spring."

Leading Prudence, who still held tight to the kitten, down the ladderlike stairs to the cellar, brave little Joseph tried to calm the excited little girl.

"Never fear," he whispered, "Indians don't attack until after dark when—when they think every one's asleep, but before then we'll find a way to fool 'em You can fool Indians easy, easy."

"How?" Little "Pru's" eyes began to dance impishly again. "How, oh, Joey, how?"

How? Joseph tried his best to think of some of the many ways Indians had been fooled by the settlers. Anything they didn't understand terrified them. But—poor Joseph! all he could think of was those silent Indians creeping, creeping like shadows around and around the house.

The boy's eyes scanned desperately the earthen walls of the dimly lighted cellar. Yellow ears of corn, strings of dried onions, and over in the corner piles of potatoes and great yellow pumpkins.

Pumpkins! Ah, they were what those two little girls over Plymouth way had used to save their lives. Why couldn't he? He would.

And the daring plan that Joseph presently worked out brought the leaping sparkles to Prudence's blue eyes and the roses of excitement to her cheeks. "They won't get us, not a bit they won't," she exulted in a loud whisper. "We'll walk straight through those old Indians and scare 'em to death."

"Hush," warned Joseph, as he dragged two of the pumpkins under the light of the one small window and began to dig out the insides with his big jack-knife.

Dig, dig, oh, so many digs it took before the pumpkins were ready for the faces to be cut in them. Outside as evening fell a wind rose, sending the dry leaves crackling about the house. Like crackling flames they sounded. Had the Indians crept up and set fire to the house? No, Joseph crept to the window and made sure they hadn't. There were no signs of them.

"Make the Jack-o'-lanterns awful, awful fierce looking," urged Prudence, as Joseph tackled the hollowed pumpkins once more.

At last the preparations were all ready. Two fierce, ugly, grinning Jack-o'-lanterns, two of their mother's long kitchen aprons with holes cut a little below the waistbands.

"Now," said Joseph, "we're—we're ready to start for the fort; high time, too, for its getting dark."

Swiftly one apron was tied around Prudence, covering her completely, just her eyes peeping out of the cut holes. The other one soon enveloped Joseph, all but his long black legs. Last of all the Jack-o'-lanterns were lighted and placed on the two children's heads.

"Hold tight to the kitten under your apron," said Joseph. "I'll hold your head on."

"And if an Indian comes, I'll cry: 'Boo-hoo!'"

"Don't cry anything!" urged Joseph, his face white and tense. Suppose the Indians by this time had heard about Jack-o'-lanterns, learned they were merely pumpkins, not fire spirit at all. Oh, how Joseph did hate to open that door!

But open it he did, and the two fire spirits started up the path to the fort. Weird indeed they looked, the glowing orange faces grinning horribly into the growing dusk. And back among the trees—yes, they were there, those lurking Indians; Joseph could see them staring, staring. Were they frightened? It was too dark to see the expressions on their painted faces. But—they were backing away. They were gone.

Gone! Joseph's heart beat high; his scheme was working. Prudence, in wild excitement, hopped up and down, bobbing her Jack-o'-lantern head nearly out of Joseph's arm.

"Keep still, Prudence," warned Joseph, "and walk close beside me; we have a long way to go yet."

Then little Prudence calmed down a bit and tried to walk sedately at her brother's side, but every minute her eyes veered from right to left, searching, searching among the trees for an Indian's face. Why hadn't she cried out "boo" before? Next time she would. And Joseph, his arms, aching, trying earnestly to keep the Jack-o'-lantern heads in place, wondering anxiously if the Indians were still watching. Then—

"Boo-hoo!" screamed Prudence. So suddenly and, oh, so loudly! And she ran straight out from under her fire-spirit head and raced madly up the path.

Joseph raced after her, holding desperately to the two pumpkins. And behind him chased a big turkey, the "Indian" that had started "Pru" into crying "boo". But at last the fort could be seen. The gates were open, and men were pouring out of them, and there was mother, too! A moment more, and they were safe inside the fort.

As for Pussy Snowball, she slipped from "Pru's" arm, and, darting over by the fire, curled up on a soft coat there, and she began to purr, as comfortable and happy as any one you could think of of.—The Continent.

The Greatest Organization.

It was the twilight hour at a summer camp, the day before closing. The boys and their leader were gathered around the campfire, talking intimately, as boys will talk at times, of first one thing, then another. The subject turned on sports.

"It's team-weak all the time that does it," remarked John.

"Yes," said the leader, "organization is the great thing."

Presently he spoke again: "Can any of you tell me what is the greatest organization the world has ever seen?"

"Our government!" exclaimed a red-hot young American.

"Guess again."

"Alexander's empire," volunteered another.

A shake of the head followed. "Oh," said the history shark, "It's one of those old, Asiatic government."

"No," exclaimed Robert, "it's the Roman Empire, of course." He had been abroad with his parents the year before and the wonder of Rome still thrilled him.

"All wrong. Where are they all now?" asked the leader quietly. "Even the British Empire today, with its rule over one-fourth—is it that?—of the earth's surface and one-sixth of the earth's inhabitants ('I'm not quite sure of my figures), even this is but a loose confederation of races, not really a unit. Our own country too has not the solidarity of organization of the Roman empire, though in things of real greatness we feel ourselves vastly superior."

"But what is it?" queried the boys eagerly.

"A little band of earnest men with a great Teacher," the leader replied quietly. "A band of not highly trained, nor greatly equipped followers, but the spirit of that little band has passed on to others down through the centuries and has gone on spreading till not a country in the world but has felt its influence, in spite of all the non-Christian peoples there.

"Where are Greece and Rome today as world powers? Where are the great rulers of the past? And who cares much about them? Who would lift a hand to fight for Napoleon, Alexander, or Caesar? But today, even with all our love of pleasure and ease, there are thousands and thousands who would give their lives for Jesus.

"And look at the heroes of the cross! Livingstone, dying almost alone in the heart of Africa; John Paton, among the cannibals; James Chalmers, going joyously to his death; Judson, in prison in Burma. And the Christians, whose bodies fed the lions in the Colesseum that Robert has described for us!

"And, fellows, tomorrow we are going to separate. Some of you have not yet made any plan for your lives. Isn't it worth while to be connected with such an organization as the Christian Church? Isn't it worth while to link up your lives with the lives of these heroes of the past?

"The things which are seen are temporal," he added reverently, "but the things which are not seen are eternal." —Clipped.

The Lesson Round Table - 1930

"Meaty" Fall Reading!

The Symphony of Faith
By Bruce S. Wright $1.50
Thirty sermons, each with a musical title, from "The Song of Created Beauty" to "The Oratorio of Pure Religion." The Old Testament begins with the Song of Creation and the New with the Song of Incarnation. A deep spiritual note pervades it all.

Voices of the Great Creator
By Albert D. Belden $1.50
"We pronounce our blessing on this man, who helps us hear God's Voice in the desert, the mountain, the valley, the sea, the river, the cloud, the garden and the city. What a book!"

The Stewardship Life
By Julius Earl Crawford $1
"Fine piece of work and a substantial contribution to stewardship literature."—David McConaughy. Highly commended by the United Stewardship Council.

Man's Social Destiny
By Charles A. Ellwood $2
The selection of the Religious Book Club for August, and one of the vital books of the year. He points out the way that education, government, science and religion are leading us, and analyses man's resources to cope with modern problems.

How Students are Working Their Way Through School $1.00
Full of helpful suggestions for the self-supporting student.

—and—

The Religious Difficulties of Youth. Belden. $1.50.
Christianity and Success. Hughes. $1.50.
The Missionary Imperative. Staley Jones and others. $2.
Christ and the New Woman. Chappell. $1.25.

A New Idea Sunday School Lesson Commentary
359 pages
$1.25

1930 International Uniform Sunday School Lessons Discussed by America's Religious Leaders

Men who know the problems of the teacher have written this book. They interpret the lesson, they literally dig into it, and bring to the teacher the great ethical and moral teachings of the lesson, its Biblical and historical background—in short, the lesson is covered for you by men of authority:

John Timothy Stone
Joseph Fort Newton
Stuart N. Hutchinson
Francis J. McConnell
G. Walter Fiske
Wm. H. Leach
Peter Ainslie
Burris Jenkins
Fred'k Lynch
James I. Vance
Joseph A. Vance
—and others, men who know how to translate the great messages of the International Lessons into messages readily applied to the problems of the 20th Century Christian.

Each lesson becomes livable, concrete.

Every-day problems are clarified in the light of rich experience.

Practical channels of Christian service.

Ideas are developed. Independent thinking is set in motion.

The Moffatt translation is used as the text.

COKESBURY PRESS
NASHVILLE
At Religious Bookstores

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley
700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

VIRGINIA DAIRY CO.

Richmond, Va.

"THE HOME OF BETTER MILK"

MILK, CREAM, BUTTER, BUTTERMILK, RICHELAC

Phones Boul 938-939 — F. F. RENNIE, President.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria
Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

The Dewdrop.

On a certain June night, a cool breeze swept over the sun-warmed earth, and dewdrops by millions gathered, ready to sparkle in the next morning's sunshine. Two of these, lingering near each other, spoke together.

"I," said the first, "shall shine tomorrow by a country road. I shall reflect the pink of the briar-rose, the golden-yellow of the daisy's heart, the purpose of the late violet, the living green of the field grass, and the clear blue of the sky. Children on their way to school will call me a diamond. And you, brother, will shine beside me, will you not?"

"No," the second dewdrop replied, "I will rather shine in a great city where the children do not see bright things to make them glad."

"But," objected the first dewdrop, "in the city of dull stones and brick, you will not find the colors to reflect the pink of the briar-rose, the golden-yellow of the daisy's heart, the violet, and the green of the grass."

"But, anyhow," answered the brother dewdrop, "I will shine as well as I can, and between the roofs there is a part of the sky to give me its heavenly blue."

When the sunshine on the next morning flooded the earth, the first dewdrop trembled near the heart of a pink briar-rose, and in its tiny sphere glimmered the colors of the flowers, the green of the field grass, and the blue of the great sky arch, and the school children laughed and cried, "See the diamond in the rose!"

The second dewdrop twinkled in a little patch of dust-gray city grass at the edge of a brick pavement; not a flower grew near and between the lofty roofs was only a narrow ribbon of sky. And yet—and yet—in the dewdrop's glittering crystal were all the glowing colors of the briar-rose, the golden-hearted, daisy, the violet, the green grass field, and the blue sky arch; for dewdrops do not need flowers to give them color, but only light.

A little city child passed by the scrap of dusty grass, looked at the glittering, dewy gem and cried joyfully, "Oh, here is a little rainbow dropped straight down from the sky to earth!"—Susan Alice Ranlett, in The Congregationalist.

FEEDING THE BIRDS.

Bluejays and robins
And shy chickadees
Tuft the dry flower stalks
And feather the trees.

Even a lordly
Cock pheasant comes
To sup on the suet
And nibble the crumbs.
Who says a garden
In winter is bare,
When holly is crimson
And birds blossom there?

—Our Dumb Animals.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

BOYS GIRLS EARN XMAS MONEY

Write for 50 Sets St. Nicholas Christmas Seals. Sell for 10c. a set. When sold send us $3.00 and keep $2.00. No Work—Just Fun. St. Nicholas Seal Co., Dept 513-S.C., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System

Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

The Annual

Every Member Canvass

Is more than a canvass for funds.

It is an expression of spiritual power.

It is personal Evangelism in practice.

It acts as a renewer of interest, a stimulator of loyalty, and a creator of good-will.

It constrains the whole life to consecrated stewardship.

It leads normally to the support of the Program of the Church in Parish, Diocese and World.

If your parish has not tried it—try it!

If your parish has tried it—do it more thoroughly this year.

It is your parish upon which the Church depends.

EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

December 1-15, 1929

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

281 Fourth Avenue CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE New York, N. Y.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS BULBS; 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor, 12, $1.00; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. FRED B. JONES, Gloucester, Va.

MONEY FOR CHRISTMAS

Look in the old trunk and send me all the old envelopes up to 1876. Do not remove the stamps. Will pay highest prices. —George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

MAGAZINE ORDERS.

I AM A WHEEL-CHAIR INVALID, AND have no one to look to for financial help, and I want to ask you to remember me with your magazine subscriptions and renewals, so that I can buy medicine and other things I need. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Keysville, Ga.

WANTED, A COPY OF "THE CABELLS AND THEIR KIN", compiled by Alexander Brown. Any one having a copy of this book to dispose of, write Southern Churchman stating price.

SITUATION WANTED.

WIDOW OF REFINEMENT, CULTURE, education and foreign travel, desires position as social companion, or position in college. Best references given. Address "C", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

HERBERT PERCY HAMES.
Priest.

The REV. DR. HERBERT PERCY HAMES, Vicar of Christ Church, Redondo, Beach, California, died very suddenly at the vicarage on Knob Hill, Wednesday, October 9, after an illness of several days, while an anniversary dinner was being prepared only a few blocks away to celebrate the beginning of his fourth year as vicar of this historic church by the sea. Requiem and funeral services were held at Christ Church here at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, October 12, with the Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles, officiating, with interment at Inglewood, California.

Dr. Hames was born at St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, on November 13, 1883, came to America in 1903 and was graduated from Iowa University in 1909, two years later receiving the Ph. M. degree and his Ph. D. in 1919, also an honorary D. D. in 1921 together with a Litt. D. He was ordained Deacon in All Saints Cathedral, Spokane, Washington, Eastertide, 1912, and was graduated from the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, in May, 1914, at which time he was advanced to the Priesthood. He had a wide experience as a teacher and as a military chaplain. For his work among he Greeks of New York City and in the International Y. M. C. A. work he was given the Order of the Redeemer by the late King Alexander. Before the war broke out he attended special courses at Oxford University. During his ministry he served as Senior Assistant at All Angels Church, New York City. He was rector of the historic Mother Church of Salem, Mass., from 1917 to 1919, at which time he was elected head master of old Saint Paul's School, Baltimore, Md. He declined this honor and accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Redeemer, in Cairo, Illinois. He has been very active in clerical societies and was president of the Cairo Ministerial Association.

Dr. Hames was a Mason and a member of the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity, the author of several books and many publications. He undoubtedly was best known as the originator of the Hames Thirteen-Month Calendar, and for the promotion of the same addressed the League of Nations at Geneva after the war.

Dr. Hames leaves behind his widow, Caroline Hames, and his mother, Emily Hames.

"In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 15.)

offerings amounted to $177.15, beside the gift of a substantial purse to him and Mrs. Kromer.

This work was started in a dwelling house and now the plant consists of a fine church building and parish house. Mr. and Mrs. Kromer have started several active and growing organizations, and especially the Day Nursery, in which fifty babies were cared for daily during the past year. The Daily Vacation School is a great feature at the Chapel and this summer over one hundred children were in session daily. Any one visiting the Chapel early on a summer morning will hear the rum-tum-tum of a drum and soon Mr. Kromer appears around the corner with children following him from all directions. He is a real "Pied-Piper", but he feels that the mothers are busy doing other things and the little ones do not always know the time and the beat of his drum tells them that the Bible School is ready to begin.

Time and space hinders the recording of the many interesting stories connected with the missionary work of this Chapel under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Kromer, but they have accomplished wonderful results through their untiring efforts.

Maryland Clericus.

The Maryland Clericus met in the Church of the Redeemer, Charles and Melrose Avenues, Baltimore, Monday, October 14. After the business meeting and luncheon, Bishop Halfenstein addressed them and told them about the last days of Bishop Murray's life.

The Clericus passed a resolution of Thanksgiving for and respect to our late Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray.

N. E. P.

Memorial Services for Dr. Birckhead.

Memorial services for the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, late rector of Emmanuel Protestant Episcopal Church, were held in the church October 13, at 11 A. M. The Memorial Minute was read for the Vestry by the Hon. Henry D. Harlan.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, preached the memorial sermon.

The following clergymen were in the sanctuary: the Rev. Dr. Arthur Chilton Powell, rector of St. Mary's Church; the Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett, rector of Memorial Church; the Rev. Malbone H. Birckhead, assistant minister of St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, Pa.; the Rev. Edward R. Noble, vicar of St. Andrew's Church, and the Rev. Harry Stansbury Weyrich, assistant minister of Emmanuel Church.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of St. Paul's Church, spoke at the evening service.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Bishop White spent about ten days in the East, following the meeting of the House of Bishops, and on October 6 he preached in St. Thomas' Church, Brooklyn, in the morning; in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, in the afternoon; and in St. Paul's, Flatbush, Brooklyn, in the evening. On Sunday, October 16, the Bishop preached in All Hallow's Church, Wyncote, Pa.; he addressed the large Church School of St. Simeon's Parish in Philadelphia during the afternoon; and in the evening he was the preacher at the Church of the Advocate. In between times the Bishop called on friends of Springfield among the clergy and laity.

F. H. S.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Coadjutor.

Month's Jubilee.

Prayers of thanksgiving were offered continuously St. Luke's Day from six in the morning to eight o'clock at night by the congregation of St. Luke's Church, Germantown.

The services were part of the month's Jubilee for the completion of the $100,000 building program of the Church. They were begun Thursday night, the eve of St. Luke's Day, when Bishop Garland blessed the renovated church and the memorials.

Members of the parish took part in the service at half-hour intervals during St. Luke's Day, and the Holy Communion was celebrated at 6, 7, 8 and 9:30 A. M. A half hour of special devotions began at 7:30 P. M.

Bishop Frank DuMoulin, rector of the Church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia, preached Sunday evening, and the rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Wallace E. Conkling, Sunday morning. The Jubilee will close November 17.

During the five-year rebuilding the entire interior of the church has been transformed into classic thirteenth century gothic. Many of the gothic arches have been erected as memorials.

The parish, organized in 1810, is the mother Episcopal Church of Germantown. The present church was built in 1875.

R. R. W.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Otis A. Glazebrook, D. D., rector-emeritus of St. John's Church, Elizabeth, New Jersey, returned October 13 to his home at Nice, France. The Rev. Dr. Glazebrook is the father of Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, Field Worker for the National Commission on Evangelism.

The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., sailed from Naples, Italy, on October 12, and is expected in Washington some time during the week of October 20.

The Rev. E. N. Bullock, for many years rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lake Charles, Louisiana, has accepted the invitation of Dr. Coupland and the Vestry to become assistant at Trinity Church, New Orleans, Louisiana. In connection with his activities as assistant to Dr. Coupland, Mr. Bullock will be Superintendent of the Sunday School, and will interest himself particularly in the work among the young people of the parish.

The Rev. Rodney F. Cobb, rector of Christ Church, Austin, Minnesota, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Rock Island, Illinois, in the Diocese of Quincy, and will begin his work there December 1.

The Ven. James F. Plummer, Archdeacon of Middle Tennessee, and Mrs. Plummer, have moved from their summer home at Sewanee into the rectory of St. Barnabas' Church, Tullahonna. The Archdeacon will make this his home and headquarters for his work, which extends throughout the Convocation of Nashville, with the exception of Grundy and Franklin Counties.

The Rev. Hiram Kennedy Douglass, formerly rector of St. Peter's Church, Columbia, Tennessee, and for the past three years rector of the Church of the Messiah, Detroit, Michigan, has accepted the charge of The Church of the Good Shepherd, Memphis, Tennessee, and entered into residence October 1. He will also serve as chaplain of the Church Home and as minister in charge of St. Alban's Mission in South Memphis.

The Rev. Lloyd Willis Clarke, who was ordained in Grace Church, Waycrosse, Georgia, the first of May, and had taken full charge after the resignation of the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, early in July, developed tuberculosis, so he was obliged to resign immediately and enter a sanatorium for treatment. From his home in Le Mar, Iowa, he went to El Paso, Texas, for a time; he is now sufficiently recovered to go, temporarily, to be with friends in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

The Rev. Ernest R. Allman, formerly Dean of the Coville Deanery in the District of Spokane, has accepted a call to be rector of the Church of the Ascension, Twin Falls, Idaho, the change to be effective November 1.

The Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, formerly rector of St. Michael and All Angel's Church, Savannah, Georgia, has been admitted to the Diocese of Washington, where he becomes Associate Rector of St. Alban's Parish in the City of Washington.

BUYING MONUMENTS.

When buying monuments the important factors are to secure the very best material and workmanship. From a material standpoint you can make no mistake if you require your dealer to use Winnsboro Granite. It should be of even texture and straight grain, free from defects, such as stains, white or black streaks, white or black splotches of size, or waves (variation in the mixture of light and dark crystals) in the grain.

You can yourself test the stone by having a bucket of water thrown over it. Defects which are not apparent when the stone is dry stand out prominently when it is wet. It is important to know, however, that the stone is not some stone similar to Winnsboro Granite, but the real Winnsboro Granite, which means first grade product of the great Anderson quarries of the Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

This granite costs more and is strictly graded. You can afford to pay your dealer something more for a monument built of such stone, if you are interested in having a monument which will last, remain beautiful through centuries, and afford high legibility of inscription. The quarry will issue through your dealer a guarantee that the stone which he uses for your purchase of a monument is Winnsboro Granite, which means the very first grade of perfect stone sold by Winnsboro Granite Corporation. Do not accept second grade stock unless you are willing to have the monument carry certain irregularities known to the trade as defects. Since the cost of the stone in the finest Winnsboro Granite monument is only about 20 per cent of the total cost of the erected monument, you can afford to pay the higher price for a real Winnsboro Granite monument, and have the assurance that there is nothing better to be had for permanence beauty and legibility of inscription.

Send for free booklet of designs supplied by Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

Send $1.00 for Complete Book of information

MEIGS PUBLISHING COMPANY : 47 W. Washington Street INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Net Rates For Clergymen and Lay Workers

The facilities of this Corporation are cordially extended to clergymen and their families and to lay-workers and their families, to assist them in building up insurance protection at the lowest possible cost. The rates are, in themselves, net rates; which means that they contain none of the usual "loading." In addition, Annual Refunds have been paid to policyholders. The present rate of Annual Refund is slightly more than $4.00 per $1,000 of insurance. This reduces the cost still further and helps to solve your insurance problems.

Inquiries should be addressed to the Corporation and will have immediate attention.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

14 Wall Street, New York

(Operated under the supervision of the Trustees of The Church Pension Fund)

OUR ONLY HOPE
OUR LIGHT AND LIFE
JESUS

HE'LL NEVER FORSAKE YOU, WHATEVER YOU DO,
Were you down in the gutter, He'd kneel beside you;
Were you covered with shame, He would stand by your side,
And the hurt in His heart for your sake He would hide.
He will stick to you, friend, though you lose every test;
SO THE LEAST YOU CAN DO IS TO GIVE HIM YOUR BEST.

ALL OTHERS MAY QUIT YOU AND MOCK AT YOUR FALL,
But your Jesus, undaunted, will come at your call.
He will follow you down to the deep depths of sin,
And love you and nurse you through thick and through thin;
And though He may suffer through what you have done,
HE WILL NEVER FORGET OR DESERT YOU, MY SON.

SO LONG AS HE LIVES YOU ARE SURE OF A FRIEND
On whom at all times you may safely depend.
You may wound Him by sinning, and hurt Him by shame,
Should you fail to be true, but He'll love you the same;
So remember, my friend, as you stand in life's test,
THAT YOU OWE TO YOUR JESUS YOUR FINEST AND BEST.

—Selected.

Affectionately your friend,

LARKIN W. GLAZEBROOK, M. D.,
An Ambassador of Christ,
National Commission on Evangelism.
2022 P Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ILLUMINATIO MEA 1835

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 2, 1929. No. 44.

COMPROMISE OR CONTROVERSY

Decided Liberalism has been defeated. This is openly acknowledged. A new peril and a new line of division have appeared. The new peril is a disposition on the part of some who strongly profess allegiance to orthodoxy, but who believe in a measure of compromise and affiliation with the rationalists.

Before proceeding further, let us set forth the terms used in this paper as signifying the two opposing parties. The terms orthodox, evangelical, conservative, fundamentalist, supernaturalist, are here used to designate all those who accept the Bible as the very Word of God, inerrant, infallible, inspired by the Holy Ghost, and final authority in all matters of faith and practice. The terms rationalist, modernist, liberal, naturalist and radical are used to designate all those who reject the Bible as infallible, inerrant and inspired, and who hold the individual reason and experience to be the final authority in religion and practice.

As we have already intimated, the present peril is not in the definite conflict between liberalism and orthodoxy, but between the orthodoxy which stands for a clear, non-compromising and non-affiliated testimony against unbelief of Christ and the Bible in all its forms, and the orthodoxy which may be very loud in asserting its loyalty in doctrine and government, but which increasingly advocates and practices affiliation with unbelief in its various forms.

The announcement at the beginning of the conflict gives no place for compromise, but declares controversy to the end. Satan tried compromise with the woman and won her to disobedience and death. God made the definite declaration of controversy, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." This controversy begins with the entrance of sin and death into the world, and will continue until sin and death are no more. Compromise in any form between error and truth, between sin and righteousness, is impossible. Compromise between persons in their natural relation and opinion and judgments is possible and right. But when God speaks, His word and will are final, and neither yielding nor compromise are allowable.

The controversy announced at the beginning continues through history. The sons of God compromised and married the daughters of men, and they produced a mighty race with a moral stench that filled the earth and reached to heaven. The result of compromise here was the destruction of the race and the saving of eight persons. Abraham was called to separation from kindred and country. He lived apart from the world, and God was with him. He went down into Egypt, and then he compromised, and then out of that compromise came the progenitor of Mohammedanism, a race which always has been, and still continues to be, the enemy of mankind and Christianity. But Abraham repented and maintained separation, and God gave him great victories and saved Lot.

Lot compromised and suffered the loss of everything, and became the progenitor of a race who were Israel's bitterest enemies. The children of Israel were separated and instructed to maintain separation, even to the overthrow of determined enemies of truth and righteousness. They pursued this separation, but at length compromised, and this compromise left an enemy which caused Israel to sin, and was a thorn in its side for centuries.

David compromised, and it cursed his family. He repented and separated, and his kingdom and Solomon were saved. Solomon compromised. He was the arch pacifist of the ages and the man of greatest worldly wisdom. When he had any controversy with a nation, he married one of their women, and so became affiliated with the nations of the earth, fell into idolatry of the grossest order. His kingdom was rent in twain; ten tribes were in one part and two in the other. The ten were lost, and the two passed on in a bitter struggle with idolatry, rejected their own Messiah, and are scattered to-day upon the face of the earth, a witness to the peril of following human wisdom and compromising with error and sin.

Throughout the history of the Christian church it is demonstrated that compromise or affiliation with unbelief and sin has always resulted in the breakdown of the compromise, while loyal controversy not against persons (save when the persons join themselves to error and sin in a way that means inseparable), but against error and sin, has always been victorious.

The same is true in the civil world. No good thing has been won by the State save through controversy with wrong. Even in the last war, imperialism in Germany attempted to crush the nations. Had the nations compromised, they would have been slaves to-day. America hesitated. She planned for affiliation with all. The destruction of the Lusitania awoke her, and she took her stand and her part in the controversy. Instead of being a slave, she is the foremost nation of the globe.

Compromise of truth and right will ever be punished, and there will be no end of controversy until the Prince of Peace returns to the earth, creates a new heaven and a new earth, causes wars to cease and beats the swords into plowshares.—D. S. K., "Bible Champion."

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

DIVINITY SCHOOL

of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia

42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett. D. D., Dean.

SAINT MARY'S SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina.

Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Have your daughter receive her education in a Church School.

Saint Mary's offers four years' High School and two years' College work all fully accredited by the Southern Association. Also Courses in Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics and Business.

20-acre campus. Gym and Field Sports. Tennis, Indoor Tiled Swimming Pool. Horseback Riding.

For Catalogue and View Book address A. W. TUCKER, Business Manager.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls

The Bishop of Washington, President of Board of Trustees. Miss Mabel B. Turner, A. B., A. M., Principal, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Was it that He feared lest some should tire under the trials and pressures of ministering to the sick and infirm, that . . . Christ added the richest, most heart-kindling motive of all, making the sick the shrines, the rude and sorrowful shrines of His own gracious Presence upon earth? I know not, but thus it is. Who visit the sick, visit Christ; who touch their wounds, touch His; the cup is put to His lips.—E. F. Russell.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
A New Department	6
Modernism and Bolshevism	6
The Rt. Rev. Richard Hooker Wilmer, D. D.—Bishop Winchester	7
Athleting for Christ—C. C. McIntire	8
Favorite Scripture Verse	8
Address of General A. T. Goodwyn	9
The Community Fund—R. C. Flannagan	9
A Christmas Offering—Rev. G. P. Atwater	10
From Bishop MacInnes About Palestine	10
The Peace of God—J. M. Dunbar	10
Bible Questions and Answers	11
Book Reviews	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	16
Children's Department	17
Personal Notes	23

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.

Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.

An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".

Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

St. Christopher's

A Church Boarding and Day School

Richmond, Virginia.

Heathful, beautiful, and historic surroundings. Boarding Department Limited to 50 Boys.

Rate $750.

Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL.D., Headmaster.

Mendham, New Jersey.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

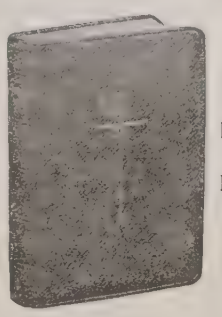
The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of



MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

CLEARTYPE PRAYER BOOKS

LEATHER
DUROTEX
ENTOMAX
CLOTH

MOREHOUSE PUBLISHING CO.
MILWAUKEE

CASSOCKS

Surplices, Stoles, Eucharistic Vestments, Choir Cassocks, Cottas, Ties and Collars, Altar Linens, Materials, Tailoring.

J. M. HALL, Inc.
174 Madison Ave.
(Bet. 33d & 34th Sts.)
New York.

M. P. MOLLER PIPE ORGAN

Guaranteed the Highest Grade.

Endorsed by the most eminent organists.
Built in the world's largest factory.
Every organ a special creation for a particular use.
Moller organs leads all makes for every use.
The Moller "Artiste" reproducing residence organ has no equal in its particular field.
Booklets and specifications upon request.

M. P. MOLLER,
Factory and General Offices,
Hagerstown, Md.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
GOTTSCHALK'S
METAL SPONGE
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
"The Modern Dish Cloth"
—WRITE FOR FULL INFORMATION—
METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
DEPT. G LEHIGH AND MASCHER STREETS PHILA.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Woody's Art Glass Shop

Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street,
Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH

PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

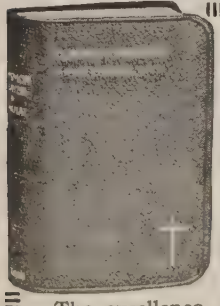
INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,640,152.88

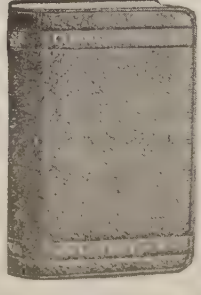
Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Secretary



Church and Sunday School Furniture

THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

CHURCH FURNITURE



Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.

T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

NELSON NEW PRAYER BOOKS

and Hymnals are available in 3 sizes and 150 styles—each one of which is the perfected product of one of the finest book designers in the country.

Four of these styles are illustrated herewith. Note the finely balanced, restrained designs—beautiful and appropriate.

The TYPE and PAPER used in Nelson New Prayer Books and Hymnals are of the finest quality.

The excellence of the BINDINGS is due to the work of our own bindery.

Your bookseller can show you a wide variety of styles. Order from him, or send to us for a complete list if he cannot supply you.

Ask for Nelson Prayer Books and Get the Best

Also, a magnificent edition of ALTAR SERVICES, with Red Rubrics conforming to the New Prayer Book. In handsome and durable bindings.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS—NEW YORK

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
198 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"It is a vain and impious thought to imagine that I can do anything by my own strength. Dependence upon God, in every single act of thinking and willing, is both my duty and security."

"The commonplace is God's workshop."

"It takes a very little of this world to satisfy the man who is satisfied with God."

There is no failure more heart-breaking and disastrous than success which leaves God out of the bargain.—G. Campbell Morgan.

Putting emphasis on the hereafter should make all the more significant the life of the present.—Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D.

Those who would obtain the promises of God must trust Him and obey Him, and through them blessings will come more marvelous than they have dared to dream.—Rev. C. R. Erdman, D. D.

So live today that, when tomorrow comes,
Thou shalt not cloud the sun with vain regret;
But let thy hand and heart commit those deeds
That love for man and faith in God beget.
—Osgood Elliott.

The Lord's answers to prayer are infinitely perfect, and eternity will show that often when we were asking for a stone that looked like bread, He was giving us bread that to our short-sightedness looked like a stone.—Selected.

The Bulgarians are said to have among their sayings the following proverb: "Who lives in sin is buried alive."

God spends a summer on a rose
Which plays a simple role;
An age—upon each stream that flows;
Forever—on a soul.
—Howard W. Pope.

"There is a real sense in which man is great, so great as to be second only to God. Granting that man is a being in which much that was best is burned out of him in the fires of passion and of vice, as in the autumn you have seen your last night's genial campfire reduced to gray ashes in the morning. Yet even in such ashes there are buried coals of living fire. You may scatter them, trample them, extinguish them; or you may gather them, blow on them, see them becoming red, heap dry leaves on them, and see the curling smoke suddenly burst into white flame. Every old huntsman knows the latent greatness of hot ashes."

All helps are like stairs. No man ever uses stairs to sit down on, but to go up higher with. The means of grace are merely so many stepping stones to something higher, which is the chief thing—that we may have the lineaments, the disposition and the character of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Beecher.

VIRGINIA TRUST COMPANY
RICHMOND, VA.
THE SAFE EXECUTOR

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.,
Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 2, 1929. No. 44.

RABBLE

"And that they passed by railed on Him, wagging their heads and saying, Ah, Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save Thyself and come down from the cross. Likewise, also, the chief priests, mocking, said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; Himself He can not save."

Average memories recall four outstanding descriptions of conduct of the rabble, the mob, mankind assembled governed and swayed by mere human passions and impulses and the physical senses. Two of these descriptions, in the Scriptures, tell tersely and simply of facts. Two are brilliantly imaginative narratives based on facts.

The Jewish rabble at Sinai rebelled against Moses, while he was beyond its sight, on a mission of which it did not know, forgot and ignored the successive miracles by which the delivered nation had been preserved through desert and sea and guided toward the land of promise. It clamored for the flesh pots of Egypt and constructed for worship the golden calf—something it could see and feel and price. The rabble at Jerusalem, a thousand years later, railed at and mocked the Son of God while He endured long agonies for the redemption and salvation of humanity. Doubtless some of the same lips that had shouted "Hosanna in the highest" at the Saviour's triumphal entrance to the city, but a little while before, screamed execration and taunt as He hung on the Cross. Less than a century preceding the crucifixion at Jerusalem Caesar, in Rome, was acclaimed hysterically by the rabble. The assassins of Caesar were as noisily applauded by the same rabble a few days later. Shakespeare portrays vividly the swift changes of the rabble from boisterous fury against the dead and lately idolized ruler and adulation of Brutus to frenzy for vengeance on Brutus and renewed reverence for Caesar. Dickens, in "Barnaby Rudge", gives graphic word pictures of the huge London mob, of the eighteenth century, gathered to uphold the Protestant Church and joining in ribald song, wild drunkenness and debauchery, theft, incendiarism and murder.

(Incidentally, how strongly these two real and powerful masters of knowledge of human nature contrast with our busy, pretentious exponents and professors of psychology, the so-called science so fashionable now with the rabble, who in attempted dealing with an enormous subject creep and crawl as feebly and purposelessly and mew faintly as so many new-born blind kittens.)

So, we see the rabble as it has been and as it is. Always it has included many assuming to be profoundly learned and vastly superior and intelectual. Even Aaron went with the mob at Sinai. High priests and scribes, educational and intellectual leaders of their time, joined in the mockery of Calvary. Brutus and Antony alternately sought the favor and appealed to the shallow emotion of the Roman populace. Men in high places and reputed as statesmen and Churchmen approved, or pretended to approve, the outbreak of the Lord George Gordon riots. Today heads supposed to contain much wisdom are wagged and voices widely heard rail on the Crucified Redeemer, reject His divinity, question His existence, scoff at His authority and miracles and teaching because He did not save nor spare Himself, follow the many miracles of mercy by destroying and rebuilding the temple.

Each of us is entrusted by the Creator with the task and responsibility of self construction and regulation. We are the captains and guides of our own souls. To the rabble soul, parched or frozen, starved, drugged, stunted, vitiated, by neglect, wanton ignorance, vanity, folly, unrestrained lusts and passions, the character and sacrifice of the Christ are incomprehensible, inconceivable, incredible; His death and resurrection impossibilities. This rabble soul is unable to realize the grandeur and magnificent beauty of Omnipotent Power humbled to submit to contempt and contumely and to undergo privation, persecution and fearful suffering to save, and ennoble sinful, ungrateful and rebellious creatures and children.

Soul, mind and body are joined mysteriously. All the delving of science fails to discover their contacts. Human life consists of struggle of the three for dominance. Victory of the passions and appetites of the body or mind means stifling and suppression of the soul. There are gluttonies, excesses, follies, frivolities, wallowing in filth, of the mind as of the body, debasing, enervating, destroying. Alike, they blight the glory and kill the aspirations of the soul, which is the element of our being, making us superior to other animals. When the soul is conquered coarse materialism, gross selfishness, purblind vision, low standards of thought and conduct, rule and the rabble acquires a recruit, however careful refinement of manner and speech and prodigious the store of learning may be. The chief priests and scribes were social, political, intellectual, and ecclesiastical superiors, haughtily confident of their own greatness and infallibility. They could no more grasp the majesty and beauty of Divinity and Divine compassion and love than could the ordinary rabble with conquered and dead souls, swarming and rioting in the streets and slums. Of the same kind and quality as the high priests and scribes are the materialists and scoffers of the present, inside and outside the pulpits and colleges, estimating divinity and infinity by their own infiinitesimally small standards and our narrow human knowledge and experience, endeavoring to measure eternity by minutes.

Each of us must determine and decide for ourselves whether we shall trust and worship the Eternal and Omnipotent God, or our own fragile and briefly sojourning selves; whether our souls shall be slain within us here, or shall live and govern and lead us upward. We must choose our companionship. The easy and deadly way is to sink into the rabble, in which the most elaborately cultivated and the absolutely uncultivated minds are on the same low level, and pass by the Cross, railing and mocking. The toilsome way by which we may prove ourselves worthy of existence and mercy is to climb to the foot of the glorified Cross and there adore and offer humble thanks and pray and strive that we may understand and absorb the glory and the beauty of the Divine Love and Sacrifice.

Apart from the rabble, railing and mocking are purified and consecrated souls, to be found everywhere, many of them amid lowly surroundings, a Heaven-born aristocracy, perhaps wearing shabby clothing and in poor dwellings, of obscure ancestry, debarred from the education of books and schools, but intimate with the supreme lesson, endowed with riches beyond our powers of computation, assured of inheritance eternally splendid. Souls so purified and consecrated by the blessing and mercy of the Almighty, responsive to fervent prayer and seeking and striving, are in all stations, places and conditions. Far above the ignoble rabble of callous unbelief and mockery and its tumults and discords of alternating acclamation and execration, amid all the changes and chances and vicissitudes and tribulations of this mortal life, these souls abide in serene and comforting light. And presently they will pass on into new and lovelier ineffable light, which never shall be obscured, to happiness and peace never to be marred, to the unending democracy of the communion of saints redeemed.

Alfred B. Williams.

A NEW DEPARTMENT.

Beginning with this issue, The Southern Churchman inaugurates a new department in the form of an Open Forum or Question Box, for the use of our readers who may wish further light on any Biblical questions in which they are especially interested in any way.

This column is not intended for controversy, but for religious instruction, especially for those who may not be in position to obtain the desired instruction and to which every believer is entitled. We only ask that you be as brief as possible, as our replies must necessarily also be brief, but we will endeavor to make them dependable and strictly in accord with the Word of the Lord, which settles all argument. So let your questions flow in.

MODERNISM AND BOLSHEVISM.

Modernism: Modernism is one thing, Modernists are another. The latter are in the main good people who take Modernism to be the spirit of progress, readjusting our beliefs in the light of science. But the real inwardness of Modernism is beginning to come out. Vice-President Marshall noticed the resemblance between Modernism and Bolshevism. Now it occurs to some that an enemy, wishing to overthrow Christian governments, if he were wise enough, would first undermine faith in the Bible on which Christendom is based. Then we notice the part played by so-called "Kultur" in the World War.

With such thoughts in mind we are prepared to accept what seems to be an authoritative statement of the objective of Modernism. The Protocols make such statements as the following:

"We have taken good care long ago to discredit the clergy and thereby destroy their mission, which at present might hamper us considerably" (Prot. XVII). "The intellectual Gentiles will pride themselves on their knowledge, and without verifying it logically, apply all this scientific information of directing the education of their minds along lines suited to our needs" (Prot. II). "Do not think that these statements are empty words. Note the successes we have had with Darwinism, Marxism and Neitscheism" (Prot. II): "We have misled, stupefied, and demoralized the youth of the Gentiles by means of education in principles and theories patently false to us" (Prot. II). "We have convinced the Gentiles that 'progress" is leading all to a reign of reason" (Prot. III). "To destroy all collective forces except our own, we will weaken the universities—the faculties will be appointed with especial care and will be placed in such a position that they will be dependent completely on the government" (Prot. XVI). "We will adopt for ourselves the liberal side of all parties and all movements" (Prot. V). "We must undermine faith, eradicate from the minds of the Gentiles the very principle of God and soul" (Prot. IV).

"The International Jew" has this passage (Vol. IV, p. 47): "The defenders of the faith have fought long and valiantly against the inroads made by so-called Higher Criticism, but were sadly incapacitated in their defense because they did not see that its origin and purpose were Jewish. Let the Christian minister who wishes to know the source of Jewish influence in the Church look over the names of the most notorious "German Higher Critics" of the Bible, and consider their race. Add to them one Frenchman, an atheist and a Jew, and you have the modern "liberal" sources very complete: Wellhausen, Strauss, Ewald. Kuehne, Hitzig, Renan."

That this is bona-fide, that those Illuminati and Communists were packing the theological institutions—which would be easy, as the German institutions are under government control—is the only hypothesis that accounts for the "signs of the times".

It is humiliating to think that Christianity has been scared out of its senses by the bogey of propaganda scholarship. But a little discernment shows that men of today who lean towards Modernism are soon boosted in the papers as "learned" or "a great scholar", their books get into the schools, and the public bow at their feet.

Bolshevism in the Church: In the churches men of Modernist leanings are boosted into the highest places, though the rank and file of both preachers and members are still loyal. New York is the distributing center. The Rev. Walter Scott Elliott, Patriotic Instructor of William McKinley Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, quotes Boucke White as saying, "I am a graduate of . . . Seminary (In New York) and I wish to speak a word for that institution. Some of my comrades of the Revolution look coldly on the seminary up there. They regard the men engaged in modern Biblical scholarship as a set of academic owls, quite blind to and unconcerned with the economic upheaval of our time, but they are vastly in error. The professors at . . . . are doing more than any other group to advance Social Revolution. Professors A, B, C, D, at . . . . Yes, and Pres. D. himself are deserving a place alongside Karl Marx, for in their discoveries as to the real, the social meanings of the Biblical writings, they are planting mines of social dynamite underneath this civilization of massive property rights to blow up the whole apparatus."

A committee representing the Presbyterian Churches of New York established a place intended to draw together the church and the laboring man, calling it "The Labor Temple". Now, it has come to light that the most notorious radicals were speaking on its platform.

The Federal Council of Churches has shown decided Communistic leanings. See their Bulletin of April 7, 1923, issued by the "Research Department, Commission on Church and Social Service".

The writer has a personal letter from another New York Organization, affiliating with the Federal Council, the Fellowship of Reconciliation. They use this language: "We feel sure that insofar as our present industrial system exploits personality and puts the profit motive first, it must be done away." What does this mean if not revolution against our government?

The American Defense Society, in a book, "Reds in America", expose a number of popular pulpiteers. For instance, they say: "The President of the American Civil Liberties Union is . . . . the preacher whose utterances in the Methodist textbook on radicalism caused a scandal. He was formerly connected with the Boston School of Theology, is a teacher of Christian ethics at Union Theological Seminary and has been a leading factor in the Interchurch World Movement and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. His sympathy and cooperation with Socialists, I. W. W., radical and other anti-American movements have been notable."

The Defense Society in a pamphlet, "La Follette Socialism Communism", mention that this same gentleman drafted the social creed which was adopted by the Feedral Council.

The interdenominational movements now rarely if ever mention the eternal verities, creation, sin, redemption, resurrection. Their utterances are usually thinly veiled Communism. Take this from the Stockholm Conference. "In the name of the Gospel we have affirmed that industry should not be based solely on the desire for individual profit, but that it should be conducted for the service of the community."—Selected.

THE RIGHT REVEREND RICHARD HOOKER WILMER, D. D., SECOND BISHOP OF ALABAMA

By the Right Reverend James R. Winchester, D. D.

"The living are the only dead;
The dead live—never more to die;
And often when we mourn them fled,
They never were so nigh."

REFLECTING upon my early ministry, as a young Presbyter, in the Diocese of Alabama, associations with my beloved Bishop Wilmer, burst up like refreshing fountains in memory, then joyously empty themselves into the ocean of infinite love. There was much in his ancestral life and education in keeping with my own that made me congenial to him. His forebears, like mine, came from England and settled on the Eastern Shore, the garden spot of Maryland, in the middle of the seventeenth century. Both families were devoted to the Church of England; and then his education, like my own, was in Virginia. His parents moved to the historic town of Alexandria, Virginia, where he was born and trained for his wonderful work in life. His birthday and mine were on The Ides of March. The year of his birth was 1816 at a time when the religious life in Virginia was full of trepidation. Until June 14, 1900, the date of his home-going into Paradise, from his beautiful earthly abode at Spring Hill, Alabama, his life was eventful at every step. Between his birth and death we can recognize the most crucial history of our Church and country. His matured manhood confronted those trying days with clear judgment, indomitable will and Christian fortitude, presenting an example worthy to be followed by all, "who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth".

I have recently re-read three volumes bearing upon his splendid mission in God's service, which have thrilled me with new interest in his wonderful work. First among these books is "The Recent Past", his volume of reminiscences, prepared for his grandchildren. In it we find the experiences of a great soul. He spoke to me very freely of its contents when I was with him, and between the lines I can now read the stories he was accustomed to tell. I had the good fortune to get the lessons, as one of his children, long before a single line was penned. I treasured this volume and wish my own grandchildren to profit by its pages.

Next, "The Biography," by Dr. Walter Whittaker, one of his beloved clergymen, is a very accurate delineation of this famous Bishop, deserving a place in the library of our American Churchmen.

The third volume, that makes a graphic companion with thees two volumes, is that by Bishop Cheshire of North Carolina, "The Church in the Confederate States". It recounts the trials that came to the Church in consequence of the Civil War, in which Bishop Wilmer had no small part. Dr. Whittaker's History of the Church in Alabama is a final supplement to the three volumes above mentioned, whereby we have an accurate account of the courageous course Bishop Wilmer pursued in bringing about the readjustment of the dioceses of the whole Church into peace and harmony. His work was well-nigh the sacrifice of his life, for what he loved above all else, namely, the Church of God. I feel that we of the South owe a debt of gratitude to Bishop Wilmer that can never be paid.

John Drinkwater gives this striking sentence in his interesting book, "The Life of Charles James Fox". The great English statesman, Fox, said, "I have learned more from Burke's conversations than from all the books I have ever read." These terse words express the sentiment of my soul regarding my Father-in-God, at whose feet I sat, as the young clergyman, after leaving Richmond, where I had been assistant to the Rev. Dr. Joshua Peterkin, the close friend of Bishop Wilmer. His name was a household word in Richmond, as was that of Dr. Peterkin; and also in the whole Diocese of Virginia, where his ministry, up to the time of his consecration, as Bishop, had been spent. He was remembered in Virginia as one of the most forceful preachers and beloved pastors. Grace Church, Berryville, was greatly blessed with these two wonderful men of God as their rectors—both carried through life sweetest memories of the people of that paradise of "the Old Dominion", where I found my Spiritual "help-meet" for the work God has enabled me to do. With such distinction we do not wonder that Alabama elected him as the worthy successor to Bishop Nicholas Hamner Cobbs, known as "The Saint of the Southern Church". It was at a time the guns of war were beginning to deluge the fair Southland with the blood of her noblest sons. After taking part in the Consecration of one he loved very dearly, Bishop Meade fell asleep, leaving to his devoted Wilmer an example, which he ever followed. Clothed in that spiritual armor Wilmer went forth with an unfaltering trust to carry on the spiritual work of the Apostolic Meade, whose memory he revered. He loved, as Meade, the old hymns relating to "Redemption". How vividly I recall the fact that at his convention he insisted upon singing that great hymn, which Bishop Meade had adopted as his convention hymn in Virginia:

"The voice of Free Grace
Cries, Escape to the mountain;
For Adam's lost race
Christ hath opened a fountain."

I have thought how deeply grieved Bishop Wilmer would have been to see those omissions in our Church Hymnal. He delighted in

"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains."

His Theology was based upon "The Thirty-nine Articles", Pearson on The Creed, McIlvaine's "Evidences of Christianity," Butler's "Analogy," Hooker's "Ecclesiastical Polity" and Robertson's "Church History". Naturally, I continued my course of study on these lines, as I had been taught at the Theological Seminary, whose establishment was largely due to his father, Dr. Wilmer. Because his orthodox Theology appealed so strongly to me, I was congenial with him and shared his confidential experiences.

Before his Consecration he had charge of the little Negro Church, St. Philip's, in connection with his rectorship at Emmanuel, Brookhill, just outside of Richmond. He and Dr. Peterkin alike took the liveliest interest in St. Phillip's Mission for the Colored people. As Deacon, I was intrusted with this mission. Doubtless through both Dr. Peterkin and Bishop Wilmer I got a deeper love for the neglected Colored people. It was a neglect due largely to the results of the War Between the States, destroying that close relationship that had existed between the old families of the South and their faithful slaves. With my inherited affection for the old-time "Mammy" and the Gospel love put into my heart, by such men of God as my rector and bishop, and working along the line of my ministry to do my part for them, I entered the Episcopate with the earnest desire to see the establishment of Negro bishops in the Church. Bishop Kinsolving of Texas assisted me in bringing this to pass in Arkansas and the Province of the Southwest, by the election of the first Negro Suffragan Bishop for work in the United States among their race. Our desire had been for a Missionary Bishop rather than a Suffragan. It was all we could get; but I hope the day is not far distant when our whole country will have Negro Missionary Bishops, with full authority and vote in the House of Bishops. It is what the Church really owes our Colored Brethren. The Suffragan is, therefore, but the stepping stone to the desired end. In Alabama I was in touch with the plantation life of the colored people and I carry happy memories of those days.

When in Richmond, I was a guest of Mr. John Stewart and his family at Brookhill. Mr. Stewart was the warmest friend of Bishop Wilmer. The Bishop was accustomed to speak of Mr. Stewart in a way we should like to hear in these times—"He prayed while I preached."

The Stewart home was the home of "family prayers" and devotion to the duties of the Church. No visitor there could ever forget the holy influences of those "family prayers". We are not surprised, therefore, to see Mr. Stewart Bryan, grandson of Mr. Stewart, as well as the other members of that noble household among the active and practical workers of the Church today. When a friend of Mr. Stewart intimated that he had but one day in the week to visit Mr. Stewart, and said that day was Sunday, Mr. Stewart replied that that was the only day he did not have, as it was "God's day." That was one of Bishop Wilmer's stories to me of that godly layman. How we wish in these days of Sunday golf, baseball and fishing, that our men in the Church could take Mr. Stewart's stand for their Lord and Saviour.

The generosity of Mr. Stewart was proverbial. He supplied his rector with the means to carry on missionary work among the poor, both white and black, and there was no complaint of neglecting his parochial duties. In these days when Evangelism is the note of the Church we need families ready to let their rectors go on missions to nearby neighborhoods and present the Gospel to those neglected. Bishop Wilmer was a soul-winner through his preaching and pastoral visits. His sermon themes are impressed upon my mind. No one ever, in my recollection, presented the Fatherhood of God with such emphasis and winning force. Then the Atonement was given as a personal message to individual men and women. He (as Dr. Peterkin told me) was accustomed to write out his sermon as an individual letter to some man with whom he had talked and finding his doubts, would speak most lovingly to him about those matters. That man was but a type of others in his congregation. I recall his wonderful sermons about the Consolations of the Church, and how all the people hung upon his words. Surely the present-day needs this kind of sermon instead of sensational preaching.

From the day I took charge of the parish of the Holy Cross, at Uniontown, Alabama, until the time I entered upon my duties at Wytheville, Virginia, he was a father to me and Mrs. Winchester, whether in my parish or out of it. He took a delight in my rural work, where we had thirty-six communicants. He knew them by name, and they loved him. He could unbend in the quiet of "the cane-brake" and relate his experiences, leaving in my memory most helpful pictures. No Bishop, in my knowledge, ever stood more devotedly by a young Presbyter than he by me. He opened up spiritual visions to an ardent ministry. His conversations are living realities in my life. I think of him as a minister of Christ with sympathy, humor, courage, faith and love, the real marks of a soul winner. When Mrs. Winchester and I were called to give up our first little child, being far away from our relatives and friends, he wrote these sympathetic words out of his big heart (a heart that had suffered such bereavement in his early ministry), "We long mourn them as our lost lambs. We have learned to speak of them as our saved ones—not lost, nor in vain. Like sunbeams they flit upon our path for a moment, then vanish; yet was it not pleasant to rejoice even for a moment in their presence, and life will ever be the sweeter that they came, even though they tarried not." In my long pastoral ministry I have never forgotten his tender sympathy. It was a pleasure to see him sitting by a troubled soul, pouring into the wounded heart the balm of Gilead. Young people felt that he entered into their innocent recreations as a spiritual father, yet how positively he spoke regarding excessive indulgences of worldly things. I can see his flashing eyes as he forcibly repeated, such a text as "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." There was an emphasis in his Scriptural quotations that we can never find equalled. There was no compromise with social evils in man or woman. While he sympathized with young clergymen and commended their Gospel messages, he had an abhorrence for self-conceit in the pulpit. He told me of a young preacher, who was so satisfied with his discourse on the subject of "Light" that he waited at the Church door for the Bishop to come out and said egotistically, "What did you think of my discourse on Light?" The Bishop replied, "I am rather in the dark regarding light," and walked off. I can imagine had he stopped to discuss the subject of "Light", he would have given the thoughts of Bliss:

"The whole world was lost in the darkness of sin;
The light of the world is Jesus,
Like sunshine at noonday, His glory shown in,
The light of the world is Jesus.

"Come to the light, 'tis shining for thee,
Sweetly the light has dawned upon me—
Once I was blind, but now I can see;
The light of the world is Jesus."

His own preaching was simplicity and humility. He seemed to fill the mind of the hearer with "the love that casteth out fear". While versed in true scientific development he found his ancestors in Eden rather than in a Zoological garden. As Bacon advocated, he entered the kingdom of Science as a little child, just as he entered the Kingdom of Heaven. Humility marked every step of his Christian life. We get a clear idea of the virtue of humility that characterized him when we read the great sermon he preached, and which was printed by request, on "The Pharisee and Publican. The theme of the sermon was Confession of Sin—Not Profession of Religion". He seemed to have embodied the principle of his great predecessor, Bishop Cobbs, who, when asked by a religious enthusiast who had more zeal than discretion, meaning well, "Have you got religion?" replied, "None to boast of."

(To be continued.)

ATHLETING FOR CHRIST.

Phil. 1:27.

"Striving for the Faith of the Gospel."

The great purpose of the Church is to stand fast in one spirit, with one soul striving for the faith of the Gospel. As to the game, the feelings, desires and purposes of each are one, so in the Church, each should surrender his individual interests, and in blessed consecration do team work to win. The goal is the faith of the Gospel.

First, we are to strive to keep the faith of the Gospel in its purity and perfection. It is the content of the Gospel that we are to preserve. We must not permit this doctrine or that to be taken out of the plan of salvation, the very facts that make the Gospel the power of God unto salvation. Some one says, "I do not believe in miracles, because my materialistic philosophy tells me miracles are impossible. Nor do I believe in the Virgin Birth, because my biology does not admit the supernatural." So this person puts out the supernatural merely on the basis of what he knows about materialistic philosophy and about biology. His position is not a new one. This is the situation that obtained in the day of Jonathan Edwards. They all were agnostics. So today the Church must strive not to let them beat back the line. Let us dismiss from the faculties in our schools and colleges and universities any one who teaches a non-Christian philosophy. We are to carry the full Gospel.

Second, we are to strive to keep the faith of the Gospel pure in our own souls. It is faith appropriating Christ, who enables us to overcome the world. We have to watch our faith. To strive properly, we must keep in touch with the Book. "My meat and drink is to do Thy will."

Third, we are to strive to carry the faith of the Gospel "into all the world". The Book is the instrument in which Christ is revealed. Animated by one purpose, the Church is to advance until all men are brought into the knowledge of and the submission to Him. It is given to us to give to others. We keep it as we give it. Is your church dead? Do two things: Teach the Bible to the end of quickening souls and getting men into the kingdom; and, second, have your church take the support of a missionary and pray that some of the boys and girls of your congregation may go as missionaries. Thus a revival will come.

Charles Curtis McIntire.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Sophia Downman Dimmock, of Fredericksburg, Virginia:

"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (1 Thess. 4:14).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

THE PEACE OF GOD.

So long hath the world been weary
Of warring and sorrowful strife;
Not heeding the plea of the Saviour—
Whose word is the "breath of our Live."

His Peace—they were told in the Gloaming,
Was more than their minds could conceive;
Yet still the "Pale Horseman" rides onward,
And the "War-Fate" continues her weave.

Oh! why not blend ever our planning,
Our many endeavors for Peace;
With the ways of the blessed Redeemer,
And so give the war-worn surcease?

When we think of the ruin of Nations,
And multitudes stricken with woe;
Of waysides bereft of their flowers,
And fields furrowed deep by the Foe;

We should Gardeners be for the Maker,
Saving lives for the lands—all seamed,
Make the meadows aglow with new beauty—
Through a world, by His Peace, redeemed.

L'envoi.

May His Peace end the warring of Nations,
Calm the waves of our turbulent will,
Till we vision Christ's hand uplifted,
And hear Him repeating—"Be Still!"

John Mackaye Dunbar.

ADDRESS BY GENERAL A. T. GOODWYN

(Continued from last issue.)

"If the student of history would inform himself of the spirit of the war as waged, we confidently invite him to compare General Sherman's course through Georgia and the Carolinas, with General Lee's course in the invasion of Pennsylvania. He will find that General Sherman, while in quiet possession of Atlanta, expelled from the city thousands of women and children, robbed their homes of all transportable valuables and burned the city to the ground. Continuing his march to Washington, he made a desert forty miles wide through these States, and when he reached Washington was congratulated by the government authorities. The records at Washington and his official staff officers verify these statements. Then let the student read General Lee's orders to his men in Pennsylvania, orders to respect the rights of the citizen in person and property. Here you have a clear indication of two types of men differing in sense of duty.

"I call your attention to an extract from a book by The Century company called Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, Vol. 4, part 2, page 672:

" 'Marching through Georgia and the Carolinas by Daniel Oakey, Captain 2nd Massachusetts Volunteers—"60,000 of us witnessed the destruction of Atlanta while our post band and that of the 33rd Massachusetts played martial airs and operatic selections. It was a night never to be forgotten. Our regular routine was a mere form, and there could be no taps amid the brilliant glare of excitement.'

"It is a well-known fact shown by official records that General Halleck advised Sherman while in Savannah to destroy Charleston. Sherman told him if the army reached there it would be done. General Halleck was a close adviser of the administration during the war. General Butler, in his book, page 871, says of General Halleck: 'I have since learned his character which, as I always speak plainly, I find to be that of a lying, treacherous, hypocritical scoundrel, with no moral sense.'

"Senator Hoar, in the Senate the second of June, 1900, said, 'The courts-martial during the Civil War were a scandal to the civilized world'.

"The murder of Captain Wirtz, commandant of Andersonville prison, by court-martial, was of the vindictive policy of unscrupulous politicians to deceive the good people of the North in regard to the responsibility for the prevailing conditions of war prisons as well as to misrepresent the South in its treatment of war prisoners—apprehensively, knowing they themselves were legally and morally responsible for the painful conditions prevailing in prisons. These claims are clearly illustrated by these indisputable facts:

"First—The government at Washington was responsible for the accumulation of prisoners on both sides by refusing to exchange prisoners.

"Second—Contrary to all civilized warfare, medical supplies were made contraband of war by the government at Washington.

"Third—When pressing need for medical supplies was urged by the prisoners, the Confederate authorities informed the Washington government, and asked that such supplies be sent. These were refused on the plea that such supplies would be used for Confederates.

"Fourth—The Confederate authorities renewed the request, asking that their own surgeons be sent to administer to the need of the prisoners. This humane proposition was declined.

"Fifth—The Confederate government then sent a committee of prisoners from Andersonville to the authorities at Washington to report the distressing condition prevailing in the prisons. The authorities at Washington refused to receive them.

"Sixth—The Confederate government then requested the Washington government to send and get the sick prisoners, and it was about four months before this was done. In view of these facts, where was the legal and moral responsibility for the suffering and death of the men in all prisons—North and South?

"The war records in Washington show that a larger per cent of Confederate soldiers died in Northern prisons than Northern soldiers in Southern prisons.

"The age-long system of negro slavery became involved in the controversy, but the sectional historians do not tell you that Old England and New England for generations had a practical monopoly of the African slave trade, and that both were enriched by this nefarious traffic. They do not tell you that the British Parliament, after a full discussion of the slavery question, abolished the African slave trade on the 5th of March, 1807, and thirty-one years thereafter every slave in the British Empire had been made free by a deliberate act of Parliament a great moral revolution attained by statesmanship, and not by the inflamed passions of bigotry. England paid $150,000,000 approximately, as compensation for the slaves, and in many places the event was celebrated by planters and freed men together. Congress abolished the African slave trade in 1788, but the act was amended at the earnest solicitation of New England slave traders, not to be effective until twenty years thereafter. During these intervening years many thousands of slaves were imported by these enterprising slave traders. The partisan historians do not tell you that a slave ship was never owned nor controlled by a Southern man. They do not tell you that these traders' moral sense was dormant until after they had converted their slaves into gold, nor do they tell you there were more abolition societies in the South than in the North until the extreme fanatics had created apprehension in the South by their demonstrations and declared purposes. The official records show that at one period Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, had 170 vessels engaged in the African slave trade. John Brown, of notorious history, with a band of deluded followers, seized the arsenal at Harpers Ferry in 1859, with a sword in one hand and a torch in the other, declaring his purpose to incite the negroes to insurrection. This reckless declaration in the light of history created great excitement throughout the country and very grave apprehension in the South.

"He was tried by a court of Virginia, convicted as a felon and executed under the laws of the State. When his remains were transported through many Northern cities the church bells were tolled in his honor. A motion in the Massachusetts Legislature to adjourn in his honor was defeated by a small majority. These increasing manifestations of utter disregard of law and order excited still graver apprehension which tended to precipitate the war.

"The negroes in the mass during the war were faithful and dutiful. Our women and children everywhere felt safe and protected, remaining on the plantations while fathers and husbands were in the army. I cannot recall an instance of a serious misdeed during the four years of the war. We owe them a debt of gratitude and esteem for their faithfulness during that period. The race problem is a vital one with us today, especially the negro race problem. Let us see to it that they have full justice in the protection of their life, liberty and property, and appeal to their true leaders to join with us in promoting the identity of both races by inflexible social lines that are necessary to accomplish this result.

"Here is an extract from Jefferson Davis' last speech in the United States Senate. "The union of these States forms, in my judgment, the best government instituted among men. It is only necessary to carry it out in the spirit in which it was formed. Our fathers made a union of friendly States—now hostility has been substituted for fraternity. I call on men who have hearts and who love the Union, to look the danger in the face. This Union is dear to me as a union of fraternal States. Long have I offered propositions for equality in the Union—not a single Republican has voted for them. We have in vain endeavored to secure tranquility and obtain respect for the rights to which we are entitled—as a necessity, not a choice, we have resorted to the remedy of separation. We have never asked for concessions; what we wanted was justice. Our beloved President of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, conducted a righteous war, a war declared by Lord Wolseley, field marshal of the British Empire, to have been conducted with most remarkable ability, on the highest plane of chivalry and humanity, and he said under his own signature that every Confederate soldier should be proud of his part in it.

(To be continued.)

THE COMMUNITY FUND A CHRISTIAN DUTY.

Roy C. Flannagan.

The Churchpeople of America need no sermon upon support for Community Fund work, such as that done in Richmond, and other Southern cities, knowing as they do, that such humanitarian service is a direct result of the teachings of the Great Sociologist.

Christ knew that it was futile to preach to a man or woman who was in physical or mental distress. He knew also that a human being, relieved by kindness of a burden of unhappiness, is in himself an eloquent sermon to his fellow men.

The agencies of a community fund, while in no way interfering with the program of the churches, largely contribute to the end toward which all of Christianity is directed.

Christian people recognize in the whole community fund movement an element in that magnificent chain, the first link of which was forged on Galilee.

Their prime duty to Christianity is a duty to their fellow men and a task performed and a contribution made to their fellow man and is another step toward the ultimate ideal of Christianity.

A CHRISTMAS OFFERING.

George P. Atwater,
Rector Grace Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The National Church seems to be facing a financial crisis. And the sufferers will be the devoted men and women who have made sacrifices to work in the far-flung mission fields.

One of the difficulties of the situation is that under the present system no one can give a dollar to the missionaries without giving several dollars to all sorts of general and diocesan projects.

I would like to propose in this crisis, that the members of the Church be asked to make a Christmas offering, to be used exclusively to establish a fund that would guarantee that no missionary under jurisdiction of the National Council, should suffer a cut in salary in 1930.

I would suggest that each parish and mission should be asked to give a sum at Christmas equivalent to one dollar for each communicant.

Each adult member should be asked to give one or two dollars, and each child fifty cents.

We have at least 1,200,000 members. A fund of a million dollars might seem possible.

I have no doubt that countless persons would welcome the chance to make a Christmas gift of this sort, that would directly benefit the workers in mission fields. This fund would also prove of benefit to the system, under which we operate.

A good, live campaign, with heart interest and with provision for widespread enjoyment of a victory, would appeal to the temper of our people. It should come to their attention as a trumpet call, and interest in the total result should be stimulated. If the goal of one million dollars is reached, every parish should have a thanksgiving service.

Let us put a little spirit of adventure and combat into such a campaign. There is scarcely a member who could not spare a dollar or two at Christmas. Most of us spend that much and more, for trivial purposes.

Such a united Christmas effort would also serve to educate and interest the people in the big systematic plans for providing for the missions of the Church.

I have made this suggestion in one form or other every year for five years. Is it not worth a trial?

A good central committee, acting promptly, could prepare the Church for the great compelling effort. The publicity ought to put the Church on tiptoe of expectation for the final result.

Four things ought to be emphasized:

(1) Heart Appeal.
(2) The human interest.
(3) The Christmas generosity.
(4) The rejoicing in victory.

We have had enough weeping and wailing and beseeching over our failures. People give and hear no more of it until they receive word that they did not give enough. Can we not change the psychological mood of our efforts? Let us have a victory with the shouting and celebration and a sense of triumph and achievement.

Let us give on Christmas and learn the result by Epiphany, and begin the year with a sense that the work is secure for a year, and that we can endeavor to raise the quota with a light heart.

So here's the slogan. A Christmas Gift to Protect our Missionaries.

FROM BISHOP MACINNES, ABOUT PALESTINE.

Although the situation between Moslems and Jews in Palestine has fortunately lost its front-page acuteness, it is not far below the surface in the prayers and thoughts of all who care about the Church's great missionary problems in Judaism and Islam.

Bishop MacInnes, English Bishop in Jerusalem, can be trusted to say the constructive thing, in his quarterly paper, Bible Lands, which is always of special interest to the many friends he made when visiting this country. He has been in England. Writing from there on September 25, he says:

Some six weeks will have passed since the trouble broke out in Palestine, before this number of Bible Lands can reach our subscribers. All will have read in the daily press everything that can profitably be said at present about the actual events and their origins. But, alas! a great deal more has been published in papers of every kind, which can only be classed as utter nonsense. I have been astonished to see what wild and entirely false statements have been made in letters to the papers. . . . .

In this quarterly letter, however, I do not intend to enter into these matters. For one reason, I doubt if any one man is at present competent to state the case both fully and correctly. Certainly I am not. For another, the Government has appointed an important Commission of able and unbiassed men, whose business it is to collect the facts, and issue a report. We shall all do well to await the result of their investigations.

There can be no doubt whatever the blame does not rest on one side alone. There has undoubtedly been serious and constant provacation on the one side and inexcusable violence on the other. All alike must now suffer. The clock of progress has been put back an incalculable length of time in Palestine by the disturbances of the last few weeks. Both Jews and Moslems, amongst whom these differences and prejudices have broken out, must strive to put away the past and work together for the country they both love. There is no other patriotism. Neither modern civilization nor Christian ethics allow of it.

How earnestly one longs that those who have lately been antagonists will realize that their common interests lie largely along the same lines. It is not by the success of one side in winning an advantage over the other that the good of Palestine will be advanced, but by their common striving for the common good. In the chequered history of Palestine it appears that this has always been the hardest lesson to learn. Let us all use every effort to learn it now.

There is one point in which all our readers will find satisfaction. These grievous events have practically not touched the Christian Community at all, either native or foreign, Palestinian or British. The bitterness and violence have been only between the Moslems and Jews. The Christians have neither taken part nor been molested. Only a very few have been killed or wounded accidentally or in the course of police duty. Let us hope that the Palestinian Christians will continue to keep equally aloof from the storm of recriminations, abuse and violent accusations, which has now broken out. Nay, more, let us all pray that they and we may be given many opportunities—and grace to use the opportunities—of acting as peace-makers and actively working to bring about the creation of a new spirit of humility and sympathy and brotherliness amongst those who, living in the same small country, have hitherto been so terribly estranged. Of course nothing in the world but the spirit of Christ, to be followed and fostered first by those who bear His Name, can possibly bring this about.

Another point of encouragement is this—These troubles show that our missionary colleges and schools are the very means wanted more than almost anything else at the present time to help towards bringing these unruly passions and violent disagreements to an end. It may be claimed without the slightest doubt that no other colleges and schools than those run by the missionary societies have so much effect in moulding the minds and characters of the young men and young women, the boys and girls of Palestine and bringing them into such relations with each other as make future quarrels between them impossible. No other institutions are open in the same way as ours are to all alike, Christians and Jews and Moslems, and numbers of all three communities do actually come to us. No distinctions of any sort nor differences of treatment are made between the adherents of the three great religious bodies. To all alike we teach the Bible and the life character and example of Jesus Christ. Without trying to use undue pressure, nor endeavoring to persuade any boy or girl to change their religion, we do try by precept and by practice to inculcate the spirit of Christ into their hearts.

In all their Bible and school lessons they are working together. On the same fields they are playing together. They get to know and to like each other. Over and over again we find that lifelong friendships are being made. With every year that passes do I appreciate more highly the civilizing, peace-making value of these colleges and schools. . . . . .

I deeply regret having been away and, therefore, unable to share with them all in the uncertainties of these anxious days, and if it were not for a busy round of services and meetings at which I am booked to speak during the next three weeks, I should go at once. I hope, however, to get back to Jerusalem at the end of the month (October).

BIBLE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

(Our readers are invited to send in their questions from time to time concerning Scriptural subjects in which they are perplexed or desire light. Our limited space necessitates brevity in questions, as well as in the answers which we will endeavor to maintain in strict accord with the Word of the Lord, which, after all, settles all argument. This column is therefore not for controversy, but for a testimony.)

Question No. 1.—What reply should I give to one who asks for evidence that the Bible is the Word of God?—B. T. J., Mt. Airy.

Answer.—There are a multitude of Scriptural replies that may be made which should cause any fair-minded person to think and believe. Here are four:

1. God declares the Holy Scriptures to be His own Words to man. See 2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Peter 1:21.

2. It is imperishable. Isa. 40:8; Psalm 119:89.

3. Its marvelous transforming power. Heb. 4:12; Psalm 119:105.

4. Its preciousness to the believer. Psalm 107:9; Psalm 139:17.

Question No. 2.—Is it not too presumptuous for a Christion to say that he "knows he is saved?"—Miss G. F. Tioga.

Answer.—No. God's plan of salvation extends the right for a believer to know he is saved and to make it known. Eternal life is a gift to be accepted or rejected. If you believe John 3:16, then turn to John 5:24 and see what you have. If you are still in doubt, turn to Romans 10:9. If still in need of assurance turn again to 1 John 5:13, which was "written that ye may know that ye have eternal life". Do not, however, confuse the gift of eternal life with rewards for service. See 1 Col. 3:11.

Book Reviews

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL: WHAT IS IT? By Philip Mauro. Cloth. Pp. 261. Published by Hamilton Brothers, Boston, Mass. Price, $2.00.

The present reviewer, having known and loved and carried on his prayer-list for over a quarter of a century the author of this book, may well feel deep reluctance to treat it critically. Mr. Mauro has brought to his task a clear penetration, the legal acumen for which he is so well known, and the profound love of the truth which characterizes all his publications.

From his premises he reaches his conclusions with satisfying assurance. Others have done that in this very field. The spiritualizing of the (to us) evidently intended literal promises has been and is an almost universal procedure. The Jews to this day insist that the Messianic references in the prophecy of Isaiah are not personal but national; Isaiah 53, they claim, never was and never will be fulfilled in a person. His quotation of Augustine leads us to the appreciation of the period following the allegorizing of the simple truths of the Word of God by the metaphysical Origen. The whole Christian Church felt the influence of that method of treating the Scriptures; and Augustine was not an exception, though living much later.

If all the Old Testament predictions for the nation are nil, save as each Israelite accepts the New Testament Gospel and is made a member of the Body of Christ there, and no provision is made for that august manifestation of the King of Israel, which is indicated by the promises in the prophets, how can we account for the preservation of the race in spite of all that has been done by Gentile nations and the persecuting Church to utterly exterminate it? The decay of all the nations of the great past who over-powered and ruled that race, the acknowledged blessing which has come to those nations which have kindly treated that race, impel us to regard its continuance, in even facial characteristics, as well as manner of life and disposition, as the ethnological miracle.

Lord Balfour's influence in accepting from the League of Nations the mandate of Palestine must have generated in his profound regard for the prophecies of the nation's restoration. Certainly, there are many who believe this; and numbers of the people of England cherish the privilege that country has of homing the Zionists.

If there is coming a day when the Lord Jesus will "pour upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and supplication" (Zech. 12:10); if that day will be the fulfillment of His own prediction, "Ye shall not see me until ye say, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord'" (Matt. 23:37-39), why not a nation to be thus treated? If the Turkish government allowed but three hundred Jews to dwell within the precincts of the Holy City up to the year 1845, and now there are quite one hundred thousand, is there no significance in the fact? Did our Lord come to His Temple (Mal. 3:1-4) and purify the sons of Levi when He was presented there at the time of His circumcision (Luke 2:21-38), as is so constantly taught, or is there another event in perspective? If out of Zion is to go forth the law and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem (Isa. 2:1-5), was that accomplished in the earth-life of our Lord, or is it being done now in a spiritual sense? Has the world yet come to that glad day herein embraced when the nations shall not learn war any more? And can we disassociate that promise of international peace from the locality which is described as the very source and center of its beneficence?

On the title page, Mr. Mauro implies that we who hold to the view he is seeking to discredit are giving heed to Jewish fables (Titus 1:14). Does he honestly believe that it was just that which the Apostle had in mind? Will he turn to 2 Peter and see (2 Peter 1:16-21) that "cunningly devised fables" lie rather in the sphere of a repudiation of "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ", as linked with the "more sure word of prophecy?"

But nothing is gained by controversy. If Mr. Mauro is right, we who are wrong have lost but little. His method would be an easy way to release us from much study and prayer in connection with the approaching age for which the poor world is unconsciously hungering. But we prefer to follow the saintly men and women who have lived for and loved this very consummation of the plan of God to reverse the insult of Calvary's Cross by lawfully enthroning the Son of David as the "King of the Jews."

God bless Philip Mauro and make him a shining light. He has been such and we may trust him to continue.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

PLACEMENT OF THE CLERGY.

Mr. Editor:

At the Synod of the Province of New England, recently held in Hartford, I was unlucky enough to introduce the following resolutions:

Whereas, a plan for the Placement of the Clergy has been submitted to the Church with the request for criticism; be it,

Resolved: That the principle of constitutional compulsory consultation with a committee or bureau, diocesan or preferably provincial or national, properly equipped for a scientific survey of men and conditions, be indorsed by this Synod; be it, however,

Resolved, That in every case the self-supporting parish shall retain as its inalienable right the selection of its own rector and, subject to the rights of its rector as expressed in the parish constitution, its assistant clergy; and, be it,

Further Resolved, That in other matters contemplated by the above-referred-to Memorial the rights of National and Provincial Bodies be safeguarded.

After being generously seconded by the Secretary of the Province, whom I had inadvertently prevented from presenting a more detailed, carefully worked-out set of resolutions, my resolutions encountered stormy weather. First, the bishops were inclined to think that lese majesty had been committed, and one gentleman in orders declared the resolutions "pernicious".

May I be permitted by your courtesy briefly to point out that most of the antagonism to the plan above suggested rests upon a patent misapprehension? What I have in mind is no Placement Bureau at all, but rather a Fact-finding Agency, which would leave everything else functioning about as hitherto, but with the addition of sufficient light to insure functioning at the maximum of efficiency. This instrument, preferably national and under the supervision of an officer elected by the General Convention with a sufficient salary to attract an adequately trained man, should be available for such thorough-going and impartial investigation as that undertaken, e. g., by the Carnegie Foundation in its recent inquiry into college athletics.

Most bishops would doubtless be grateful for reliable data on which to base their own approval of or their moral veto on a vestry call. Should it be objected that a man's record, if bad, might work hardship to him, let the old longing, "that the ministry be not blamed", have greater weight than misplaced sympathy for one who might bring discredit upon the Church and religion.

Let it be remarked somewhat incidentally that compulsory resignation at the retiring age of sixty-eight, but not compulsory acceptance of the resignation would help very greatly toward making it possible for a man over fifty to secure the work for which his intellectual and spiritual maturity might fit him.

On the whole subject, let us not be deterred by any fears from the endeavor to correct evils far greater than any possible hardships or injustices which might conceivably be caused by the endeavor.

Albert L. Whittaker.

Northeast Harbor, Maine.

Church Intelligence

The Church in Porto Rico.

St. Catherine's School in San Juan, Porto Rico, training young women to carry on Church work among their own people, has survived the difficulties and inconveniences of temporary quarters and expects to move into its new building in November. Not since the school was started four or five years ago, has it been housed in quarters that permitted the effective work desired by Miss Robinson, its head, and the others connected with it. This new building is one toward which the last United Thank Offering appropriated $25,000.

St. John's Church, which is to provide for three congregations, American, West Indian and Porto Rican, will be opened by Christmas time, and will thereafter be in use all day Sunday and on every week-day.

Bishop Colmore, now in New York, brings word that all but five thousand dollars has been provided toward the total cost ($80,000) of these first two units of the new Church center in San Juan.

A theological seminary is to be provided at the earliest possible time, to continue and enlarge the work which has already produced results in training native men for the ministry. The few men who have been trained and ordained have done invaluable work.

Although the Roman Church is in every city, the country districts, densely populated with poor and ignorant people, have the utmost need of religious care, and welcome not only the Sacraments and services of the Church, but every influence that will provide better conditions for them and especially for their children. With the public schools in many, many places providing only two or three primary grades, simple parish schools attached to country chapels are a power for good; and with wide regions where hygiene is unknown and no medical aid or instruction is available, a little clinic and a visiting nurse can raise the standards of whole communities from their dangerously low level.

To provide a native ministry, and native teachers and medical workers, Church-trained, is the policy of the mission in Porto Rica. Here, as in other fields, the foreign missionary, essential to the work of training leaders and directing them in the early years, cannot do the permanent work for which the people must have their own leaders. Besides the two Bishops, there are now eight native clergy at work, and six young men waiting to begin training. There are four American clergy, not including the staff in the Virgin Islands. St. Catherine's has already graduated half a dozen young women who are in parish or educational work. In the near future the school will probably serve other Spanish-American fields also, as girls from mission schools in other countries can be sent there to receive training for Church work.

The two new buildings are to be completed early in November. The last payment is due on them within thirty days after completion.

All the money needed for repairing the damage done to our mission property in Porto Rico by the hurricane was secured, and nearly all the rebuilding has been completed, with the exception of the hospital in Ponce, for which the architect's plans are now under consideration.

The Diocese of New York now owns a long motion picture film, available to parishes in the diocese, showing much of the Church's work in Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and many views of Porto Rico life and scenery. The film has Bishop Colmore's enthusiastic approval.

A WARNING.

We are informed that two men, one, R. J. Schlueter, a one-armed man, and the other styling himself as W. R. Wallace, are soliciting subscriptions for The Southern Churchman, representing themselves as in the employ of this company, or as being sent by the Bishop of the Diocese. The men are both imposters. They are not in the employ of The Southern Churchman, nor have they been sent by any Bishop. Readers of this paper are warned to have no dealings with them whatever.

Southern Churchman Co.

Cadets Receive Bibles.

Dr. Wm. H. Matthews, General Secretary of the American Tract Society, announces that the Society has just presented the Freshman Class at West Point Military Academy with 417 beautiful Bibles, each stamped in gold with the name of the cadet. These Bibles are used in the English Department and are studied under the direction of Lieut. Col. Wheat, formerly Chaplain of the Academy. For fifty-five years the Society has presented Bibles to the Graduating Class; but during the last three years, it has made a double presentation of Bibles to the Freshman and Sophomore Class for study of the Bible as English, and also to the Graduating Class.

This presentation is made possible by a New York friend of the Society, in memory of her father and mother.

To Elect Presiding Bishop.

There must be sixty-eight members of the House of Bishops present at the Special Meeting of the House of Bishops in Washington, D. C., November 13, or no election of a Presiding Bishop of the Church to succeed the late Bishop Murray can be had.

With only sixty-eight Bishops attending, however, there would be but a bare constitutional majority at hand, and to effect an election a unanimous vote of all those present would be necessary for a choice.

The facts illustrate the importance of the fullest possible attendance of the members of the House of Bishops at the special meeting in Washington.

Section 3, Article I of the Constitution of the Church provides that, "The House of Bishops shall choose one of the Bishops of this Church to be the Presiding Bishop of the Church by a majority of all the Bishops entitled to vote in the House of Bishops."

In the event of the death of the Presiding Bishop, the Section provides further that, " . . . . the Senior Bishop of this Church in order of consecration, having jurisdiction within the United States, shall (unless the date of the next General Convention is within three months) immediately call a special meeting of the House of Bishops to be held within two months to elect a Bishop having jurisdiction in the United States to be the Presiding Bishop."

The total membership of the House of Bishops is	149
Less Suffragan Bishops and two Bishops resigning	14
Total entitled to vote under the Constitution	135
Constitutional majority necessary to a choice	68

Pennsylvania Bishop Sees Error in New Prayer Book.

After the Prayer of Consecration in the Office of the Holy Communion the new Prayer Book just issued contains the words: "And now as our Saviour Christ hath taught us, we are bold to say".

The Constitution provides that changes in the Prayer Book must be proposed in one General Convention and sent to the Secretary of the Convention of every diocese to be made known to the Convention at its next meeting and then adopted by the General Convention at its next succeeding triennial meeting. This phrase was not so adopted at any meeting of the General Convention.

The phrase sent down by the resolve of the General Convention in 1922, and subsequently adopted by a Constitutional majority in 1925, was as follows: "And now as our Saviour Christ hath taught us, let us say".

This phrase then became the authorized use of the Church. It was so printed in all publications of the Order for the Holy Communion as "authorized for use", and has been in use in the Church for the past four years.

An editing committee has no authority to change these words as adopted by General Convention and the newly-printed Prayer Book is incorrect in this instance. I will use and recommend that others shall use the phrase adopted by the General Convention, as it has been in use since 1925:

"And now as our Saviour Christ hath taught us, let us say."

Thomas J. Garland,
Bishop of Pennsylvania.

Appeal For Books.

The Episcopalian Club House, which is the headquarters for Episcopalian students attending the University of Wyoming at Laramie, Wyoming, would appreciate receiving books, both fiction and otherwise, which any Church people would care to send. An appeal sent out a few years ago for piano records for use in the club met with such fine response that we hope this appeal for books will interest our Church people. The library has a fairly good selection of ancient classics, but there are only a few modern works on the shelves.

Fred G. Harkness,
Student Pastor.

East Carolina Diocese One Hundred Per Cent For Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Wilmington, N. C., October 26.—A tour of the parishes of this diocese has been completed by John Q. Beckwith, member of the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, accompanied by Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the organization. Every parish visited on the tour formed a Brotherhood Chapter, and as a result there is now an active Chapter of the Brotherhood in every white parish of the diocese. In addition, several missions have organized Chapters. Plans are under way for the formation of a Diocesan Brotherhood Assembly, followed later by the organization of Junior Chapters, in addition to the Senior groups.

The success of the tour was due largely to the interest and sympathetic support of Bishop Darst, as Diocesan and as Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism.

L. C. P.

The Eleventh Synod of the Province of Washington.

Harrisburg, Pa.—"Our chief duty at the Synod is to face the financial condition of the Church and discover, if possible, the cause of the apparent lack of interest in the support of mission work," said Bishop Gravatt of West Virginia, in addressing the opening session of the Eleventh Synod of the Province of Washington, which was held in St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., rector, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 15, 16 and 17, 1929.

A brief devotional service was conducted by the Rev. Floyd Tompkins, D. D., prior to the opening of the business session of the Synod. At 8:00 P. M., a Mass Meeting in the interest of Missions was held in St. Stephen's Church, the speakers being the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of Erie; the Rt. Rev. Charles Shriver Reifsnider, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of North Tokyo, and the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Campbell, D. D., Bishop of Liberia.

On Wednesday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated in all the churches of Harrisburg. During the business session on Wednesday morning Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, was unanimously elected President of the Synod. After the new president had been officially inducted into his office, the Rev. Dr. Treder addressed the floor, saying: "The Diocese of Harrisburg will fittingly observe this spring the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Darlington, the first Bishop of the diocese. This Synod has consequently anticipated that "felicitous occasion by choosing as its presiding officer its host on the present occasion. We who know him appreciate the fine underlying qualities of a character that endears itself to those who are worth endearing, and we ask God's continued blessing on his work and the Diocese."

The Rev. Thomas J. Bigham, of Pittsburgh, was reelected secretary, and William W. Frazier, Jr., of Philadelphia, was reelected treasurer. The following were elected members of the executive committee: the Rev. Dr. Martin Aigntr, of the Diocese of Erie, and H. T. Nelson, Diocese of Washington. The following were appointed members of the court of review: the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., Diocese of Southern Virginia, the Rev. F. L. Flinchbaugh, Diocese of Bethlehem; the Ven. Benjamin F. Thompson, Diocese of Delaware; General Charles M. Clement, Diocese of Harrisburg; Henry P. Blair, Diocese of Washington, and William White, Diocese of Pennsylvania.

On assuming the chair, following his election as President of the Synod, Bishop Darlington offered a resolution providing that a committee of there bishops, three clergymen, three laymen, and three members of the Woman's Auxiliary be appointed by the chair "to meet and suggest such remedies as seem best to them for arousing and enlisting larger support for the missionary work of the Church, and to report to the chair, who will transmit the report to the different dioceses of the Synod and to the National Council." To stimulate interest and promote support of mission projects, Bishop Darlington strongly urged "A Layman's Crusade", suggesting that laymen, at their own expense, visit the missionary fields, and expressing confidence that if laymen were inspired by this means they would readily support the work. He lamented the fact that all the money given to the Church's work is provided by a small body of the Church's membership. He also recommended "less attention to providing equipment in missionary work and more to furthering the preaching of the Gospel by men endowed with the Holy Spirit." Bishop Garland, reporting for the committee of inspection of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School for Colored People, Lawrenceville, Va., where seven hundred young Negroes are enrolled, recommended that the present facilities of the school be improved rather than the capacity of the school increased. He said that several new buildings had recently been constructed, and another was under construction at present. He commended the practical method of instruction, which equips the boys and girls for a definite place in life, and expressed enthusiasm for the work being done at the school. Bishop Beverley B. Tucker, of Southern Virginia, President of the Board of Directors of the School, expressed his appreciation of Bishop Garland's report.

Reporting for the Commission on Rural Work, Bishop Tucker said there are two practical difficulties in carrying out the ideal of the Church, which, he said, was to reach all of the people, poor and rich, whether they live in cities or towns, in the villages or countryside. The first difficulty, he said, was financial, due largely to the fact that the young people move in large numbers to the cities where they give their adult support and service to the town church, so that although numerically the rural churches seem to stand still, in reality they are making not only a spiritual but a financial contribution to the city churches. The second difficulty, he said, concerns the tendency of young clergymen to leave their rural posts at the first opportunity. He appealed to the spirit of romance and adventure in youth to give the first three years of their ministry, without thought of self, to the blessed work of caring for the country church. He offered two resolutions, one providing that the Synod recognize the importance to the Church of the work among rural people; second, that the bishops of the Province be requested to appeal to the young men entering the ministry to give, if their bishop deem advisable, at least three years to rural work. Also reporting on Rural Work, the Rev. M. B. Marshall, of Halifax, Va., described intimately both the joys and tribulations of the rural clergyman. The Rev. Richard A. Hatch, of Altoona, Pa., also spoke on Rural Work. He alluded to the nomadic character of society, and urged that city and town parishes should keep in close touch with Church work in rural districts.

In connection with the report of the Provincial Commission on Missions, Bishop Ward, of Erie, gave a "Summary of Trends in Giving", in which he pointed out that the per capita of the parishes for all purposes had increased more rapidly than the giving for Missions. Dr. John Wilson Wood of the Department of Missions of the National Council, Bishop Campbell of Liberia, and Bishop Henry St. George Tucker of Virginia, addressed the Synod on the subject, "The Policy of the Department of Missions,". Luncheon was served at the Harrisburg Civic Club, the Synod being guests of St. Stephen's Parish.

The Synod convened at 2:30 P. M., Wednesday afternoon, the session being devoted to subjects connected with Christian Social Service. The principal speakers were the Very Rev. Percy G. Kammerer, Ph. D., Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Mrs. John M. Glenn, National President of the Church Mission of Help. Dean Kammerer voiced the necessity of a separation of ideas concerning marriage and romantic love. These two things, he said, are confusing to modern minds and lead to many marital troubles. The only way to improve the present situation is to carry out a program of premarriage education, said the speaker. "The pastor is out of touch with the modern family," Dr. Kammerer asserted, "because the pastor views the family doctrinally, instead of biologically and socially. He is more concerned about what he thinks the family should be than about what it really is." Mrs. John M. Glenn emphasized that "in contact with the Church Mission of Help many girls are finding that through religion they win the sense of security that they crave." The report of the Commission on Christian Social Service, presented at the session, said in part: "First, we would call the attention of the Synod to the serious industrial situation resulting from labor troubles in the textile industry, and to the far more serious exploitation of human life by low wages and long hours and other things which result in low standards of living. The Commission would ask the Synod to remind all Christian people that we, in the Church, must labor and live for its divine right of men and women to earn their bread under decent conditions. The Church must not tolerate any exploitation of human life. Second, in view of the recent happenings in our penal institutions in many parts of the country, we would recommend to the clergy and people of our parishes the opportunity and obligation of bettering conditions in hundreds of local jails within its provinces. It seems that but to menton its need of public interest in our penal institutions is to point out a definite task. Third, we rejoice with all Christian people, at the good feeling coming from Premier MacDonald's conversations with President Hoover." A resolution was adopted requesting that Armistice Day be observed in our churches as a day for the commemoration of the movement for international peace. Following recess, a reception for deputies and delegates to the Synod was given in Bishopscourt by the Bishop of Harrisburg and Mrs. Darlington. Both sessions on Wednesday were joint sessions, the delegates to the various women's organizations having the privilege of seats in the Synod.

On Wednesday evening, at eight o'clock, a Mass Meeting in the interest of Christian Social Service was held in St. Stephen's Church, Bishop Davenport presiding. The principal speaker was the Rev. Samuel Tyler, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Parish, Rochester, N. Y., whose subject was "The Church and the Family". Dr. Tyler listed the ailments of family life as poverty, high speed methods, the lessening of the authority of the Church and of parents on the young. He mentioned as other evils divorce and companionate marriage. "I plead for a Church alive to the responsibilities of today. A cordial Church, where visitors will be welcomed, where homes will be visited, where members are not 'too busy' to help."

On Thursday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated in the churches of the city.

At 9:30 A. M., the Synod convened in St. Stephen's Church. The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., presented the report on the Commission on Religious Education. "Work in our Colleges" was the subject of an address by the Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, of Amherst, Mass. Bishop Cook, of Delaware, presented the plans of the Commission on the Ministry. The Bishop asked the Synod to consider the plans as tentative, and that they were being presented at this time for the purpose of bringing the subject to the attention of the Church in preparation for the next General Convention. The Synod adopted resolutions expressing interest in the plans of the Commission, and also its belief in the importance of such a subject as the placement of the clergy. Hope was expressed that the next General Convention would adopt some canon on the subject. H. Lawrence Choate, of Washington, D. C., gave an inspiring address on the "Brotherhood of St. Andrew". There being no further business, the Synod adjourned, to meet next year in Philadelphia, on Bishop Garland's invitation. After partaking of a delightful buffet lunch in the Harrisburg Civic Club, the deputies returned to their homes feeling that the Synod had discussed subjects of vital importance to the Church, in a keen, liberal, and intelligent way, and expressing their appreciation of the fine hospitality shown them by the Bishop of Harrisburg and Mrs. Darlington, the Rev. Dr. Treder, and for the admirable way in which the Synod arrangements were handled by the local committee and the Church people of Harrisburg. It was a memorable Synod.

A. A. H.

"Evangelism Is On the Move."

Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, Field Worker of the National Commission on Evangelism, sends another brief report from the field of action.

"Am just back from Springfield, Illinois. I tell you, 'Evangelism is on the move', in this Church of ours. It's the one message we can all unite on.' Those who did not know it in the past are realizing its great Power now. There were about twenty-five clergy from dioceses Springfield, Quincy and Missouri, with Bishops Irving Johnson, White and Fawcett—all aflame and on their knees.

"On this trip I also had an intensive four days' mission at St. Paul's, Kittanning, Pennsylvania, where the Holy Spirit was very much in evidence."

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

The First of the Missionary Days.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and Vice-President and Treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, was the principal speaker at the two meetings on the first of the Missionary Days being held in the Diocese of Virginia this week. These two meetings on Monday, October 28, were held in Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, at three and at eight o'clock, with Bishop Tucker presiding.

The Rev. George P. Mayo, D. D., of Dyke, Virginia, made the first address on "Mountain Missions in Virginia." The Ven. Frederick W. Neve, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, started the first work for the mountain people, when he came to Ivy Depot, Virginia, fresh from college in England many years ago. From his own resources he built the little Chapel of St. John the Baptist. A farmer of the neighborhood soon offered to build a schoolhouse for the mountain people, if the Church would provide the teacher. Archdeacon Neve found Miss Fitzhugh, who went to teach in Simmons Gap in 1900. Shortly afterwards the Rev. Dr. Mayo entered the mountain mission work as assistant to the Archdeacon.

The Mission Home Settlement was founded. School chapels were built throughout the mountain, where lessons were taught on week days and church services held on Sundays when a minister was available. Wherever possible the educational work has been turned over to the state, but the Church Missions try to provide for those whom the state has not yet reached.

The greatest ignorance of medical methods still prevails in the mountains and here the Church shares the expense with other agencies in providing medical assistance.

This mountain district, covering 10,000 square miles, is ministered to by twelve clergymen, five of whom give only part-time service. There are sixty-two layworkers, including the teachers at the Blue Ridge Industrial School. Most of these layworkers are consecrated women, giving their services for $50 a month, out of which they have to pay their own board.

For several years past in the budget for the Mountain Missions there has been included $10,000 for the Blue Ridge Industrial School. Though the officials of the diocese considered this a very necessary item, owing to the diocese not subscribing enough in the Every Member Canvass, the $10,000 has had to be cut to $7,500. Again the Mountain Missions make their appeal.

Bishop Tucker, himself a missionary in Japan for twenty-five years, supplemented Dr. Mayo's address, saying that he knew of no finer mission work in the world than that being done throughout these mountains, and also that he knew of no finer industrial educational mission conducted at minimum expense than the Blue Ridge Industrial School, of which the Rev. Dr. Mayo is the Principal.

Bishop Tucker introduced Dr. Franklin as not only a great Treasurer, but a great missionary leader of the country, than whom no one has a better grasp of the Missionary Field.

His address having to cover the missionary work of the world in the short time allotted Dr. Franklin, limited his subject to missionary work as concerns the children of the world.

Here in the United States we either as individuals responsible or through public welfare agencies require for each child a home, health, recreation, education, the right to mould his own life and develop his individual personality, and the knowledge of God.

The mission work of the Church is to fulfill these requirements for the children of the world. In China and Liberia polygamy prevails, offering contrast to the family unit forming the home in this country. The Indian reservations are prisons rather than homes.

Again in China, in our own Virginia Mountains, superstitions, and skill in frightening devils away contrast with our means of promoting good health. In Japan, Mrs. Cornwall Legh is devoting her life to teaching Christ's Gospel to the leper colony there. At St. Timothy's Hospital at Cape Mount, Liberia, two nurses for many years ministered to the needs of the thousands of black people far from the reach of a doctor. There is now one doctor aiding them.

In contrast to the playgrounds and playthings, the recreation required for children in this country is a nine-year-old girl working in a silk mill in China fourteen hours a day for twelve cents.

In education, in China, statistics show that ninety out of one hundred neither read nor write. Africa is still "darkest Africa". Yet, because the dioceses here at home fail to give to their limit, applicants to our mission schools are constantly turned away, because there is no room.

"We cannot escape the indictment that that denial lays at our door," Dr. Franklin said.

Just because we here at home did not understand, these children have had no nurse, no school, no knowledge of the Saviour.

The right of choosing one's own course in life required for the child here in America contrasts with Liberian children this very day being sold as slaves for fifty dollars a piece and carried to a Spanish Island in the Atlantic Ocean. The threat of war causes the ignorant parents to submit. Fortunately, the League of Nations has begun to take steps to remove this fearful indictment against the whole civilized world.

To these persons the Church would offer the freedom of Christ. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Yet, more than one-half of the whole world has not been reached by this message. To China the message should go, where still the heathen religions prevail; to Japan, where materialism reigns, the old superstitions having been given up and nothing adopted in their place.

Here we are presented a great opportunity of serving through our lives, teaching, influence, not as a duty though it is a duty, but because it is Christ's work. If we fail, it is because we are unwilling to share with Him the Cross by which to bring salvation to the children of the world.

After his address, Dr. Franklin answered questions asked by people in the audience, which brought forth the following information:

Virginia was asked by the National Council the past year for $47,700. It told the Council to expect $42,900. We have, until the end of the year to make up the deficiency, but Dr. Franklin said that though no Treasurer ever refuses money, it is not this deficiency which must most concern us now. That harm has been done. The task before us is to see that the Every Member Canvass for this year succeeds and more than succeeds so that there need be no deficiency next year.

There are approximately one million communicants of our Church in the United States. The average giving per person a year is $42.00 for all Church purposes. Of this, six dollars is for missions, the rest for ourselves.

Compared with other denominations in the country, we are first in the amount spent on ourselves, fifth in the amount given to missions.

Dr. Franklin approves of the Pay-As-You-Go Plan, but he warns of the danger of the satisfying balanced budgets, causing people to forget the curtailed mission work, which makes that satisfaction possible.

There was a larger congregation at the evening meeting when Dr. Page Dame spoke on the Church Schools, and Dr. Franklin again spoke on the Mission of the Church.

Dr. Franklin will repeat these two addresses for the other Diocesan Missionary Day meetings, on Tuesday in St. James' Church, Leesburg; Wednesday, St. James' Church, Warrenton;

Thursday, Christ Church, Charlottesville, and Friday, Emmanuel Church, Harrisonburg.

Centennial of Christ Church, Richmond.

In 1839, the Rev. William F. Lee resigned St. John's Church, Richmond, Va., and, with a few of his followers, organized Christ Church, purchasing from the Presbyterians a church known as "Old Pineapple Church", on East Grace Street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets. Dr. Lee later resigned on account of ill health and founded The Southern Churchman. Under successive rectors the church continued to grow until 1855, when fire destroyed the church. However, the work was carried on in the lecture room, in the rear of the church. In 1870, some young men, chiefly from St. Paul's Church, namely, Mr. W. C. Bentley, Mr. Dallas Tucker, Mr. C. C. Baughman, Mr. Thomas Poindexter, and others, reorganized the Sunday school and moved to the corner of Washington and Buchanan Streets, where a church was erected. This building was destroyed by fire March 1, 1884, and in July, 1884, the present location was bought and church erected, with the Rev. J. B. Funsten, later Bishop of Idaho, as rector. He did great work and was followed by the Rev. Preston Nash and he, by the Rev. George Otis Meade, who did much for the upbuilding of the church. Since Mr. Meade's time the church has been served by the Rev. Morris S. Eagle, the Rev. Charles W. Sydnor, the Rev. F. De Foe Wagner and the Rev. P. W. Reed.

The centennial celebration is taking the form of a preaching mission, followed by a reception. The Rev. J. E. Conant, D. D., of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will conduct a preaching mission November 3-17. Mr. Holland Wilkinson, the "Sunshine Hour Man", will lead the singing. On Monday, November 18, a reception will be given to all new members and former members, and it is hoped that some of the former pastors will be present.

Though the church has suffered by removals, yet it is active and aggressive in the Master's service, and has recently built a mission on the Mechanicsville Highway. This work is growing and bids fair in time to be a strong parish.

Mr. David Webb, son of the Rev. W. E. Webb, who was rector of the church in 1855, when it burned, has given the church a fine McNeely Bell, which is expected to be used for the first time on the occasion of the centennial services.

It is hoped that the celebration will be a great home-coming time for all of Christ Church children who are scattered through the city.

Farewell Supper.

Tuesday evening, October 29, the clergy of Richmond were hosts at a supper in All Saints' Parish House, given in honor of the Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., who has resigned as rector of St. Mark's Church, Richmond, and is leaving the city to take charge of Christchurch Parish, Middlesex County, Virginia. At this time Dr. Smith was presented with a book as a token of the affection and esteem of his brother clergymen.

President of Richmond Clericus.

At a recent meeting, the Richmond Clericus elected the Rev. P. W. Reed as President to fill the unexpired term left vacant by the resignation of Dr. W. D. Smith.

Dedication.

At the eleven o'clock service on Sunday, November 3, in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, a tablet will be unveiled and dedicated to the memory of the late Judge R. Carter Scott. It will bear the following inscription:

"In loving and grateful memory of Richard Carter Scott this tablet is placed on the walls of St. Paul's by his associates of the vestry. Born July 23, 1859. Died January 27, 1928. Vestryman and Warden of St. Paul's Church for twenty-six years.

"Unbounded Courage and Compassion Joined."

Church of Our Saviour Reopened.

The reopening of the Church of Our Saviour, Montpelier, Virginia, was celebrated with an all-day service on Sunday, October 27.

The old church was burned a year ago. The new church, just completed, at a cost of $6,000, is as nearly as possible a replica of the old church, which was for so many years a landmark on the Richmond-Charlottesville highway.

The Rev. S. S. Hepburn, D. D., of Chesterton, Maryland, a former rector of the church, was preacher at the morning service.

The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, preached at the afternoon service, and the choir of St. James furnished the music for the afternoon service.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Meeting of House of Bishops.

The Special Meeting of the House of Bishops called by the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Leonard, Bishop of Ohio, and Senior Bishop of the Church, will be held in Washington, November 13. This meeting is for the purpose of electing a successor to the late Presiding Bishop John Gardner Murray. This successor will serve the unexpired term of Bishop Murray, and a Presiding Bishop for a full term of six years will be elected at the next General Convention of the Church to be held in Denver, October, 1931. This meeting will be the first of the House of Bishops in Washington since the General Convention in 1928.

Rector Returns.

Sunday, October 27, was a great day in Epiphany Parish, because it marked the return of the rector, the Rev. Z. B. Phillips, who has been away on leave for six months. He was present at the eleven o'clock and eight P. M. services on that day. Dr. Phillips is greatly improved in health and has taken up his duties vigorously. While away his travels included England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Egypt and Palestine. He was in residence in Oxford during July and August.

The Rev. Robert B. H. Bell, of Denver, Colorado, has been conducting a series of lectures on Christian healing in the Parish Hall of Trinity Church every morning at ten o'clock during the week of October 27, and Healing Mission services in the church every evening at eight o'clock. This is the Rev. Mr. Bell's first Mission in Washington, but he is known as the founder of the "Life Abundant Movement", which was the general subject of a Summer School this year in Denver, Colorado.

The Rev. F. J. Bohanan, rector of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, has inaugurated a novel series of meetings, which promise to be helpful and well attended. These meetings are called Cottage Meetings, and are arranged on a basis of fives, five meetings at different homes, five consecutive weeks, five different topics, five different speakers. The speakers will rotate, so that there will be a new speaker at each meeting.

M. M. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

Convocations in Maryland.

The Convocation of Towson held their fall meeting in Emmanuel Church, Belair, on Wednesday, October 23. The Rev. Francis A. Gray, rector of St. John's Church, Kingsville, preached the sermon at the eleven o'clock service. Immediately after the service the business meeting was held, followed by luncheon. At the afternoon session, the Rev. Leslie E. Goodwin, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Sparrows Point, read a paper on "The Children's Hour in the English Home".

The Convocation of Annapolis met at St. Alban's Church, Glen Burnie, for their fall meeting. The Rev. Philip J. Jensen, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Garrison Forest, preached the sermon at the opening service. The luncheon was served in the new parish house, recently built.

The Rev. Charles E. McAllister, rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, made the afternoon address on the Every Member Canvass.

Mr. McAllister asked that each parish consider four steps in their Every Member Canvass—Set up, Sign up, Follow up and Check up, and he is sure that each parish will complete a successful canvass if each step is followed out carefully.

The Convocation of Cumberland will hold its fall meeting in St. John's Church, Hagerstown, on November 20 next.

N. E. P.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Coadjutor.

Elected Dean of Convocation.

The Rev. Benjamin N. Bird, rector of St. Asaph's Church, Bala, has been elected Dean of the Convocation of Chester, to succeed Bishop-Coadjutor Francis M. Taitt.

Mr. Bird was elected at the fall meeting of the Convocation, held October 22, in St. John's Church, Cynwyd. He was born in Chester in 1883, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Divinity School.

National Council Elects General Secretary of Field Department.

Official announcement was made October 25, of the election of the Rev. Robert Pearsall Frazier, as a General Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Frazier, who is a member of one of Philadelphia's oldest and socially prominent families, since his ordination to the priesthood in Philadelphia

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

NOVEMBER.

1. Friday. All Saints.
3. Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity.
10. Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity.
17. Twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity.
24. Sunday next before Advent.
28. Thursday, Thanksgiving Day.
30. Saturday. S. Andrew.

COLLECT FOR TWENTY-THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, our refuge and strength, Who art the author of all godliness; Be ready, we beseech Thee, to hear the devout prayers of Thy Church, and grant that those things which we ask faithfully we may obtain effectually; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For The Southern Churchman.

A CONTRITE HEART.

Martha Lee Doughty.

God, when I hear a gentle word
Spoken after harsh ones were heard,
And when I see a kindly face
Whose soft lines show a righteous pace
I think of Thee.

When I behold some sorrow borne
With meekness, while the world seems torn;
And yet define such suffering there
As only Thine can, that way, bear
I think of Thee.

And when I sense the feeling rare
Of love unselfish, tender care,
By one who with humility
Bears emptiness too vast to see
I think of Thee.

And it is then I feel regret
For things I've left undone here, yet
Closer I draw, closer to Thee
While Thou allowest me to see,
And think of Thee.

For The Southern Churchman.

Prayer.

A. C. Vervalin.

It is astounding how many people never pray. Others pray once in a while and there are those whose lives are a never-ending prayer. Of the first class we wonder how they exist and whether they ever stop to think from whence come their blessings—health, friends, prosperity. To them all these good things just seem to happen. Not once does the thought enter into their minds—I really owe to God all these blessings and should send up a prayer of thanks. Again and again this neglect occurs while, should these same ones be entertained at a party or supper, they would think it the most impolite and discourteous thing in the world to leave the house without first thanking the host or hostess for the pleasant evening spent.

In the second class we find those who pray once in a while. Usually when asking that some urgent request be granted.

How earnestly and vehemently they pray for the thing in mind! Should it be granted, it is accepted as a matter of course, the prayer of thanks forgotten, that is due an all-loving, Heavenly Father. Should this same request be not granted, there comes the ejaculation, "There, I knew there was no use in praying; what is the use of prayer if we do not get what we ask for? From now on I am through with prayer!"

The third and last class is of those to whom prayer is the very bread of life—whose day begins and ends with prayer—who pray for their friends, their neighbors, and their enemies; for the whole, wide world, and lastly for themselves. This is real and helpful prayer and how God loves to hear such and answer.

Our blessed Lord Himself set us the example, saying, "After this manner pray ye." "Our Father who art in Heaven." Not only did He leave us this prayer, but He carried out the act of prayer Himself. "He went apart to pray." Then, with Christ's as the example of the praying life, how great a mistake is the neglect of prayer.

If He, the Saviour and Redeemer of the world thought it not beneath Himself to pray, how much more we, frail, weak children of earth, need the power and help of prayer to strengthen and encourage us in life's daily paths—to help us bear the fret and turmoil of many duties that assail us every moment and hour.

Prayer is the remedy for all earthly ills. If in bodily pain it gives strength to bear it, if in adversity courage to face it, if in sorrow and grief comfort in the knowledge of a Loving Saviour's sympathy and help. For when the brother of Mary and Martha, died, He, our Blessed Lord, wept, so great was His sorrow for them.

We need for true prayer a perfect faith and trust that a Heavenly Father hears and will answer according to His blessed will and in the way He thinks best. For often we ask for things that if granted, would work for our unhappiness instead of our happiness. Therefore, whatsoever we pray for should be according to God's will, not ours.

How it behooves us, then, to start each day with prayer at the very beginning (even if it must be while dressing), and if, perhaps, there is time for only the Lord's Prayer—let us pray that.

The very act of beginning the day right, with prayer and thanksgiving for a new day, will serve as a great wall of defense and security for the entire day. For have we not commited ourselves—our loved ones—our all to a Heavenly Father's care and protection, knowing all is safe in His hands.

Therefore, when prayer offers so great a peace and comfort, why neglect prayer?

From a Minister's Letter to His People.

The other morning, while walking to church, I heard a loud voice call out, "Get up, Ambition. Get up." I turned in the direction of the sound and discovered that the milkman was calling to his horse. I was on the alert for anything and everything that might lead to one of these letters. I felt as one of old felt when he said, "Surely, the Lord hath delivered thee into my hands."

Every week we are advised of the failure of anywhere between three and four hundred concerns in the United States. Careful survey of the causes would undoubtedly reveal a wide variety of things involved in such failures. I am quite sure, however, that two causes would stand out more predominately than any other. The first is, too much ambition; the second is, not enough ambition. We might restate these two by saying that the first is, too much ambition of the wrong sort; and the second, not enough ambition of the right sort.

Look over your circle of friends and acquaintances. Examine them in the light of their ambitions. I am sure you will find it most interesting. On the whole, you will find that for the most part, there is lacking a real ambition of any sort. Ambition to do something worthwhile. I know a lot of people that need the same urging that the milkman used to his horse, "Get up, Ambition." If they ever get anywhere or amount to anything, it will not be because of their ambition, but out of pure luck.

When it comes to religious matters or the Church, the same condition prevails. Analyze almost any of the Church's problems, and I think you will find that a lack of ambition is at the bottom of them. We frequently say that if people loved the Church and the Kingdom of God more, things would be different. That is quite true. On the other hand, I know many who, if they were questioned concerning their love for the Church and the Kingdom of God, would emphatically answer in the affirmative. What then is the matter? Isn't it a lack of ambition; a lack of an incentive or urging that will compel action, and more action, until something has been achieved?

We talk a lot about indifference among those of the household of God. That also is true, but closely associated with indifferences is to be found this lack of ambition.

I should like to discover some means of constantly sounding these words of the milkman in the home of every member of this Church. On Sunday morning, wouldn't it be fine if more of our people might heed the call, "get up, Ambition." Nobody late for church school; nobody late for church. The church and school both well filled. What a treat! When some problem confronting the church is laid before the members of the congregation, wouldn't it be glorious if, in some way, there could resound through their consciences, again and again, the summons, "get up, Ambition?" Had we space we might go further into the details of the application of this challenge. Have I said enough or too much?

In conclusion, may I say to my unknown inspirer of these words, "many thanks!" I dare to hope that the implications of his words will be taken to heart by many. Whenever you see the milk wagon think of the words, "get up, Ambition," and seek to apply them.—The Rev. Granville Taylor.

For The Southern Churchman.

CLOUDS.

Ruth Bush Lobdell.

These are my mountains—
Down the city street—
They are more lofty
And more fleet
Than mountains shod with earth;
High as the heart can reach,
They are revealed
In depths of dark and light.
These are my mountains!
Here all my dreams have birth;
Here all my dreams have shroud;
What if they melt like cloud?

For the Young Folks

For The Southern Churchman.

THE CLOUD BANK.

Maude F. Mumma.

Won't you take a trip with me,
On the cloud-banks' mystic sea;
Knights and ladies, castles grand,
You will see on every hand!

Now a mountain I behold,
Don't you see it—big and bold;
Poets, sages, prophets true,
Homer, Milton, Shakespeare, too.

Now a fairy I can see,
Holding out her wand to mee;
Lilies white and sunflowers tall,
Growing by a garden wall.

Hills and valleys standing wide,
There an iceburg at the side;
As these pass beyond the sight,
Others come into the light.

I could sit all day and see
The clouds go sailing by for me;
But as the clouds have work to do,
So there's work for me and you.

When Grandfather Hunted With Joe.

When Jack's grandfather was a lad, he lived at the edge of a town which was surrounded by deep, dark woods. A large river flowed among these trees, and that helped to make the woods an interesting place for the boys to play.

Not far away was an Indian settlement. The Indian boys seldom attended school. They liked to fish and hunt too well to sit quietly in a school room. But on Saturdays and during the long summer vaactions the Indian boys played with Jack's grandfather and his friends.

One of the Indian boys, who was called Joe Brown by the white people of the community, became a chum of Jack's grandfather, who was about ten years old at the time. Joe was a little older than David, who is now Jack's grandfather.

It was soon after Joe had made a bow and arrow for his friend that the two boys decided to go on a long hunting trip in the woods along the river. They started early one Saturday morning, carrying their bows and arrows, some punk and flint for a fire and some fish-hooks. David had taken some bread and butter sandwiches in his pocket to eat with whatever game they got to cook.

Bounce, a yellow dog that was one of the many dogs that lived with the Indian families, went along. He liked Joe, who claimed him. But the animal liked better to hunt by himself. So he soon left the boys and wandered out of sight into the woods.

The boys followed a winding path as they started out from town. Later they left the path and walked through dense underbrush, where there were no paths at all. "You're more apt to find game in the wild places," Joe said.

"S-s-s-s-h," warned the Indian boy with his lips, as he lifted his arrow to position. A partridge was walking out of the brush into the open. And as quick as anything Joe shot it.

The boys walked on and on without finding another bird that they wanted to get to eat. "Oh, dear," David said, "I wish I could shoot something with this arrow you made for me. Since it has this stone tip, I could get a big animal with it, couldn't I?"

"Yes," agreed Joe, feeling of the hard-pointed arrow he had shaped for his friend, "that is better than a wood point like mine. My father often shoots big game with his stone-pointed bow and arrow."

Suddenly another partridge appeared. "Get it," indicated Joe. David lifted his bow to position and pulled it after he had taken aim. But the partridge was on the wing by that time and now it flew up over the trees. "Missed!" exclaimed David, running to look for his arrow.

"It's harder to shoot game than it is to hit a target," said Joe. "You have to aim and shoot so fast when the bird is flying."

"I thought it was hard enough to learn to hit a target," smiled David. "At first, you know, my arrow would go sailing in a circle instead of going toward the mark."

"But you got it by keeping on," declared Joe emphatically. "And you can shoot game, too, if you try long enough."

"Say, let's eat this bird," the Indian boy added. "I'm hungry. Aren't you?"

David was. So the boys looked for an open place near the river where there was no grass to build their fire. "Let me see if I can do it," said David, taking the flint-stone and holding it above the dry punk the boys had brought with them. With his knife the boy scraped the flint-stone. A few sparks came. But David had to try several times before one of the sparks caught the punk fire. Then he held his hands around the tiny fire until the blaze caught the broken sticks piled above the punk.

During that time Joe had dressed the partridge and had cut some green sticks to hold it over the fire. "This isn't the way we fix them," explained the lad. "We put all the things we have into one kettle and cook them together. Mr. Melvin showed me how to roast a partridge this way, and it is good."

When the meat was roasted, the boys ate it, with the sandwiches that David had brought. And the patrridge was so good that both lads wished they had more of it.

"I'm going to shoot one before we go home. You just see," began David when he was interrupted by the piercing cries of some animal.

"Something is hurt," decided Joe promptly, as he listened. Then off he started in the direction from which the sharp sounds came. "What is it?" demanded David, following with his bow and arrow.

"I know that it's cries of pain," said Joe. "It might be a wolf or anything that howls. There are several animals that howl as dogs do, you know."

"If it's a wounded animal, maybe we should kill it," thought David as he ran. "It shouldn't be left to suffer if it's hurt so it cries like that. But I wonder. It might be animals that are fighting. That thought made the lad pause a little.

Louder and louder became the cries of distress as the boys came nearer.

"Is it a wolf?" gasped David, who was behind Joe.

"Why, I believe it's Bounce!" exclaimed the Indian boy, catching a glimpse of yellow through the trees. "Yes, it is. And he's caught."

The next instant both boys saw that he yellow dog's forefoot was held tight n the steel jaws of a trap. The dog vas frantic with pain and fear. He snapped at David.

"Bounce, good old Bounce," called Joe, trying to calm the animal and see how the trap could be opened. "I'll help you."

The dog seemed to know now that his master was trying to help him. Quietly he stood on three feet and whined as he waited. It wasn't easy to get the jaws of the trap apart.

"Let me take your arrow," Joe said to David. "I can slip in that stone tip and pry the jaws apart far enough to get something larger in."

The plan worked. Bounce's foot was released. And just then the round stick slipped and Joe's left hand was caught between the sharp jaws of the trap.

"O-o-o-h!" cried David, seeing what had happened and running to help Joe.

Calmly Joe used his right hand to help David open the trap again.

"It must hurt terribly," thought David, seeing how the flesh was cut. And tears came into his own eyes as he watched Joe bear the pain so bravely.

When the jaws of the trap were opened, Joe looked at Bounce who stood on three feet, holding up the hurt one. There were drops of blood in the yellow fur. "Let's see that paw," the boy said. "The bone is broken," he announced. "I thought it was."

When he had found the right kind of sticks to use for splints, Joe took some heavy string from his pocket. Using part of David's handkerchief for a bandage, the Indian boy carefully wrapped and bound the dog's hurt foot, so the broken bone would stay in place.

"Oh, your hand!" David said, suddenly noticing that Joe's hand was bleeding.

"It's all right," Joe answered carelessly. "There isn't a broken bone. See I can shut it and open it."

"It must hurt terribly, though, doesn't it?" asked David seriously.

"Not much," declared Joe stoutly.

Then back through the woods toward town the boys started. And this time Bounce did not wander away to hunt by himself. Hobbling along on three legs, the yellow dog kept close to the heels of the lads as they took the shortest way home.—Junior World.

For No Reason Whatsoever.

"You boys," said Mr. James severely, "are somewhat like lobsters."

"How's that?" cried both boys in unison, their quarrel forgotten at once.

"Because, like lobsters, you quarrel for no reason whatsoever."

"I didn't know lobsters were such fighters," said Earl.

"They are the worst scrappers in the world," answered Mr. James. "They even pull one another's legs off in their anger."

"And that is the end of them," said Bert.

"You are mistaken," said Mr. James, "for lobsters have the 'funny habit' of growing new ones."

"That's the first time I ever heard that," cried Earl.

"The general shape and appearance of this unique fellow is so well known I won't need to describe him," began Mr. James, delighted to see that the boys had forgotten their little quarrel.

"Before Mr. Lobster is cooked he is bluish-black in color—not the bright red that we see him, when he is served on our tables. Mrs. Lobster carries her eggs about with her wherever she is inclined to go. She lays them in autumn and they hatch the next midsummer.

"Mr. Lobster seems to be always lying in wait for somebody to come along so that he can fight—that seems to be his chief occupation.

"Lobsters are caught in traps in which bait has been placed. They are very fond of meat, whether it be fresh or tainted. The traps are made of slats, through which the water flows freely. The entrance is through a funnel shaped passage, with the large end facing outward, like the wire rat traps. It is easy for Mr. Lobster to get into, but not so easy to get out.

"Lobster meat is expensive, and consequently they are much sought after. But some of the fishermen are very careless and lobsters are getting scarce. They are hardy creatures and will live a long time out of water if packed in ice. Consequently they can be shipped long distances. Perhaps, for the simple reason that a new leg or claw will sprout from the scar, where the old one comes off, is why the lobster will fight for no reason whatsoever."—June Douglas, in The Presbyterian.

"Thank You, Dad."

(By a Boy.)

Thank you, dad, for the self-denial that made my education possible.

Thank you, dad, for the care and comfort given me when I was too young to look after myself.

Thank you, dad, for the books you loaned me, for the many answers to my questions, for your good counsel.

Thank you, dad, for the coppers, nickels, and dimes you gave me before I was big enough to earn my own pocket-money.

Thank you, dad, for your upbuilding, splendid, high ideals.

Thank you, dad, for guiding me when I thought that I knew it all.

Thank you, dad, for the lickings you gave me when I deserved them.

Thank you, dad.—From Youth's World.

For The Southern Churchman.

THE CALL.

G. L. V. H.

Come, Youth, to your task in the whirlpool of life,
Gird on your Armor for battle and strife,
Lock up the toys that are childhood's delight,
And join with your brothers to fight the good fight.

With banner held high, and heart unafraid,
Go forward with eagerness, brave youth and maid,
Take up the lantern of honor, with pride,
And work with a will, that peace may abide.

The Army of God needs the thrust of your spear,
We're looking to Youth to banish world fear,
To bring man to acknowledge the One Who atone.
Can comfort the sad, and for all sin atone.

So march with the soldiers of Goodness and Light
To that Haven of Love, where Right shall make Might,
Lift up the fallen one, strengthen the weak,
And so guide your soul to the Master's feet.

FP 3-11-29 Newspapers PO 1358 Ad 252A Rev.

Here's one granddaughter who takes advice from elders

Schoolgirl learns simple health measure

WITH all the talk there is nowadays about the independence of the sub-deb generation, your reporter got a great kick out of hearing a grandmother describe how her granddaughter was following a good old tried and true method of improving her general health.

"My granddaughter, Margaret," says Mrs. Zell of 6231 Catherine Street, Philadelphia, "read about Nujol, was interested in it, so sent for a sample." It seems she has been taking a tablespoon of Nujol once a day since and expects to continue this treatment. Already she has found an improvement in her general health, her system functioning normally where other remedies had failed.

That's one of the best things about Nujol. It is just as harmless for young girls, or babies even, as it is for adults. For Nujol contains no medicines or drugs. It can't upset you because it works so easily and regularly, in a normal fashion.

Starting right

Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York City. It can be bought anywhere for about the price of a ticket to a good movie. Get a bottle of Nujol today and try it, won't you? In sealed packages.

Richmond Trust Company

SEVENTH and MAIN • RICHMOND, VA.

ROBERT W. DANIEL, Chairman of the Board
DEANE MAURY
Vice-President and Trust Officer
GEORGE W. CALL
Vice-President and Treasurer
KENT C. DARLING
Vice-President
CARTER N. WILLIAMS, JR., President
JAMES R. V. DANIEL
Secretary and Assistant Trust Officer
CLINTON A. HALL
Assistant Treasurer
A. L. WITCHER, JR.
Assistant Secretary
A. F. HUNTT, Manager Broad Street Branch, 211 West Broad
JULIAN T. WINFREE, Manager Liberty Branch, 3011 West Cary

"There's a Spirit of Helpfulness at the Richmond Trust"

VIRGINIA DAIRY CO.

Richmond, Va.

"THE HOME OF BETTER MILK"

MILK, CREAM, BUTTER, BUTTERMILK, RICHELAC

Phones Boul 938-939 F. F. RENNIE, President.

WHILE IN RICHMOND LET US KNOW IF YOU LIKE OUR FOOD

Mrs. Cook's Cafeteria

Near St. Paul's Parish House
Richmond, Va.

Winnsboro Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—genuine Winnsboro Granite. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES,

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintergration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.
Write for free descriptive literature.

Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

B H Heyward Treas. & Gen. Mgr.

THE PERRY PICTURES

ONE CENT SIZE
3x3½. For 50 or more.
TWO CENT SIZE
5½x8. For 25 or more.
Send 50 cents for 25 on The Life of Christ or 25 Art Subjects or 25 for Children, 5½ x 8. Or 50 for Children, 3 x 3½.

LET your children make companions of world's most beautiful pictures. Culture, happiness and beauty will be added to their lives.

Use them in the Sunday School
Send 15 cents for Catalogue of 1600 Illustrations
The Perry Pictures Box S67, Malden, Mass

INTERESTING SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

The "Christian Life" Series

Following the
INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON TOPICS

All contributors believe the Whole Bible Salvation through no other Name but God's Son, Jesus Christ

Samples will be sent on application

Address
UNION GOSPEL PRESS
Box 680 Cleveland, Ohio.

CARPETS for CHURCHES

We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond Va.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

BOYS GIRLS EARN XMAS MONEY
Write for 50 Sets St. Nicholas Christmas Seals. Sell for 10c. a set. When sold send us $3.00 and keep $2.00. No Work—Just Fun. St. Nicholas Seal Co., Dept 513-S.C., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Half a Million Tourists in 1929

THE Chamber of Commerce estimates this number for Richmond this year. Double the population of the city.

This profitable industry is reflected in the business of The William Byrd, and The Richmond Hotel, and the new John Marshall (400 bed rooms built just in time).

These are some of the properties securing American 6% First Mortgage Bonds, prime high-grade securities issued by The American.

Issued in $100 and multiples, sold on part payments in accord with the American's policy to consider those of limited means.

AMERICAN
BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
Richmond, Virginia

Member Federal Reserve System
Capital, Surplus, Reserves—Over $5,000,000

The Shopping Center

TODAY, more than ever before, good roads and fast motorbus service from all directions make Miller & Rhoads the Shopping Center for Virginia and the Carolinas.

Known from Coast to Coast as One of America's Great Stores

Miller & Rhoads

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

The Annual

Every Member Canvass

FACTS

1919		1928
1,054,430	Communicants	1,215,383
$21,451,346	Contributions for All Purposes	$45,928,056
$20.34	Per Capita	$37.78
$1,472,949	Contributions for General Church Program	$2,829,693
$1.39	Per Capita	$2.29

We have turned the corner of the First Decade
We have made a most remarkable advance.
—But there is evidence of weariness in well-doing.

WHAT OF THE NEW DECADE?

The Answer lies in Action—NOW through a thorough

EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

December 1-15, 1929

in every Parish and Mission of the Church

This Charts the Course

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

281 Fourth Avenue CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE New York, N. Y.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

RELIGIOUS TRACTS.

GOOD RELIGIOUS TRACTS MAY BE had by writing to LEVI C. SULLIVAN, blind tract minister, P. O. Box 43, Roanoke, Va. Some excellent tracts for prison work.

BULBS FOR SALE.

TRUMPET MAJOR NARCISSUS BULBS; 100, $1.50; 1,000, $10.00. Emperor, 12, $1.00; 100, $6.00; 1,000, $50.00. FRED B. JONES, Gloucester, Va.

MONEY FOR CHRISTMAS

Look in the old trunk and send me all the old envelopes up to 1876. Do not remove the stamps. Will pay highest prices. —George Hakes, 290 Broadway, New York.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold Thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and Veil from $15. Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church Vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE.
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

MAGAZINE ORDERS.

I AM A WHEEL-CHAIR INVALID, AND have no one to look to for financial help, and I want to ask you to remember me with your magazine subscriptions and renewals, so that I can buy medicine and other things I need. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Keysville, Ga.

WANTED, A COPY OF "THE CABELLS AND THEIR KIN", compiled by Alexander Brown. Any one having a copy of this book to dispose of, write Southern Churchman stating price.

FOR SALE.

HANDSOME ANTIQUE SOFA, MAHOGANY, in good condition. Address Mrs. M. L. Morris, Littleton, N. C.

WINTER—VIRGINIA BEACH.

IS THERE A LADY WHO LIKES BEACH ENOUGH to go with another for the winter and early spring? If so, for full particulars address "Beach", care of Southern Churchman.

BOARDING—WASHINGTON.

MISS ELIE BOULDIN, AT APARTMENT 208, 1346 Park Road, Washington, D. C., would accommodate transient friends with lodging and breakfast at $1.25.

SITUATION WANTED.

WIDOW OF REFINEMENT, CULTURE, education and foreign travel, desires position as social companion, or position in college. Best references given. Address "C", care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED, BY MATURE COUPLE, FAMILIAR with country life and Institute work, Church School or institute preferred, city or country. References. Address "A", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

MRS. MARY WILKINS DALBY.

Entered into life eternal, October 12, 1929, MARY WILKINS DALBY, daughter of the late Dr. John T. and Mrs. Elizabeth Turner Wilkins, and widow of Dr. William Lee Dalby, of Bridgetown, Va. Funeral was from her late home and interment in Hungars P. E. Churchyard.

She was an untiring worker in her church and her passing has made a void hard to fill.

"Out of darkness into His marvelous light."

J. W. N.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 15.)

ten years ago, has been serving as missionary of the Episcopal Church in the South Dakota Indian Field. He is a son of W. W. Frazier, Jr., of Jenkintown, and entered the ministry from old St. Peter's Church, Third and Pine Streets.

For many years the Frazier family has been actively identified with the Episcopal Church, and the missionary's father is Secretary of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. The son is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and the Berkeley Divinity School. Prior to his ordination, during the World War, Mr. Frazier served as an officer in the army and, when he was discharged from the army, held the rank of Captain in the Thirty-seventh Field Artillery. Immediately following his ordination, Mr. Frazier volunteered for missionary work among the Indians, where he has been doing an outstanding work in which his wife has shared with him. Mr. Frazier will take up the duties of his new office about the end of the year.

Student Pastor.

Mr. F. P. Foote, a Senior at the Philadelphia Divinity School, has been appointed "Student Pastor" at Temple University in connection with the work of the Episcopal Church among students of that communion at Temple. The Rev. John K. Shryock, Chairman of the Commission on Students of the Department of Religious Education of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, through the cooperation of Dr. Charles E. Beury and other officials of Temple University, arranged for undertaking religious work among the Episcopal students at Temple. The Rev. N. V. P. Lovis, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Broad and Jefferson Streets, has placed the facilities of the Incarnation at the service of Mr. Foote for a religious and social center for the students of Temple.

The Annual Devotional Day of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania in which women from the parish and mission branches in all parts of Philadelphia and vicinity take part, was held on Tuesday in old St. Peter's Church, Third and Pine Streets. The Very Rev. Robert S. Chalmers, Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, was the leader. The devotions began at 10:30 A. M. and at 2:30 P. M. Bishop-Coadjutor Taitt was the speaker at the luncheon at 1:15 P. M.

St. Luke's Church, Germantown, which is holding a month's jubilee over completion of a five-year building program had as special preachers Sunday, the Rev. Royden Keith Yerkes, of the Philadelphia Divinity School at the morning service, and the Rev. Selden P. Delaney, rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, at the night service.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Dedication of New Cathedral a Momentous Occasion.

"What God hath Wrought" rang out as the text of the Rt. Rev. Lemuel H. Wells, retired Bishop of the Missionary District of Spokane, as he addressed the multitude assembled at the eleven o'clock service on October 20, at the dedication of the Cathedral of Saint John the Evangelist, Spokane, Washington. The eighty-seven-year-old prelate delivered a short, stirring sermon, and was followed by the Most Rev. Adam Urias de Pencier, Archbishop of British Columbia, who brought greetings from Canada.

A full choral communion at 7:30 drew most of the Episcopalians of the city to the first service on this mometnous occasion. Bishop Wells was the celebrant, and the Rt. Rev. Louis C. Sanford, Bishop of San Joaquin, delivered the sermon.

To a cathedral crowded with Church School pupils and Young People from the City of Spokane and outside points in the District, the Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner, Bishop of Oregon, spoke at the four o'clock service for children.

Evening found the cathedral again filled for the fourth time, when the Rt. Rev. Charles de V. Schofield, Bishop of Columbia, and the Rt. Rev. Herbet H. H. Fox, Bishop-Coadjutor of Montana, made short addresses.

The evening before at a banquet in the Davenport Hotel, addresses were made by various laymen and clergy who paid tribute to the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, Bishop of Spokane, to whose vision and untiring energy it was that this project became a reality. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Adams, Bishop of Kootenai, brought unofficial greetings from the Church of England.

Monday morning the women of the district presented their United Thank Offering at a great service in the new cathedral. Archbishop de Pencier delivered the sermon.

Delegates from all the churches in the district and many visitors were present at all of the services.

T. E. J.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Conference on Evangelism a Success.

The Diocese of Springfield is happy to proclaim to the Church at large that the Mississippi Valley Conference on Evangelism, which met in Springfield, Illinois, October 22, and 23, was in many ways one of the most successful and worthwhile conferences held in this part of the Church.

The Quiet Day in St. Paul's Church, conducted by the Bishop of Colorado, was one that meant much to the Clergy of Springfield and the half dozen or more surrounding nearby dioceses. The Bishop, in a way all his own, helped every man to examine his own life in its relation to God and to the work of the ministry, and then lifted all to a very practical height, whereby they could face the future and their work with a renewed confidence in their closely following the Christ.

Christ Church, Springfield, was almost filled in the evening for the public meeting. The Bishop of the Diocese was the Presiding Officer. The Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, of St. Paul's, Akron, and rector-elect of St. Chrysostom's, Chicago, brought an inspiring message of the practicability of Evangelism. The Bishop of Quincy brought a Bishop's view of Evangelism, and told in detail some of the simple ways the lay people could use this method in winning others to Christ. Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, the Lay Field Representative of the National Commission on Evangelism, who had been sent to Springfield by Bishop Darst, had a great message. It was great; it was powerful; it was telling, and principally because it was a layman who was speaking. In his very splendid way, Dr. Glazebrook challenged the clergy to have faith in their laymen and to ever be ready to give them a job in the Church's work; and then he inspired the laymen to offer themselves for this most important phase of the Church's work.

Wednesday morning, like Tuesday morning, was begun with a celebration of the Holy Communion. At ten o'clock in Christ Church Parish House, the day of conferences on the practical application of Evangelism started. The Rev. John S. Bunting, the well-known and greatly beloved rector of the Church of the Ascension, St. Louis, and who is a member of the National Commission on Evangelism, was the chairman for the day. His address on the need of our recognizing an imperial Christ was in many ways the most notable contribution of the program. The Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Christ Church, had previously extended a welcome to all who were present, and this was not only a welcome in words, but in deeds. The Rev. Edward Haughton, rector of St. Paul's Church, led in the devotions. Among the other leaders during the day were Bishop White; the Rev. Robert H. Atchison, of Alton; the Rev. George St. George Tyner, of Omaha; the Rev. Mr. Keeler, of Akron; Archdeacon Christian, formerly of Alaska; the Rev. Mr. Coombs, of Missouri; Dr. Glazebrook and one or two others.

Hospitality, including meals and lodging, was a very gracious part of the conference. Every one went away with the feeling that seldom had they spent two days together in which the presence with them of the Master had been felt so prominently.

Steneographic notes of the second day's program have been taken and a complete report will be submitted, copies of which will be sent to all who are interested.

F. H. S.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Joseph Williams, a native of North Carolina, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. James' Church, Bethesda, Maryland. He had been rector of the Church of the Advent, Washington City. He is a graduate of William and Mary and the Virginia Theological Seminary, and was ordained priest in 1910. His new address is 445 W. Bradley Lane, Chevy Chase, Maryland.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, rector of St. John's Church, Fort Smith, Arkansas, has been transferred to Grace Church, Berryville, the Diocese of Virginia, where he is in residence as rector.

The Rev. Henry S. Hopkinson, of St. Mark's Church, Hope, Arkansas, is returning to England, his native country, to continue his studies for two more years.

The Rev. J. F. Brownlee, of St. George's Mission, Olyphant, Pennsylvania, was elected to be the rector of the Free Church of St. Barnabas, Reading, Pennsylvania, the same diocese. He will take up his new work about November 1, 1929.

The Rev. Joseph Burton, of Barnwell, South Carolina, and Archdeacon in that Diocese, has been called and accepted the rectorship of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Savannah, Georgia, and will enter upon his duties on the first Sunday in November.

The Rev. H. Campbell Dixon, formerly of the Diocese of Chicago, has accepted the position as Executive Secretary for the Committee on the Church's Program in the Diocese of Kentucky. His address is W. G. Apartments, Third and Broadway, Louisville, Kentucky.

ORDINATIONS.

Ernest E. Taylor, a student of Virginia Theological Seminary, was at Summer School at McDonald's Point, Idaho. While there he took the remaining parts of his examination for deacon's orders. The examining chaplains were Dean F. A. Rhea, Archdeacon Stoy, and the Rev. H. H. Mitchell.

On Sunday, July 2, an altar was placed under the trees, and the ordination took place in the open air.

Bishop Barnwell was celebrant and preached the ordination sermon. The Rev. B. C. d'Aasum said the Litany. Archdeacon Stoy read the Epistle. The Rev. H. H. Mitchell presented the candidate.

Mr. Tayler has been in charge of Pocatello, Idaho, during the summer and has returned to Alexandria, Virginia, for his final year at the Seminary.

Quinter Kephart was ordained deacon St. Luke's Day, 1929, in Christ Church, Chattanooga, Tennessee, by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor. The candidate, an alumnus of DuBose Memorial School, was presented by the Rev. E. H. Merriman, D. D., acting dean of the school. The sermon was by the Rev. William C. Robertson, locum tenens of Christ Church. The Preface to the Ordinal was read by the Rev. Battle McLester; the Call to the Ministry by the Rev. George B. Kirwan; the Litany by the Rev. Charles E. Wood; and the Epistle by the Rev. Lyle G. Kilvington. The Rev. James R. Sharp served as chaplain to the Bishop; and the Rev. James R. Helms was also present in the sanctuary.

The Rev. Mr. Kephart will continue his theological studies in Western Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois.

Precious Stones.

In a lecture on precious stones recently delivered before the Industrial Association of Berlin, Dr. Immanuel Friedlaender said that the testing of diamonds is comparatively simple. The common test for hardness suffices. If the stone resists strong attacks, it is certain to be genuine; if it does not, the damage is insignificant, as only an imitation has been destroyed. This test, however, is doubtful with rubies. If a ruby can be affected by a steel file or by quartz, it is surely not genuine, such a test with a topaz is liable to injure a valuable stone.

The test for hardness is of no avail with emeralds, as this stone is not much harder than quartz, and, in addition, possesses the quality of cracking easily.

For examining rubies and emeralds the optical test is best. A glass magnifying about one hundred times suffices. Every expert knows that almost all precious stones have little flaws. Nearly every ruby and all emeralds have many defects, which are so characteristic that the genuineness of the stones is readily established. Such a test is very necessary with rubies, because the imitations are very deceiving. Their color is absolutely durable, and often much finer than that of the genuine, although it may be stated that a somewhat yellowish tint is always suspicious.

The only reliable way in which genuine rubies can be told from imitations is by the minute air buddles of the latter, which become clearly visible under the magnifying glass. These are not to be found in the natural gem; on the other hand, the imitations lack certain defects characteristic of genuine rubies—certain vacuums, whose outlines are much more indistinct than those of the air bubbles in imitations.

True emeralds have similar characteristic defects, such as inclosures of liquids and curious dendrites. Sapphires also show peculiar netlike formations.—Consular Report from Germany.

MEMORIAL FOUNDATION TO RESTORE HISTORIC CHURCH.

A thousand or more descendants and relatives of men and women who, a hundred years or more ago, were buried in the cemetery of Grub Hill Protestant Episcopal Church, in Amelia County, Virginia, and many others as well have become interested in a project for the restoration of the ancient church and cemetery, the re-marking of all the graves and perpetual care of the historic burying-ground.

This project, conceived by some of those who attended last June the celebration of the one hundred and ninety-seventh anniversary of the establishment of the church, assumed definite form this week, when there was incorporated under State laws "Grub Hill Memorial Foundation", and officers and directors were named.

These plans have now been perfected—for the repair of the building, the reconstruction of the interior; the beautification of the cemetery, its enclosure by a brick wall, and the laying of flagstone walks therein; and for perpetual care of the church and graves.

To Seek Names of All Descendants.

Even before the Foundation plan was completed, to provide security in perpetuity, money began to come in for the proposed work. The contributions were of widely separated points in several states. Now that the Foundation has been perfected, and legal incorporation completed, the officers and directors will advise all known relatives of those who lie buried there and will seek to learn from them and elsewhere, the names of others. All these will be given opportunity to add to the Foundation fund which will establish and maintain forever a historic shrine that will mean much to Amelia County and to the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

Officers and Directors.

The officers of Grub Hill Memorial Foundation, Inc., are:

George B. Townsend, of Petersburg, President; Mrs. M. M. Eggleston, of Amelia, Vice-President; Philip Freeman, Stony Creek, Chancellor; the Rev. Edwin R. Carter, D. D., Petersburg, Secretary; Rev. J. R. McAllister, Dinwiddie, treasurer.

These, with the following, form the Board of Directors; J. Y. Mason Berkeley, J. Gordon Bohannon, Raleigh C. Powell and William L. Zimmer, Jr., of Petersburg; Col. Mervyn C. Buckley, Washington, D. C.; Col. E. E.Goodwyn, Emporia; Mrs. Mary Southall Hardaway, and Dr. A. V. K. Deekens, Amelia; Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, Williamsburg; Braxton Harrison Tabb, Richmond.

1675 1929

OXFORD

THE NEW PRAYER BOOK

THE OXFORD EDITION OF THE NEW BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER is now ready. Clearly printed on fine white and the famous Oxford India paper. Superbly bound in black and colored leathers in various sizes. Also bound with The Hymnal in one volume. The Oxford standard in bookmaking is reflected in these new Prayer Books now on sale at all bookstores.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
114 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK

THE CHOICE IS YOURS!

you can SPEND all you make and end as a failure, or SAVE a part regularly and gain financial independence. Your future success is in your own hands.

Maintain a growing account with us.

State-Planters Bank and Trust Co.
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

"BEING BORN AGAIN...BY THE WORD OF GOD"

1 Peter 1:23.

Each package of Scripture sent out by the Scripture Gift Mission is made possible by the gifts of those who love Christ and His Word.

From the parable of the Sower and the Seed (Luke 8:4-15), we learn from Christ Himself that "the seed is the word of God", but that this message does not always bear fruit. Satan even "taketh away" some of it, and temptations and love of the world prevent it from bearing fruit.

Therefore we earnestly desire that each Distributor shall prayerfully seek the Lord's help in "sowing the Seed", and shall continue to water it with prayer so that it will "bring forth fruit"—that many others may come to know Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour.

AMERICAN SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BIBLE INSTITUTE OF PENNSYLVANIA

1418 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia
Bell Telephone, Stevenson 7016

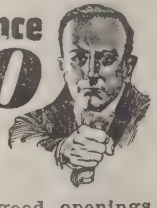
PRINCIPLES

Interdenominational as to its Board of Trustees, Faculty and student body.

Evangelical, teaching the whole Bible as the Word of God.

Spiritual, pointing to Christ in the Bible as the way, the Truth and the Life, the source of all wisdom and knowledge in living and teaching.

Missionary, "And they went everywhere preaching the Word".



BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

ORMOND RAMBO, President
W. W. RUGH, Vice-President — LEW WADE GOSNELL, Vice-President
JOHN T. BOUGHER, Recording Secretary — FRANKLIN B. DAVIS, Treasurer
JOHN B. COLE, Executive Secretary
Abraham C. Bell, Egbert H. Farr, John G. Harris, Charles L. Huston, James J. McCutcheon, Erwin W. Moyer, William K. Rouse.

THE FACULTY

REV. LEW WADE GOSNELL, Dean, Member of the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church.
REV. W. W. RUGH, Associate Dean, Bible Teacher.
JOHN B. COLE, Executive Secretary.
MRS. JAMES O. BUSWELL, Atlantic City, N. J.
REV. JAMES R. CLINTON, Pastor, Central Congregational Church, Philadelphia, Pa.
REV. H. S. CROSSAN, A. B., B. D., Pastor Chelten Avenue Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.
REV. GEORGE B. FLETCHER, Pastor, Baptist Church, Newport, N. J.
CHARLES H. HUBER, Bible Teacher.
REV. GEORGE L. KERNS, A. B., B. D., Th. M., Bible Teacher.
REV. ALBERT D. C. McILROY, A. M., B. D.
REV. CEDRIC V. MILLER, A. M., B. D., Th. B., Pastor, Presbyterian Church, Blackwood, N. J.
REV. ROBERT M. WEBSTER, Pastor, Reformed Episcopal Church of the Atonement, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Here's YOUR Chance TO MAKE $500

Here's a wonderful opportunity to make $500 in cash just acting as my Representative in your locality. I have plenty of good openings everywhere for both men and women. No capital or experience needed. Easy, pleasant work—full time or spare time. I furnish everything and show you how.

$83 FIRST 5 DAYS.

That's what Victor Baumann made. Mrs. K. R. Roof earned $50 the first week in spare time. Hundreds making big money. If you can use $500 write at once while good territories are still open.

ALBERT MILLS, Pres.,
6886 Monmouth Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

VACUUM CLEANERS

Also Many Other Kinds

Reduced To Only $19.75

Rebuilt; guaranteed. Express paid anywhere
EASY PAYMENTS, FREE TRIAL

ALSO Big Sale of Brand New Latest Model Vacuum Cleaners at $30 less than the advertised price. Terms $3 a month.

Vacuum Cleaner Specialty Co.
111 W. 42nd St., N. Y. City, Dept. 18E
Just say: "Send me information and terms on guaranteed rebuilt Vacuum Cleaners" Also Brand New Latest Model Cleaner Sale

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 9. 1929. No. 45.

ARMISTICE DAY

November 11th

Lord of our life, and God of our salvation,
Star of our night, and hope of every nation,
Hear and receive Thy Church's supplication,
Lord God Almighty.

See round Thine Ark the hungry billows curling!
See how Thy foes their banners are unfurling!
Lord, while their darts envenomed they are hurling,
Thou canst preserve us.

Lord, Thou canst help when earthly armor faileth;
Lord, Thou canst save when deadly sin assaileth;
Lord, o'er Thy Rock nor death nor hell prevaileth:
Grant us Thy peace, Lord!

Peace, in our hearts, our evil thoughts assuaging,
Peace, in Thy Church, where brothers are engaging,
Peace, when the world its busy war is waging;
Calm Thy foes raging!

Grant us Thy help till backward they are driven;
Grant them Thy truth, that they may be forgiven;
Grant peace on earth, and after we have striven,
Peace in Thy heaven.

—Lowenstern. Translated by Philip Pusey, 1840.

Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty:
Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain:
Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot: who walketh upon the wings of the wind:
Who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire:
Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever.
Thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.
At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.
They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.
Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.
He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run among the hills.
They give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses quench their thirst.
By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which sing among the branches.
He watereth the hills from his chambers: the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.
He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth;
And wine that maketh the heart glad, and oil to make his face shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart.
The trees of the Lord are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;
Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, the fir trees are her house.
The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats; and the rocks for the conies.
He appointed the moon for seasons: the sun knoweth his going down.
Thou makest darkness, and it is night; wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth.
The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God.
The sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens.
Man goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the evening.
O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches.

—Psalm 104:1-24.

EDUCATIONAL

The Gundry Home and Training School For The Feeble Minded

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

Established 1892.

For terms and information address

MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year egins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of othre Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

THE LIL' BRACK SHEEP.

Po' lil' brack sheep dat strayed away,
one los' in de win' an' de rain—
An' de Shepherd he say, "O hirelin',
Go fin' my sheep again."
An' de hirelin' say, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am brack and bad."
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
Wuz de onliest lamb he had.
An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
For de win' and de rain am col',
An' dat lil' brack sheep am lonesome
Out dere, so far fum de fol'."
But de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd, at sheep am ol' an' grey!"
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
Wuz fair as de break ob day.
An he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
Lo! here is de ninety an' nine,
But dere, way off f'um the sheep fol',
Is dat lil' brack sheep of mine!"
An' de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
De res' of de sheep am here!"
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
He hol' it de mostes' dear.
An' de Shepherd go out in de darkness
Where de night wuz col' and bleak,
An' dat lil' brack sheep, he fin' it,
An' lay it against his cheek.
An' de hirelin' frown, "O Shepherd,
Don' bring dat sheep to me!"
But de Shepherd he smile, an' he hol' it close,
An'—dat lil' brack sheep—wuz—me!

—Paul Laurence Dunbar.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
628 E. Main Street - - - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS
President
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Associate Editor
THE REV. FRANK COX
Associate Editor
THE REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D.
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MISS SUSANNE WILLIAMS..News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Rt. Rev. Richard Hooker Wilmer, D. D.—Bishop Winchester	6
Missionary Work in South Dakota—Rt. Rev. W. Blain Roberts, D. D.	7
Address of General A. T. Goodwyn	9
Westminster Theological Seminary.	10
Bible Questions and Answers	11
An Appalling Disgrace	11
Favorite Scripture Verse	11
Book Review	11
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	15
Children's Department	17
Personal Notes	23

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.

Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchhampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn.; Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.

An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

Every Southerner should read this book. It "sets history straight".

Sent, postpaid, for $2.50.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesville; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.).

(About gifts or bequests, address Central Office, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

HOBART COLLEGE Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

St. Margaret's School

Tappahannock, Virginia.

A Church School for girls with modern equipment and moderate cost. Intermediate and College Preparatory. Accredited.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different ages. Supervised Athletics.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

XANTHINE

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair. Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

Chatham Hall

A Church School for girls in Southern Virginia. Thorough college preparation. General and graduate courses. Art, music, expression, home economics, secretarial course. Superb location; 175 acre estate, gardens, dairy; modern, well equipped buildings. Riding, swimming, golf. Address Rev. Edmund J. Lee, M. A., D. D., Box S, Chatham, Va.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary Virginia

The One Hundred and Sixth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1928.

For catalogue and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE

When in need of

MONUMENTS and TOMBSTONES

and want honest treatment see

BURNS & CAMPBELL,
Granite and Marble Works
PETERSBURG, VA.

Designs furnished on application and all orders receive prompt attention.

Church Furniture
Pews, Pulpits, Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
1029 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

PIPE ORGANS
Highest quality. Superb tone. Modern accessories. Durable construction. All sizes.
Write for catalog of Pipe Organs, Reed Organs, or Electric Blowing Outfits.
HINNERS ORGAN CO.
PEKIN, ILLINOIS

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

Woody's Art Glass Shop
Art Stained and Leaded Glass.
Church Windows a Specialty.
513 East Main Street,
Richmond, Va.

LINEN for the CHURCH
PURE IRISH LINEN FOR ALL CHURCH USES, yard or piece lengths, at lowest import prices. New Special Number for Cottas, eighty-two and one-half cents. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT CO.,
350 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpit and Sunday School Furniture. Catalog on request.
T. W. ALEXANDER & SON,
Box 147. Waynesboro, Va.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W & E SCHMIDT CO
308 Third St., Milwaukeee, Wis.

CARPETS for CHURCHES
We carry a large stock of Church Carpets, embracing a wide assortment of designs, colorings and qualities and at prices to meet every requirement. Write and our representative will call with a selection of patterns and give an estimate, or we will send samples, at our expense, for your consideration.

Sydnor & Hundley
700 E. Grace Street,
Richmond, Va.

HOW YOU MAY GIVE FOR GOD'S WORK. AND YET HAVE INCOME FOR YOUR NEEDS!

(a) How you long to give for the needs of God's Work here on earth! But your means are limited and your income insufficient to donate to His Cause.

Do you know, however, that under the Annuity Plan of the Moody Bible Institute, you can both Give and Have?

33 Nationalities
are represented in this photo of students in the Winter Term, 1929.

Your donation will bring you an income for life, at the rate of from 4 per cent to 10 per cent, or more, according to your age. And your gift will be used in the glorious work of training earnest Christian workers for work a-field, bringing Light and Salvation and Life to those yet unsaved. For 40 years the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has been the training ground for workers in shops, streets, churches, jails, missions, and by personal visitation. And for over 20 years, donors have been receiving full definite returns from their gifts—on time, every six months. This is your opportunity to Give and Have.

Friends are urged to write for further information. No obligation. Just fill in and return coupon.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO,
Bureau of Annuities
Dept. H112, 153 Institute Place,
Chicago Avenue Station Chicago, Illinois
(coupon)

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO,
Bureau of Annuities, Dept. H112,
Chicago Avenue Station, Chicago, Ill,

Gentlemen:—Please send me information as to how I may Give and Have—promoting God's Work and providing myself with an ample income.

Name . . . . . .
Address . . . . . .
City . . . . . State . . . . . .
Date of Birth . . . . . .

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

Price, $4.00 per copy. Order from WM. GARNETT, Dunnsville, Va.

The Church School

IN THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Holy Scriptures interpreted in the Church Year through the teachings of the Seasons, Sundays and Holidays

By

CHARLES M. BECKWITH

Late Bishop of Alabama

Course IV—A Study of the Collects, Epistles, Gospels and Lectionary.

Now Ready, Price 75 Cents.

For the complete set, four courses, $1.75

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

Washington Cathedral

A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

♦ ♦ ♦

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

♦ ♦ ♦

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

No distinction unworthily won is an honor.

No man is a safe leader who is susceptible to flattery.

If wrinkles must be written upon our brows, let them not be written upon our hearts. The spirit should not grow old.—James A. Garfield.

Thou, whose touch could heal the leper,
Make the blind to see,
Touch our hearts and turn the sinning into purity.

Ninde.

Our self-love can be resigned to the sacrifice of everything but itself.—La Harpe.

He is truly great that is little in himself, and that maketh no account of any height of honors.—Thomas a Kempis.

No man can be wholly uneducated who really knows the Bible, nor can any one be considered a truly educated man who is ignorant of it.

God, Thou art Love! I build my faith on that!
I know Thee; Thou hast kept my path and made
Light for me in darkness, tempering sorrow
So that it reached me like a solemn song.
It were too strange that I should doubt
Thy love!

Robert Browning.

Religion might be defined as living in time for eternity under the eyes and with the help of God.—Rev. James Moffatt, D. D.

It is said that when Wesley preached, great throngs came to hear him, and that on one occasion a young preacher, greatly discouraged, went forth and asked Mr. Wesley the secret of his work, and how he might draw great throngs. Mr. Wesley said, "Get on fire for God and people will come see you burn up."

God's business is not to be done wholesale. Christ's greatest utterances were delivered to congregations of one or two. —D. L. Moody.

"Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." This is one of the majestic and beautiful sights John saw from the Isle of Patmos when he was permitted, by the grace of God, to look and see "within the gates" that which was already therein.

Like the heavens prayer hath a circular motion. Its inspiration, coming from God into the soul, returns back to him. You look up to the heavens. They are covered with rain-bearing clouds. Whence came they? From the evaporation of the deep, broad seas. They fall in copious showers upon the earth. Whither go they? Evaporation from the land, gliding in brooks, rolling in rivers, they return to the source whence they came. So do all true prayers.—Archbishop Leighton.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Va.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and Trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock .....$ 1,000,000.00
Surplus earned .....$ 1,500,000.00
Held in trust.....$45,000,000.00

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$5.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., NOVEMBER 9. 1929. No. 45.

SEED

At the beginning of the day each of us is a sower going forth to sow seed. At the end of the day most of us have reason to pray humbly that much or all the seed we have sown may die quickly. Very often honest and brave review of the day and of possible, or probable, consequences of what we have done or said, fruit of seed we have sown, must cause terror or grief more intense than the worst nightmare. The refrain of the old Sunday-school hymn, themed on the parable in St. Matthew's Gospel, "What shall the harvest be?" may come to us with its fearfully eloquent and fiercely accusing interrogation point. What shall be the harvest of our words and acts, born of bad motives, careless, angry, purposeless, idle, or incited by deliberate purpose to injure?

We may judge of what we have done by what has been done to us. Searching back through our own memories, we realize how many things in them that were not intended to live by those planting them, things thought to be trivial and transient, have been and are strong influences for good or ill, perfume in our hearts and souls, filling them with delicious fragrances and purifying and elevating, or pollutions, or bitterness and debasing burdens. Life histories told now and then show that many a misery, crime, horror, many a beautiful deed of maturity, are harvests of what was seen or heard in early childhood. Only the Power to which the secrets of all hearts are revealed knows the sorrows and sufferings and sins, the joys, delights and blessings, grown from seed broadcasted or sown intentionally without thought of results. A hasty word in a moment of irritation may—many times does—plant a sting to rankle through years, maybe to poison thought and grow presently to dire calamity. A small kindness, a word in due season, like apples of gold in pictures of silver, may sweeten and turn upward the purposes and course of a life and be felt through successive generations. A filthy story or allusion, uttered in a minute, may linger and degrade and disgrace after years have gone by. A beautiful, fine sentiment in sermon or conversation or print may—often does—inspire to aspiration and produce long and splendid harvest of piety and benevolence.

All this is, or should be, familiar lesson, and by most of us too much forgotten or disregarded. It cannot be drilled into us too deeply or constantly. It is the real philosophy of life. The essence of that philosophy is that those of us who hope and intend to prove ourselves worthy of living, to make life worth the living, must be soldiers always, dauntless, faithful, tireless fighters, with ourselves and the countless busy foes of our souls and peace dwelling and active within us the enemy to be overcome. The fighting is a very solemn, serious, endless duty, but we may return with glorious sheaves and not go forth weeping. There is no need in the combat for the preaching cant or rigid feature Bobby Burns warns us to forbear—poor fellow, sowing and leaving for us so much lovely seed, using so little of it for himself, recking not his own rede. A keen sense of humor is one of the dearest gifts vouchsafed to us by kind Providence for use against demons of ill temper and wrath. Good-natured, clean, laughter routs the Devil more frequently than does holy water. When we can laugh at ourselves and our own foibles and weaknesses and the faults called minor, but which are so prolific of pernicious seed we have gone far toward conquest and triumph. Seed which will be long manifest in smiles and pleasant chuckle, untainted by dirt or irreverence, is among the best we can sow.

The battle to cease and refrain from sowing tares, to banish them from our lips and faces and our daily and hourly contacts, in our homes and out in the world, to scatter seeds of kindness for our reaping by and by—quoting another simple old Sunday-school hymn—is well worth the waging and winning. All the authors of maxims and stories of large and high achievements tell us important ends may not be attained save by struggle, fight, striving. Our own experience and the teachings of the preachers and teachers tell us the same of our inner and really important lives. As we wake from sleep let us consider earnestly what seed we shall sow through the day and implore Divine help to make and keep it good. When we lie down to sleep, let us review the day honestly and fearlessly and try to know what seed we have sown, which hurt or healing and comforting we have given other hearts—including, perhaps, those loving us most faithfully and, therefore, most sensitive to slight or sting—what coward blows we have struck on those unable to retaliate, what unwholesome impressions or memories we have planted, to bring forth wretchedness or wrong hereafter. And at the last sleep, when our time here has ended! The vast majority of us are destined to be forgotten after a very little while. What will live of us here, for good or evil, will be the seed we sow from hour to hour, day by day, week by week, not only among those living while we live and surviving us, but among those to live after them. Seed sown in the mind of the child by its elders today will be yielding good or bad fruit fifty, sixty, seventy years hence. That sown heedlessly or purposefully in grown man or woman may be giving blessing or curse, bearing witness for or against us, far into centuries to come. "The evil men do lives after them; the good oft is interred with their bones." Well may we pray, fervently and from the depths of our souls, that we may be helped to sow only good seed and that it may live and bear many fold; and, at close of day and close of the stay here, that the evil seed all of us have sown may die barren.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE RIGHT REVEREND RICHARD HOOKER WILMER, D. D., SECOND BISHOP OF ALABAMA

By the Right Reverend James R. Winchester, D. D.

(Continued from last issue.)

BISHOP WILMER loved all Christian people and regarded them as brothers in Christ, but he made it very plain that he wished them to enjoy the Gospel, as it has been brought by the Apostolic Church down the ages, and it was among his fellow Christians, that his humor burst forth with sparkling wit intermingled with such sympathy that rarely gave offense. The answers of his conversations are well known, but I may repeat some of them as I gave to The Living Church years ago. Meeting a gentleman on the street and not recognizing him, there was surprise on the gentleman's part, and he said: "Bishop, my wife is a member of your church." "It is the duty of a shepherd to know his sheep," replied the Bishop, "but he must be pardoned if he fails to recognize the goats." It is hoped the goat, as in Palestine, after that, kept in close company with the sheep and had the shepherd's protection.

A man apologized for not attending the services of the Church, saying he had to do work on Sunday to support his family. The name of the man was Lion. He received the answer, "The young Lions do lack and suffer hunger; but they that wait upon the Lord shall not want any good thing" (Ps. 34:10).

It is a wonderful pleasure, as I sit enwrapped in memories, to recall the stories, he as resting in my rural parish, related with smiles. He gave the best answer to the slavery question, as narrated in "Uncle Tom's Cabin", as now found in "The Recent Past", his reminscences—"If you want a good, honest, and religious servant, seek him among the slaves—find an Uncle Tom. If you want to see a glorious specimen of womanly loveliness, seek her among the slave-holders—find an Eva. Keep every down-Easterner from having any power over the poor creatures."

When discussions became wearisome to him, as clergymen so often find on slow trains and waiting stations, times when those "with infinite leisure" delighted in drawing the impatient parson into conversation for the amusement of himself and other men, when controversy becomes disagreeable, it would be well, if, like Bishop Wilmer, practical humor could relieve the situation. The following stories will bear repetition, although widely circulated. The Baptist minister engaged him in the argument regarding Immersion, so conspicuous in my early ministry. Bishop Wilmer, growing tired of the discussion said as "dernier ressort". "There are three cases of Immersion given in the Bible and none of Sprinkling." This naturally aroused the attention of the controversionalist, who wished to know those cases, apparently unfamiliar to him. The Bishop said, "First, the Flood. All the whole earth was immersed. Noah and his family may have been sprinkled, but no mention has been made of it. Next, the Egyptians were immersed in the Red Sea, and no account is made of the Israelites on the banks being sprinkled. The last fact was the herd of swine on the Gadara hill rushing down and immersed in the Lake of Galilee, but nothing is said of the keepers of the swine on the shore being sprinkled."

When a good, scholarly Presbyterian, knowing the Bishop was to take a long and tedious trip on the railroad, asked the Bishop as he had time to give him the argument for Bishops in the Church and reasons for such ministry—the patient Bishop opened with the Scriptural line of thought, then the historic fact, and last of all he said, "Nature furnishes an analogy" an argument, i. e., everywhere there is the head, as the bees, the wild geese, the sheep, etc., all have a leader over them, constituting colonies. The shrewd controversionalist, recognizing the weakness of analogy, said, "We believe that, and so every congregation has its head." The Bishop answered, "There is one analogy in nature of that. It is the tad-pole. It is all head, but in time its head will be properly adjusted."

On the Mississippi River he was approached by a Roman priest, who placed a newspaper before him with a notice of a criminal dying and ministered to by one of the Roman hierarchy. He said, "On such occasions you see our priests standing by, but your clergy are absent." "Yes," said the Bishop, "We do not raise up that kind of people to be stood by on the scaffold."

A Jewish man came with the old Jonah story, "How could a fish swallow a big prophet like Jonah?" The Bishop replied, "Did you ever think that Jonah was a Minor Prophet?" "Dot vas so."

The best illustration of his practical humor can be seen in a pastoral visit he made as rector. There was a very earnest woman given to the "creature comforts of the table". Consequently, she suffered from despondency, as we have often found. Sending for her pastor, she remarked that when his predecessor was there he was such a comfort to her, with his prayers and consoling words. He asked her if there was not a dinner in the neighborhood, and found she had indulged freely in the luxurious viands. Then he gave her this Scriptural counsel which she needed, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

His answer to the "smart Alick" of his early parish is proverbial. The man, wishing to afford amusement to his company, gathered about him in the church yard, said: "I will ask the young parson a question he cannot answer." He met Mr. Wilmer, as he then was, with this question, "The Bible says there was a contest over the body of Moses, between the Devil and the Archangel Michael. Can you tell us who got the body?" The young parson replied, "That is a matter that does not concern us, but one thing is certain—unless you change your course of life there will be no contest whatever over you."

With such humor, only equalled in a different way by the greatest humorist of Virginia, George W. Bagby (Mozis Addums), in whose home I lived during my diaconate, there was a pathos of eloquence that I can never forget. He was devoted to his cousin, Bishop Joseph Wilmer of Louisiana. Just after the death of that favorite cousin, dearer than a brother, he undertook to read his Convention address, and came to the remarks about the great man who had recently entered into his rest. He broke down and Dr. Drisdale had to take the manuscript and read, "His speech to me was like the chiming of the bells in the towers of heaven. I only know the personal presence of the man put me in harmony with the everlasting cadences." There was a silence in that Diocesan Council I have never known in any other similar gathering.

He disliked vapid sentiment. For example, when out riding the person with him said, "That is a spot where I would like to be buried." The Bishop replied, "I have never seen the place where I want to be buried." He lived a wholesome life, doing his work with enthusiasm. Entering a cemetery where he looked upon the grave of a lovely woman whose husband and family he knew, and reading on the stone the inscription that the light of his life had gone out, and recalling the fact that the husband had married again, the Bishop remarked when asked what he thought about it, "He struck another match." Perhaps his most sparkling piece of wit, as told me by Bishop Beckwith of Georgia was at the home of a gentleman in the North. A church had been built in Memphis and the rector there had insisted upon giving it the name, St. Lazarus—not the Lazarus of Bethany, but the poor man at the rich man's gate. This was the church of Ex-President Davis. When asked, "Why call it by that name?" the rector said, "Because licked by dogs." Bishop Wilmer, requested to tell the conundrum, "Why is the South like Lazarus?" at first declined to do so, saying it might give offense. The gentleman insisted upon having the story. Upon promise that he would not be offended, the Bishop told it. The gentleman for the moment lost his patience, and said, "Why do you Southern Bishops come North to collect for your churches if you so regard us?" The Bishop replied without a moment's hesitation, "The hair of the dog is good for the bite." The gentleman said, "I forgive you." How often, after some particular gathering, when we have been called upon suddenly, we failed to give a suitable response, we have thought of what we might have said to the point. He had that answer immediately at all times.

In the home of an English Lord, Bishop Joseph Pere Wilmer and he were guests. The Lady of the home gave piano music. Bishop of Louisiana, recognizing the imperfections, drew back and left his cousin to meet the crucial moment of commendation. Bishop of Alabama asked, "Is that touch of hers natural or acquired?" "Oh," said the Lord, "it is natural." "I thought so," said Bishop Wilmer, because such a touch could not be acquired." This answer relieved the embarrassment.

The distinguished characteristic of this wonderful Bishop was courage. It is only necessary to read the account of the controversy over the Prayer for all those in civil authority during the excitement of the closing years of the war. In his address to his Convention he explained his position. General George Thomas of the Federal Army insisted he should pray for the President of the United States. Bishop Wilmer said, "Not until the Confederate States are formally back under the United States Government will I do so." This act of his put his life in jeopardy; but he was firm, as Bishop Cheshire relates. Not long after this, showing how right will triumph, a distinguished Confederate officer, Colonel Samuel Smith Harris, entered the ministry, and his consecrated life attracted the attention of the Diocese of Michigan, where he was elected Bishop. Only one vote of opposition, I have heard, was against his consecration, and that was purely political, and the prejudiced opponent later apologized for his indiscretion. At that consecration in Michigan, Bishop Wilmer, the Confederate Bishop pre-eminently, was the consecrator, having the co-consecrators and others taking part, Bishops from Northern Dioceses. This event marked an important epoch in our Episcopal Church, showing that we have no political lines in the National Church. It impressed our Christian brethren all over the country, and brought such men as Drs. John S. Lindsay, Carson, Joseph Martin, and other splendid Methodist clergymen into our ministry. When the Civil War closed, it was the case of Bishop Wilmer, especially, that caused discussion in the General Convention; but agreement took place, he was received with open arms and the Episcopal Church has, therefore, stood in the eyes of the nation as the herald of peace, and continues to fulfill this mission, obeying the Master's words, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's."

My long life in the ministry is largely due to Bishop Wilmer. He called me to a small parish in Alabama, and just as I accepted, I received a most flattering call to a large parish in Washington, D. C. I submitted the case to Bishop Wilmer, following his advice against the advice of many friends, who had my promotion at heart. Going into the mission field of Alabama with a wide area to travel on horseback, I got health and experience for which I thank God. It was in the cane-brake of the most Southern State at that time, in the neighborhood of Cahaba, the "Ichabod City", where William Lowness Yancey, the man who had more to do with Southern politics, leading to the secession of the States than any other man in my judgment, had his residence; in the midst of Southern sentiment that bound all of the citizens to the Confederacy, and Bishop Wilmer was the great leader among these people in all spiritual matters.

The missionary interest as manifested in Alabama today is largely due to this great man. He consistently lived out his ministry of faith. His funeral hymn was the same we had in Lexington, when General Robert E. Lee was buried—"How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in His excellent word."

I have seen in our late Presiding Bishop, the son of Bishop Wilmer in the faith, a reproduction of that faith, humor and courage. Wilmer and Murray, with Maryland heritage and Evangelical training have left an undying influence upon the Christianity of the world.

(The End.)

MISSIONARY WORK IN SOUTH DAKOTA

By the Right Reverend W. Blair Roberts, D. D.

(Reprinted from the Texas Churchman.)

THE Editor of the Texas Churchman has asked me to write an article for him on our missionary work in South Dakota. This, I am glad to do, partly in order to help him, as he wishes to have a series of Missionary articles in the Churchman, and partly because I would like readers of the Churchman to know something of the work which we, in one of the Northwestern Missionary Districts, are trying to do for the spreading of the Kingdom. He has asked me to write personally, both of my work and the work of the Church here.

I came out to South Dakota twenty-one years ago immediately after my graduation from the Berkeley Divinity School, and was given work in a section of the country which had just been opened to white settlement after having been part of a big reservation. I came pledged to remain two years. At first I didn't see how I could stick it out for two weeks, and it was not until a year and a half had passed that I grew in any way to like the country. By the end of the second year, I pledged myself for another year and repeated the pledge until I just plain stayed here, and now I never want to leave.

Everything was so different from my old home in New England. Now I lived in a small town at the end of the railroad. There was no church there and I started holding services with two men communicants. I also started a Sunday school with two children, after three previous attempts had failed. With this small beginning we built a church, rectory and a guild hall, all modern and without any indebtedness. The communicants grew in a few years to be over fifty and the Church School increased to over sixty. In other places the same thing was true. The Bishop told me that my parish was to be that entire section of the country, the size of which was about half that of the State of Connecticut. For the first several years I travelled by team, by horseback, and often times I walked. I also used the fright trains as I was able to.

The country was sparsely settled and I held services in the homes of the new settlers and in the little towns and communities which sprang up like mushrooms here and there. I didn't always have the nicest things to eat nor did I always find a comfortable place to sleep. I often rolled up in a blanket and slept out under my buggy for want of a better place. Once, I remember, I asked to have a room reserved for me in the hotel in an inland town, as I was going some miles away for service in a "claim shack" and would not return until late that night. When I returned after midnight and asked for my room, the boy in charge told me that none had been reserved for me. I asked if there was any place where I could sleep and he told me there was one room with two beds; there was a man in each bed; I could sleep with either one. I went up to the room and found a sick man in one bed and a drunken man in the other. I crawled in with the drunk, as I felt his trouble was not contagious.

It was through such experiences that the Church was started in that section of the country. We have now in two places, a church, rectory and guild hall and in two other places a combination guild hall and church of the type which we are building in new towns in South Dakota. All the missions are organized and the work is going forward. The Church is firmly planted in that country.

In 1922 I was elected and consecrated Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota and took up my work as assistant to Bishop Burleson.

I think that few people realize the extent of the work in this great missionary district. I don't believe that many people realize that we have here by far the largest Indian work of any other diocese or district in the Church. Our Indian work is almost as large as all the other Indian work in the Church put together. We also have a world record here, for a larger proportion of the Sioux Nation are baptized members of the Anglican Communion than any other race or nation in the world.

Also few people realize that two thirds of the communicants in the Missionary District of South Dakota are Indians, and two thirds of our Churches are Indian Churches. We have over six thousand Indian communicants, ninety-eight Indian chapels, about thirty native ordained priests and deacons, and over sixty native catechists and helpers which correspond to our lay readers in the white field. All our Indian chapels except one are located off the railroad. They are not reached by nice gravel or cemented highways, but we must drive along dirt roads and over Indian trails in order to reach them. This is all right when the weather is dry, but it is pretty strenuous work when the weather is wet.

Last spring, for instance I was out on the Corn Creek District of the Pine Ridge Reservation in my car, and for four days I fought mud. Once I had to stop and help rebuild a road which had been washed out, three times I was hauled out by tractors, and on several occasions I used my shovel as hard as any laboring man could. One has to carry a shovel in this country while visiting the Indian Field, because more apt than not he will need one.

There has been a great deal of discussion about whether the work among the Indian people pays. People often ask me, "Is it not better to leave them in their original state and let them live their own old life?" In the first place, this is impossible, whether we or they wish it or not, the past life of the Sioux Nation is at an end. Their reservations are being opened up to white settlement, and in those sections of the country where the reservation bounds still exist white people are creeping in, buying up Indian land and settling there. For better or for worse the Indian in the future must more and more take his place beside the white man. He must live as the white man lives, and he must work shoulder to shoulder with him. This is inevitable. He has no more hunting grounds and he must do something to earn a living. He cannot always be fed and clothed by the government, for that would be doing him infinitely more harm than good.

In the first place, what kind of a Churchman does the Indian make? To my mind he makes just as good a Churchman as his white brother, and but for his contact with him I believe he would make a better one. Of course, I speak of the Sioux Nation. I know little about other tribes, but this nation has proved especially susceptible to the teachings of Christianity. Indians will travel farther to attend services than any people I have ever known. They give more generously to the Church in proportion to their means than the white men do. They are more reverent in Church than the average white congregation. They join heartily in the singing of hymns and chants. They all kneel when they pray, although there is only one chapel in the entire Indian country which has kneeling benches. They take Christ at His word also. When He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not", they believe He meant exactly what He said. Therefore, they bring their children to church, even the little babies. Thus an Indian child is brought up to attend service just as naturally as he eats his meals and goes to bed.

They are very particular also about the sacraments. They don't wait until their children are grown up to bring them to Holy Baptism but they bring them as soon as arrangements can be made for a priest to baptize them. Last spring on the Pine Ridge Reservation I was asked to have service with a woman in a tent near the chapel who did not seem to be well. At the close of our afternoon service a woman brought a little baby with the request of the mother that I baptize it. The baby had been born just three quarters of an hour before to the woman to whom I had ministered the Holy Communion in the morning. I can tell you many other tales of Indian mothers driving in all kinds of weather long distances with their babies only a few days old in order to have them baptized.

White people say that the Indians are lazy and that they are dirty. According to our standards that is true in the case of many of them, but please consider the Indian's side of the story. Originally, he was a hunter, a fisherman and a fighter. He roamed over the prairies making his home here and there as the country was fruited in game. There is not a trace of working instinct in his whole history so far as we can find. He lived in tepees and in huts which he made. His clothing was made of blankets and skins. The men sometimes wore no clothing at all. He had his own cooking utensils, had his own kind of food, talked his own language.

Then the white man came and killed off his herds of buffalo. He claimed the Indians' land. He put the Indians first on reservations, after that as more white men came into the country he gave them each a certain amount of land. He told him to make his home on it and build a house. He gave him plows and told him to become a farmer and till the soil. He taught him to put away the blankets and wear men's clothing. He taught the Indian the use of cooking utensils and to cook like the white men. In fact, his whole life was completely changed to one for which he had no training nor instinct.

I wonder if we white people would do any better if our entire lives were changed as their lives have been changed; if we were forced to give up our occupations and do work for which we had no taste, liking nor instinct. If we were told to live in different kinds of homes, wear different kinds of clothing, eat different kinds of food. Please remember that only fifty years ago the Sioux Nation was a fighting race. Custer's Massacre took place within that time; the Massacre of Wounded Knee on the Pine Ridge Reservation of South Dakota took place within that time. Today the Sioux Nation is a peaceful Nation. Almost all of them are Christians and are devoted to their new found Saviour. Many of them are tilling the soil, some are trying to raise stock. All are advancing, I think, slowly toward the end which the white man has set before them. It is going to take time to make the Indian what we want him to be. We have taken away his old life. We have taken away his lands, save for small allotments which we have given him. We must be patient with him as he is facing a new day and trying to become accustomed to the new life which has been forced upon him.

What is the Church out here doing to help him? In the first place, as I have said before, we have given him Jesus Christ and services are held each Sunday in all our Indian chapels. But we are not only trying to care for his spiritual needs, we are trying to prepare him in other ways for the life which is to be.

We have five schools for Indians in South Dakota. One of them is St. Mary's School for Girls at Springfield. This is the only Indian school which has an accredited high school in the entire Indian Country. Here we teach the girls not only the principles of education as we know them, but they are taught domestic science and how to establish good homes. We have a training school for our own Indian clergy, Ashley House. Here we take young Indians and train them for the ministry of the Church. At Wakpala, on the Standing Rock Reservation, we have St. Elizabeth's School for boys and girls, and at Fort Thompson on the Crow Creek Reservation we have a dormitory for Indian girls. St. Elizabeth's and the Dormitory at Fort Thompson are merely homes for the Indian children. In these homes they receive a Christian education and are brought up under the influence of strong church surroundings. But they attend school with the white children in the village. We are doing this in these places because these children when they become older must take their places shoulder to shoulder with their white brethren. In this way race prejudices are gradually being broken down and the Indians are having the stimulus of working beside the whites. It is interesting to note that last year three of our Indian girls at St. Elizabeth's school stood highest in scholarship in the public school at Wakpala. This shows that they have a native ability if it can be developed.

Out on the Rosebud Reservation at Mission we last year established a new kind of a school. The Hare Industrial School, named after the great Bishop Hare, the Apostle to the Sioux Indians. Here we have about nine hundred acres of land and a few buildings. About twenty-five selected Indian boys are receiving their education here. We have two graduates of the South Dakota Agricultural College who teach the boys how to farm and care for stock. We have an instructor in carpentry, and much of the building work in the school is done by the boys under his direction. When we secure money enough we hope to establish a garage and teach boys the care of machinery, especially automobiles. Other branches of manual labor will be taught when we secure the means to do so. One very encouraging sign of this new venture is the fact that last winter at a stock judging contest held at the South Dakota State College for boys from all over South Dakota, one of the Hare School boys took second prize in the judging of cattle.

It is easy to see what this training is going to mean to these boys. After they complete their course at Hare School, which will cover a period of three years, they will be able to go out into life fully prepared to take up some useful occupation and become real assets to the life of the community, instead of drones. We hope as time goes on to be able to enlarge the number of boys, but at this time between twenty-five and thirty is about our limit.

You can see by this that the Church in South Dakota is making every effort to make this people whom the whites have so deeply wronged become useful citizens in the nation.

The greatest obstacle to our work is the white people. They are continually trying to exploit the Indians in wild west shows and fairs, and in other ways getting them to dress in their old time costumes and to dance the dances which the missionaries have discouraged. Many people ask, "Why not let the Indians dance their own dances as we allow the white to dance theirs?" The reason for this is the evils which are connected with the old Indian dances, for which there is not space to go in this article.

Our own white Churchmen are also setting a bad example to the Indians by their carelessness in the attendance of Church services and in other ways. There is a world of good in the Indian people. If that good can be brought out and enlarged the nation will be the better for having the Indian in its midst. They are a loyal people. The Sioux Nation will never fight against the whites again. They have a record which no community I know of has, and that is that not one of our Indian boys waited for the draft when the Great War broke out. They all volunteered for service, and many of them laid down their lives for their country.

The future citizenship of South Dakota depends in no small part on what these people become, and what they become will depend largely upon the support which the Church gives to the work among them. This is a task for which Christ has commissioned us. May we, in spite of all our parochial needs, give to others as early missionaries gave to our fathers.

ADDRESS BY GENERAL A. T. GOODWYN

(Continued from last issue.)

WHO was most responsible for the organization of this incomparable army, winning many victories against mighty odds; to be defeated only by gradual starvation? Jefferson Davis was our constitutional commander-in-chief. It was he who appointed all army officers. It was he who appointed the peerless Lee in command of all Confederate forces. It was he who chose Lee as his chief advisor in military strategy. Jefferson Davis' life was a triumphant epic of illustrious achievement. See his courage and skill in the Mexican war; a notably efficient secretary of war; a leader in the federal senate—I earnestly invite every student of American history to read his farewell address in retiring from the senate February 21, 1861. In eloquence, in logic, in historic lore, in a plea for amity, this address has never been surpassed in these United States. See him a victim of bigotry and fanaticism. See him indicted for crime by a partisan jury of military control. See him pleading for an early and speedy trial. See his enemies refusing a court trial knowing the exposed facts would show that they have waged an indefensible war of economic greed under veiled pretenses. See him released under bonds, adroitly arranged by designing politicians. See him return to his own people received with such devoted love as only martyrdom for a just cause could evoke. I am not only familiar with his public history, but I knew him personally, and I proudly invite the student of the ages to find his superior in personal graces, in unselfish patriotism, heroic endurance, in inflexible allegiance to conviction, in integrity and nobility of character. Before the measure of his exalted manhood his enemies have fallen away. His statue from the State of Mississippi will soon be placed in the nation's hall of fame. The following article with several notable quotations was written by Miss Mary D. Carter, a tireless and most efficient historian of Virginia, in The Southern Churchman, May 11, 1929:

" 'A critic of General Lee claimed that the tragedy of his life was because he failed "to put first things first". That the case is misstated and that the reverse is true, can be readily proved. Will quote from three Northern witnesses and one Southern, no less a person than Lee himself. Many others could be given did space permit; these, however, will show my point.

" 'General Morris Schaff, of Boston, in his life of Jefferson Davis, states the case for Lee and the Confederacy thus: "In spite of disasters and privations, the Southern people were willing to fight on. That spirit in Davis was the color bearer and never quailed; the trumpet for him and for Lee and the self-respecting was the principle involved, a principle we venture to prophesy which will be the rallying ground for the people of the United States when the rights under the constitution are all in the constricting folds of the Lernean Hydra of complete centralization.'

" 'Dr. Arthur W. Littlefield, well-known New England divine, thus states the case in the January, 1924, issue of "The Libertarian". "The South tried to divide the country; Lincoln saved it, that is an erroneous notion in these parts still; nobody up here, with very few exceptions, understands that the South tried to save Federalism and the constitution of the fathers as against imperialism and the constitution of the protectionists. The South, though defeated, really saved to America, and as we now see, the world all that was best in American nationality—the constitution of the Confederacy furnished ample proof of that. Lee's shrine at Lexington, not Lincoln's tomb, will become the shrine of American patriotism, when once history is told correctly! Both Henry Clay and Calhoun saw clearly that Federalism would develop eventually into imperialism and that the central government could and would coerce the states whenever one section got control of that government. This, of course, actually happened in the tariff legislation inaugurated and controlled by the North. . . . In order to be true to the American ideal, one must know no sections nor mere habitat. I am simply an American patriot trying to be true to principles, and loving the South, not only for her own sake but because she was true to the principles that the fathers thought they had established and secured in the constitution of 1787-89. Personally, I don't care far any re-writing of the constitution; I want a new emphasis upon the Jeffersonian principles and those of the Confederacy inculcated among the American people, and for that I am working mightily! The historic fact is, that the Northeastern States have nearly destroyed not only the constitution, but also the fundamental American ideals of local self-government and a Federal Union built upon state sovereignty. The signs of a new revolt, akin to that of the sixties, are ominous, but with bullets never again, only ballots now and evermore. Surely, the "Lost Cause" is having a glorious resurrection! I wonder how many Americans—especially Southerners—realize it?'

" 'Gamaliel Bradford states the case in The New York Times, February, 1925, thus:

" ' "Of all the great political questions pressing upon the country for solution today, none is more important than the relation of the state and federal governments. The encroachment of the federal power has been so steady and so slow that few stop to realize the radical changes it involves; and fewer still to consider how these changes may be best met. It was the protest against this tendency which largely animated the thinking men of the South in the Civil War, however, slavery may have been the immediate provoking cause of that great contest. And the result of the war was to increase immensely the federal power and influence. The dangerous aspect of the matter is that, as every year sees the gradual increase in vigor and dominance of the government at Washington, so there is an even greater corresponding tendency to weaken and degrade the state governments. And unless some remedy can be found for it, it is difficult to overestimate the peril to which our whole system is exposed. The attempt of the North to maintain the union was nothing but forcible conquest, and the surrender at Appomattox marked the most tremendous step in the progression that had gone on from the beginning to undermine the state governments and increase the power of the federal. I hope you may see fit to allow a brief discussion to serve as introduction to the letter of General Lee to Lord Acton, which should be widely circulated for the benefit of those who have misunderstood the position of the Southern leaders."

" 'Lastly, General Lee states his own case, in his letter to Colonel McCulloh, a member of the faculty of Washington and Lee, who at the time of the writing of this letter (September 28, 1869) was on a mission to France, connected with this institution. I quote from this letter as follows: "I am very much obliged for the kind sentiments felt for the South and the sympathy extended to our people (by the French). Every brave people who considered their rights attacked and their constitutional liberties invaded, would have done as we did. Our conduct was not caused by any insurrectionary spirit, nor can it be termed rebellious, for our construction of the constitution under which we lived and acted, was the same from its adoption, and for eighty years we had been taught and educated by the founders of the republic, and their written declarations which controlled our consciences and actions. The epithets that have been heaped upon us of 'Rebels' and traitors have no just meaning nor are they believed in by those who understood the subject, even at the North."

"After reading these testimonies, the conclusion is inescapable that Lee's objective was 'the principle involved'—that he fought to preserve not only for Virginia, but every state in the union—'the American ideals of local self-government and a federal union built upon state sovereignty in other words, a government, of the people, by the people, and for the people; the 'eternal verity' on which all human liberty rests, and if this is not 'putting first things first', then I fail to understand the English language.

"As very appropriate at this time I will quote from our distinguished and lamented comrade, Dr. J. L. M. Curry's History of the Confederate States—its eloquent conclusion:

" 'If the South be freed from unjust aspersions, with patriotism and courage acknowledged as well as civic and military virtues freely accorded, actions based upon long asserted state rights and the guarantee of the constitution justly recognized, there will be in the future, with its questions demanding united energies, a whole country, with no alienations, no unappeased hates, no wrangling over "dead past", no pulling in opposite directions. North and South, East and West joined in purpose and hope and effort, for honor and freedom and glory, will not be separated in sentiment or party upon questions deep buried in the irrevocable past. "They will be controlled by a common desire to make America prosperous, contented, happy and free, a constitutional, representative Federal republic, the example to all nations struggling for good government, the beneficent illustration of Liberty Enlightening the World."

(The End.)

WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(Reprinted from "The Presbyterian".)

Nearly one hundred Presbyterian ministers were invited to New York on September 16, for the purpose of taking counsel regarding the new Westminster Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. An account of the beginning and progress of the Seminary was given and the meeting definitely approved the project.

For the benefit of those unable to attend and in order that recent developments may be known more generally, it was considered advisable to publish a report of the conference in The Presbyterian. The committee appointed to prepare the report has tried to set down what was said and the results are submitted herewith. Changing statistics have been brought down to date, and a few additional facts have been written into the record to make the narrative clear. It is the best report we could make, though far from perfect.

Henry B. Kirkland,
Frank E. Simmons,
Frank H. Stevenson,
Committee.

The Place of Meeting.

New York City was an appropriate place to hold a meeting in behalf of the new Presbyterian theological seminary. We think of New York as the source of the intellectual life of Modernism in this country. Sometimes we forget the faithful Christians there who face the blighting effects of this Modernism. Every day they confront the might of its wealth and social prestige; the relentlessness of its purpose; the devastation it has wrought with words of unbelief like the enemy who sowed tares among the wheat while men slept.

It is not to be wondered at that Christians who have remained faithful in New York are ready to help any enterprise which stands firmly against forces they know well are threatening all the churches of Christendom. Therefore ministers who were invited to hear about Westminster Theological Seminary as the guests of Dr. Walter D. Buchanan, in New York City, were not altogether surprised. Dr. Buchanan is a successful preacher of the gospel to large congregations in a church within a stone's throw of Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University. He has been one of the brave and useful men who have kept faith alive in New York. That he would do all within his power for an institution like Westminster was assumed from the start.

It was a privilege to partake of Dr. Buchanan's hospitality at The University Club on September 16. It was pleasant to find there a band of men whose hearts God had touched; to be reminded again of the overwhelming importance of our holy cause; and to look in prayer to him who is faithful to keep his covenant with his people.

Perhaps more fellowship of the kind Dr. Buchanan provided would benefit the conservative morale. Our position never has been popular in a worldly sense, for always the gospel of Christ is contrary to the natural man; and in these later years in particular our stand on the truthfulness of Scripture has been a sign everywhere spoken against. We are labeled "extreme fundamentalists", and caricatured as Christians without charity. Sometimes we think we have been deserted on all sides. But that is an illusion. The loyal friends of God's Word are a great company; and we need but to discover one another and to stand together, to learn how ill becoming to us is the lament of Elijah on Horeb. Many times seven thousand are left in Israel who have not bowed to Baal.

The Remarks of Dr. Buchanan.

Dr. Buchanan called the meeting to order and intimated that the first action looking to a new theological Seminary came from an informal gathering of thirty or forty Presbyterians from five or six Presbyteries, "who met in this room about three weeks after the last General Assembly had adjourned and passed the following resolution:

" 'Resolved, That this group will support the loyal members of the former Board of Directors of Princeton Theological Seminary in any step they may see fit to take: (1) Toward preventing by legal means the misuse of the Seminary's funds; or (2) Toward the formation of a new seminary if they decide that it is necessary.'

This was on June 17, 1929."

It was doubtful, Dr. Buchanan thought, if the history of the church shows many acts more heroic than that of the four distinguished professors at Princeton who had left positions of affluence and comfort and had cast their lot with an institution which was projected in faith and, possessed neither site, money, students, nor recognized constiuency. The act of these four men, Drs. R. D. Wilson, J. G. Machen, O. T. Allis, and Cornelius Van Til, was in itself evidence enough of the seriousness of conditions at Princeton and the crisis in the Presbyterian Church. They were in position to know the significance of events, and they had acted deliberately and with full appreciation of the sacrifice they faced. Dr. Robert Dick Wilson, especially, had given up much that men hold dear. Fortunately, such is the reputation of these men, if they alone were to become the faculty of a new seminary, at once it would take high rank among the institutions of learning of the world.

Dr. Buchanan then introduced Dr. Charles Schall, minister of the Presbyterian Church of Wayne, Pennsylvania, saying that Dr. Schall was the man who had taken the vague idea of a new seminary and had started influences which made it a happy reality.

Dr. Schall Relates the Story of the Beginning of a Seminary.

Dr. Schall said he had been present at conferences of interested Presbyterians subsequent to the St. Paul General Assembly. Topics discussed were: (1) The drift in the Church away from its high regard for sound doctrine; and (2) The overthrow of the conservative control of Princeton. Conditions were freely admitted to be bad, but always there were some of the opinion that nothing could be done about it. He left these conferences with a heavy heart.

He had heard arguments along the line that it was prudent to give the new policy at Princeton a few years of opportunity before attempting to set up a theological seminary which would have the confidence of evangelical Christians. He thought little of such arguments. The purposes actuating the reconstruction of Princeton had been made manifest during five years of controversy. Two distinct parties with two distinct platforms had clearly defined the issues. The conservative party had definitely lost in the decision of the General Assembly at St. Paul. Why should men who love the faith of the Church stand idly by, just waiting to see by what measures and methods the men who had long disagreed with them on the very question of the Church's faith which put their plainly announced policies into effect? Their policies might develop slowly and our waiting might delay every move our party contemplated in the direction of constructive action. Dr. Schall said he could not bring himself to abandon his convictions while waiting for a more convenient season to express them and to watch and wait meant precisely that. He thought thousands of men and women in the conservative Church would support positive action if men could be found who would take the lead. They did question Princeton; they did feel that the citadel of orthodoxy there was doomed; they did want an institution to take its place; but they did not know where to turn to get it.

One day late in June, Dr. Schall had luncheon in Philadelphia with two ruling elders, Mr. F. M. Paist and Mr. T. E. Ross. He discovered that they were familiar with the situation in the Church, and were very anxious about the future. They had no sympathy for a program of inaction, and believed that Christians, like their Lord, must "work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." They asked if something could be done toward founding a new seminary for the sake of permanently maintaining the evangelical witness unchanged. They said many elders in Philadelphia churches would be as keenly interested in such a possibility as they were.

Two weeks later, at a small luncheon at the Arts Club in Philadelphia, the new seminary was launched. Eight earnest elders were present. Drs. Wilson, Machen and Allis were guests of the day. They were asked to outline the steps to be taken in order to open a seminary to students by the end of September. It was a large request, but these three professors proposed plans, estimated a budget, and said they would be ready to teach. Enough money was pledged toward the first year's expenses to encourage further efforts, and when the meeting adjourned, it was with the heartfelt prayer that God would open the way, if it was His will, to a bold venture of faith.

On the night of July 18, seventy-eight men met in the Y. M. C. A. in Philadelphia, at the request of the organizing committee. It was in the midst of summer, and many men who were sought could not be reached. Those who came knew the object of the meeting in advance. Pastors, elders, professors, recent students at Princeton, all had part in the discussion. Unanimously it was voted to go on with the project, and $22,000 in pledges was announced as subscribed to meet the budget. That night there was no question in the mind of the friends of the new seminary but that God's hand was upon the enterprise and that God's people would prosper it with their gifts and their prayers. The temporary executive committee whose names appear upon the literature of the seminary was formed at the meeting of July 18.

(To be continued.)

BIBLE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

(Our readers are invited to send in their questions from time to time concerning Scriptural subjects in which they are perplexed or desire light. Our limited space necessitates brevity in questions, as well as in the answers which we will endeavor to maintain in strict accord with the Word of the Lord, which, after all, settles all argument. This column is therefore not for controversy, but for a testimony.)

Question No. 3.—When a person receives Christ as his or her Saviour, is salvation immediately assured?—E. P. S.

Answer.—Yes: Seven things by the sure word of God immediately take place: (1) He is at once eternally saved, John 5:24; (2) His sins are at once forgiven, 1 John 2:12; (3) He is at once justified before God, Gal. 2:16; (4) He is reconciled to God, Rom. 5:1; (5) He is reckoned righteous, Phil. 3:9; (6) He is sanctified, Heb. 10:10; (7) He is sealed by the Holy Spirit (Eph. 1:13).

Being a babe in Christ, he is to then grow in grace and knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, 1 Peter 2:2. Thousands of Christians remain impoverished through lack of spiritual food, 1 Peter 5:2.

Question No. 4.—What is meant by the statement that we are to be "joint-heirs with Christ?—L. E. B.

Answer.—See Rom. 8:17, which means just as it reads. To be born again is to become a child of God, and thus enter the family of God, and share with His Son, who is heir of all things, the glory and vastness of His inheritance. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." See John 3:8; Heb. 1:2; 1 John 3:1-2.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by

Miss Jane K. Smoot, of Langley, Virginia:

> "And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.
>
> And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will, be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed."—St. Matthew 8:2, 3.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

AN APPALLING DISGRACE.

To the Editor of The Globe: Many years' experience of the futility of merely human efforts to subdue the deadly traffic in intoxicants leads me to cast my vote against Government control. For the Governments of our several Provinces to undertake to control the traffic by themselves going into the business of selling intoxicants has been clearly demonstrated in Quebec, British Columbia and Ontario to be an appalling disgrace. They have indeed made millions of dollars, but at the price of their own honor. Stainless honor is of more value than all the money in the world.

Honorable men, here and there, have done their best to enforce the law, but the love of money has proved too strong for the majority, and they have "sold the pass." The lawmakers have themselves become lawbreakers, and instead of self-control, we have self-indulgence spreading far and wide.

My heart goes out in a great longing for the deliverance of the unhappy slaves of the consuming passion for intoxicating drinks. There is only one Saviour from this, as from every other sinful passion, and He is able to save to the uttermost every sinner drawing near unto God through Him. My own confidence is not in the law, but in the Gospel. But, alas! rum-runners and bootleggers have no use either for the law or for the Gospel. They are out for money at any price, no matter how many homes are desolated or souls destroyed. One of themselves, to my personal knowledge, dared to say: "Our policy is bread and butter, first, last and all the time."

Of course, if all men would sincerely follow Christ, drunkenness would forever cease, but a man once said to me in my own study: "I had rather have the drink than God." What can we do with those who love the darkness rather than the light; turn their backs upon Christ and glory in their shame?

I am a Canadian and I love our country and am jealous for her honor. May God save us from every form of betrayal, and guide our feet in the way of genuine liberty, sobriety and peace! If Christ shall set us free, we shall be free indeed.

G. Osborne Troop.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 3, 1929.

Book Reviews

THE FAITH FOR THE FAITHFUL: By L. J. Baggott. Morehouse Publishing Company. Price, $2.

This series of sermons follows the faith expressed in the Creed. The sermons are splendid. They are clear, strong and full of thought. Words are not wasted; and one feels that he has spent his time well in reading them carefully. They are stimulating, and strengthen one's hope and faith. They are not stale and platitudinous as are so many published sermons.

R. R. Claiborne.

THE DIVINE TOUCH; OR EVANGELISTIC EXPERIENCE: By William Olney. Forewords by the Rev. H. Tydeman Chilvers and Dr. A. McCaig. Cloth. Pp. 220. Published by The Kingsgate Press, London, England.

Here are fifty-seven chapters recording memorable instances of the intervention of the Lord in the lives and experiences of those who have witnessed to the inviolable law of the vital Christian life that "God knows and loves and cares". The closing chapter on "How to Insure the Divine Touch" is not only instructive, but stimulating to faith.

Facing as we do the psychological explanation of all spiritual phenomena, this book is a challenge to thought and reverent examination. We may leave to those who care to follow the ignis fatuos of the doctrine of a purely mechanistic universe; there is lying deep down in the soul of every thinking man, the undeniable sense that somehow, if God is at all, He must be interested in us. And if we allow but the fringe of this spiritual instinct, we must eventually go all the way and join the faithful saints of the ages who have proved God to be true to His own.

Such a volume as this must allure us, if we have wandered from the way of faith, to the complete surrender to the divine will and way that will insure our daily experience of His fellowship and purpose in our behalf.

The author has written a personal letter to the Editor of The Southern Churchman; but fails to give the name of the American book seller from whom the book may be had. From the English price, it must cost about $1.25 net on this side of the water.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

"The Keswick Convention."

Mr. Editor:

I have just received a copy of The Keswick Convention, being the addresses given this year at Keswick, England. It is "published by the authority of the Council" by Pickering & Inglis, 14 Paternoster Row, London, E.C.4.

Rates, including postage, are: Paper cover, 2/10 per copy; Full Cloth, 4/6 per copy.

The above is British postal rates, but suppose foreign postage not much more. I have had the treat of a copy for years, and I am sure that many of the Churchman readers would enjoy it, especially after the good account of the yearly gathering given on its pages several weeks ago. Now, while I often look over the book notices, I have not noticed these addresses, now published, as having been mentioned, but perhaps this is my own fault, maybe they have been already spoken of among the "book notices". Mine is the paper cover only, but so well got up that it would make a most acceptable gift in every way to one who loves its pages.

The addresses are called "The Keswick Convention" instead of the former name it bore, "The Keswick Week", under which title I have known it for years.

Hoping my suggestion will be pardoned if not acceptable, but I am sure many do not know that these fine publications may be easily obtained.

Margaret C. Worthington.

Charlottesville, Virginia.

Church Intelligence

G. F. S. Conference, Province II.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, Suffragan Bishop of New York, opened the three-day conference of The Girls' Friendly Society in the Second Province, October 18, at the Church Club Rooms, Allerton House, New York City. One hundred delegates attended the opening session. Bishop Lloyd urged members of the society to seek a better knowledge of God and challenged them to disprove by their own lives what he called the generally accepted fallacy that "organized religion stands between humanity and self-expression." Dr. Adelaide Teague Case, Associate Professor of Religious Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, spoke on "Self-Reverence". An evening quiet hour and preparation service was held at the Church of the Transfiguration, that evening.

The following afternoon, Dr. Adele Streeseman, Medical Adviser of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, spoke on "Self-Knowledge" and "Self-Control". On Sunday, the members came together for corporate communion at St. Thomas' Chapel, and in the afternoon held a festival service at Trinity Church.

Other Provincial Girls' Friendly Society Conferences in the near future will be: Province VI, October 22-24, Ottumwa, Iowa (at the meeting of the Provincial Synod); Province I, November 7-10, Providence, Rhode Island; Province III, November 15-17, Pittsburgh Pennsylvania.

The G. F. S. in Provinces IV and VII is taking advantage of the Provincial Synod for a meeting. When the Synod of Province IV meets at Columbia, South Carolina, Mrs. Salmond, Provincial Vice-President, Miss Newbold, Executive Secretary of the G. F. S., and Miss Twiggs, Field Secretary for Province IV, will represent the Society; Mrs. Roberts, Vice-President for Province VII, has a place on the program of the Synod of Province VII at Topeka, Kansas.

College of Preachers to be Dedicated.

The College of Preachers of Washington Cathedral, America's newest religious institution, which was established to stimulate the Christian ministry by providing post-ordination training in the prophetic art, will be formally dedicated on Thursday, November 14, according to plans made public by the Rt. Rev. James T. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

The Rt. Rev. Frank Theodore Woods, Bishop of Winchester, England, members of the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church, and clergymen from all parts of the country, are to participate in the ceremony which will take place on the day following the election in the Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral of a successor to the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, late Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

The building, which the College of Preachers will occupy, is the gift of the late Alexander Smith Cochran, Yonkers, N. Y., manufacturer and philanthropist, who also provided for the financial support of the institution's activities. A little over two years ago, Mr. Cochran gave $250,000 for the building as a memorial to his mother, the late Mrs. William F. Cochran. He later increased this by a gift of $150,000 for the construction of the College of Preachers' Chapel, for furnishings of the building and for the landscaping of the adjacent grounds. In addition, he provided $1,000,000 by bequest to be used as an endowment.

The inception of this unique institution, believed to be the first of its nature in Christian history, is traced to the late Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee, first Bishop of Washington, who suggested more than three decades ago that a school of the prophets be founded in connection with the Cathedral in the National Capital to translate the doctrinal truths of theology "into the common language of life, in such a way as to take hold of the living convictions of thinking men."

Bishop Freeman who has been active in bringing this dream to fruition regards the establishment of the College of Preachers as a step toward a nation-wide revival of Christianity through the power of preaching. A group of eminent theologians and leading exponents of the art of preaching is to meet for a three-day conference following the dedication for the purpose of considering the curriculum for the initial session. The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, Warden of the College of Preachers, and former Bishop of Pennsylvania, will preside at this latter gathering. Bishop Rhinelander, as a trustee of the Cathedral, has been associated with the College of Preachers in its tentative work during the last five years in advance of its new building and endowment.

Church of England News.

At the present moment our beloved Church seems fated to be overshadowed by clouds of controversy, thunder-clouds dark with the menace of worse storms to come. One consoling thought, however, is that all this unrest is at any rate a sign of life, for our Church has probably never been more keenly alive, intellectually, spiritually and socially. Still these are anxious times and much heart-searching and earnest prayer are needed by people of all parties to prevent this stir of life degenerating into a disintegrating and un-Christian strife.

The South India Church Union Scheme, which at present occupies much space in all Church papers, threatens to overshadow the Prayer Book controversy and to provide the occasion for a clash of principles which may even endanger the unity of the Church itself. A committee of Anglo-Catholic scholars, headed by Bishop Gore, has issued a manifesto criticising the new scheme and threatening secession if the Lambeth Conference should approve it. This manifesto was answered by Dr. Palmer, the late Bishop of Bombay, himself a definite "catholic", and Dr. Gore has issued a counter-reply. Meanwhile the correspondence columns of all Church papers are filled with caustic and bitter things, the current coin of religious controversy. It is well that this important scheme should be carefully scrutinized and criticised, for its acceptance or rejection may mark an epoch in the history of the Christian Church.

If it succeeds it may prove a model for schemes of Church union elsewhere; therefore it is all the more desirable that such a union should be based on sound principles. If the Church of England holds aloof, the cause of reunion may be put back indefinitely.

Whatever happens there is danger of fresh schism.

Many who sympathize with the contentions of Dr. Gore's committee regret that they should have thought it necessary to couple their criticisms with a threat. Even if for reasons of conscience they should decide to take so unregrettable a step, to make such a suggestion at the present moment strikes a jarring note, which does not make for the resolution of our discords. One is reminded of our Lord's rebuke to the "Boanerges". Yet in justice to our modern "Sons of Thunder" we ought to remember that the necessity of episcopal ordination for all who celebrate the Holy Communion is certainly the teaching of the Prayer Book of 1662. It is not in defence of some Romish devotion that Dr. Gore's committee speaks out so frankly and clearly, but in defence of the right of all Anglicans to be ministered to by properly ordained priests and in defence of the importance of Confirmation as a means of grace. The controversy is by no means one of words and symbols, but of deep rooted principles, and even those who disagree with Dr. Gore's committee ought to try and understand the difficulties involved, while those who agree with them ought to realize the broad-minded and generous spirit of the South India United Church is accepting episcopal government as a basis of union. It is probable that the new scheme may involve the recognition for a time at least of a good many irregularities; but, if the main principles of Church order are safeguarded and continuity with the historic Catholic Church secured, it may be that a wise latitude even in such important matters will be a small price to pay for the great gain in Christian fellowship that will result. After all, the Church is greater than its own rules and the authority and power bestowed by Christ resides in the Body as a whole not in any system of rules, however ancient. A writer in The Church of England Newspaper compares the present situation with that which arose in the first century in the connection with the admission of Gentiles to the Church. Analogies are dangerous things to play with, but the thought is a stimulating one. No doubt the strict Judaizing party and even St. Peter himself felt just as strongly about the old forms and ordinances of Judaism as Dr. Gore and his committee feel about the irregularities likely to be produced by the new scheme; but at the Council of Jerusalem the Holy Spirit over-ruled their scruples and the Church was enabled to make a great step forward in the conversion of the world.

The present question comes up before the Lambeth Conference next summer and meanwhile no Churchman either in England or in Canada can be indifferent to it. It is our obvious duty to study the question with an open mind and, above all, to pray throughout the intervening time that the Holy Spirit may guide our leaders to a right decision and that no party passions or love of strife may hinder the progress of the Kingdom of God.—The Canadian Churchman.

Lambeth Conference.

The seventh Lambeth Conference meets in July, 1930. For those of our people who have been confirmed or have grown up from childhood since 1920, when the last one took place, it may be said that Lambeth Palace is the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Conference held there every ten years brings together the bishops of the Anglican Communion throughout the world, all who can possibly attend. In 1920, there were about two hundred and fifty bishops present. They come from Canada, the West Indies, South America, Asia, Africa, Australia, not to mention Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and the United States and American missionary districts. They come from such dioceses as Limerick, Argyll, Kalgoorlie, Zululand, Persia, Korea, Madras, Caribb, Truro, Oxford, London. Scholars, shepherds, pioneers friends of kings and friends of lepers. In 1920, they discussed missionary problems, international relations, the Christian Faith in relation to spiritualism, and theosophy, the position of women, industrial questions, problems of marriage and morality, and, above all else, Church unity.

The last named is likely to be the subject on which most emphasis will be placed in 1930, especially in view of the great undertaking in South India, to which Churchmen in India and England have been devoting untold hours of study and prayer.

Since the last Lambeth, three great missionary and religious gatherings have been held by groups in which many Communions took part and which will have a bearing on the Lambeth meeting: The three were the Conference on Christian Life and Work at Stockholm in 1925, the World Conference on Faith and Order, at Lausanne in 1927, and the Jerusalem Meeting of the International Missionary Council in 1928.

About fifty bishops have been consecrated by the American Church since July, 1920, a fourth of them for missionary districts.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has issued the following outline of the Agenda for the forthcoming Lambeth Conference to be held at Lambeth Palace, July 7-August 9, 1930. Explanations and elaborations of the Agenda will probably be published subsequently.

The Faith and Witness of the Church In This Generation.

I. The Christian Doctrine of God.
  (a) In relation to modern thought.
  (b) In relation to non-Christian religions and ideals.
  (c) As determining the character of Christian worship.
  (d) To be realized throughout the Church by teaching and study.

II. The Life and Witness of the Christian Community, individual and corporate, in the fulfilment of the Divine purpose—with special reference to questions of—
  (a) Marriage.
  (b) Sex.
  (c) Race.
  (d) Education and Governments.
  (e) Peace and War.

III. The Unity of the Church.
  (a) Reports of results of the Lambeth Appeal, 1920. World Conference on Faith and Order.
  (b) Schemes and proposals of Union.
  (c) Relations of the Anglican Communion with particular Churches.

IV. The Anglican Communion.
  (a) Its ideal and future.
  (b) Its organization and authority: (1) Central, (2) National and Provincial, (3) Missionary Dioceses, under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. (Questions of Church Order with regard to Forms of Worship and Rules of Marriage.)

V. The Ministry.
  (a) Supply of men for Holy Orders, and the Church's duty to provide for it.
  (b) The training of clergy before and after ordination.
  (c) Supplementary Ministries: (1) Deaconesses, (2) Voluntary Clergy.

Reports: Women's Work, Resolution 54, Lambeth Conference, 1920; Ministry of Healing, Resolution 63; Lambeth Conference, 1920; Communities, Resolution 57, Lambeth Conference, 1908.

VI. Youth and its Vocation.

Items, Here and There.

Warning From Canada: In what is known as "The Hughson Street case", Hamilton, Canada, Mr. Justice Kelly decides that property deeded to an educational institution with conditions, including teaching of the Divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures must revert to the heirs of the donors, if the teaching is contrary to that provided in the deed. In other words, professors enjoying comfortable salaries from funds bequeathed, or given, for the teaching of Christianity must not teach atheism, must realize that the law will enforce the obligations of ordinary honor, truth and decency.

Virginia Champion Church Community: According to The Christian Sun, the substantial and thirfty Virginia town of Franklin probably is the champion community of the United States, if not the whole world, in church membership. Apparently speaking by authority, The Sun says ninety-five per cent of the residents of Franklin are affiliated actively with some church. The Christian revivalists, in a recent evangelical raid, probably increased the percentage, as from a list of forty non-church members they secured twenty-five to become members. At Suffolk, one hundred and nine members were added to the roll of the Christian Church on May 5, seventy-one by profession, thirty-eight by letter.

Presbyterian Gains: According to official reports, the Presbyterian Church in the United States gained 9,331 in total number of communicants in the fiscal year, recently closed. Its total membership now is 453,988, and it has 3,581 churches in the seventeen states of its Southern and Southwestern territory. There are 2,386 licensed ministers, a gain of forty-four. Contributions last year, $14,485,000, of which $1,111,000 was for foreign missions.

At a recent public dinner of one of the London Guilds, Lord Parmoor, in a speech, said the poverty of the clergy of the Church of England, worse now than in many years, was decreasing the number of candidates for ordination.

The Southern Baptist Church maintains twenty-eight hospitals with capacity of 3,895 beds and, in 1928, these had 130,543 patients and furnished over $721,000 in free service to the poor. Virginia, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, New Mexico, Missouri, South Carolina, have one each; Texas eight, Tennessee and Arkansas two each, Alabama three.

Southern Baptist Sunday Schools have enrollment of 2,797,129 and the churches of the denomination have 3,705,000 members.

British Church newspapers are unanimous in urging the clergy to abstain carefully from personal participation in politics, but to lead their congregations in prayer, that the voters be guided to wise choices.

Returned missionaries of the Church of England find that their service in other lands is not included in computing their claims for pensions. Church papers protest strongly against continuance of this condition and predict that the fault will be corrected by the authorities.

Nearly seventy conferences and summer schools of the Protestant Episcopal Church were held in June, July and August, just double the number for 1922. The Province of Sewanee reported the largest number—fifteen.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The twelfth annual nation-wide Corporate Communion of the Men and Boys of the Church will be observed on the First Sunday in Advent, December 1. Posters, together with sample invitation cards and leaflets on preparation have been sent to all rectors in the Church; additional supplies may be secured from the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

At the call of Bishop Weller, the Brotherhood Chapters of the Diocese of Fond du Lac meet at St. Paul's Cathedral recently and formed a diocesan assembly with Edward O. Brown, of Rhinelander, as President.

The boys and young men of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew at their recent National Convention in Geneva, N. Y., established a "Brotherhood of St. Andrew Japanese Scholarship Fund" to assist outstanding Japanese young men to study in this country, in preparation for Christian leadership in Japan. The National Council of the Brotherhood has been made trustees of the fund.

Notes From Hawaii.

To relieve the pressure of work in the bishop's office in Honolulu, the Rev. W. A. Allan, formerly of the Canadian Diocese of Qu'Appelle, has recently been appointed assistant to Dean Ault.

Iolani School for Boys has two hundred and thirty-one students this year The school paper says that a Chinese brigadier general and inspector of finance, in the Nationalist Army, Chang Young, graduated from Iolani in 1921. The question is whether to point with pride or view with alarm. After leaving Iolani he attended North Carolina State College, specializing in textile work and studying military tactics, graduating with a B. S. degree in 1925.

Having visited all the people in his parish, the Rev. H. H. Corey, who recently arrived at the Church at Hilo, Hawaii, found one hundred and eighty-one persons rated as "Episcopalians", of whom eighty-four had not attended service at least since his arrival. Other problems were that the church had both a debt and a leaky roof, and the fact that the parish had not paid its apportionment last year. Undismayed, he is getting into the work.

The Rev. Noah Cho, in charge of St. Luke's Korean Mission, has sixty children in the Church School, and only two teachers. "I hope every one will pray for our mission," he writes. Most of the members of this mission work are in the pineapple canneries during the summer.

St. Mary's Children Home, Honolulu has been much benefited by the building and opening of a new house, secured largely through Bishop Restarick's good offices, and by a dozen other improvements and accomplishments. It is functioning successfully, and its kindergarten, and the baby clinic and dispensary operated in connection with Palama Settlement, are meeting a great need in an otherwise uncared for district.

The young people's organizations of the Church in Hawaii had their second annual conference for three days early in the fall. "It is hoped these conferences will never be given up," says a report. "They are of inestimable benefit." The young people met in a girls' camp borrowed from the Salvation Army. The Governor paid them a visit and started a fund toward getting their own equipment.

The Hawaiian congregation of St. Mark's Mission are rejoicing in a newly opened and well equipped parish hall. Besides numerous meetings from time to time, it regularly houses a daily kindergarten of about one hundred and seventy-five, a mothers' group, a clinic, most of a Church School of about two hundred, the Y. P. S. L. and the Girl Scouts.

Election of Presiding Bishop November 13.

Before another issue of this paper appears there will have taken place in Washington, D. C., on November 13, the election of a Presiding Bishop of our Church to fill the two years' unexpired term of office of the late Bishop John Gardner Murray, D. D.

Several bishops have been suggested for this highest official position in the Church, among them the Rt. Rev. Thos. C. Darst, Bishop of Eastern Carolina, and Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism; the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, and the Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, Bishop of South Dakota, who served as "Assessor" to Bishop Murray, and is now filling the same office for Bishop Leonard, Senior Bishop, serving as Presiding Bishop until the election.

Bishop Darst, seeing in the New York Times that he had been suggested for the office, expressed surprise and said that it is thought by many that Bishop Burleson is the logical person to succeed in the office. He further said:

"I am very happy in my work as Bishop of East Carolina and as I am not seeking the office of Presiding Bishop, I am glad to feel that there is a very slight possibility of my having to face such a decision."

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Interesting Mission at Rocky Mount.

At Trinity Church, Rocky Mount, of which the Rev. Douglas Irvine Hobbs is rector, a splendid mission has just been held by the Rev. McVeigh Harrison, O. H. C., of West Park, N. Y., beginning in the morning of Sunday, October 13, and closing with the evening service on Sunday, the twentieth. Each day during the week there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M., a special service for young people at 4:30 P. M., and regular service at 7:30 P. M.

The congregation, about normal in size at the beginning, increased each day until it taxed the capacity of the church. Especially gratifying was the interest manifested by members of the other denominations of the town. On the closing Sunday evening the service at the Methodist Church was omitted in order that its members might attend the mission at Trinity.

One of the most important features of the mission was the series of afternoon services and addresses for the young people. The missioner is an enthusiastic Mason and on Friday evening his sermon was addressed especially to the members of this Order; thus complying with a special request, which he received Thursday morning. During the mission there were perhaps a hundred and fifty requests for intercessory prayers.

T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Benefit Entertainment.

In Epiphany Parish, the interests of the Episcopal Church Home and the building fund of the Episcopal Home for Children have been combined into one organization, which raises money from time to time for these two institutions. A benefit entertainment was given November 1 at the Carlton Hotel by this organization, known as the Thursday Morning Club.

The Episcopal Church Home is not a member of the Community Chest, because it ministers only to Episcopalians and so it still depends on individual gifts for its maintenance. The Episcopal Home for Children is a member of the Community Chest, but, with building operations to begin in the near future, every effort is being made to add to the building fund already in hand.

Rector's Son Improved.

Pinkney Wroth, Jr., whose critical illness during the past four weeks has been a source of concern to his many friends, has shown marked improvement and is regarded as well on his way to recovery. Pinkney is the oldest child of the Rev. and Mrs. E. Pinkney Wroth, of Christ Church, Georgetown.

Memorial Service.

A Memorial Service for the late Bishop of Edinburgh, the Rt. Rev. G. H. S. Walpole, D. D., was held in Christ Church, Georgetown, on Sunday morning, November 3, at eleven o'clock. The service consisted of Holy Communion, celebrated by the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, rector of Christ Church, and sermon by the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., Warden of the Washington Cathedral College of Preachers. All the hymns used at this service were selected from those used by Bishop Walpole during his mission at Christ Church, several years ago. Special notice of this service was sent, not only to members of Christ Church, but others who had attended Bishop Walpole's Mission.

M. M. W.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. Paul's, Chattanooga, to Erect New Church School Building.

After a year's study by a general committee representing every parish organization, St. Paul's, Chattanooga, has decided to erect a new Church School building to house the Little Helpers, Kindergarten, and Primary Departments. The building now used by these departments will later be changed to house the parish house activities, and the present parish house will be remodeled to house the upper departments of the Church School. The architect's estimate for the new Church School building was $27,000. The vestry decided not to conduct a general campaign but simply to take an offering on a designated Sunday, and if half the amount, $13,500, was given in cash or pledges, that they would proceed with the building. The offering was taken on October 13, and amounted to $18,323.72, with a good many people yet to hear from. The building committee plans to start the building within the next two weeks.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Church Schools.

When one analyzes the situation the Church Schools in our diocese are a splendid success. They have only been established for ten years and their physical value today is over a million dollars—a splendid achievement of which all of us should feel proud.

In addition, the Church Schools with one exception are not only self-supporting, but show a profit. The exception, St. Anne's, has been reorganized and will soon likewise earn its own way. The money expended by the diocese on the Church Schools pay off debts formerly contracted for buildings and equipment—the actual running expenses of the schools are cared for by the schools themselves.

From the standpoint of business they are a going concern, a sound financial investment and a paying proposition; but from the standpoint of the Church they are a spiritual asset of inestimable value.

No girl or boy can attend any one of our schools with the morning and evening prayers, the influence of the godly, devoted headmasters, principals and teachers, and the general atmosphere of reverence and love for sacred things, and not be powerfully influenced. These formative years determine character and our Churches will need and must have the high type of manhood and womanhood our schools are developing.

The Church Schools belong to the diocese—they are your schools—they stand for all that is best in the culture and life of our state.

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

NOVEMBER.

1. Friday. All Saints.
3. Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity.
10. Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity.
17. Twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity.
24. Sunday next before Advent.
28. Thursday, Thanksgiving Day.
30. Saturday. S. Andrew.

COLLECT FOR TWENTY-FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee; absolve Thy people from their offenses; that through Thy bountiful goodness we may all be delivered from the hands of those sins, which by our frailty we have committed. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for Jesus' Christ's sake, Our Blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

For The Southern Churchman.

THE ARMISTICE—1918.

Percy T. Fenn.

The air was hushed! That gray November day
Cried: 'Truce" upon the myriads gripped in war;
It echoed far through trench of sticky clay,
Through bloody fields, like shambles, drowned with gore.

It travelled far 'cross "Flander's field," the Meuse,
Where brave men fought and died, heedless of loss;
In Armageddon fierce, deaf to all curse
Their only thought to die in fiendish holocaust.

It reached the homes, where sons and husbands gone,
The women toiled in tears with bated breath;
It almost reached the sleeping-place forlorn,
Where men lay huddled in that sleep called death.

Four years had passed, and nations nigh bled white
Watched with dismay, and saw their manhood fade;
Hard-pressed, and bold, they faced their bitter plight,
Resolved to "carry-on" through plans well-laid.

Then truce came quickly, followed by a peace
Which since has wrapped the world in kindly fold;
And chained the dogs of war with iron leash,
And crowned with amaranthine wreath her bold.

Pause long enough, today, to count the cost
Of that grim struggle with unyielding foes.
Then pity the poor manhood, maimed and lost,
Seek to relieve, of those who live, the woes.

Peace.

The heart of Christianity is peace. The goal of Christian effort is peace. The result of regeneration is peace. Jesus is the Prince of Peace. Peace is something the "world can neither give nor take away"; but God can give "peace that passeth understanding". "Peace on earth and good will among men" will come more and more as the Church experiences peace in her heart and in her life. Civil nations will never be at peace till the Church is at peace; but it is coming. When selfishness and greed yield to the better feelings of good will and love for enemies, the dawn of the day of peace will come. There are signs of its coming now. Curches are more friendly; nations are more friendly; exchange of ideas and visitations of friendly types, as the visit of Premier MacDonald to President Hoover, and many other acts, contain signs of the coming of peace. All modern inventions and business indicate conditions that mean more friendly relations between nations. The exchange of products, in the field of business, means that the exchange of ideas will increase with the years. Nations will some day "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks", and business will take the place of war.

Peace does not imply uniformity, but unity. Nations will not change their names and governments to be at peace with one another. Races will not merge into one race in order to have amity. The races will remain distinct as Caucasian, Mongolian, Ethiopian, American, Malay; but there may be unity among them all in business, in education, in government, and in religion. Unity is a spirit and not formal uniformity. Unity in the Church of Jesus Christ should come, and may come, but not uniformity in creed and government. Jesus prayed for unity, "that they all may be one: As Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." When that prayer is fully answered, not only will unity fill the Church, but the world will believe that God sent His Son, Jesus Christ, into the world to save the world. The lack of unity in the Church is the cause of delay in saving the world. If real spiritual unity pervaded the Churches of any community, it would win the unsaved to Jesus Christ and the Church. Such unity would not only produce peace, but such cooperation as to hold up Christ only, and not our Church. If all the races were one race in stature, color and language, they could never agree in thought. As they are, they can all agree in believing in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour, for "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Looking to Jesus only would bring peace to individuals and the Church. War is the material and physical expression of mental and spiritual conditions. War exists in the mind before its struggles on the field of battle. The world needs peace, and Jesus Christ only can give peace.—Rev. W. W. Staley, in Christian Sun.

Beauty.

God Himself loves the beautiful. When He created the world He saw that it was good. He prepared the Garden of Eden and embellished it in every detail.

The Saviour loved the beautiful. He walked through the growing grain, He enjoyed the beautiful Sea of Galilee; He admired the lilies and the birds; He noticed the colors of the sunsets; He loved the little children.

We, whom God has made in His own image, should have a desire for pretty things. In some parts of China there are beautiful lakes, clear canals, pagodas with attractive settings; lovely mountains; scenery that rests the eye and gladdens the heart.

But in many, very many, places where missionaries labor there is nothing pretty. Sometimes a bright eye or the smiling face of a child, but nothing in the way of scenery or beauty. The dogs are mongrel; the donkeys uncared for and overworked; the people that appear on the streets are dressed in the plainest garb, many ragged or shabby. The stores keep everything hidden, so there are no shop windows to attract; the streets are uncleaned and many are the beggars.

One can hardly imagine what a deprivation it is never to see a pretty thing. The missionaries try to have a little adornment in their homes, unexpensive, but something pleasing to see.

And yet we know a lady in the United States, who heard a missionary had spent a few dollars for some curtains. "Well," she said, "that settles me, never again will I give money to missions."

Nature requires compensations. It must have them. What compensates for this lack of material beauty? Its the beauty we see in the transformed souls and sometimes in one we call a heathen.

A Mrs. Chao is a fine illustration of this. A national characteristic is cursing, which is villifying. They do not villify the person, but his mother or grandmother. Mrs. Chao is an exception. She said:

"I have never cursed. Even when my husband beat me, I did not curse him. I just could not abuse his mother with those vulgar words, even when he beat me."

Think of that gentle nature in that so-called heathen heart. One responds to that soul beauty as one would to a lovely scenery.

Another was a paralyzed man, not able to turn himself on his pallet, and looked after by his neighbors, yet he had the sweetest, most contented expression. After he accepted Christ and began to pray, he recovered sufficiently to walk around on two benches.

There is an old lady we call our "elect beggar." She lives alone in a house not much larger than a rich man's coffin; has no one to love her; lives by begging; but she has a wonderful expression. Beauty of soul is more inspiring than beauty of nature.

A flower was given a poor girl. The window pane was washed to let the sun in on it. This revealed the state of the room and it was cleaned. Then the inmates had a desire for better and more elevating things, which grew and prospered.

In summer time the small boys here wear no clothing. If possible, we make them dress to come to church. When we succeed, we feel we have scored one towards making him a success. One with beauty of person and beauty of soul is a vessel meet for the Master's use.

When Sutsien was first opened, because of opposition, we were confined for two months within a small court. Not one attractive thing was there to see, not a spear of grass; not a flower; surrounded by gray, crumbling walls. Spring opened up, but we saw it not. Then one morning our teacher brought us cluster upon cluster of that beautiful, fragrant rose, so loved by the Chinese.

It beautified our lives; gave us a new vision; increased our hope and strengthened our faith. That was more than thirty years ago, but the fragrance abides still.

Beauty is a real factor in a person's life. It loosens emotions that cannot fade. A lack of beauty imprisons the soul in its own body. It is God given. There is no darkness in Him.

We can always see beauty by looking upward. The moon and stars; the colored tints of the clouds are gray, our inspired vision can see the rain bow of promise and when clouds see the silver lining.

"Order is heaven's first law." If order is beauty, how awry our souls must appear, when God is looking for beauty. —Mrs. B. C. Patterson, of Tenghsien, China, in Presbyterian of the South.

For The Southern Churchman.

THUNDER STORM.

David W. Cade.

Coal black banners flying and massed,
Juggernaut borne in the storm's fierce van.
Stained silver crests ride high on the blast
Clashes the armour of a warrior Clan.

Iron chariots crash on the crumpled air,
Titian raiders scream curdling cries.
A ravening pack are loosed from their lair—
Now poised for attack is the terror of the Skies.

A moment's hush holds the bursting air,
Unveils vast depths where ghastly legions wait.
From fleshless skulls livid Hell-lights glare
As souls of traitors, coddle yet their hate.

A stray gust swoops as on pinions fleet,
Hinting all sails stowed and singing shrouds.
Weird lights flare on a fear-stilled Street
Under funeral dark and angry clouds

Gashes blue lightnings; a venom veined gale.
Monster globes roll down a thunderous way.
Rattles a bullet barrage of machine like hail
Then the Harlequin wind cries "High Holiday".

I swing my arms and shout my glee,
For I am brother to 'the grass and the corn.
The Sun and the soil were made for me
The rain is adventure of high romance born.

Passes the storm as the Sun comes out,
Eastward its banners shine and recede.
High over fields the cloud columns mount
Gleams new life now where rain paths lead.

For The Southern Churchman.

Spiritual Wireless.

Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson.

The mighty vessel was in mid-ocean when one of the passengers was taken desperately ill. The ship's surgeon was called and did everything in his power to relieve the woman's sufferings, but to no avail. When the first paroxysm of pain had passed she said that the trouble seemed like the return of a former malady and that her family physician always had been very successful in combatting it.

As rapidly as possible the wireless apparatus, with which the ship was equipped, got into communication with this physician in New York City, and, in a surprisingly short time, his prescription was received through the air.

As marvelous as is the working of wireless telegraphy the simple prayer of one of God's dear children is more powerful. Hundreds of years before such modern communication even was thought of, the Psalmist (chapter 34: 17:), "The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth and delivereth them out of all their troubles."

The Great Physician has said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee" (Psalm 50:15).

Is it that we forget God's promise, or, do we not trust Him?

Here is a comforting thought from the Prophet Isaiah (chapter 65:24), "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."

For The Southern Churchman.

OCTOBER DAYS.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

I feel in bright October Days,
A charm that ever with me stays;
And thrills my being with delight
That such a scene should greet my sight!

The frost-king here has been at work,
And well I see he did not shirk;
Not one tree did he forget,
For every leaf with paint is wet.

Such colors at my heart-strings tore,
And lured me from my cottage door;
For never may I hope to see
A scene so filled with majesty.

Parable of the Crosses for Armistice Month.

I trod the peaceful fields in France and Flanders, and I beheld the red drops of blood that had been shed there grown up in poppies. I rubbed my eyes as I beheld the houses rebuilded that had been cast down, and the fields tilled that had been plowed with shell, and I marvelled that man and nature should have wrought together to obliterate so swiftly the havoc of war.

The Poppies are the blood of brave men crying out from the earth to remind men of the shame of war. There are important lessons to be learned from the crosses and the Poppies that rise Heavenward. These lessons are simply that war is wicked and that wars shall cease and that higher and better means shall be found to adjudicate the differences between men and nations. "The fruit of the Spirit is love." —Selected.

And Is Kind.

There are quite a number of new translations of that great chapter, 1 Cor. 13, and some of them throw new light and meaning into it, but there is one phrase in the old rendering that we do not like to miss. It reads, changing the one central word to its real meaning, "Love suffereth long, and is kind." We would like that to stay, for it does hold up before us in such beautiful, clear light the wonderful, alluring, inspiring ideal of Christian living. To be tried and not get impatient; to be injured or ill-treated by a friend or by some cruel circumstance in life and not get indignant or bitter or revengeful; to suffer and suffer long and yet be kind and strong and sympathetic and thoughtful for the other fellow—how fine and Christian and splendid and hard that is! And yet the great apostle, without any apology or modification, holds up before us that great achievement and tells us what we ought to do and what we ought to be if the love that is born of Christ has right of way in our life.—Selected.

For The Southern Churchman.

KEEP FAITH WITH THINE OWN SELF.

Jesse Jouitte.

Keep faith, each day, with thine own self—
Oh, let not down the bars;
Let not self-pity wedge a way;
Nor doubt, which often mars.

Thy body frail? Dwell not on that,
Thou art a living soul;
Let not the weakling ills of flesh
Deflect thee from thy goal.

Yield not, but with thyself, keep faith,
Oh, let not down the bars,
But strive to reach the heavenly realms
With spirit void of scars.

The Joy of Winning a Soul.

A few years ago a young man in Indianapolis was heard to say that he had intellectual difficulties about the faith of the Christian. A prominent layman of the city heard of this and got his address. That evening he went to the young man's boarding house and in his hall bedroom sat down to talk about the Gospel with him. One difficulty after another faded away. At last he got on his knees by the young man and prayed for him. Then he turned to him and asked: "Won't you surrender to Christ, now and here?" And the young man said: "I will." That layman went to his pastor and told the story, and said: "I have had many thrilling experiences, but that one outranks them all." The man who stayed in that hall bedroom with a strange young man till one o'clock in the morning was Benjamin Harrison, Ex-President of the United States.—Selected.

The Privilege of the Ministry.

Some time ago I visited a young pastor on his first charge. It was a joy and an inspiration to be with him. He serves one of the poorest circuits in the Conference. His salary is very small and his work heavy. But it was not of these I heard. He was bubbling over with good humor and optimism. He mentioned several times how glad he was that he was in the ministry and he said this year had been the happiest of his life as he preached to his people and visited in their homes.

This young man had no criticism for his Church. Not one word came from him that would suggest he felt this charge was not good enough for him. He did not seem to know any other charges paid more salary than he was receiving. His mind was on other things. His heart was full of his call to preach the Gospel and the Church had given him a big kingdom all his own. To him his field was not a hard circuit, it was a kingdom.

Of course he was doing something. Any young man who enters the ministry that way will do something. He has just received twelve new members into the church on profession of faith. It was his first harvest for his Lord and his eyes shone with joy when he spoke of it. The young folks, old folks and children believe in this young man. It was a pleasure to be with this young preacher. May God raise more like him in our Zion.—Dr. J. M. Rowland, in the Richmond Christian Advocate.

For the Young Folks

YOU WHO ARE YOUNG.

You who are young, it is you, it is you
Who must make the dreams of the world come true.
You who are young have a world to build,
The future shall be what you have willed.

Learn and practice, plan and do;
Hold to a vision and shape it true;
And you'll find at last that a dream or two
Because of you, because of you,

Has out of the mist and the dark come true!
Heed what you build with hand and tongue,
You who are young, you who are young.

—Mary Carolyn Davies.

How Ralph Paid the Doctor.

There was a dreadful time when Ralph broke his arm so badly, and the doctor came every day for more than a month, and bent and straightened it to save him from having a stiff joint. Ralph helped him bravely by obeying all his directions, though he could not help crying with pain. Nobody thought anything about the expenses at first until the arm was well again, and only needed to be "worked" every day by some one of the family to keep it from stiffening, and the doctor only came every few days to see how it was getting on. He had not sent his bill, and mamma began to worry.

"I wish we could pay Dr. Loring. He has been so kind and patient, and has come so often. I am sure we owe him at least fifty dollars or more, and he will not send his bill! And if he did, I don't see how we could pay it now! That was an expensive game of ball, son."

Ralph felt very badly to think they owed the kind doctor so much money, and by his means, though not exactly by his fault, for no one breaks his arm on purpose. He worried a good deal over how he could make some money to pay the bill for himself, and the next time the doctor come, he asked him how much it was.

The doctor laughed. "Why, I can't tell exactly, Ralph, because I've not made out my accounts lately, and it takes a good deal of figuring. You tell your mother not to worry; I haven't got around to her bill yet. Plenty of time."

Ralph was not satisfied, but he went on putting pennies and nickels into his bank, and felt that he was getting on. One day he was playing on the side walk, when Dr. Loring drove up in his big car, and went into the house on the other side of the street, where a little girl had measles. Presently, a young man came down the street, whistling carelessly. He looked around to see if any one was near, and not noticing the small boy quietly playing marbles across the way, he stepped up to the car, examined it a moment with an air of ownership, then prepared to get in.

Ralph had been watching him, and now came across. "That's the doctor's car; he's in that house," he said.

"That's all right, kid! I'm a friend of the doctor's, and he said I could use his car a little while this morning. I'll take good care of it. Move out of the way, now!"

That didn't sound right to Ralph. Why should the doctor lend his car and leave himself afoot, with his rounds to make? Ralph had never known him to do such a thing before. "I don't believe it," he said to himself. "I'll just call the doctor."

But mother didn't want him to go in the house for fear of getting the measles, and besides, if he did, the young man would drive off at once. He was only a little boy, and he hardly knew what to do, but he stood his ground, right in front of car so that it could not move without running over him. The young man looked as if he would not much mind doing it, he was so angry, but then he realized that there were windows on all sides, and no telling how many eyes might be watching the scene, so he decided not to risk a struggle; he tried persuasion. "See here, sonny, don't you like ice cream? Jump in and we'll go and get some, and be back before the doctor is ready for his car."

Now, Ralph was sure there was something wrong, for mother had warned him never to accept an invitation to ride with a stranger.

"No, thank you," he said politely. "I'll just wait for the doctor—oh, there he is now!" with a joyful shout as the doctor stepped out into the porch.

The young man jumped out very quickly on the other side. "Well, so long, kid, give my respects to the doc, and tell him I couldn't wait."

And he hurried away on the other side of the street.

Ralph told his story. "Was he really a friend of yours?" he asked anxiously. "Maybe I oughtn't to have stopped him."

The doctor had looked very grave, but now he laughed. "A friend of mine? Indeed, no, my boy; it is you who have proved yourself a staunch little friend. He wanted to steal my car, just as you thought, and but for you, I should be several hundred dollars poorer this minute, for there were valuable instruments and medicines in there, besides the value of the car itself. So we'll set that against your bill, my son, and you may tell your mother that as you have saved me many times the amount she owed me, I'll consider it square, and send her a receipt for payment in full."

—J. L. Glover, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

How the Telescope Was Discovered.

Little things and little people are often responsible for great results, and maybe you do not know that the discovery of that important instrument, the telescope, may be traced to the curiosity of a boy, and this is how it came about:

The little boy I am telling you about was the son of an optician who lived in Holland. He and his sisters loved to play about their father's work bench, and often they amused themselves by looking at the sea through the little smooth conclave glasses which their father used in his work.

Now, one day it happened that the boy, while playing with two of those glasses, chanced to hold them before his eyes in such a way that the face of the cathedral clock seemed very near.

This surprised him greatly, for the clock was so far away that he could scarcely see the hands with his naked eyes.

For a while he stared at the clock and then at the glasses, each of which he tried in turn, but the clock was as far away as ever, and so it remained, turn them as he would, until by chance again he held both up together, when, lo! as if by magic, the church stood beside him.

"Oh, I know!" he cried aloud. "It's the two together." Then in great joy he ran to his father and told him of his remarkable discovery.

The father tried the glasses in his turn and found that the boy had spoken the truth, when he said he could bring the great church clock nearer.

So this was the way people learned that putting a concave and convex glass together in just the right position, would make distant objects seem near. Without this knowledge we should never have had the telescope, and without the telescope we should have known little of the sun, moon or stars.

So, if you ever have a chance to look through a telescope, and see the wonders it has to reveal, just remember the little boy who once lived in far-off Holland.—Brooklyn Eagle.

VEGETABLE IMMIGRANTS.

Celery originated in Germany.
The onion originated in Egypt.
The citron is a native of Greece.
Oats originated in the East.
Rye came originally from Liberia.
Parsly was first known in Sardinia.
The pear and apple are from Europe.
Spinach came from Arabia.
The sunflower was brought from Peru.
The mulberry tree originated in Persia.
Walnuts and peaches came from Persia.
The horse chestnut is a native of Thibet.
Cucumbers came from East Indies.
The quince came from Crete.
The radish is a native of China and Japan.
Peas are of Egyption origin.
Horseradish is from Southern Europe.

Hallowe'en and Measles a la Sally.

Fan Powers opened the door of the "Idea Shop", and stuck her head inside. "Oh, Sally," she begged, "I know it's the eleventh hour and thirteenth minute at least, but have you an idea left for poor Fan after planning Hallowe'en parties for at least half the people in town? Just this morning the girl who was to have charge of the club that I direct at the Y. W. C. A. was taken sick and they asked me to run the party in her place. Of course, we can have some of the usual things, but I do want one unusual touch—just a little something different. Can you supply it, as usual?"

Sally smiled her brisk, capable smile. "I'll try my best," she said. "Where are you going to have it? At your house?"

Fan nodded, and began to look hopeful. "Yes, we thought that would make it a little different from other years. It's always been at the Y—— before."

"I should say it would. A real house and your fine, large grounds—well that saves you, my dear. I have a lovely plan here that some one told me about last year, but nobody who's asked me so far has a large enough place to work it out. Here, let me get down my files and find my notes.

"At the bottom of each girl's invitation put P. S. Private. Bring a sheet and pillow-case, but don't let any one else know. Each girl will, of course, think she's the only one who is asked to do this.

"Before the party assembles prepare walnuts by faking the kernels from them, substituting a little piece of paper and then glueing the shells together. On each paper write, 'At exactly —— o'clock leave the room quietly, put on your sheet and pillow-case, and go out of the back door with the map on the other side of this. Hunt the place which is marked with the blood-red cross, and dig. Do not let any one see you and do not speak, or you will break the spell."

"Give only two girls the same time. Put them at intervals of five minutes or so apart.

"The walnuts are to be hidden around the room where the party is to be held. They may be searched for at a given warning from the hostess. She will also give each girl a package containing a big tin spoon, with the instructions that they are to be opened in private.

"On the stroke of nine or whatever hour you have mentioned in the slip hidden in the walnuts, all the players will, after trying to sneak away from each other, get out on the lawn, which will look very spooky with all the silent white figures flitting about. After some digging each one will find a tin can with a fortune hidden within it. Put two or three emblems in each with another sign:

" 'Take this to the Witch of Endor, who will interpret it for you.'

"Going back to the house they will find the living-room darkened and the Witch of Endor waiting to read the fortunes as soon as all the girls get in. She is, of course, prepared to interpret each fortune with the proper local color.

"After this is over you can have the mirror trick. Before the party, secure a hand-mirror without any glass in it. Some one will be sure to have a broken one. Then try to get photographs from those who will be at the party without their knowing it. Each girl must walk blind-folded down the cellar-steps with a mirror in order to see a picture of her future mate in the mirror. One is blindfolded at a time, and with an electric flashlight is led down the dark cellar stairs, with the mirror in hand. In the mirror has been placed the picture. Remove the bandage from her eyes suddenly. She must look over her left shoulder in the mirror the moment it is removed. Of course, the result is funny. As the trick is played on each one in turn those who have seen their fate may follow the blindfolded one down the stairs, thus increasing the fun.

"Then, pinning a little broom on the witch, whose picture has been drawn with shoe-blacking on a big sheet, is always fun. Have this last, so that people won't feel at all spooky on their way home."

"That will be fine," cried Fan ecstatically. "Sister will dote on fixing up those pirate-map effects, and Nell and I will do the tin cans.

"And I'll ask the Y—— director to come late, with a picture borrowed from each girl's bureau, and attend to that part of it. Sally, if I had as many ideas as you, my head would burst."

"Oh, nonsense. You have just as many. What about that child's playhouse, I'd like to know, that you told me about last week?"

'Oh, that wasn't anything. Just my cousin's modification of something she read about somewhere."

'Well, I don't care where it came from. I've used it twice already and the children are crazy about it."

"Use it again, please, Miss Sally." It was young Mrs. Norton's voice from the doorway. "My two youngsters are quarantined with measles, and not really sick at all—but, oh, so cross and bored. I ran over here for a breath of air and to ask you what to do with them. My few poor ideas have all been used up."

"Are they able to be up at all?"

"Oh, yes, up and dressed. The doctor said it was quite all right in their warm nursery. Is the idea something that will keep them really busy? I'd love that."

"Yes, fine and busy," smiled Sally. "You've probably seen some of those descriptions of simple dolls' houses for children to make out of egg-crates. I've seen several in different papers with wall-paper cut from a sample book, rugs cut from mail order catalogues and pasted on stiff cardboard, and tables, chairs, and beds made of paper boxes, with spool legs.

"Well, Mrs. Martin's children had a real doll's house, so she thought she would modify the idea. They were very fond of animals, so she suggested that they should make the inside of a Noah's ark, using their own little animals or making them just as they chose. And the funny part was that they chose to make them, all except their Teddy bears."

"Make them?" Mrs. Norton looked puzzled. "I'm afraid that would be too much work for my babes. They're not awfully clever with their hands, you know."

Sally laughed. "I fancy they are quite clever enough for this," she said. "The animals they made were home-grown, from potatoes, turnips, carrots and other indestructible vegetables, with the addition of tooth-picks for legs and strings for tails, and brass tacks or buttons for eyes. They put in one whole afternoon matching them up so as to have nice pairs. Then they named them. That was excrutiatingly funny," she said.

"And then, as I told you, they 'objectified' their idea of an interior for Noah's ark. Real beds for all of the animals, if you please; paper napkins for sheets, towels and window-curtains, pictures on the wall, and cardboard and spool furniture. They kept theirs for a rainy-day game, but there's no reason you couldn't put in the measles convalescents on yours."

"That will be perfectly fine, Miss Sally," cried Mrs. Norton, enthusiastically. "Only I'm going to modify, like Miss Fan's cousin, Noah's ark for Mildred, who is a plain, practical soul; but a fairy-tale palace for Elsie. On the way home I'll buy a bunch of paper napkins, some tooth-picks, and gilt paper. Then what ho! for a bout of interior decorating."—Winifred Arnold, in Exchange.

Hollowe'en With Patsy.

"We're all ready to scare Patsy," Newton and Elizabeth said, as they started out just before dusk toward the cottage at the end of their grounds where the little Irish boy lived.

Patsy's father was the new gardener, who came not so many months ago from Dublin. Patsy's mother did the washing for the family in the big house. As for Patsy himself, he was a merry, freckle-faced, red-haired little Irish boy, but Newton and Elizabeth couldn't help making fun of his odd ways of talking and doing things.

"He won't be hard to scare," Elizabeth said, "because when he drives the cows home at night he always runs just as fast as he can by the churchyard."

"And you look just like a ghost, Elizabeth," Newton said, "all wrapped up in that sheet."

"He will think that you are a hallowe'en goblin in that black cape of mother's, and holding the lighted jack-o'-lantern in front of you so that your face doesn't show," Elizabeth said to Newton.

It was rather a long walk down the back driveway and then into the willow walk that led to Patsy's cottage. As the children in their hallowe'en dress went toward it, the shadows lengthened.

"O-o-h, Newton!" Elizabeth exclaimed. "I don't feel as if it was you walking along beside me, but a real, true goblin."

Then, as they had almost reached Patsy's house, they saw a strange light bobbing in and out of his garden. Elizabeth gave a little scream.

"What do you suppose it is?" she exclaimed.

Newton was too big to show that he was afraid, but he couldn't keep his voice from trembling a little bit as he answered, "Maybe it's an Irish banshee!"

"It's coming nearer," Elizabeth said.

"And we're too close to be able to get away from it," Newton said, as Elizabeth clung to his arm and he held the Jack-o'-lantern higher, hoping to frighten the banshee away.

But just then they heard such a merry laugh. There, right in front of them, stood Patsy with a lantern, coming to see what the Jack-o'-lantern was. It had been the light from his lantern that the children had seen. He had not been as scared as they.

"What are you doing out in the garden so late? It's supper time, Patsy," Newton asked.

"Digging the last of the potatoes," Patsy said. "Father didn't have time to do it, and we had to get them into the cellar before a heavy frost came." That was like Patsy, putting off his supper to help.

Just then Patsy's mother came to the door.

"Visitors for all-hallowe'en!" she exclaimed. "Two little fairies come to see us! Come in and have a bite of supper."

She telephoned up to the big house to their mother to ask if Newton and Elizabeth might stay for supper.

Such a nice party as it was, with plenty of hot potato cakes, cambric tea for the children, and apple pie that was very thick and juicy! After supper Patsy's mother told them stories about the fairies and elves that come out and dance in the moonlight on hallowe'en in Ireland. Patsy helped them to roast chestnuts and apples, and at bedtime his father took Newton and Elizabeth home.

It had been their jolliest Hallowe'en. —Exchange.

The Wonder of the World.

Once more Abner, the man who told wonderful stories, had taken the children with him into God's great out-of-doors that he might tell them of all the wonderful things that God had made. The children ran and laughed beside him, for these trips with Abner rarely came and were long looked forward to and long remembered. There were no flowers to be talked about now, for the spring came very quickly in that far, Eastern land and was as quickly over. The ground was hard beneath their feet and all that remained of the grass and the flowers were a few brown, withered grass blades and the dry, brittle stalks of the flowers, while the trees were almost as bare as the ground.

"I've got a treasure," Abner cried, and ran ahead to pick up a little brown object lying on the ground. "I've found something very wonderful. You come and look at this."

The children ran forward eagerly, but felt very disappointed when they saw that Abner's wonderful treasure was only an old bird's nest that had blown down from the trees. They thought him foolish to make a fuss over such a thing as that. It was almost like a little round ball, made of twigs woven together like close basket-work. Outside it looked very rough and clumsy, but when they put their fingers inside they found it all warm and soft, lined with hair and padded with feathers.

Abner pulled the nest to pieces and shared it among four or five of them "Now," he said, "while I get a fire lit and a meal ready you count the number of feathers in that nest." They thought the task would soon be done, but Abner had made his fire and prepared the meal before they had finished, and when they put their figures together they found that there were over two thousand feathers in that single nest. (And if you think this impossible, find an old nest and count the feathers for yourselves.)

"Well," said Abner, when the meal had ended, "can you understand now why the wind and the rain could not get into that little nest and how it kept the birds warm and dry?" He picked up a piece of the outside of the nest to show them how the twigs were woven together. "You would not find that weaving easy with your ten nimble, clever fingers," he said, "and the birds have only beak and claws to work with. And they have no one to teach them."

"Joseph has gone to learn to be a carpenter," he said, "and it will be a long time before he will know how to make a plow or to build a roof. But the young birds know how to build a nest without being taught by the older birds."

A great wind was blowing and the tall fir trees were being beaten to and fro. In the top of one of them was a stork's nest, a great rough-looking platform of sticks and twigs. "I wish that nest would blow down so that we could look at it," one of the children laughed.

